NOTES.

Re-opening of High Court.

The High Court of Calcutta re-opens to-day after the long vacation.

Judicial Committee, October list.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council resumed its sitting this term with a list of 39 appeals ready for hearing. Of these 24 are from India and 15 from the Colonies. Of the Colonial appeals, Canada contributes six, Australia four, Ceylon two, and the Gold Coast Colony, Straits Settlements, and the Seychelles one each. Only eight appeals are awaiting judgment, and of these one is standing over for further evidence.

The late Sir Francis Maclean.

In the very first issue of this journal seventeen years ago, we had occasion to welcome Sir Francis Maclean as the Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court and it is indeed a very sad duty on our part to have to record his death in our first issue on the re-opening of the Court this year. When Sir Francis retired from India at the end of his term of office, his health had no doubt showed signs of a break down, but we had been assured by Indian gentlemen who had seen him in England that his Lordship had rallied greatly and there was nothing to indicate that he would pass away so soon and so unexpectedly.

It is a matter for sincere regret that his Lordship was not spared long to enjoy the rest which he had earned at the close of an arduous and honourable career, and we convey our sincere condolence to Lady Maclean and the bereaved family. As Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court, his Lordship occupied a position, both on the Bench and in the social and official life of Calcutta, which in many respects was unique. His stately presence and dignified bearing made itself felt in every company or ceremony in which he took part, be it social or official.

Behind his outward reserve and strong sense of decorum, every one who had come to know him either as a Judge or as a man knew that he had a heart instinct with kindliness of feeling which won for him the respect and regard of both lawyers and laymen. The felicity of his expressions and a keen sense of humour made him a most popular speaker on social occasions, and at public dinners and other similar functions, the presence of Sir Francis Maclean came to be considered almost indispensable. Notwithstanding his social popularity, we feel no hesitation in saying that he never allowed any social or official view of any question to influence him as a Judge on the Bench. If his Lordship had erred on any occasion it was through inadvertance and not through any other cause.

In the administration of justice, the ends of of justice were always uppermost in his mind. He meted out equal justice to all, irrespective of class, creed or colour. The Barrackpur murder trial over which he presided at the Calcutta Criminal Sessions established his reputation in this respect. He was incapable of departing from the code of honour that governs the thought and action of a true gentleman in every sphere of life and that is what made him absolutely impartial on the Bench. The Rangpur Special Constable case and several other political cases had come up before him, but on any such occasion if he found that the Government was in the wrong he never felt any hesitation in making the Crown withdraw from an untenable position and granting relief to those who had been wronged. His judgments were lucid, singularly free from technicalities and seldom marred by redundancies. With this power of clear exposition and lucid expression he combined a capacity for taking broad views which made it unnecessary for him to probe deep into the legal lore.

He had won no less respect by his uniform fairness in his administrative capacity. His recommendations to fill up vacancies on the Bench and his selections for other responsible offices at his disposal were also recognised as being generally unexceptionable. Who amongst us can ever say that he has never erred? But if Sir Francis committed any errors none of them were of any moment and it would be admitted on all hands that he was both a good man and a very impartial and just Judge. We can say with confidence that his Lordship's memory will be long cherished in this Province with high regard as of one who for 12 years presided over the High Court in a manner which served to maintain its dignity, prestige and traditions.

Retirement of Sir Richard Harington.

The retirement of Sir Richard Harington, Bart, the senior Puisne Judge of the Calcutta High Court, at the close of the long vacation will make us miss a Judge who had won the confidence and good opinion of all. He combined in him the best traditions of a typical E[illegible] gentleman and of a member of the Englis[illegible] The warm regard in which he was held [illegible] profession by reason of his even temper, de[illegible] to duty and habitual fairness and breadth o[illegible] bordered almost on affection. It is indee[illegible] too much to say of him that never did [illegible] word or action cause any pain or bitterness [illegible] mind of any person who came in contact [illegible] him. He too was a judge of the fine Englis[illegible] of Sir Francis Maclean. Although not very quick or brilliant, he was always very painstaking and made a thorough study of the facts and the law before pronouncing an opinion. Although in Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore, he in common with Sir Francis Maclean was overruled by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council anyone who has taken care to study Mr. Justice Harington's judgment will feel little doubt that it is not he but the Judicial Committee that has erred in the interpretation of the law. It is a matter for congratulation that Mr Justice Asutosh Chaudhuri has been confirmed in Sir Richard Harington's place.

Indian Press Act (I of 1910).

Their Lordships' judgment which we report in this issue in the matter of the petition by Mr. Mahomed Ali under sec. 17 of the Indian Press Act of 1910 leaves little doubt that the so-called safeguards that were said to have been incorporated into the Act to provide against any arbitrary exercise of the wide powers conferred on the executive by the Act to order the forfeiture of books, presses and securities, are after all unmeaning and absurd. Their Lordships the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe are virtually of opinion that once the executive Government has passed an order by notification for the forfeiture of any books, presses or securities deposited under the Act, for any writing printed or published and alleged to be objectionable under sec. 4 by reason of their having in the opinion of the Government a tendency to promote sedition, hatred or contempt against Government or any class or cause annoyance to anyone so as to induce him to do an illegal act or omission, it is final and conclusive under sec. 22 of the Act. The power of so called revision given to the High Court by sec. 17 is of no avail either to the party aggrieved or to the Hon'ble Judges to question the justice or propriety of the order.

Sec. 12 no doubt states that the Government must state the grounds of forfeiture in the notification embodying the order of forfeiture. But if the Government do not comply with the requirements of the statute, as in their Lordships' opinion was the case here, their Lordships can only declare the notification to be not in accordance with the law but they are powerless to annul the order for forfeiture, for sec. 22, as interpreted by their Lordships, has in fact taken away with one hand the power of revision which the Legislature is supposed to have given by sec. 17 with the other. Then his Lordship the Chief Justice says with the concurrence of Mr. Justice Woodroffe that sec. 4 casts an onus on the person aggrieved by the order of forfeiture, which it is almost hopeless for any human being to discharge. His Lordship adds that "it is difficult to see to what lengths the operation of this section might not be plausibly extended by an ingenious mind. They would certainly extend to writings that may even command approval. An attack on that degraded section of the public which lives on the misery and shame of others would come within this widespread net, the praise of a class might not be free from risk. Much that is regarded as standard literature might undoubtedly be caught." There can no more severe commentary on the drastic provisions of the Indian Press law, which after this ought not to be allowed to disfigure the Indian Statute Books.

Then again his Lordship The Chief Justice declares the power of revision purporting to be conferred on the High Courts in respect of the Government's order for forfeiture as a mere "semblance" and his Lordship asks whether it should not have been withheld as it was by the long since defunct Press Act of 1878. This Act, it will be remembered, was repealed after a severe indictment against it by Mr. W. E. Gladstone. We do not suppose that his Lordship is at all serious in his last suggestion. We presume, what his Lordship means is that if the Act is designed to be put into operation for reasons of state known to the executive alone and which are not intended to be disclosed, the semblance of jurisdiction given to the High Courts ought not to have found a place in the new Act as it can serve no useful purpose. Such unmeaning provisions can only serve to embarrass the judiciary and in reality gives no relief or remedy to the aggrieved parties. The repealed Act of 1878 was certainly more consistent in this respect.

Mr. Justice Stephen's judgment is by no means a less severe indictment on the statute. His Lordship's sense of justice revolts against the suggestion that the Government by their own omission, or to use his Lordship's expression "laches," to conform to the requirements of that statute, can oust the statutory jurisdiction of the High Court or the remedy intended to be conferred under the law to the party aggrieved. His Lordship therefore expresses the opinion that the High Court has the power to go into the merits of the order for forfeiture. The learned Judge is at one with the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe in holding that the provision in sec 12 for stating the grounds of forfeiture in the Government Notification was also intended for furnishing materials for the High Courts to exercise their revisional jurisdiction under sec. 17 of the Act. Their Lordships are all agreed that if the Government do not choose to disclose the grounds they are powerless to make the executive conform to the requirements of the statute.

Mr. Justice Stephen is no less frank in stating that his view that he is entitled to go into the merits of the case does not really carry him any further. He feels with his learned brothers that he is required to perform an impossible task. With his Lordship's characteristic dry humour, he observes: "In attempting to form an opinion on it I find myself in a position which is unfamiliar to me, and in which, as far as I am aware, no Judge in the British Empire has been placed, since the remote days of early English jurisprudence. I have to decide a question of fact on such evidence as is supplied by one document. The side on whom the onus of proving his case is cast is not in a position to give any evidence." And in conclusion his Lordship in the same lighter vein but with no less candour and regard for justice sums up by saying that "acting on such information as I have, I entertain no doubt what my answer would be. But the absence of doubt is probably largely due to the absence of evidence and cannot be taken as going far towards showing that the opinion is correct." Such expression of judicial opinion surely calls for a repeal or amendment of the Act.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Hindu Law—Joint family—Business contract, suit in respect of—Minor members if necessary parties.

LALJI v. KESHOWJI, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 340.

It is not necessary in the case of a Hindu family to join in a suit upon a business contract minor members of the family who in fact take no share in the business which is carried on on behalf of the family.—Ram Shebak v. Ramlal, I. L. R. 6 Cal. 815; Luchmanen v. Siva Porokasho, I. L R. 26 Cal. 349, considered.

Interrogatories.

BHAGWANDAS v. BURJORJI, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 347.

The mere fact that the questions would be admissible in cross-examination of a witness does not make them good as interrogatories which must not be exhibited unreasonably or vexatiously nor be prolix oppressive unnecessary or scandalous where the defence of wagering is set up the party setting up this defence should not be allowed to interrogate his opponent generally as to his business transactions apart from the particular transactions in suit for it is manifestly unfair to compel a man to disclose his general dealings on the chance that thereby his opponent may discover something which will support his case.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), Or. 21, r. 89—Civil Procedure Code (1882), sec. 310A, cl. (b)—Auction sale—Deposit within thirty days—"Decree-holder," meaning of.

GANESH v. VITHAL, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 387.

Under Or. 21, r. 89, the deposit must be made within thirty days of the date of sale, not that notice must be given within that period.

"Decree-holder" in sec. 310A, cl. (b) of the Code of 1882 means that person alone for satisfaction of whose decree the sale has been ordered and does not include other persons who would have a right to claim rateable distribution out of the sale-proceeds under sec. 295. Hari Sundari v. Sashi Bala, 1 C W. N. 195; Roshan Lal, I. L. R. 30 Cal. 262, followed.

Auction-purchaser—Compensation for improvements on eviction.

MOITHEENSA v. APSA, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 194.

An auction-purchaser is entitled to compensation for improvements bonâ fide made while in possession on eviction from the property on the ground of the sale being set aside owing to irregularity. The good faith required does not go beyond an honest belief in the purchaser in the validity of his title.

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1887)—Certificate if can be granted to a minor.

S. KRISHNAMA CHARLU v. R. LAKHMANA CHARLU, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 214.

A succession certificate can be granted to a minor on an application made by him through his natural guardian.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 74—Penalty.

A. MUTHU KRISHNA IYER v. SANKARA LINGAM PILLAI, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 229.

When in an instalment bond no interest is payable until default but interest at an exorbitant rate is payable as from the date of default the latter stipulation can be treated as one by way of penalty within the meaning of sec. 74 of the Contract Act as it now stands after the amendment in 1899.

SANYASI BARITYN v. ARISSWARO, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 287.

The decision of any matter directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties would none the less be res judicata because the decision was based only on the oath of one of the parties taken under sec. 9 of the Oaths Act.

GOVINDA PARRIKKER v. NANI, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 304.

No presumption should be made as to whether properties acquired in the name of a junior member of family belong to him or to the family. The decision depends on various circumstances such as the relationship of the member in whose name the title stands to the karnavan at the time of the acquisition of the property, the possession of private means by the junior member the existence of any family funds at the time of the acquisition which disappeared thereafter, &c.

AVALAPPA v. MURUGAPPA, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 325.

A zemindar holding an impartible zemindari can for legitimate family or other necessary purpose make an alienation of the property binding upon his successor, unless there is a special custom to the contrary.

Civil Procedure Code (1882), sec 287 (c)—Execution of decree—Prior encumbrance, notification of—Auction purchaser, rights of.

JAIRAJ MAL v. RADHA KISHAN, I. L R. 35 All. 257.

In the course of execution proceedings a mortgagee applied to the Court to have his mortgage notified at the sale of the property. This was done without any enquiry being held and the property was sold but not subject to any incumbrance. The mortgagee subsequently brought a suit on his mortgage against the auction-purchaser who pleaded that the mortgage was a fictitious one.

Held—That the auction-purchaser was not estopped from questioning the mortgage.

Hindu Law—Adoption after marriage if valid amongst Sudras.

JHUNKA PRASAD v. NATHU, I. L. R. 35 All. 263.

An adoption in order to be valid even among Sudras must take place before the marriage of the adopted son.

Hindu Law—Marriage of a Hindu girl by maternal relatives against the wishes of paternal relatives—Absence of force or fraud—Factum valet.

KASTURI v. CHIRANGI, I. L. R. 35 All. 265.

A Hindu girl of sixteen was married to a suitable person by her maternal grandfather and maternal uncle against the wishes of her paternal uncle and paternal cousins who wanted to make a profit out of marrying her to a rich but one-eyed man. The marriage was not brought about by force or fraud.

Held—That this was eminently a case to which the principle of factum valet should be applied and the marriage should not be declared void.

DHANPAL v. BUDH SING, I. L. R. 35 All. 271.

A property was sold in execution of a decree obtained in a suit on a registered mortgage. The Plaintiff subsequently brought a suit on a prior unregistered mortgage executed in his favour for Rs. 95.

Held—That the mortgage held by the Plaintiff was not invalid merely by reason of the document not being registered and the debt secured was recoverable from the surplus if any left after the satisfaction of the registered mortgage.

Injunction—Landlord and tenant.

BHAGWAN DAS v. MAHAMMAD YAHIA, I. L. R. 35 All. 292.

The Plaintiff was the zemindar of the village in which the Defendants resided. The Plaintiff brought a suit for an injunction to restrain the Defendants from constructing a well in their house and for an order directing them to remove the materials and to restore the land to its original condition. It appeared that the occupiers of the houses had the right to transfer them subject to payment of one-fourth of the sale price to the zemindar. The houses only escheated to the zemindar in case of the family dying act.

Held—That the well was an undoubted adjunct to the convenience of the occupants and did not injuriously affect the Plaintiff's interests and the Court should not grant the injunction.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), Or. 21, r. 88—Pre-emption.

ABDUL GAFUR v. GHULAM HUSSAIN, I. L. R. 35 All. 296.

The purchaser at an auction sale of a defeasible title to a share in a property is not competent to maintain a claim for pre-emption as a co-sharer.

JULESHWAR v. AURUT, I. L. R 35 All. 302.

In 1892, a decree was passed against the father of a Mitakshara joint family in a suit brought on a mortgage of the joint family property In 1896, the sons who were not parties to the original suit had their shares in the property exempted. In 1897, the father's share was sold and half the mortgage-debt was realised. In 1910, the mortgagees sued the sons to recover the balance.

Held—That the suit was not barred by limitation and was maintainable in the form in which it was brought.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), sec. 60 (c)—House of an agriculturist, attachment of.

JAMNA PROSHAD v. RAGHU NATH, I. L. R. 35 All. 307.

The Defendant's house was attached in execution of a simple money decree. The Defendant objected that he was an agriculturist and his house was exempt from attachment. It appeared that Defendant was both a cultivator of land and a zemindar.

Held—That the burden of proof lay on the Defendant to show that his main source of income was cultivation and he was an agriculturist in the strict sense of the term.

Hindu widow—Transfer of immoveable property.

DURGA KUNWAR, I. L. R 35 All. 311 (F. B.).

The estate of a Hindu widow is more than a mere life interest There is nothing in law to prevent her from transferring her so-called life interest. A transfer by her of the corpus of the estate without legal necessity, and not for a pious purpose is not void but is voidable by the reversioners. If she transfers immoveable property in this manner her transferee would be entitled to hold and possess it during her life-time and to recover possession of it by suit as against a third party wrongfully in possession.

PHAGU MAL v BABU LAL, I. L. R. 35 All. 325.

If goods supplied under a contract are wholly unsuitable for the purpose for which it is supplied it is not the duty of the purchaser to return the goods to the supplier, it is enough for him to notify to the supplier that the goods are lying at the place to which they were sent at the sender's risk.

MEGHU RAI v. RAM KHELAWAN, I. L. R. 35 All. 326.

The Plaintiffs sued as reversioners to a property alienated by a Hindu widow for a declaration that the alienation was not binding upon them. It was found that even the nearest of the Plaintiffs could only succeed to the estate if four males and one female died in his life-time.

Held—That the Plaintiff's suit must fail.

Reviews.

THE PRINCIPLES OF THE GENERAL LAW OF MORTGAGE. By J. A. Strahan, M. A., LL. B., Bar-at-Law. Second Edition. Price 7s. 6d. Published by Messrs. Sweet and Maxwell, Ld., 3, Chancery Lane, W. C, London. 1913.

The principles of the general law of mortgage are very lucidly explained within a very small compass in this work. The law of mortgage in India is mostly based on the English law of mortgage with savings in respect of the prevalent practices amongst the people in this country. It is, however, by no means an easy matter for an Indian reader to grasp the general principles of the English law of mortgage unless he cares to make a special study of its history and developments in the Common Law and Equity Courts in England. Even then it is not possible always to reconcile all the vicissitudes through which the law passed in course of its interpretation by the Equity and Common Law Judges. Judges and lawyers in England entertain conflicting views of it even to this day. The learned author has made an attempt to reconcile them by reference to the general principles of the law of contract. Indian lawyers will therefore find this work of considerable assistance to them in grasping the general principles of the English law of mortgage. In this edition the author has given reference to all the latest English decisions of importance on the subject and what makes it particularly useful to an Indian reader is that reference has been given in the body of the book to the provisions of the law of mortgage in India as contained in the Transfer of Property Act and the Code of Civil Procedure, the relevant sections of which are also reproduced in the appendix to this work.

THE ALL INDIA DIGEST (CIVIL), 1811—1911. Vol. VII. By T. V. Sanjiva Row. Published by T. A. Venkasawmy Row and T. S. Krishnaswamy Row. Law Printing House, Madras. 1913.

The present volume of this popular Digest begins with "Mortgage" and brings the matter down to "Pre-emption." The classification and arrangement of subjects follow on the lines of the previous volumes and leave little to be desired. The get-up of the volume is excellent.

THE INDIAN DECISIONS (NEW SERIES). Madras, Vol. II; Calcutta, Vol. IV; Allahabad, Vol. VIII. Edited by the Lawyers' Companion Office. Published by T. A. Venkasawmy Row and T. S. Krishnasawmy Row. Law Printing House, Madras. 1913.

The volumes above noted are reprints of the Indian Law Reports, Madras, Volumes 5 to 7; Calcutta, Volumes 8 and 9; and Allahabad, Volumes 16 to 18 respectively. The special features of the previous volumes of this useful series of reprints are well maintained. We have nothing but praise for the progress made by the enterprising publishers in bringing out these reprints.

Notes of Cases.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Livingston v. Hawker. Before THE LORD CHANCELLOR, THE EARL OF HALSBURY AND LORDS ATKINSON, MERSEY AND PARKER. 17th October 1913.

In appointing guardian for an infant the Court should be guided by the interests of the infant alone.

The case raised the question of the guardianship of a girl, aged 9 years, who was an orphan. After her mother's death she lived with the Respondent her aunt. The Respondent's sister Mrs. Noyes, however, also wished to have the child, and she proceeded to abduct her from the school. The child's grandfather intervened and now applied for guardianship. He proposed to send the child to Australia to live with Mrs. Noyes. The Court of Appeal (reversing the order of Swinfen Eady, J.,) refused the grandfather's application. Hence this appeal which was allowed.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said that his duty was to look to the interests of the infant; he was acting in a quasi-administrative capacity, and he might interview the child. That had been done in this case. His Lordship wished to say at once that Mr. and Mrs. Hawker's conduct had been altogether admirable. They sent her to an excellent school and took every possible care of her. But they had three children of their own and the burden on them was very considerable. Mr. Noyes was well off and occupied a good position in Sydney. He and his wife were prepared to adopt the child and to settle a substantial sum upon her. Looking at the matter from the point of view of the welfare of the child, apart from the circumstances which he was about to mention, his Lordship was bound to conclude that it was more advantageous to the child that she should go to Sydney, where she would be in the position of an only child and might have considerable expectations. That was said to be a worldly view of the matter, but the Court was bound to look at worldly considerations. He came to the circumstance which gave rise to the difficulty in the case. Mrs. Noyes opened up negotiation with her sister for the care of the child. Both sisters entertained a strong affection for the child. Mrs Noyes was obviously anxious to adopt her, and Mrs. Hawker was unwilling to part with her. Then Mrs. Noyes, overcome by her affection, resorted to proceedings which were altogether wrong. She proceeded to abduct the child from her school, representing to the schoolmistress that she had the authority of the mother to take the child out for the day. That was an utterly illegal and reprehensible act.

That, however, did not conclude the question. An act assumed a very different character, in a Court of morals at all events, according to the motive with which it was done. Motives of religion or of affection often led people to do illegal acts, but it did not follow that they were not persons of high character in other respects. The moral aspect of such an act was very different from the moral aspect of an act done from sordid and base motives. Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady took the view that Mrs. Noyes had been swayed by motives of affection, which did not render her unfit to act as a mother to the child, and he held that there was no inference to be drawn from this illegal act which would preclude the Court from entrusting the care of this child to her. The Court of Appeal took a different view. As Lord Justice Buckley put it, the Court had to choose between integrity and wealth. Stated in that way, the case was disposed of; but so to state the case was begging the question which had to be decided. He (the Lord Chancellor) had come to the same conclusion as Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady. The learned Judge saw the child and ascertained that while she was in Sydney she had been excellently brought up, that she had advantages in the way of education which she could not have here, and that her prospects were likely to be brighter there than they would be here. An undertaking had been given by Mr. and Mrs. Noyes to settle a sum of money on the child. He understood that Mr. Livingston and Mrs. Noyes were prepared to supplement this undertaking by adding an undertaking that reports should be sent periodically to the Judge in this country as to the progress of the child.

Messrs. Buckmaster, K. C., and Pollock for the Appellant.

Hon'ble F. Russel, K. C., and Mr. Shelden for the Respondent.

B. D. Appeal allowed.

COURT OF APPEAL.—In re Jean Baxter. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, AND LORDS JUSTICES HAMILTON AND SWINFEN EADY. 14th October 1913.

A person who is convicted of causing the death of the testator is not entitled to any benefit under the will—Public policy.

Jean Baxter was convicted of the manslaughter of testator Hall and was sentenced to 3 years' penal servitude. She was a legatee under the will of the said testator. It was urged against her that she could take no interest under the will. The President of the Probate Court made the order against her, and her present appeal was also dismissed. THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS in the course of his Judgment said—It had been argued by counsel for the Appellant that there was no statute in existence which deprived her of her rights under the testator's will because she was a felon. His Lordship said that he agreed that the Wills Act, 1837, and the Forfeiture Act, 1870, had nothing to do with it, but in this case the matter was based on public policy, and that was not to be found in any statute, but was part of the Common Law of England. It might probably be said that the decision of the House of Lords in Fauntleroy's case (4 Bligh, New Series, 194) really covered the case, but it was not necessary to go back to that case, as the decision of the Court of Appeal in Clever v. The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, (1892) 1 Q. B. 147, clearly covered the present case. That was a case in which the question was whether the executors of a person who had effected an insurance on his life for the benefit of his wife could maintain an action on the policy, although the death of the insured was caused by the felonious act of the wife. It was held that they could do so, but that the wife would not be entitled to any benefit. All the members of the Court laid down the law applicable to that case in terms which clearly covered this. It was true that that was a case of contract, but Lord Esher then said—"No doubt there is a rule that if a contract would be contrary to public policy, performance cannot be enforced either at law or in equity"; and further on he said—"If, in consequence of the death of the insured having been caused by the crime of a person in whose favour the policy is expressed to be made, or to or upon whom the policy money is left by will or settled, such person is not entitled to insist on its being paid to him, but if he nevertheless claims the money from the executors, they may then vouch the doctrine of public policy and may say that by reason of it such person has forfeited his or her right to the money."

Lord Justice Fry was, if possible, more distinct. He said:—"The principle of public policy invoked is, in my opinion, rightly asserted. It appears to me that no system of jurisprudence can with reason include among the rights which it enforces rights directly resulting to the person asserting them from the crime of that person. If no action can arise from fraud, it seems impossible to suppose that it can arise from felony"; and, again, Lord Justice Lopes said exactly the same:—"I do not doubt that the principle of public policy would prevent the wife from recovering the amount of the policy money from them, and so reaping benefit from her crime; because no trust can be enforced which contravenes the law."

But it was said that that was a case of murder and not manslaughter. His Lordship said that he was entirely unable to recognize the distinction. The authority in the Appeal Court was binding on them even if they felt any doubt about the present case, which his Lordship did not. Crippen's case, [1911] p. 108, was a decision of the learned President, asserting the doctrine laid down in the earlier case.

His Lordship said he thought it would be little short of shocking if Jean Baxter, who was the cause of the testator's death and had been convicted of felony, could come before the Court and claim any benefit under the testator's will.

Messrs. Valetta and Corrie for the Appellant.

Messrs. Barnard, K. C., and Bayford for the Respondent.

B. D, Appeal dismissed.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Rex v. The Local Government Board. Before LORDS JUSTICES VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, BUCKLEY AND HAMILTON. 6th October 1913.

Appeal heard and determined by administrative authority behind the back of the Appellant.—Held, it was not decided according to law because the procedure adopted was contrary to natural justice—Inspector's report if may be treated as confidential—Right to address his Counsel viva vice.

A closing order declaring that the house of Mr. Arlidge was unfit for human habitation was made. He appealed to the Local Government Board which held a public local inquiry before deciding the appeal. It was held by an Inspector whose report was kept confidential, and without giving the owner any information as to the nature of the Inspector's report or inquiry or allowing him any opportunity of being heard, the appeal was dismissed. The owner took out a rule nisi for certiorari on the ground that the appeal was not heard according to law. The Division Court discharged the rule holding that the Local Government Board were not bound to hear the applicant after receiving the Inspector's report. The owner's appeal was allowed by the majority, LORD JUSTICE HAMILTON dissenting, LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS said:—

I do think that in cases where the Board has to ascertain the law and also facts, the Board acting in good faith and fairly listening to both sides must disclose all the evidence of fact placed before them and also the conclusions in law adopted by them as the basis of their decision. This seems to me absolutely consistent with the words of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Loreburn, in the Board of Education v. Rice, [1911] App. Cas, 179, and also with the judgments of Lord O'Brien, Lord Chief Justice of Ireland, and Mr. Justice Madden in Rex v. The Local Government Board, 1911, 2 Ir. Rep, Common Law, 331, both of which cases are cited by the learned Judges in the Divisional Court.

What was argued was, that on an appeal to the Local Government Board, at all events when not sanctioned by Act or rule expressly or by constructive implication, the procedure must not be contrary to natural justice. There is certainly nothing express in the Act or rules to authorize the non-disclosure to the Appellant or Respondent who asks for production of documents submitted to the Local Government Board for consideration when making their decision and taken into consideration by them. It is one thing to depart from the procedure adopted at common law, and another, and a very different thing, to adopt a procedure which is inconsistent with the principles of natural justice on which the English common law is based. In my opinion the non-production of these reports is contrary to the principles of natural justice on which English law is based. The fact that the Housing, Town Planning, &c., Act, 1909, is an Act passed to carry out a most useful reform, avoiding expensive litigation in certain local matters, which, in the interests of the public ought to be disposed of promptly, by transferring jurisdic ion from the Law Courts and vesting it in the Local Government Board, (a Department of the State), does not, in my opinion, jus ify a construction of the Ac which by mere and unnecessary implication au horizes a manifest departure from the principles upon which the English common law is based.

The non-produc ion of documen s was justified by the Local Government Board on the ground that reports, whether of fact or law, made by officers of the Board were, according to a well established practice of the Board, both under this Act and prior Acts, treated as confidential. I invited the Solicitor-General to produce these documents for inspection by the Court, but he (I dare say qui e properly) refused; but, in my opinion, the reports of the presiding Inspector ought not to have been trea ed as confidential.

I will now say a word or two on the point made by the Appellant's counsel, that he was never allowed to know his judge's name or to see him face to face and to address him viva voce. This point was undoubtedly s renuously argued by Mr. Upjohn on behalf of the Appellant. I think that the point fails so far as it asserts the right to see the judge face to face or to address him viva voce, but I think that the Appellant is entitled, after all the documentary evidence and reports have been received by the Local Government Board, to have placed before the personal judge who is going to pronounce a decision a written argument, and in that sense is en i led to "hearing" before the decision is given; but as I have already said, he cannot do this effectively until he has had the opportunity of seeing and considering the reports and documents which the judge has before him to guide him in coming to a decision.

I have come to the conclusion that the non-disclosure of these documen s when the disclosure was asked for is itself inconsistent with natural justice. In arriving at this conclusion I have, as indeed was suggested by the Solicitor-General, dealt only with the non-production of the Inspector's report after the second inquiry as the strongest instance in support of the claim for a certiorari.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Sutton v. Mehta. Before LORDS JUSTICES VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, BUCKLEY AND KENNEDY. 20 h October 1913.

Indian Pearl Merchant's claim allowed—No title passed to the Defendant because his agent obtained the pearls by fraud.

The Respondents were pearl merchants, trading as Janeri and Co. in Paris. They entrus ed a pearl necklace, worth £2,000 to one Amin in Paris who stated that he knew of a good purchaser for the same. Amin, however, pawned it and it subsequently came in o the possession of the Appellant. The Respondent's claim for delivery up of the necklace or i s price was allowed by Bray, J. He found that Amin intended from the first to misappropriate the pearls that whether the case had to be decided by English or French law, the Defendant obtained no title to the pearls, inasmuch as his agent Mikol had not acted in good faith, that Amin had obtained the pearls from the Plaintiffs by means of larceny by a trick, or by vol in French law, and therefore that he did not obtain possession of the pearls with the consen of the Plaintiffs, and Amin was not a mercantile agent within the Factors Ac .

This appeal was dismissed.

LORD JUSTICE VAUGHAN WILLIAMS said that it had only been necessary to argue two questions. The first was as to Mikol's state of mind when he entered into the transaction with Amin—whether Mikol was acting in good faith. Mikol said that it was his practice, when strangers brought him valuable jewelry and invited him to enter into dealings with them on the basis that the property in the jewelry was in them, to ask no ques ions. He said that he was jus ified in adopting this course because it was the practice in Paris so to do. He (the Lord Justice) was by no means satisfied as to the existence of such a practice, and in truth it seemed to him from Mikol's course of conduct that he himself did not really believe in that prac ice. He thought that the learned Judge had been right in coming to the conclusion that the real reason why Mikol refrained from asking questions was because he was afraid that if he did he might get answers which would prevent him from being able to carry through the transaction safely. The second question was whether there was evidence which justified the finding that Mikol was acting as agent of the Defendant. In his opinion there was ample evidence in support of that finding.

Messrs. Rawlinson, K. C., and White for the Respondents.

REPORTS.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.]

JENKINS, C. J.	In the matter of a petition of MAHOMED ALI
STEPHEN, J.	In re a pamphlet entitled
WOODROFFE, J.	"Come over into Macedonia and help us."
1, September.

The Indian Press Act (I of 1910), secs. 4, 17, 19, 22—Notification by Government declaring forfeiture of book—Grounds, statement of, if imperative—High Court, if may declare order of forfeiture illegal, because grounds not stated—Recital of the language of statute, if statement of grounds—High Court, if may question the correctness of the order of forfeiture—Executive and judicial acts, respective scope of—Person applying to set aside order of forfeiture, onus of proof on—Evidence, non-production of, by Government—Court, materials upon which it may act—Legislature, intention of—Scope of language used wider than purpose intended—Court's duty to apply terms of statute as found—Proclamation under the Press Act, if necessarily suggests crime or casts slur.

The provision in sec. 12 of the Indian Press Act (I of 1910) requiring the Local Government, in its notification declaring a newspaper, book or other document to be forfeited, to state the grounds of its opinion is mandatory, being intended as a check for the protection of persons whose property may be confiscated and also to enable the High Court to exercise its revisional powers under sec. 17.

A mere citation of the words of the section without setting forth anything in the nature of a fact does not amount to a statement by the Government of its grounds for its opinion required by sec. 12.

JENKINS, C. J. (WOODROFFE, J., concurring)—But the High Court cannot declare an order of forfeiture passed by the Government to be illegal and void merely because the Government did not state the grounds of its opinion.

STEPHEN, J.—The omission on the part of Government to state the grounds of forfeiture as required by the statute does not make the notification void in such a way as to deprive the High Court of its jurisdiction to revise the order of forfeiture under sec. 17 of the Act, and the Government cannot by their own laches deprive the person whose property has been confiscated of the only relief that the law provides.

The Court has jurisdiction to revise the order of forfeiture on its merits.

Per JENKINS, C. J. (WOODROFFE, J., concurring)—The High Court has no jurisdiction under the Act as framed to question the action of the executive Government in ordering a forfeiture. Its functions are limited to considering whether the applicant before it has discharged the almost hopeless task of establishing that the forfeited book or paper does not contain words coming within the all comprehensive provisions of sec. 4.

The Government with all the information at its command being of opinion that the pamphlet may promote hatred against Christians and English subjects in British India, the Court, with no more information than the man in the street, is not in a position to set aside a measure of safety on which the Government had solemnly resolved.

IN THE MATTER OF A PETITION OF MAHOMED ALI.

STEPHEN, J.—There can be no doubt that the writing may promote hatred against the classes referred to but the absence of doubt on this question is probably largely due to the absence of evidence and cannot go far towards showing that the opinion is correct.

The question whether a document comes within the description in sec. 4 of the Act must, when no evidence or information is furnished by the Government, be decided by the judges upon such knowledge or information as they may possess of the social or political conditions of the country having relevancy to the enquiry, however unsatisfactory the result may be.

Per JENKINS, C. J. (WOODROFFE, J., concurring)—The fact that the terms of a statute are being applied to a purpose not intended by the Legislature is no objection to such application if the language of the Act is wide enough to cover the case in question. Therefore the fact that the Act was directed against crime and aimed at its prevention would be no bar to Government declaring the forfeiture of a pamphlet which it admits does not contain seditious libel and in respect of which it attributes no criminal offence to the publisher.

STEPHEN, J.—The intentions of the writer and publisher are not directly relevant to an enquiry under sec. 19 which is concerned only with the effect the writing is likely to produce. They may be of importance on the principle that they are not likely to produce an effect which they did not intend and may be considered to that extent only.

This Petition was heard on the Original Side of the High Court by a Special Bench constituted under Act I of 1910.

The Petitioner Mohamed Ali, then residing at 109, Rippon Street, in the town of Calcutta, is the editor of a weekly newspaper known as The Comrade and was the recipient of certain copies of the above-named pamphlet published by Le Comité De Publication, D.A.C.B., 15, Rue Djagal Oglou, Constantinople, and as such became the owner of such copies and held possession thereof.

By a notification of the Government of Bengal, dated the 18th July, 1913, and published in the Calcutta Gazette Extraordinary, dated the 22nd July, 1913, the said pamphlet was declared forfeited to His Majesty under Act I of 1910 on the ground that the same contained "words of the nature described in sec. 4, sub-sec. 1 of the Indian Press Act, 1910 (I of 1910), inasmuch as they are likely to bring into hatred or contempt certain classes of His Majesty's subjects in British India." A copy of the said order as published in the said Calcutta Gazette Extraordinary is as follows:—

"GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL.

POLITICAL DEPARTMENT.

Notifications.

No. 2296 P.D.—The 18th July, 1913—Whereas it appears to the Governor in Council that a pamphlet, entitled "Come over into Macedonia and help us" contains words of the nature described in sec. 4, sub sec. (1) of the Indian Press Act, 1910 (I of 1910), inasmuch as they are likely to bring into hatred or contempt certain classes of His Majesty's subjects in British India.

Now, therefore, in exercise of the power conferred by sec. 12, sub-sec. (1) of the said Act, the Governor in Council hereby declares all copies of the said pamphlet wherever found to be forfeited to His Majesty."

The Petitioner had on the 22nd day of July last surrendered at Delhi all the copies of the abovenamed pamphlet that he then had with him, to the Acting Superintendent of Police, Delhi, in pursuance of a warrant issued by the District Magistrate, Delhi, requiring him to make over all the copies he had to the said Acting Superintendent of Police, Delhi, and on the 4th day of August, 1913, his attorneys addressed a letter to the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, forwarding the only other copy of the said pamphlet, which he had with him in Calcutta, a copy of which letter is as follows :—

Calcutta, 4th August, 1913.

To

SIR FREDERICK HALLIDAY, KT.,
Commissioner of Police, Calcutta.

SIR,

Our client Mr. Mohamed Ali, editor of the newspaper Comrade, has handed over to us a copy of a pamphlet belonging to him and entitled "Come over into Macedonia and help us," published by Le Comité de Publication, D. A. C. B., Constantinople. The said pamphlet has been proscribed by an order of the Bengal Government, dated the 18th July, 1913, published in the Calcutta Gazette Extraordinary, dated 22nd July, 1913 Our client disputes the validity of the order ; but so long as it stands, he is bound to obey, and we therefore beg on behalf of our client to forward the said copy to you, but under protest. Kindly inform us if you will seize the copy under the Act.

We have the honour to be,
SIR,
Your most obedient servants,
(Sd.) B. N. BASU & Co.

The pamphlet was confiscated by the said Commissioner of Police, who wrote the following letter to the Petitioner's attorneys.

FROM

SIR FREDERICK HALLIDAY, KT.,
C. I. E., M. V. O.,
Commissioner of Police, Calcutta.

To

MESSRS. B. N. BASU & CO.,
Solicitors,
10, HASTINGS STREET, CALCUTTA.
Dated Calcutta, the 5th August, 1913.

SIR,

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a copy of a pamphlet entitled "Come over to Macedonia and help us" and to state that in accordance with the Government order promulgated in the Calcutta Gazette Extraordinary, dated the 22nd July, 1913, the copy is seized and forfeited to His Majesty under sec. 12 of Act, I of 1910.

I have the honour to be,
SIR,
Your most obedient servant,
(Sd.) F. L. HALLIDAY,
Commissioner of Police, Calcutta.

The Petitioner also stated that the pamphlet had a preface by Sir Adam Block, President of the Council of Administration of the Ottoman Public Debt, and contains extracts from English and other European newspapers and the testimony of eye-witnesses referring to the conduct of the Balkan Allies during their late war against Turkey and did not contain any words, expression or illustrations which are likely to bring into hatred or contempt any classes of His Majesty's subjects in British India and did not come under the purview of sec. 4, sub sec. 1 of the said Act. The Petitioner prayed under secs. 17 and 19 of the Act I of 1910 that the said order of forfeiture by the Government of Bengal might be set aside.

Mr. Norton (with Mr. Mahomed-ul-Huque and Mr. J. N. Roy) for the Applicant.

IN THE MATTER OF A PETITION OF MAHOMED ALI.

The Advocate-General (with Mr. B. C. Mitter) for the Respondent, the Government of Bengal.

Mr. Norton in opening said :—This was not an English pamphlet, but really it was the translation of a statement made in French by persons of position and authority. It was addressed not to India but to England and to it was attached a preface by Sir Adam Block, President of the Council of Administration of the Ottoman Public Debt. The object of the pamphlet was to ask the English people at Home to use their influence upon the Government of England to abandon what was called their attitude of apathy towards massacres by the Bulgarians, Servians and the Greeks of a large number of Mahomedans belonging to the Turkish rule. It purported to set out facts which if true would certainly justify an appeal to the British authorities as a Power on the question of humanity to intervene and put an end to the massacres and outrages which were being perpetrated. Some of these pamphlets, five in number, were sent out to Mr. Mahomed Ali from Macedonia, where it was translated into English. He received them in April and proceeded to reprint them in the issues of his English newspaper The Comrade of May and June last. Apparently no notice was taken of this until July 16th, when an order was passed by the local authorities in Delhi, under authority of the Supreme Government, forfeiting all those pamphlets. On July 18th, a similar order was issued in Bengal. Only two days intervened between the publication of the Viceroy's order in Delhi and the passing of the order by the Government of Bengal.

There were four copies. In addition to that he also handed over to the District Magistrate all the reprints in The Comrade as also in the vernacular paper The Hamdard. Those were returned on the ground that those reprints did not fall within the purview of the official order. On August 4th, Messrs. B. N. Basu & Co., Mr. Mahomed Ali's solicitors, surrendered the only other copy of the pamphlet under protest to the Commissioner of Police. In reply, the Commissioner of Police informed Mr. Basu that the copy had been forfeited to His Majesty. Immediately after that Mr. Mahomed Ali moved this Court.

The first point I take is this: The Government has no jurisdiction to issue this order of 18th July 1913, under sec. 12 of the Act.

[STEPHEN, J.—You are applying under sec. 17. We can act only on one ground under this section. I don't think you can raise the question of jurisdiction.]

[JENKINS, C. J.—Sec. 22 bars all jurisdiction except jurisdiction of the High Court ; the question is whether under sec. 17 you can raise the point of jurisdiction.]

Mr. Norton.—This is an enabling Act of an appealing character.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Sec. 22 reproduces sec. 16 of Act 9 of 1878.]

Mr. Norton.—The reason I raise this point is this. Their failure to give the reasons for their order, leaves my client in darkness. I don't know what class of people the pamphlet is supposed to attack, the Christians, the English, the Greeks, the Hindus or Buddhists. What case am I to meet? I am entitled to ask which class or classes under sec. 4 (c) of the Act, I am charged with having brought into hatred or contempt.

IN THE MATTER OF A PETITION OF MAHOMED ALI.

[JENKINS, C. J.—The notification does not speak of one class but class.]

Mr. Norton.—I am entitled under sec. 12 to know what class the Government have in their minds.

Advocate-General.—It is on Mr. Norton to shew that the pamphlet does not produce class hatred.

Mr. Norton.—I am entitled to ask the Advocate-General even now to say what classes of people the pamphlet is supposed to attack.

Refers to the speech delivered by Mr. S. P. Sinha, then Law Member of the Government of India at the passing of the Act in Council. In that speech Mr. Sinha indicated the safeguards, and the non-official members relying thereon gave their assent to the passing of the Bill. If it was the intention of the Government not to act upon that promise of Mr. Sinha, which was made on behalf of the Government, it was a distinct breach of faith. The Government was therefore bound to set out their information and their grounds.

Advocate-General.—It is hardly any exaggeration to say that the pamphlet brings about hatred or contempt between Christians and Mussalmans. Antithesis is drawn between Mussalmans and Christians, I mean Christians in British India including Englishmen.

Mr. Norton.—Is that the charge I have to meet?

Advocate-General.—Yes, that is the charge.

Mr. Norton.—I want to know whether the pamphlet is supposed to bring the Christians into hatred or contempt. Which is it?

Advocate-General.—I say hatred and contempt.

Mr. Norton.—I submit there is nothing in the pamphlet that can bring into hatred any class of people in British India. Cites 1907 Punjab Record No. 10. Criminal Judgment. Decision on sec. 153A.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Before we go into the merits, I should like you to see sec. 12. If you look at the notification, you find copies of books. See also sec. 4. I don't know why there is this distinction in sec. 12. See secs. 4, 6, 7, 9, 11, you find in all these "copies." See also 13, 16 and 20.]

Mr. Norton.—I don't know how they could have found that the pamphlet was likely to create hatred and contempt unless they read it. Since I first mentioned the application here, the Delhi Magistrate called on Mahomed Ali to execute a bond and give Rs. 2,000 security on the ground that the Comrade had published reprints of a pamphlet which had been proscribed by the Government of India and also had some bearing on the recent Cawnpore riots.

Just at the time we made application here, the reprints were returned because they did not fall within the terms of the notification.

Re-Pamphlet itself, there are two points of view:—The editor of Comrade is a Mahomedan. The pamphlet comes from Constantinople. The first point is this: It is wholly alien to the spirit and religion of the Mahomedans to bring Christians into hatred. I will refer first to Gibbon and then to Syed Ahmed Khan. See Vol. II, Sale's Koran, p. 338. Christ is mentioned as one of the six Apostles. The Mahomedans admit the Conception (Immaculate) and Crucifixion of Christ. It is against the religion of Mahomedans to bring Christians into hatred or contempt. The only thing that the Mahomedan denies is the divinity of Christ.

The Koran further says that there is no distinction between the Prophets. Refers to Gibbon, Vol. 6, last words of Chap. 50, p. 352, Syed Ahmed Khan's Essays, Vol. I, p. 34.

[JENKINS, C. J.—I assume you are reading in order to shew that Mussulmans reading the pamphlet will not look upon Christianity or Christians with hatred or contempt.]

Mr. Norton.—Yes, my Lord, that is so.

It is no part or parcel of their creed to foment antagonism between Christians and Mahomedans. Explains the name of the pamphlet. At the outset your Lordships find an extract from a revealed book of the Christians and the opinion of Mr. Block that in Turkey the belief in Englishmen is passing away. Am I to have my property forfeited because Sir Adam Block says that the belief in Englishmen is passing away? It is matter for pride that Englishmen have been selected out of all nations in Europe as most "just." (Counsel continuing describes the atrocities committed by the Balkans.) If these facts are true then you cannot help feeling that it is an appeal to the large humanity of the nations of Europe and more particularly, the English nation, because it is considered to be "just."

Think of the appeal by Gladstone. Was it not a laudable thing? If that was praiseworthy, I submit that this appeal is also praiseworthy. If Mahomed Ali's intention is to let Mussulmans in India know as to what is going on in Macedonia and induce the British Government to abandon its apathy with regard to the massacres, then it clearly brings him in the embrace of all that is pure and loveable in Christianity.

Reads Sir Adam Block's preface. Reads Introduction.

"Brutally violated." Does it say by the Christians or Englishmen? Why should the Advocate-General say that it brings Englishmen into hatred? "The savages." Who are they? The troops of the Balkan allies. Refers to "we do not dispute the good faith of the journalists, etc." The object of the pamphlet is to put the facts fair and square before the British public in order to induce them to interfere and stop the atrocities. The object of the book is to shew that these atrocities are committed on the Mahomedans not because they are Mahomedans but because they are not of the same colour.

Is it criminal to say that the Christian nations are strangely silent when the 'Bashibazouks" of the Balkans commit most horrible atrocities?

If there is an attack upon anybody it is upon the Bulgarians.

Refers to Chap. V and different passages and pictures. In the description of these horrible atrocities there is not a word about Christians or Englishmen. The attempt to rouse the indignation of the civilized world is justifiable.

"At Eschekli . . . . ." We had French authorities, war correspondents and now we have Germans. Refers to "Christian Atrocities." The attempt throughout has been to rouse indignation against atrocities which Christ himself would have certainly denounced.

"Incendiarism." This is an indictment of the Servians. "Salonica (Province of)." This refers to Bulgarians.

"It makes one ashamed to be a European and a Christian." This is the whole spirit and tenor of this pamphlet.

"The Greek Metropolitan, etc." Whenever there is an intervention for mercy it is acknowledged by the author.

IN THE MATTER OF A PETITION OF MAHOMED ALI.

Reads—"During the night the Comitadjis, etc., etc."

Reads—"The three massacres," and various parts of the pamphlet.

"Has 'Fair play is a jewel' ceased to be a motto?."

I press it that the concluding words of this chapter are the highest tribute to the righteousness and moral worth of the English people. Upon what justification the Government of Bengal attempts to forfeit this pamphlet when it allows accounts of horrible atrocities by Reuter to be published in the newspaper? Reuter's Telegram. July 1913. What about this telegram?

How does the pamphlet attack Christians or Englishmen.

Except praise there is not a word about Englishmen.

[STEPHEN, J.—Is not there a suggestion that England ought to have interfered, but it has not. Will not this make Mahomedans in India angry with Englishmen? There is no question of the intention of the writer, but the effect of the pamphlet on the public mind]

[JENKINS, C. J.—It is not a protest against Englishmen, but a protest against the attitude of the Government in England, so that people in England may induce the Government to interfere and stop the atrocities. Is not that the drift of this pamphlet?]

Mr. Norton.—Yes, my Lord, that is how I read it.

[STEPHEN, J.—The question is what will be the effect of the publication.]

Mr. Norton.—The Mahomedans who will read this pamphlet are educated. The only effect that the pamphlet may have on them is to persuade the Government here by fair and legal means to interfere in the matter of these atrocities.

Reads from the Comrade an answer given to a question by the Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs.

The purpose of the pamphlet is to induce men in this country and move Englishmen to exert themselves with a view to stopping these atrocities. What is there in the book that Christianity or Christians is or are to be hated for?

[JENKINS, C. J.—The words of sec. 4 are very wide. There need not be any criminal offence. Every day we see accounts in the newspapers that are likely to come within the purview of this section. We have to turn to sec. 17 and see that in our opinion the pamphlet is lik ly to promote hatred or contempt. Is the opinion of the Government that it is likely to promote hatred enough? Sec. 4 really covers the whole range between certainty and impossibility. The use of the word "likely" in the notification is merely a restatement of the Act. Government may have any quanti y of material of which we know nothing.]

Mr. Norton.—Under sec. 17 the onus is thrown on this Court. However impossible it may be your Lordships have to fulfil it. You have to say whether the opinion of the Local Government under sec. 4 is right or wrong.

[JENKINS, C. J.—The onus is on you and not on us. Of course it embarrasses you because you don't know the grounds.]

Mr. Norton.—That is so. I have got only the book and the notification. I submit I have discharged the onus. I have read everything I have got and commented upon the same. How can Englishmen in India be supposed to be implicated in these atrocities? The idea is absolutely absurd.

[STEPHEN, J.—The reading of the book is distressing. It excites certain feelings.

IN THE MATTER OF A PETITION OF MAHOMED ALI.

Anger for instance. Against whom? Against the Servians, Bulgarians, Greeks and Montenegonis. 'What is the common tie? Don't you think that ignorant Mahomedans would think that Christianity is the common tie?]

Mr. Norton.—The appeal being to the Christians, how can it be supposed that they will be looked upon with hatred or contempt. There is no suggestion that Christianity has approved or sanctioned these misdeeds.

[STEPHEN, J.—The charge is that your fellow Christians are behaving like savages.]

[JENKINS, C. J.—You notice that the Local Government follows suit two days after the order of the Government of India. How is it that two governments only have taken action?]

The Advocate-General.—I must be allowed to say that the Bombay Government has also taken action.

[JENKINS, C. J.—All that is necessary under this Act is exicting hatred against any class. By whom? I do not understand that. The Act does not say.]

[STEPHEN, J.—That shews how wide the Act is.]

[JENKINS, C. J.—My difficulty is this: We must be fed with facts and not with law. Law we can supply.]

[STEPHEN, J.—They say in effect that inasmuch as he has committed theft, he is guilty of theft.]

Mr. Norton.—May Government plead their own wrong to escape decision under sec. 17?

[JENKINS, C. J.—If we hold there is no forfeiture, you will get back your single copy of the pamphlet.]

Mr. Norton.—Of course, your Lordship knows that I am not fighting for the pamphlet I am fighting for a decision that I have done nothing that will bring one within the purview of sec. 4.

Advocate-General in reply.—I submit that my friend Mr. Norton has totally failed to discharge the onus which the law casts on him. Reads sec. 4.

The pamphlet certainly comes under sec. 4.

Refers to passage "Perish scores of thousands of innocent Mussalmans .... thousands of women etc. ... these Crusaders were a horde of blood-thirsty and licentious savages, worthy descendants of their ancestors the Huns."

What is the likely result of a passage like this?

This passage does not stand alone.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Would it be fair to read this para. without reading the preceding para.?]

[Refers to the "wirelesses" of the captain of the French cruiser "Bruix."]

[STEPHEN, J.—The mention of the word crusade suggests an antagonism between Christian and Mahomedans. Does not it?]

Advocate General.—Exactly, my Lord.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Look at sec. 20. We should like to have evidence. That would be of help to us. It shews that proof by the Government is contemplated.]

[STEPHEN, J.—Do you agree that grounds ought to have been stated.]

Advocate-General.—Grounds have been stated.

[STEPHEN, J.—You think them sufficient. You don't want to amend them.]

Advocate-General.—That might be a matter for consideration. If you think amendment is necessary, I will consider it.

[JENKINS, C. J.—How can we suggest amendment of an executive order.]

IN THE MATTER OF A PETITION OF MAHOMED ALI.

Advocate-General.—Reads sec. 12 of the the Press Act and says that the expression "stating the words" is only directory and not mandatory. Sec. 12 has been complied with, because the notification says that the pamphlet offends against a certain sub-head of sec. 4.

[STEPHEN, J.—Don't you think that stating grounds implies allegation of facts.]

Advocate-General.—If the Government were to set out all circumstances that require the forfeiture of this book then the Government would be only perpetuating the evil which it seeks to nip in the bud. The Government has stated the particular sub-head of sec. 4 (sub-sec. 1) which the pamphlet offends against.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Suggests how the notification might have been better drawn up.]

Advocate-General.—Sec. 4 embraces an immense variety of matter and the Government has pointed out the particular sub-head or reason for which the forfeiture is necessary. I agree entirely that the notification is not well drawn up.

[STEPHEN, J.—May we ask you how you would have drafted it ?]

[JENKINS, C. J.—If Government took action under sec. 4, it should have set out the words that are offensive.]

Advocate-General.—I submit it is not necessary to set out the circumstances that require the forfeiture.

[JENKINS, C. J.—It is necessary that the Court should know the grounds upon which the case of forfeiture is based.]

Advocate-General.—These pamphlets were reprinted by Mahomed Ali.

Mr. Norton.—That is not the ground of the notification.

Advocate-General.—Mr. Norton said yesterday that the notification was a slur on Mahomed Ali.

[JENKINS, C. J.—What is the meaning of the provision that grounds are to be stated ?]

Advocate-General.—Reads sec. 17.

"Grounds are to be stated." This is only directory. An observation from your Lordships that grounds are always to be stated, will I think be followed in future. Due deference will be attached to it.

[JENKINS, C. J.—"Grounds are to be stated." This is not done by stating a portion of the language of the section. If the words of sec. 12 were more emphatic, would we not be bound to say then that there was no order under sec. 17. If a condition precedent to the validity of the order were not followed, could we act under sec. 17 ? Your view is that if it is manifestly an illegal order then we cannot act under sec. 17 ?]

[STEPHEN, J.—If there was no notification could we act under sec. 17 ? The notification is essential—is it not ?]

Advocate-General.—If there was no notification the Court would have no jurisdiction. There has been an attempt certainly to state the ground. Cites a Punjab Government Notification.

[JENKINS, C. J.—The Punjab Government seems to support you.]

[JENKINS, C. J.—As my learned brother has said grounds of opinion mean the facts and not the law.]

[WOODROFFE, J.—The less particulars are alleged the more difficult it is to say that the publication comes under sec. 4. We are left to guess a lot of things.]

Advocate-General.—The grounds depend on the character of the pamphlet.

[WOODROFFE, J.—According to your argument nothing need be set out at all. The Government may have in possession the grounds of forfeiture but according to your argument they are not bound to state them. If so, how is this Court to perform its judicial function with regard to cases coming under this Act.]

Advocate-General.—Refers to the reprint of the pamphlet in the paper-book.

[Jenkins, C. J.—Have you got a copy of the original pamphlet ?]

Advocate-General.—Yes. Here it is.

[Jenkins, C. J.—This ought to have been exhibited.]

Advocate-General.—We will file, if necessary, an affidavit by the Commissioner of Police.

Refers to the passage referring to Sir Adam Block's observation. "The oriental and the Turk in particular has always trusted the Englishman because he is known to be a just man. I am afraid that this belief is passing away." It is printed on several pages—"I am afraid that this belief, &c." This is defamatory. It does bring Englishmen to hatred and contempt.

Refers to the passage "If crimes such as these . . . . pass . . . . uncondemned then cleavage between us and our fellow Moslem subjects may eventually become a serious matter."

[Woodroffe, J.—Your argument is that whatever may happen in Europe, no comment on it ought to be allowed in India. If the Turks had committed massacre, no comment on it ought to be allowed here because the Mussulmans might take offence.]

Advocate-General.—Refers to a portion of the pamphlet giving the narrative as given by the Buda-Pesth correspondent of the "Daily Telegraph" in its issue of the 30th December regarding "atrocities in Albania." Reads letter signed D. of 26th December 1912. Then an extract is quoted from the Paris daily paper "Humanite" of 2nd February 1913 headed "How the Christian Liberators treat the Mussulmans." Refers to the letter published in the "Kölnishe Zeitung" from its Salonica correspondent headed "Christian atrocities."

[Jenkins, C. J.—I don't understand that you attribute anything like criminal offence to Mahomed Ali.]

Advocate-General.—Exactly, My Lord. I don't attribute any criminal offence to him. That there is no slur on Mahomed Ali is apparent from the notification. Cites King v. John Burns (2), charge to the jury. Your Lordships have to consider the effect of the pamphlet having regard to the immoderate language in which it is written.

[Stephen, J.—Is not the object of the pamphlet to induce Christians to vindicate their religion ?]

Advocate-General.—Refers to para. "L'Illustration," 1st March, 1913 Extract from Humanite of 2nd February 1913. Refers to the remarks under the illustration "a Turkish woman of Dedeagath (Photograph)." It is obviously meant to rouse angry feeling. Refers also to Ch. VI concluding lines. "Is the honour of a woman less precious to you because she is a Mahomedan."

[Woodroffe, J.—You have to shew that the pamphlet will produce ill-feeling against Christians in India. Don't you think that the prohibition of this pamphlet will have the effect of associating us with the Balkan "Bashi-bazouks ?" If so, then the effect will be bad—won't it ?]

Advocate-General.—I would ask your Lordship to read the statute as it stands and not introduce any foreign matter. I say Mr. Norton's reference to Sir Edward Gray's speech is irrelevant.

IN THE MATTER OF A PETITION OF MAHOMED ALI.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Not at all, you can go into the history of the matter.]

Advocate-General.—Refers to the preamble of the Act.

[JENKINS, C. J.—The causes of this legislation may throw light upon the kind of class hatred contemplated.]

Advocate-General.—Even the truth of words could not justify their publication if they came under sec. 4.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Can a Local Government forfeit that which is not within its jurisdiction? Forfeiture, so far as Bengal is concerned, would be as a result of the notification by the Local Government. Mr. Norton has said that the Government of Bengal could not issue a notification for forfeiture until it saw the pamphlet.]

Advocate-General.—He has given no evidence.

Mr. Norton.—Refers to the supplementary affidavit.

Advocate-General.—I have no information on the matter at all.

[STEPHEN, J.—What is the date of the Bombay notification.]

Advocate-General.—10th July 1913. My learned friend Mr. Norton says that the copies in the possession of Mahomed Ali were the only copies in India. But there is no evidence to support that assertion.

[STEPHEN, J.—Is there anything to shew when the pamphlet was published?]

Advocate-General.—No date is given. It is published in 1913.

Mr. Norton replies.

The Government's notification is not in conformity with the provisions of the Act.

Stating grounds of opinion is not directory but mandatory.

Refers to sec. 153A of the Indian Penal Code. Cites Khosh Mahomed v. Nasir Mahomed (3).

This case holds that grounds must be given. No grounds, no order.

"Stating its grounds" means shall state grounds.

I am entitled to refer to the debate in the Legislative Council in order to shew the atmosphere in which this Act was passed. Of course, I don't want you to construe the sections of the Act by the help of what was said in the Legislative Council.

Refers to explanation to sec. 121A of the Indian Penal Code.

Cf. Exp. II of sec. 4 of the Press Act.

Refers to sec. 12. The notification not only forfeits the book, but also copies.

[STEPHEN, J.—A book includes copies.]

Mr. Norton.—I rely mainly upon the merits of my case.

I submit that the notification is bad and I am entitled to ask your Lordships to hold that the notification is bad. But then my purpose in bringing this matter here will fail, if I did not get a decision on the merits for which I have come here.

Reads sec. 17.

If that be the law and if we cannot go any further, I will of course be content with a decision regarding the order for forfeiture.

Sec. 17 throws responsibility upon your Lordships to come to a decision one way or another.

IN THE MATTER OF A PETITION OF MAHOMED ALI.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an application to the High Court under sec. 17 of the Indian Press Act, 1910, to set aside what is described as an order of forfeiture under sec. 12 of that Act.

The order of which complaint is made was published in the Calcutta Gazette Extraordinary, July 22nd, 1913, and runs as follows:—

"NOTIFICATION.

"No. 2296 P. D. The 18th July 1913. Whereas it appears to the Governor in Council that a pamphlet, entitled "Come over into Macedonia and help us" contains words of the nature described in sec. 4, sub sec. (1) of the Indian Press Act, 1910 (I of 1910) inasmuch as they are likely to bring into hatred or contempt certain classes of His Majesty's subjects in British India.

"Now, therefore, in exercise of the power conferred by sec. 12, sub-sec. (1) of the said Act, the Governor in Council hereby declares all copies of the said pamphlet wherever found to be forfeited to His Majesty."

This is not the first pronouncement on this phamphlet, for by a similar notification published in the Gazette of India on the 16th July 1913 the Governor-General in Council declared the pamphlet to be forfeited.

And even before this there had been notification to the same effect by the Government of Bombay.

"Sec. 12 (1) is in these terms. "Where any newspaper book or other document wherever printed appears to the Local Government to contain any words, signs or visible representations of the nature described in sec. 4, sub-sec. (1), the Local Government may by notification in the Local Official Gazette stating the grounds of its opinion, declare such newspaper, book or other document to be forfeited to His Majesty. The relevant portions of sec. 4 are as follows:—

"Whenever it appears to the Local Government that any printing press in respect of which any security has been deposited as required by sec. 3 is used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper, book or other document containing any words signs or visible representations which are likely or may have a tedency, directly or indirectly, whether by inference, suggestion, allusion, metaphor implication or otherwise to bring into hatred or contempt any class or section of His Majesty's subject in British India," then the consequences indicated in the Act are to follow.

There is a curious difference between the language of sec. 4 and of sec. 12. Under sec. 4 what may be declared to be forfeited is "all copies of such newspaper book or other document." Under sec. 12 what may be declared to be forfeited is "such newspaper book or other document." Sec. 12 stands alone in this respect and its language may be contrasted with that of secs. 6, 7, 9, 11, 13, 16 and 20 as well as sec. 4. I doubt whether any difference of operation was intended.

Sec. 17 entitles any person having an interest in any property in respect of which an order of forfeiture has been made under sec. 12 to apply to the High Court to set aside the order, but only on the ground that the newspaper book or other document in respect of which the order was made did not contain any words signs or visible representations of the nature described in sec. 4, sub-sec. (1). Together with this section must be read sec. 22 by which, with a qualified exception in favour of the High Court, all jurisdiction is in effect barred. This section, save for the exception, reproduces sec. 16 of the short lived Press Act of 1878, commonly known as the Vernacular Press Act. Two conditions then are necessary to a forfeiture in accordance with the terms of sec. 12. First it must appear to the Local Government that the publication contains words signs or visible representations of the nature described in sec. 4, sub-sec. (1), and, secondly, the Local Government must by notification in the Local Official Gazette, stating the grounds of its opinion, declare such publication to be forfeited to His Majesty. The first conditions implies that the publication had been seen and read by the Local Government prior to its declaration of forfeiture, for it must first form an opinion. Though there is no evidence as to this, the Advocate-General assured us that a copy must have been in the Local Government's possession before the declaration. I will assume this to be so. The second condition is one which has given rise to considerable discussion. It has been urged that it is a necessary condition of an effective forfeiture that the grounds of the Local Government's opinion should be stated, and that this has not been done in the present case.

On hearing that it appears to the Government in any particular case that there are words of the nature described in sec. 4 (1), the first question that occurs to any one whose duty it is to enquire, is, why does it so appear, what are the grounds of its opinion?

Those responsible for this Act foresaw this, and so they specifically provided that the forfeiting notifications should state the grounds of the Local Government's opinion. But when we turn to the notification no such grounds are stated; nothing in the nature of a fact is set forth, there is merely a citation of those words of the section which are invoked.

The notification amplified to fit the circumstances of this case seems to take this shape; "It appears to the Local Government that these are words likely to bring into hatred or contempt a class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India and the grounds of its opinion are that the words are likely to bring into hatred or contempt certain classes of His Majesty's subjects in India."

But that repetition of an opinion cannot be its grounds, and yet that is all that the notification furnishes in the shape of grounds. This is obviously insufficient and not a compliance with the terms of the Act.

Moreover I think that this direction in the section is mandatory, and that the Legislature intended to impose, and has imposed, on the Local Government an imperative obligation to state the grounds of its opinion.

The language of sec. 4 may be compared. It requires that the notice forfeiting the copies of the publication should be in writing and state or describe the offending words signs or visible representations. These provisions as to the statements to be contained in forfeiting documents were, I think, designedly inserted and were intended to be a check on the power of forfeiture vested in the Local Government; for it is easy to see that the obligation to state grounds furnishes a valuable safeguard.

The statement of grounds may for another reason to be regarded as an essential part of the Legislature's scheme; for it might help the High Court to perform the duties cast on it under sec. 17.

And in fact we have in this case been considerably embarrassed, as will appear later, by the absence of grounds.

The notification therefore appears to me to be defective in a material particular, and but for sec. 22 of the Act it would (in my opinion) be our duty to hold that there had been no legal forfeiture.

That section however provides that every declaration purporting to be made under the Act shall, as against all persons be conclusive evidence that the forfeiture therein referred to has taken place. The result is that though I hold the notification does not comply with the provisions of the Act, still we are (in my opinion) barred from questioning the legality of the forfeiture it purports to declare.

This brings me to the question whether the pamphlet under discussion contains words of the nature described in sec. 4, sub-sec. 1.

The provisions of sec. 4 are very comprehensive, and its language is as wide as human ingenuity could make it. Indeed, it appears to me to embrace the whole range of varying degrees of assurance from certainty on the one side to the very limits of impossibility, on the other.

It is difficult to see to what lengths the operation of this section might not be plausibly extended by an ingenious mind.

They would certainly extend to writings that may even command approval.

An attack on that degraded section of the public which lives on the misery and shame of others would come within this wide-spread net, the praise of a class might not be free from risk. Much that is regarded as standard literature might undoubtedly be caught.

It is however urged that even so this pamphlet is outside both the spirit and the words of the section. And now I will notice the argument that has been addressed to us as to this.

The pamphlet, it is said, is an appeal to His Majesty's subjects, followers of Christian faith; and it is an appeal to them as Christians to move the British Government to such individual or collective action as will put a stop to outrages that shock all feelings of humanity, if they in fact occurred.

And so, it is contended this is an appeal to the people of a Christian nation, just because they are a Christian nation, and thus would be the first to protest against the cruel disregard of the principles of its faith, by some who profess to be its adherents, and against acts so abominable as to have earned the scathing denunciation of the Christian Monarch of one of the allied nations. Nor does the argument rest there; for it is brought to our notice that the pamphlet contains passages which show that Christianity as a creed is not attacked, notably that which states (p. 28) that it "was ever the symbol of humanity and mercy"; and that it states that those who were fighting under the cross betrayed it. It is true that it refers to Crusades (p. 3) but this has reference not to any Crusade proclaimed by Christianity but to the proclamation of the King of Bulgaria. On the other hand, there are passages which expressly state that Turkish excesses are not condoned, which shew that the Christians are not attacked as such and narrate the protests made and help given by Christians other than the Balkan allies engaged in the war. There is no racial or political tie between the Balkan allies and the Christian subjects of His Majesty's in India which would make it possible that wrongs committed by the former should be considered imputable to the latter. Nor is there really any credal link because it is not suggested that the acts complained of were done in the name of and with the authority of Christianity but in betrayal of it. On the contrary, it is argued, the suppression of this pamphlet might tend in the Mussalman mind to band the Christians of the country with the authors of these wrongs and make it appear that it was desired that these should not be made public lest they might throw discredit on Christian subjects in India.

The pamphlet then, it is said, so far from bringing Englishmen or His Majesty's Christian subjects into hatred or contempt is the highest compliment that could be paid to them.

This is the argument and it may be a very forcible one when addressed to those who can be swayed by it. The executive Government can be moved by such reflections; our investigation is of a more prosaic order.

The Advocate-General has admitted, and I think very properly, that the pamphlet is not seditious and does not offend against any provision of the criminal law of India.

But he has contended, and rightly in my opinion, that the provisions of the Press Act extend far beyond the criminal law; and he has argued that the burden of proof is cast on the applicant, so that however meritorious the pamphlet may be, still if the applicant cannot establish the negative the Act requires, his application must fail.

And what is this negative. It is not enough for the applicant to show that the words of the pamphlet are not likely to bring into hatred or contempt any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in British India, or that they have not a tendency in fact to bring about that result. But he must go further, and show that it is impossible for them to have that tendency either directly or indirectly, and whether by way of inference, suggestion, allusion, metaphor or implication. Nor is that all, for we find that the Legislature has added to this the all-embracing phrase "or otherwise."

And here I may, not inappropriately, invite attention to sec. 153A of the Penal Code which has such affinity to the statutory provision governing this case, that it may be regarded as its basis. That section was added to the Penal Code in 1898, and was directed against the promotion and attempts to promote feeling of enmity or hatred between different classes.

It will be noticed that the feeling here described is one of enmity or hatred: no provision is made for contempt. But the more important divergence is that while the Penal Code requires that the enmity or hatred should be not only towards a class but by a class, there is no such limitation in the Press Act as to the source from which these hostile feelings should proceed; it aims against all hatred or contempt regardless of those by whom it is entertained. Nor is this the only direction in which there is a greater stringency in the Press Act. To sec. 153A there is appended an explanation which declares it not to be an offence to point out, without malicious intention and with an honest view to their removal, matters which are producing or have a tendency to produce the feelings of enmity or hatred, indicated in the section. And yet no such qualifying words are to be found in sec. 4 of the Press Act, and this is the more remarkable because the qualifying explanations of sec. 124A are introduced, though they relate to an even graver offence.

It may be that this omission was an oversight; but whether that be so or not the Government insists on the absence of this explanation, though it leads to a curious result.

I think the Government is entitled to stand on the letter of the law, though it deprives Mr. Mahomed Ali of an opportunity of relying on an explanation conceived in the spirit of that which forms part of sec. 153A of the Penal Code.

Had the Press Act incorporated the explanation to sec. 153A, as it has that to sec. 124A, Mr. Mahomed Ali might perhaps have made a very strong case in view of the Advocate-General's admission as to the character of the pamphlet and the applicant's purpose and intentions.

The applicant however contends strenuously that the pamphlet does not come even within these all-embracing terms of the Act, and that the Legislature aimed at something wholly different. The incalculable powers of forfeiture vested in the executive are a sure sign that the Act was called into being by urgent political necessity. And it is of sufficiently recent date to enable us all to remember that the mischief chiefly aimed at was the prevalence of political assassination and anarchical outrage. Comprehensive words were designedly used to catch crime and the incitement to crime posing in the guise of innocence.

The Act was directed against crime and aimed at its prevention. I doubt whether publication with an authorship, a source, and a purpose like those of the present pamphlet were thought of; and I recognise the force of the argument that the Act is now being applied to a purpose never intended. But be that so or not, if the Legislature has employed language wide enough to cover the pamphlet, this lack of reserve affords no answer to the forfeiture now attacked.

I have already dealt with one phase of the absence of grounds in the notification. This defect, and the Government's failure to place before us any materials beyond those furnished by the applicant have sensibly added to our difficulties in discharging the peculiar duties cast on us by the Act.

The notification does not even specify the classes that might be brought into hatred or contempt or which of these two diverse sentiments is apprehended. And so when Mr. Norton rose to address the Court he had to seek this information from the Advocate-General.

The first answer implied that it included Christians, Greeks and Englishmen; but as under the Act the classes are limited to those composed of His Majesty's subjects in India, the Greeks were withdrawn and the first and the last retained. Still the answer in its original form is not without its significance, though it was afterwards modified.

The pamphlet would doubtless bring into hatred the unchristian Christians whose deeds of atrocity are described. The theory presented is that the reflection of this hatred might fall, not indeed on the Government but on His Majesty's Christian and English subjects in British India. If this be the Government's view with all the information at its disposal, the Court, no more informed than the man in the street, cannot (in my opinion) affirm this could not be so, and affirm it with a degree of assurance that would entitle it to set aside a measure of safety on which the Government had solemnly resolved.

The Advocate-General has convinced me that the Government's view of this piece of legislation is correct, and that the High Court's power of intervention is the narrowest: its power to pronounce on the legality of the forfeiture by reason of failure to observe the mandatory conditions of the Act is barred: the ability to pronounce on the wisdom of the executive order is withheld: and its functions are limited to considering whether the applicant to it has discharged the almost hopeless task of establishing that his pamphlet does not contain words which fall within the all-comprehensive provision of the Act. I describe it as an almost hopeless task, b cause the terms of sec. 4 are so wide that it is scarcely conceivable that any publication would attract the notice of the Government in this connection to which some provision of that section might not "directly or indirectly whether by inference, suggestion, allusion, metaphor, implication or otherwise apply."

I have said that the ability to pronounce on the wisdom or unwisdom of executive action has been withheld. There was good reason for this. Courts of law can only move on defined lines, and act on information brought before them under limited conditions.

It is not so with the executive authority. It would be paralysed if it had to observe the restrictions placed on the Courts.

Its action can be prompted by information derived from sources not open to the Courts, and based on considerations forbidden to them; it can be moved by impressions and personal experiences to which no expression can be given in a Court, but which may be a very potent incentive to executive action.

The Government may be in possession of information which it would be impossible to disclose in a Court of law, and yet obviously requiring immediate action.

Therefore a jurisdic ion to pronounce on the wisdom or unwisdom of executive action has been withheld and rightly withheld. It may be a question whether even the semblance which this Act provides should not have been withheld as it was by Act IX of 1878.

Political considerations and reasons of S ate are the life-blood of executive action, but they have no place in a Court of law. "The constitution," said Lord Mansfield, "does not allow reasons of State to influence our judgment: God forbid it should—we must not regard political consequences how formidable soever they might be: if rebellion was the certain consequence we are bound to say, Fiat justitia ruat coelum" [case of John Wilkes (1)].

The fact is that the executive and judicial authorities stand on wholly different planes for the purpose of arriving at a decision as to the propriety of executive action. And the one cannot sit in judgment on the determinations of the other. Si judicas, Cognosce; si regnas, jube.

And what then is the conclusion of the whole matter; of the two alleged checks on executive action, supposed to be furnished by the Act, one, the intervention of the Courts, is ineffectual, while the other, for this very reason, can be, and in this case, has been disregarded, without impairing the practical effect of a forfeiture purporting to be under the Act.

One word more, and that is as to the motive of the present application. The applicant, Mr. Mahomed Ali, is by no means unknown in India; he is a journalist of position and repute.

(1) 19 How. St. Trials 1112 (1763—1

Though he is not an accused, he tells us that he regards himself as under the stigma which (he declares) must attach to any journalist who has come under the operation of an Act directed, primarily at any rate, against a criminal movement marked by outrages which so shocked the public sentiment as to call for this drastic legislation. But even if he has not succeeded in proving the negative that fate and the law have thrown in his way, at least his application has not been wholly in vain.

The Advocate-General, representing the Government, has publicly announced, that Mr. Mahomed Ali's forfeited pamphlet is not, in his opinion, a seditious libel, and indeed that he attributes no criminal offence to Mr. Mahomed Ali: he was even willing to concede and believe he was acting in the highest interests of humanity and civilization. In this I think the Advocate-General made no admission which it was not proper for him to make.

Mr. Mahomed Ali then has lost his book, but he retains his character; and he is free from the stigma that he apprehended. And this doubtless will be some consolation to him when we dismiss, as we must, his present application. I think there should be no order as to cost.

Stephen, J.—I agree with the Chief Justice that this application must be dismissed. In view however of its novelty, and of the difficulties to which it gives rise, I consider that I should express my own view of the questions involved. If we take advantage of the statement made by the Advocate-General that the classes whom it is alleged the pamphlet before us is likely to bring into hatred are Englishmen and Christians, and confine our attention to the parts of the Press Act that apply to the present case, the position we are in may be correctly described as follows:—

It appeared to the Local Government that the pamphlet before us contained words that were likely directly, indirectly or (to abbreviate) in any possible way, to bring Englishmen or Christians being His Majesty's subjects in British India, into hatred as a class. They accordingly published a notification in the Local Gazette declaring the pamphlet forfeited, and giving as a ground of their opinion that the pamphlet was likely to bring Englishmen and Christians into hatred, the fact that it was likely to bring them into hatred. The result of this notification was that the police in Calcutta confiscated the pamphlet, and Mr. Mahomed Ali now applies before us to set aside the confiscation on the ground that the pamphlet is not likely to bring such Englishmen and Christians as have been described into hatred, and it is this negative proposition that Mr. Norton seeks to prove on his behalf.

The case he makes before us is twofold. In the first place he says that the pamphlet cannot have the effect ascribed to it. In the second he says that the notification published by the Government is bad because it does not state the grounds of the opinion that the Government have formed about the pamphlet, which it must do according to sec. 12, that therefore the confiscation is illegal, and there is no ground for the application he is making. He naturally presses for a decision on the first ground, but, if he cannot obtain that, he asks for a declaration that the notification and the confiscation are both bad.

Logically however the question of our jurisdiction must be considered first. As to this I am of opinion that the notification is not according to law. Looking at the section, and indeed at the Act as a whole, I have no doubt that the provision in sec. 12 that the grounds of the opinion on which the Local Government have acted must be stated, is mandatory and not merely directory. There can be no doubt that it is framed for the protection of any person whose property may be confiscated, and not merely for purposes of administrative convenience. The ground of an opinion must in this case, if not always, be a fact or facts, and no fact is disclosed merely by a specific relations of the elements that the law requires to be present in order for legal consequences to follow. I have already described the statement of the grounds in terms which seem to me to lead to an absurdity; but I have taken pains to make them correct. I cannot say what facts should be stated. I do not think, for example, that it can be the case that the Local Government should state to us all the information on which they have acted, for I cannot suppose that we are to revise their action as a whole. On the other hand we have, it appears, power to revise their action to some extent, and for this purpose some statement of fact seems essential.

But because the law has not been followed in this matter, I cannot hold that the notification is void in such a way as to deprive us of jurisdiction. For, such are the provisions of this Act, that if our jurisdiction to revise the action of the Government under sec. 17 is taken away, no other remedy is open to the person whose property is confiscated, and the Local Government can by their own laches deprive him of the only relief that the law provides. Such a conclusion seems to me so contrary to all principles of justice that I cannot accept it or apply to the present case the general principle that where exceptional powers are conferred on an executive authority and a special procedure for their exercise is provided, a failure to follow that procedure will prevent an exercise of those powers. Also, though I cannot say what facts are to be stated in order to disclose the ground for the opinion on which the Local Government acts, I think it may be the case that a statement of facts too meagre to give an applicant under sec. 17 any real assistance, would be sufficient to satisfy the requirements of sec. 12. Further our jurisdiction is very closely confined by the terms of sec. 19, with which secs. 17 and 22 must be read; and I have doubts whether it may not be that we can only answer the question indicated in sec. 17, assuming that everything else has been rightly done.

I am of opinion, therefore, that we have jurisdiction to consider the question before us on its merits, and it is my duty therefore to do so. It is impossible however to do this without first noticing the point of view from which Mr. Norton has asked us to consider the case. He did not contend that this Act was penal, but he dwelt at length on the intentions of the persons who wrote the pamphlet, apparently in Constantinople, and of the applicant who as I understand published it, or at least proposed to publish it here. With these I conceive that we have nothing to do directly, we have only to consider what effect the publication is likely to produce. The intentions of the writers and publisher may be of importance on the principle that they are not likely to produce an effect they did not intend but otherwise we need not consider them. Nor can I accede to the argument that this Act was passed only to prevent active crime. I can only judge of its purpose from its contents, and as I read it, its purpose is to prevent the publication of anything that may be dangerous in any of the ways described in sec. 4; and the means supplied to Government for doing this have no relation to the propriety of the conduct, still less to the criminality, of the publisher or the readers. The purpose of the Act as I read it may be to prevent crime: not by detecting or punishing criminals, but by preventing persons now innocent from becoming criminals. Consequently I need scarcely say that I consider that no slur has been cast on Mr. Mahomed's character by the confiscation of his pamphlet. A man may own a mad dog without blame; and no slur is cast on his character if it is confiscated.

This view is in my opinion confirmed by a reference to the provisions of the Penal Code that deal with cognate matters. By sec. 153A of that Code, it is an offence to promote feelings of enmity between different classes of His Majesty's subjects, but it is explained that it is not an offence to point out without malicious intentions, and with an honest view to their removal, matters which are producing or have tendency to produce such feelings of hatred. Thus when the law is dealing with the matter of creating hatred of a class from the point of view of the criminal law, its action is restricted to cases where what is promoted is hatred by one class of another, and words and so forth used without malice and honestly to remove the causes of hatred are not punishable. But in the present case the law applies to hatred by any one, possibly only by one man, and the explanation as to the intention of the person who used them is omitted. It seems that the Legislature must have had sec. 153A in view when it enacted sec. 4 (c) of the Press Act, and I therefore suppose that the omission in the latter of any provision like the explanation in the former was intentional. Again Exlpanation II of sec. 4 (1) of the Press Act excludes from the scope of the Act "comments expressing disapprobation of the measures of the Government . . . . with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, or of the administration or other action of the Government . . . without . . . exciting or attempting to excite hatred." This is obviously adopted from two explanations to sec. 124A of the Penal Code, which are applicable here, because if hatred is in fact . . . . excited the explanation does not apply, whatever may have been the intention of the person who excited it.

From the relation of this Act to the Penal Code, I therefore conclude that the scope of this Act has been made far wider than that of the Code. So wide indeed are the powers that the Legislature has conferred on the Government that they would be able to confiscate a newspaper containing words that might cause one man to hate, or even to contemn, a class, if such there should unhappily be, who sought to embarrass the Government of the country by murder and robbery. When such wide powers were conferred on Government, I cannot but suppose that it was intended that they should be widely used.

This brings me to the actual question that I conceive that I have to decide, namely, whether Mr. Norton has shown that the pamphlet before us is not likely to bring Englishmen and Christians into hatred. And in attempting to form an opinion on it I find myself in a position which is unfamiliar to me, and in which, as far as I am aware no Judge in the British Empire has been placed, since the remote days of early English Jurisprudence, I have to decide a question of fact on such evidence as is supplied by one document. The side on whom the onus of proving his case is cast is not in a position to give any evidence. As the other side has not called any witnesses, no cross-examination has taken place.

The answer to the question I have to decide depends on the social and political state of the Mahomedans in India, or perhaps of certain sections of them. As to this such information as I have is unverified and general to a high degree; it has never been my duty to acquire information on the matter; and absolutely none has been supplied to me on this occasion. Under these circumstances I have no doubt that any opinion I may express will be received by others with the respect that is due to the office I have the honour to hold; but it will be impossible for me to share in this feeling. The question put to us is so framed that any doubtful point is to be decided against the applicant.

Coming to the pamphlet itself I have no doubt that I must answer the question before me against the applicant. Generally speaking I suppose from its contents that it is the work of avowed partisans of the Turks in their war against the Christians Balkan States. The object of the writers, and here their intention becomes relevant, is to put an end to horrible atrocities which they allege to have been committed by the Allies on Mahomedans. To do this they tell Englishmen what is being done by their fellow Christians and appeal to them, as Christians, to stop it. In more detail I find statements that the Moslem population of Macedonia is being practically annihilated, by murder, outrage and pillage: if this passes unnoticed and uncondemned there will a cleavage between Mahomedans and English. Then follows a series of charges of misgovernment and a catalogue of horrible outrages, the detail of which I may pass over, but all of which, I think I am correct in saying, are represented as having been perpetrated by Christians. In conclusion the readers of the pamphlet are informed that the Government of England will do nothing to stop the outrages unless forced to by public opinion, and it is stated that they can stop them if they will. Throughout the whole of the pamphlet the outrages mentioned are imputed to the Allies whose Christianity is constantly referred to. There are cases in which accounts are given of how Christians tried to prevent or mitigate what was going on; but the almost avowed object of the pamphlet is to excite the indignation of Christians in England against the conduct of Christians in Macedonia so as to induce them to bring it to an end.

The disinterested humanity of the writers is beyond question, and they certainly have right to make an appeal to Englishmen as they did. Mr. Mahomed Ali is entitled to a presumption that he acted with like humanity, and it is not suggested that he committed any unlawful act or did anything wrong in publishing the pamphlet in India. But these considerations do not touch the question whether the pamphlet is not likely to make Mahomedans hate Christians. A perusal of the accounts of the outrages is likely to excite anger in the mind of any reader who does not regard the pamphlet as a false document, which we have no reason for doing. I can well understand that in the mind of some Indian Mahomedans anger might easily and perhaps justifiably turn to a hatred of the Allies, from which, making allowances for the infirmities of human nature, a hatred of the co-religionists of the Allies would seem but a short step especially for those whose co-religionists are involved in a national disaster.

Such is my opinion on the question I have to answer. Acting on such information as I have, I entertain no doubt as to what my answer should be. But the absence of doubt is probably largely due to the absence of evidence, and cannot be taken as going far towards showing that the opinion is correct.

I agree that costs should not be awarded in this case.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 629, 630—Application for review granted, if re-opens whole case or only the special questions found wrongly decided—Final decree, appeal against—Grounds on which order for review may be questioned.

When an application for review is granted and the case reheard, in an appeal against the final decree the propriety of the order whereby the review was granted can be challenged only on the grounds specified in sec. 629 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Where no such ground can be made out, but the order is sought to be challenged on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction, the proper course for the aggrieved party is to move the High Court in revision.

When an application for review has been granted the Court is not restricted at the rehearing to a consideration of that question alone which has been argued upon the rule for review and found to have been erroneously decided. The whole case is re-opened unless the Court directs under the latter part of sec. 630 that the case is to be heard only upon special points.

What was intended to be decided in DHURONIDHAR SEN v. THE AGRA BANK (2) was that it was competent to the Court in its discretion to refuse to entertain at the rehearing a question which had not been placed before the Court when the review was granted.

This was an Appeal from a decision of Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee, dated the 5th of May 1911, passed in Second Appeal No. 1101 of 1909, which had been preferred from a decision of Babu Lalit Kumar Basu, Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, dated the 23rd of February 1909, confirming a decision of Babu Joges Chandra Sen Gupta, Officiating Munsif of Brahmanbaria, dated the 28th of May 1907.

The judgment of CHATTERJEE, J., which sets out the facts was as follows:—

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—This was a suit for bhag rent. The first Court dismissed the suit holding that the bhag settlement was not proved. It was further held that the Plaintiff had co-sharers who should have been made parties. On appeal Babu D. N. Sarkar, Subordinate Judge, decreed the suit holding that the tenancy was made out and on the contract made by the Plaintiff he was entitled to sue. It appears that about the same time the parties litigated their title to the disputed land, and it was held that the Plaintiff was entitled to 13 annas and the Defendants to 3 annas. The Defendants applied for review on this and other grounds and notice was issued by the same officer. His successor granted the review on this ground alone and ordered a rehearing of the appeal. He reheard the whole appeal and without adverting to the ground on which the review had been granted or to the fact of his predecessor having been of an entirely different opinion he dismissed the suit holding that the relationship of landlord and tenant had not been established.

It is contended in appeal before me that the learned Judge was wrong in deciding the whole appeal irrespective of the error or new matter on account of which the review had been granted. I think that this contention is good. The grant of the review was specifically made on the ground that the Plaintiff's share was not 16 annas but 13 annas, the Defendants having been found entitled to 3 annas. If the learned Judge who had originally tried the case had this review before him he would have confined himself to the particular ground or new matter which was made out. I think that the grant of the review was limited to the particular reason on which it was granted and the learned Judge was wrong in re-opening the whole case and overruling the decision of his predecessor by dismissing the whole suit. It has always been held in this Court that a review Court must confine itself to the ground upon which the review is granted. [See Byjnath Sahoy v. Wuzeer Narain (1) and Dhuronidhar Sen v. The Agra Bank (2)]. He could in this case grant a decree to the extent of the legitimate share of the Plaintiff but he had no right to ignore that ground and set aside the judgment of his predecessor in office.

A preliminary objection was also taken that the suit was of the nature of suits cognizable by a Court of Small Causes.

As the Defendants according to the plaint was getting a half share of the produce as the price of labour, I think the case has been treated as a rent-suit and objection taken for the first time in this Court is of no value.

The result is that the Plaintiff will get a decree for $\frac{13}{16}$th of his claim with proportionate costs.

[Against this judgment the Defendants preferred the present appeal.]

Mr. Nuruddin Ahmed for the Appellant.
Babu Sasadhar Roy for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal by the first Defendant under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against a judgment of Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee in a suit for arrears of rent. The question in controversy between the parties was, whether the relationship of landlord and tenant had been proved to exist between them.

The Court of first instance answered this question in favour of the Defendant and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed this decision on the 30th of April 1908 and made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff. An application for review of judgment was presented to the Subordinate Judge and notice was directed to be issued thereupon. The application, however, came to be heard by his successor on the 28th of November 1908. The latter officer granted the application for review and directed that the appeal be reheard. The appeal was then reheard on the 23rd of February 1909, and the decision of the Court of First Instance was affirmed. The Plaintiff then appealed to this Court and contended before Mr. Justice Chatterjee that it was beyond the authority of the Subordinate Judge to set aside on review the judgment of his predecessor, because that judgment had been attacked on only one ground which might justify its modification but not its reversal in its entirety. This contention has found favour with Mr. Justice Chatterjee and he has based his decision upon the cases of Byjnath Sahoy v. Wuzeer Narain (1) and Dhuronidhar Sen v. The Agra Bank (2). In the view he has taken, Mr. Justice Chatterjee has set aside the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff for a share of the amount claimed as arrears of rent. This decision is now challenged before us on two grounds, first, that in an appeal against the final decree, the propriety of the order whereby the review was granted by the Subordinate Judge could be challenged only on the grounds specified in sec. 629 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, and, secondly, that the Subordinate Judge acted properly in the exercise of his jurisdiction when he set aside the entire judgment of his predecessor.

In our opinion both these contentions are well-founded. Sec. 629 provides that "whenever an application for review is admitted, the admission may be objected to on one or more of three specified grounds, namely, first, that the admission has been made in contravention of the provisions of sec. 624; in other words, that the application for review has been granted by a Judge other than the Judge who delivered the original judgment and on a ground other than the discovery of some clerical error apparent on the face of the record or the discovery of new and important matter or evidence, secondly, that the admission has been made in contravention of the provisions of sec. 626, namely, that the application has been made without previous notice to the Opposite Party or that it has been granted on the ground of the discovery of new matter or evidence without strict proof that such new matter or evidence was not within the knowledge of the applicant at the original trial, or that the application has been granted by a Judge other than the Judge who delivered the judgment and without the issue of a notice by the Judge. Thirdly, that the application has been granted after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed therefor and without sufficient cause. In the case before us it cannot be reasonably contended that the ground on which the propriety of the order of the Subordinate Judge is challenged falls within any of the grounds specified in sec. 629. Consequently, the appeal is infructuous.

If the order of the Subordinate Judge was made without jurisdiction the course open to the party aggrieved was to invite this Court to revise the order under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. That course, however, was not adopted. Consequently it was not open to Mr. Justice Chatterjee to set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge on the ground that he had granted the application for review without jurisdiction. This view is in accord with that taken in Gopala Aiyar v. Ramasami Sastrial (3).

Apart from this question, however, the Appellant must succeed on the ground that the order of the Subordinate Judge was right on the merits.

It has been broadly contended before us by the Respondent that when an application for review of judgment has been granted, the Court at the rehearing is restricted to the particular ground on which the review was granted. This view was sought to be supported by reference to the cases of Hurro Chunder Chuckraburtty v. Ram Kissore Chuckraburtty (4), Byjnath Sahoy v. Wuzeer Narain (1) and Dhuronidhar Sen v. The Agra Bank (2). As regards the first and second cases mentioned, it may be a matter for discussion whether they have any application at all. They were decided under Act VIII of 1859, sec. 380 of which provided that "when an application for a review of judgment is granted, a note thereof shall be made in the register of suits or appeals (as the case may be), and the Court shall give such order in regard to the rehearing of the suit as it may deem proper in the circumstances of the case." The view may reasonably be entertained that this authorises the Court either to rehear the case as a whole or to rehear special points in connection therewith. As regards the case of Dhuronidhar Sen v. The Agra Bank (2), it was decided when the Act of 1877 was in force, and the language of that Code is identical with that of sec. 630 of the Code of 1882. It is consequently necessary to examine what was precisely decided in the case of Dhuronidhar Sen v. The Agra Bank (2). The case then before the Court was heard by a Full Bench of three Judges under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent, a review of judgment was obtained and the case was reargued before a Full Bench differently constituted. When the case came to be heard, Mr. Justice Jackson observed that the Vakil for the Appellant was not entitled to raise a particular question on the ground that the question had not been raised when the case came up before the Full Bench before; in other words, that the question raised would not be entertained because it had not been pressed at the previous hearing before the Full Bench. Sir Richard Garth, C. J., observed on the other hand that the Vakil for the Appellant was only entitled to go into points on which the rule granting the review was allowed, that the particular matter sought to be pressed was not mentioned when the rule was argued and that therefore the Court could not enter into it at that stage. This observation of the learned Chief Justice possibly supports the contention of the Respondent, but we are of opinion that what was really intended to be decided was that it was competent to the Court in its discretion to refuse to entertain a question which had not been placed before the Court when the review was granted. Besides, we do not know the terms of the order by which the rule was made absolute, and it has not been shown to us that by that order the whole case was re opened. On the other hand, we observe that reliance was placed on behalf of the Appellant upon the decision in Sainal Ran Chhod v. Dullav Dwarka (5). The learned Judges did not express their dissent from this decision. In that case the Bombay High Court observed that it was the invariable rule in that Court that when a review had been admitted the whole case was reopened and this view was recently accepted as settled law in the case of Emperor v. Narayan Raghunath Patki (6). In our opinion, upon a fair construction of sec. 630 of the Code of 1882, the view cannot possibly be maintained that when an application for a review has been granted the Court is restricted at the rehearing to a consideration of that question alone which has been argued upon the rule for review. Sec. 630 provides that "when an application for a review is granted a note thereof shall be made in the register and the Court may at once rehear the case or make such order in regard to the re-hearing as it thinks fit." It is plain that the expression "rehear the case" means rehear the whole case. If the case is to be reheard only upon special points, the order must be made under the latter part of the section which authorises the Court "to make such order in regard to the rehearing as it thinks fit." This was the view taken in the case of Hurbans Sahye v. Thakoor Purshad (7), where, upon the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bhugwandeen Doobey v. Myna Baee (8), it was ruled that where a review of judgment is granted on a particular ground, the Court is not bound to rehear the whole case under sec. 630 of the Civil Procedure Code: it is in the discretion of the Court to rehear the whole case or only the particular point on which the rule has been granted." This, however, is a question which does not arise in the case before us. The Subordinate Judge made the application for a rule to grant a review absolute. He set aside the whole judgment of his predecessor and directed the appeal to be reheard. It is contended that he had no jurisdiction to do so. This contention is clearly unfounded and if it were adopted, great injustice might be done to a party litigant. To take one illustration only suppose in a suit for possession, the claim is resisted by the Defendant on two grounds, limitation and res judicata. The Court decides the question of limitation in favour of the Defendant, and dismisses the suit. The question of res judicata is not determined. An application for a review is made by the Plaintiff on the ground that the decision upon the question of limitation is erroneous, and that application is successful. What is to happen? Is not the case to be reheard, in other words, is not the question of res judicata which was left undetermined at the previous hearing to be investigated? Take another case: Suppose that in this very litigation the Court decides the question of limitation against the Plaintiff, but the question of res judicata in his favour and dismisses the suit. It is not open to the Defendant to appeal against the decree made in his favour, nor is it open to him to apply for a review of that decree. The Plaintiff makes an application for a review, and satisfies the Court that the decision upon the question of limitation is erroneous. Is it not open to the Defendant to argue that the decision upon the question of res judicata is also erroneous, and that the suit ought to have been dismissed on that ground alone? The theory that the Court is restricted to the particular point urged in support of the application for review can be supported only on the basis of an entirely untenable theory, namely, that the points that arise for decision in a case are all entirely separable from each other and that they are contained, each in a water-tight compartment. On the other hand it happens in many cases the decision on one issue may be connected with the decision on another issue, and the reversal of the decision upon one issue may seriously affect the decision on another issue. To hold, when a review is granted on consideration that the decision upon a particular point is erroneous, that the Court is restricted to the reconsideration of that point and that point alone, and cannot reconsider the case as a whole, would be to place upon sec. 630 an interpretation which is not justified by the language used by the Legislature and which is calculated to impede the administration of justice.

We hold therefore that the view taken by Mr. Justice Chatterjee as to the authority of the Subordinate Judge to grant the application for review in its entirety cannot be supported. The result is that this Appeal is allowed, the decree of Mr. Justice Chatterjee set aside and that of the Subordinate Judge restored. The Appellant is entitled to his costs in both appeals in the High Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 47, Or. 21, rr 2, 95—Decree-holder auction-purchaser, application by, for delivery of possession opposed by judgment-debtor who sets up agreement to postpone taking possession—Agreement whether adjustment—Objection rejected—Order if appealable.

Where upon an application by the decree-holder auction-purchaser for delivery of possession, the judgment-debtor set up an agreement entered into in the course of proceedings for setting aside the sale, by which, he alleged, it had been stipulated that the judgment-debtor would allow the sale to be confirmed but that the decree-holder should not take possession for two years, within which period if the judgment-debtor made certain payments, the decree-holder was to reconvey the property to the judgment-debtor, and he prayed that the agreement should be certified under Or. 21, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Court rejected the judgment-debtor's application on the ground that the agreement

This was an Appeal preferred on the 12th of April 1913 against the decree of Babu Asutosh Ghose, 2nd Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 3rd of April 1912.

The facts of the case will fully appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chatterjee for the Appellant.

Babus Harendra Narain Mitra and Brojendra Kumar Chakrabartty for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

COXE, J.—This Appeal is against an order of the Subordinate Judge at Dacca refusing an application by the Appellant who is a judgment-debtor under a mortgage decree. The decree-holder had sold the mortgaged property and had applied for delivery of possession. The judgment-debtor objected on the ground that it had been agreed between the parties that possession should not be taken and asked that that agreement might be recorded.

The learned Subordinate Judge refused the application on the ground that the alleged arrangement did not come within the scope of Or. 21, r. 2.

No enquiry was made into the merits and we must assume for the purposes of this appeal that the assertions in the petition are true in fact. They are to the effect that after the sale and before the confirmation the judgment-debtor applied to have the sale set aside on the usual grounds. That proceeding was compromised by an agreement between the decree-holder and himself to the following effect.

"It was settled between the decree-holders and the judgment-debtor that the judgment-debtor should get the sale confirmed instead of carrying on the suit but that the decree-holders should not take possession of the auction purchased property within 2 years and that on the judgment-debtor paying to the decree-holders the sum of Rs. 9,100 and a moiety share of the income of the property accruing from the date of confirmation of the sale to that of the realisation of the said money, the decree-holders should give up these properties by executing a kobala in favour of the judgment-debtor".

A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies. This turns on the question whether proceedings under Or. 21, r. 95, do or do not come within the scope of sec. 47, C. P. C. This is a question on which there is the greatest diversity of judicial opinion which will be found reflected and summarised in the case of Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (1). The case which for the most closely resembles the present case is that of Muttia v. Appasami (2). In that case an assignee of the decree bought the property in execution and asked to be put in possession. The judgment-debtor pleaded an agreement subsequent to the sale. It was held that the matter came within the scope of sec. 244, C. P. C., and that an appeal lay. This decision has not commended unreserved assent in the Court of Madras but in a comparatively late case [Sultan Sahib Marakayar v. Chidambaram Chettiar (3)], the learned Judges held that though an application for delivery of possession was not an application for execution, they were bound by a number of decisions to hold that it raised a question relating to execution.

In this Court it was held in 1897 in the case of Bhimal Das v. Ganesha Kuer (4), that an application by a decree-holder auction-purchaser to be put in possession was not a matter relating to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree and that consequently no appeal lay. With regard to the case of Muttia v. Appasami (2) cited above, the learned Judges observed that if it affected the question they were unable to agree with it but added—"In that case the judgment-debtor set up an agreement between him and the applicant in bar of the application. It does not appear from the report what that agreement was. It may well be that it was one which operated to affect the execution of the decree."

On the other hand it was held in 1899, in the case of Madhusudan Das v. Gobinda Pria Chowdhurani (5), that proceedings for the delivery of possession to a decree-holder who purchases at an execution sale are proceedings in the execution of the decree, and in Sarjatoola Molla v. Raj Kumar Roy (6) it was held that such an application is an application to the Court to take a step in aid of execution.

The next case to which I may refer is that of Ram Narain Sahoo v. Bandi Pershad (7) decided in April 1904. In that case a Defendant in possession being ousted by a decree-holder auction purchaser applied to be restored to possession. The learned Judges followed Madhusudan Das v. Gobinda Pria Chowdhurani (5) and held that sec. 244 authorised an enquiry into the question of possession when it arose between the parties to a suit and their representatives, and that proceedings for the delivery of possession to an auction-purchaser, who is himself the decree-holder, are proceedings in the execution of the decree.

However in August of the same year the opposite view was taken in Mahomed Masraf v. Habil Mia (8), and it illustrates in what uncertainty the matter is involved, that one of the learned Judges was also a party to the decision of the preceding April. In the later case the assignee of a decree-holder auction-purchaser applied for possession and the application was opposed by the judgment-debtor. It was held, following Bhimal Das v. Ganesha Kuer (4) cited above, that the matter did not relate to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree and that no appeal lay. It was held that Madhusudan Das v. Gobind Pria Chowdhurani (5) cited above had no application but no reasons are given for this view and I do not myself perceive why it was less applicable than the case of Bhimal Das v. Ganesha Kuer (4).

It seems to me that the balance of authority is in favour of the view that the decision of an objection such as that now under review comes within sec. 47 of the Code and is appealable. Muttia v. Appasami (2) is directly in point and supports that view. The cases of Madhusudan Das v. Gobinda Pria Chowdhurani (5), Satiatoola Molla v. Raj Kumar Roy (6) and Ram Narain Sahoo v. Bandi Pershad (7) also support it. On the other hand, in Bhimal Das v. Ganesha Kuer (4), the learned Judges thought it possible that an objection pleading an agreement in bar of an application for possession might possibly operate to affect the execution of the decree. And in Mahomed Masraf v. Habil Mia (8), one of the parties to the dispute was a person who had purchased the property from the decree-holder after the sale. A purchaser of the decree must be regarded as a party to the suit but a purchaser of the property sold in an execution sale from the auction-purchaser might possibly not be so regarded. I think therefore that the balance of authority is in favour of the view that this question comes within the scope of sec. 47 of the Code, and on the question of principle, I agree with the reasoning of Stanley, C. J., in the case of Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (1) cited above. I hold therefore that an apeal lies.

On the question whether the agreement alleged in this case was an adjustment or not within the meaning of Or. 21, r. 2, I find it very difficult to come to a conclusion, because the term "adjustment" is itself so indefinite I am inclined to think however that it was not. The decree was to remain unaltered and the sale under it, and all that was stipulated was that possession should be delayed and that under certain circumstances there should be a reconveyance. There was apparently no provision for a default. But it appears to me that it is of little importance whether this was an adjustment under O. 21, r. 2, or not. If it was, the judgment-debtor's objection contained a prayer that it should be certified and that prayer was in time. If it was not, it did not require certification and the objection to the delivery of possession can be dealt with under sec. 47. I certainly see no reason why this controversy should be relegated to another suit. We are bound as I have said for the present to accept the statements in the petition as true. They are to the effect that the application to set aside the sale should be dropped and the sale confirmed but that the delivery of possession should be delayed to give the judgment-debtor time to pay off the debt. I certainly can see no reason whatever why the parties should not make arrangements of this kind, if they desire to do so, and if they do make them it seems to me unnecessarily technical to insist that the proof of such arrangements should be left to a subsequent suit. Indeed I think it is extremely probable that such a suit would be met with the plea that it was barred by sec. 47 of the Code. If this agreement is true then the judgment-debtor is entitled to a decision upon it. He has raised it in time, supposing that it comes within Or. 21, r. 2, so that it is not excluded from recognition by the 3rd clause of that rule. In these circumstances it seems to me the interest no less of the decree-holder than of the judgment-debtor that the matter should be disposed of without further delay and in the current proceedings. I would accordingly allow the Appeal and send back the case to the Subordinate Judge for decision on the merits. Costs will abide the result.

(1) I. L. R. 31 All. 82 (1908).

RAY, J.—I agree. In the present case the decree-holder was himself the purchaser. His prayer for possession has been opposed by the judgment-debtor. It appears to me that this is a question falling within the scope of sec. 47 of the Code. The arrangement pleaded appears to me to be a contract relating to the execution of the decree and as such the matter should be determined under that section. The case is to be sent back for decision on the merits.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE NO. 175 OF 1913.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1913.
Heard, 12 and 13, May.
Judgment, 13, May.

RADHASHYAM KAR, Auction-purchaser, Petitioner,
v.
DINABANDHU BISWAS and anr., Judgment-debtor, Opposite Party.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 174, 185—Application to set aside sale made after 30 days—Allegation of fraud by which applicant kept from knowledge of sale—Extension of time if may be given—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sec. 29, sub-sec. (1), cl. (b).

A judgment-debtor applying to set aside a sale under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot rely on sec. 18 of the Limitation Act for an extension of the period of 30 days allowed for such an application on the ground that he had been kept from the knowledge of the sale by the fraud of the decree-holder.

This was a Rule granted on the 18th of January 1913, against an order of Moulvi N. Huq, Deputy Collector, Kendrapārah, dated the 7th of July 1913

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babus Atul Krishna Roy and Lalit Mohan Chatterjee for the Petitioner.

No one appeared for the Opposite Party.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order made under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In execution of a decree for arrears of rent, the disputed holding was brought to sale on the 29th November 1912 and was purchased by the Petitioner who was a stranger to the proceeding. On the 7th January 1913, the judgment-debtor applied under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for reversal of the sale. This application, on the face of it was made more than 30 days after the sale had taken place. The judgment-debtor explained the delay on two grounds; namely, first, poverty on his own part, and, secondly, fraud on the part of the execution creditor by reason of which, he alleged, he had been kept ignorant of the sale. The Court did not give notice of this application either to the decree-holder or to the auction-purchaser, but set aside the sale. The Deputy Collector observed that although the application had been made after the expiry of the prescribed period, yet in the circumstances of the case, it was just that the application should be entertained and allowed. He was evidently moved by the poverty of the Petitioner and considered that there was no hardship on the auction-purchaser who would get his money back with interest, or on the landlord who would get his tenant back.

... ...-purchaser now invites this Court to set aside the order as made without jurisdiction. There can in our opinion be no room for controversy that the order must be deemed to have been made without jurisdiction, unless it can be held that the Court below had authority to extend the time prescribed by sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It was pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Brij Mohan Thakur v. Rai Umanath (1), that when a sale has taken place and no ground has been established for its reversal in accordance with statutory provisions, there is only one duty incumbent upon the Court, namely, to confirm the sale in so far as the parties to the proceeding and the auction-purchaser are concerned and, if the Court, under these circumstances, refuses to give effect to the sale, it fails to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, namely, to confirm the sale, and exercises a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, namely, to cancel a valid and operative sale. The only question which consequently requires consideration is, whether upon the facts stated in the petition, assuming those facts to be established, the Court below had authority to extend the time.

The judgment-debtor alleges that the entire execution proceedings have been fraudulent and that in substance he had been kept out of the knowledge of the sale, and consequently, of his right to have the sale set aside within the period prescribed by law. This in substance is an allegation that the judgment-debtor is entitled to the benefit of the provisions of sec. 18 of the Indian Limitation Act. But that section is clearly inapplicable to the case before us. Read with sec. 3 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908, sec. 18 merely provides that every application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the first schedule to the Indian Limitation Act of 1908, shall be dismissed, unless facts are established to attract the operation of sec. 18. In the case before us, however, the period of limitation is not prescribed by the first schedule to the Indian Limitation Act. There is this further difficulty that cl. (b) of sub-sec. 1 of sec 29 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908 provides that nothing in the Act shall affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any application by any special or local law now or hereinafter in force in British India. Consequently, sec. 18 by itself has no application to a proceeding under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This view is in accord with the principle recognised in the cases of Girija Nath Ray v. Patani Bibee (2) and Akhoy Kumar Soor v. Bejoy Chand Mohatap (3).

The only other point which requires consideration is, whether there is any provision in the Bengal Tenancy Act, which authorises the Court to extend the time prescribed by sec. 174. The only provisions in the Bengal Tenancy Act relevant to this subject are contained in secs. 184 and 185. Sec. 184 provides that

The late Sir Francis Maclean.

We publish in another column the appreciative notice that was made from the Bench and Bar regarding the death of Sir Francis Maclean, the late Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court. It may not be generally known that Sir Francis was strongly in favour of the separation of the executive and judicial functions. It was chiefly through his exertions that the salary of the Puisne Judges of the Calcutta High Court was raised to Rs. 4,000 a month, and their number also increased. The posts of the Master and Official Referee and Assistant Registrars on the Original Side and the strengthening of the ministerial staff were sanctioned by the Government of India on the representation of the late Chief Justice. As was to be expected, his death has evoked a genuine and spontaneous appreciation of his past services by the profession and the public.

Legal Obituaries.

It is with a deep sense of regret that we have to record the premature death of Babu Harendra Narayan Mitra, M. A., B. L., Vakil of the Calcutta High Court. He was one of those who were early associated with this journal. His natural intelligence, independence and sterling merit marked him out at one time as one of the rising juniors who it was expected would make their mark in the profession. Unfortunately his health broke down at a comparatively early part of his promising career and it was not given to him to fulfil expectations that his friends entertained regarding him. His honesty of purpose, professional ability and force of character were always recognised and appreciated by all who knew him. It is very unfortunate that a career of such promise was thus abruptly brought to a close last week. We also notice with regret the death of Babu Baikuntha Nath Das, Vakil, who was a gentleman of the good old type and was universally respected as much on account of his character as for his standing in the profession, and also of Babu Krishna Prasad Sarvadhikari, Vakil, a member of the Sarvadhikari family who have for long made their mark in the different branches of the learned profession in this city. We convey our sincere condolences to the bereaved families.

The Lord Chief Justice of England and sentences in criminal cases.

The work of the new Lord Chief Justice of England on the Court of Criminal Appeal has already met with much public appreciation. His Lordship was a distinguished criminal lawyer and as is to be expected he is by no means an advocate of any harsh administration of the criminal law. In the case of Rex v. George Bruce, the prisoner was convicted of theft of brass taps and was given nine months' hard labour evidently because he refused to assist the Police in tracing his previous record and it was presumed that he had a bad career to conceal. After conviction the Police found out various facts to his credit and counsel for the Prosecution very properly brought these to the notice of the Court at the hearing of his appeal. The Court reduced the sentence to three months. The discovery of new facts has always been treated as a ground of reducing sentence. (Rex v Francis, 1 Cr. App. R. 259; Rex v. Ethidge, 1 Cr. App. R. 62, 66; R. v. Bradshaw, 6 Cr. App. R. 222.) His Lordship, therefore, made no innovation in the law in this respect. But in another case, Rex v. John Martin, the prisoner had been sentenced to five years' penal servitude upon a conviction for theft and receiving stolen property valued 14*s.* and 15*s.* respectively on the ground that his previous record of crime was particularly bad. Their Lordships reduced the sentence to 18 months' hard labour having regard to the small value of the articles. This sentence is considered severe enough and the reduction of the sentence on the ground of smallness of value is said to have created a new precedent and the recognition of this principle is attributed to the influence of the new Lord Chief Justice.

In another case, Rex v. Brown, His Lordship the Lord Chief Justice observed that the Prevention of Crimes Act of 1908 is a grave interference with the liberty of the subject and that, therefore, the Legislature must be taken to have intended that the prisoner should be given every opportunity of showing that he is not a habitual criminal and subject to its provisions. We presume the same principle would be applicable to all extraordinary measures passed by the Legislature for the prevention of crime. In this particular case the prisoner had after his release from prison led a dishonest life for six months and after being arrested for an offence he escaped and took to service and kept to an honest course. This fact was taken into consideration and the sentence of preventive detention under the Act of 1908 was cancelled. The Lord Chief Justice expressed his concurrence in the observation of Mr. Justice Darling that escaping arrest would not necessarily imply persistence in crime and the fact that the accused had taken to an honest career should certainly be considered as a fact in his favour.

Post-dated Cheques really Bills of Exchange.

In a recent case, Hutley v. Peacock, before Mr. Justice Scrutton in the King's Bench Division in England it was held on the 25th October last following the old decision in Foster v. Mackrell of the Exchequer Division (1867) that a post-dated cheque was not a cheque at all but a bill. In the earlier case the partner of a solicitors' firm had given a post-dated cheque to a party and he sued thereon. The firm repudiated liability on the ground that the partner in question had authority to draw cheques but had no authority to draw bills and a post-dated cheque was in fact a bill payable after a specified time. The judgment was given in their favour and Chief Baron Kelley observed that "a post-dated cheque was the same thing as a bill of exchange was at so many days' date as intervene between the day of delivering the cheque and the date marked upon the cheque." In the case before Mr. Justice Scrutton an infant had given a cheque some days before he attained majority and post-dated it for presentation after he had attained it. It was held that no suit can be brought on it even by a bonâ fide holder for value on the same principle that a bill of exchange given by an infant cannot be sued on under similar circumstances.

Statement of accused if absolutely privileged.

In Re Venkata Reddy, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 216, the question referred to the Full Bench was:—Is the statement of a person charged with an offence in answer to a question by the Court trying him "what have you to say" an absolutely privileged statement so as to make him not liable to be punished for defamation under sec. 499, I. P. C., in respect of the statement? In other words the question really was whether the English common law doctrine of absolute privilege that "no action for libel or slander lies whether against Judges, Counsel or witnesses or parties for words written or spoken in the ordinary course of any proceeding before any Court or tribunal" is recognised as part of the law of this country. The Court answered the question in the affirmative.

It was argued that on the true construction of sec. 497, I. P. C., the law of defamation as laid down in that section excludes the application of this doctrine of English law inasmuch as the law of defamation so far as this country is concerned was created by sec. 499, I. P. C., and when that section contains no reference to the rule of English law it should be inferred that it was the intention of the Legislature that it should form no part of the law of this country. The Court did not accept this contention and it was pointed out that the provisions of the Indian Penal Code and those of the Evidence Act were mainly based on English law and whenever the Legislature in this country intended to depart from the English law they made their intentions clear by express enactment (see secs. 132, 167, Evidence Act). As regards sec. 499, I. P. C., the Legislature in certain respects departed from the English law of libel and slander but it was not left to be a matter of negative inference but made clear by express enactment. The object of sec. 499, I. P. C., was to constitute defamation a criminal offence on lines which generally speaking follow the English law of libel and slander and it was not intended to codify existing law but to create new law so far as this country was concerned.

This identical question came up for consideration before the Calcutta High Court in two cases Kori Sing v. Mr. Macpherson, 17 C. W. N. 297, and Kori Sing v. Mr. Finch, 17 C. W. N. 449. The accused was the same in both cases and was convicted of defamation for having made a statement regarding two different persons in a petition filed before the District Magistrate for the transfer of a case pending in the Court of a Subordinate Magistrate. In one case (17 C. W. N. 449) Chitty and Richardson, JJ., set aside the conviction and sentence chiefly relying on the decision of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court and holding that the conviction was at least open to serious doubt. In the other case Sharfuddin and Coxe, JJ., upheld the conviction and sentence holding that the English Common Law had no application to the Indian Mofussil and the doctrine of absolute privilege was not the law in this country. It is to be noted that in the Madras case under review the conviction and sentence which the High Court revised was by a Magistrate in the Mofussil. In this state of conflict of authority on the point which is one of considerable importance it is desirable that so far as this Presidency is concerned the matter should be settled by a decision of the Full Bench as it has been in Madras.

Succession certificate granted to minor.

In Krishnama Charlu v Venkammah, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 214, the question raised before the Court was whether a succession certificate can be granted to a minor on an application made by him through his natural guardian. The learned Judges observed that they had no hesitation in answering the question in the affirmative and indeed the question is not much involved in difficulty. It is pointed out that under sec. 4 of the Succession Certificate Act no Court shall pass a decree against a debtor of the deceased person in favour of a person claiming to be entitled to the effects of the deceased except on the production by the person so claiming of a certificate issued under the Act. Now if no certificate is granted to a minor the result would be that no suit at all can be instituted during the minority of the heir. The only section in the Act which at first seems to present some difficulty is sec. 9 which provides for the Court taking security from the applicant when necessary and requiring him to execute a bond with two sureties. No doubt a minor is incompetent to execute such a bond but their Lordships held that the execution of the bond by the guardian on behalf of the minor applicant would bind the minor and thus satisfy the provisions of sec. 9. This decision of the Madras High Court is in conflict with Gulab Chand v. Moti, I. L R. 25 Bom. 523, and Mohadeo v. Gangadhar, I. L. R. 28 Bom. 344.

Marriage of Hindu girl without guardian's consent.

In Kasturi v. Chiranji, I. L. R. 35 All. 265, the Court had to consider the legality of the marriage of a Hindu girl of sixteen under the following circumstances. After the death of her father the girl lived with her paternal relatives (an uncle and two cousins) with whom she came to the house of one Chiranji Lal where she lived for some time. Her maternal relatives (grandfather and uncle) had her married to this person without the consent of the uncle and the cousins who intended to make some profit out of marrying her to a not very suitable bridegroom. There was no force or fraud in bringing about the marriage. The paternal uncle and the cousins on coming to know of the marriage took away the girl from the house of her husband who brought a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. Their Lordships observed that there was no case in which the marriage of a Hindu girl effected without force and fraud by her relations was, after it had actually taken place, declared to be invalid for want of the consent of the legal guardian and the present case was pre-eminently one to which the principle of factum valet should be applied and the marriage could not be declared void.

Interest amounting to penalty.

In Mutner Krishna Iyer v. Sankara Lingam Pillai, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 229, a Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that when on an instalment bond no interest is payable until default but interest at an exorbitant rate is payable as from the date of default the latter stipulation can be treated as one by way of penalty within the meaning of sec. 74 of the Indian Contract Act.

The Plaintiff sued on an instalment bond for Rs. 71 payable at ½ a rupee per month in 142 monthly instalments. The Defendant paid up 29 out of the 142 instalments regularly. He made default in paying the 30th instalment of 8 annas. The instalment bond provided that on such default the Defendant should pay interest at 3 pies per diem on the 8 annas for the 7 days of grace allowed to him to pay up the defaulted instalment. As he did not pay up the defaulted instalment the total amount of all the remaining instalments became at once payable according to the terms of the bond with the exorbitant interest of 1 pie per rupee per day. The Plaintiff accordingly sued to recover Rs. 51-8-0 for the 103 defaulted instalments plus Rs. 153-12-0 as interest for about 19 months.

The Defendant raised the defence that the rate of interest was penal and should be relieved against. The question which came up before the Full Bench was answered in the negative in Vadyar v. Ayyar, I. L. R. 25 Mad. 343, and the decisions in Chinna v. Pedda, I. L. R. 26 Mad. 445, and Periasami v. Subramanian Asari, 14 M. L. J. 136, were also to the same effect but as stated above the Full Bench after an elaborate discussion of the whole law on the subject took a contrary view. As has been pointed out it is well established by the English authorities that such stipulations are penal but they did not fall within sec. 74 of the Indian Contract Act as originally enacted and this was the view taken by the Legislature when it amended the section in 1899 by introducing the words "or if the contract contains any other stipulations by way of penalty" and added an explanation dealing with this very stipulation. The use of the word "other" shows that the Legislature uses the word penal in a very wide sense so as to include stipulations falling within the earlier part of the section for liquidated damages which according to the English decisions are not penal.

Adoption of Sudra after marriage,

The validity of an adoption after marriage of the adopted son amongst Sudras came up for consideration before the Allahabad High Court in Jhunka Prosad v. Nathu, I. L. R. 35 All. 263. The Plaintiff sought to establish his title to the property of his paternal uncle who he alleged had adopted him over six years ago. The factum of adoption was not challenged but the defence was that it was invalid for the reason that when the adoption took place the Plaintiff was a married man and had a daughter of his own. It was contended for the Plaintiff who was the Appellant that in the first place the Ahirs were Sudras and secondly among the Ahirs of the United provinces there was a special custom permitting the adoption of a nephew at any age. On the other side it was argued that according to the Dattaka Chandrika Upanayan is the limit of age for adoption among the twice-born classes and marriage is the limit for Sudras. The Court held that such an adoption is invalid even amongst Sudras and in taking this view reliance is placed on Pichuvayyan v. Subbayyan, I. L. R. 13 Mad. 128.

SIR FRANCIS MACLEAN, KT., K. C. I. E., THE LATE CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

On the reopening of the Calcutta High Court on the 17th of November last, all the Judges and members of all sections of the legal profession assembled in the Chief Justice's Court room as a mark of respect to Sir Francis Maclean, the news of whose death had been received in the week preceding the reopening of the Court.

THE HON'BLE THE ADVOCATE GENERAL on behalf of the Bar said.—My Lord Chief Justice and my Lords,—Within the last few days we have heard with sorrow of the death of Sir Francis Maclean, who formerly held the high and responsible office of Chief Justice of Bengal. With commanding presence and personal dignity he presided over these Courts from the year 1896, on the retirement of Sir Comer Petheram, until so recently as March, 1909, worthily maintaining the traditions of British judicial office. Some few of your lordships were his contemporaries on the Bench, others practised before him at the Bar—and all who came into association with him in any way ever found him, with a dignified manner, to be an affable, genial and courteous gentleman. We grieve that he was spared for so short time to enjoy a well earned leisure after long and useful service to the State in more than one capacity. He has gone—but long will he be remembered with esteem and regard by all branches of the legal profession and by his many friends in Calcutta. On behalf of the Bar it is my privilege to offer a tribute of respect to his memory—coupled with an expression of deep regret at his loss, and of sympathy with his family in their bereavement.

BABU RAMCHARAN MITTER, SENIOR GOVERNMENT PLEADER, on behalf of the Vakils said:—My Lord,—On behalf of the vakils of your lordships' Court I fully sympathise with all that has been said by the learned Advocate-General. It is a matter of great regret that Sir Francis Maclean did not live long to enjoy his well earned rest. As a judge, Sir Francis Maclean's decisions were free from racial prejudice and executive bias, and he dealt out justice in an even-handed manner, taking a broad and equitable view of all questions and avoiding technicalities. At the very commencement of his career in this country he enjoyed a reputation as a fair and impartial judge, by his charge to the jury in the Barrackpore Murder Case, and to avoid delay in the disposal of cases he got the number of judges increased and also the clerical staff. Sir Francis Maclean knew very well that the secret of the popularity of British rule in India was its impartial and independent administration of justice and accordingly did all he could to attain that end. But Sir Francis Maclean's good work was not confined to the precincts of this Court. He was a man of wide sympathy and promptly took an active part in all that was calculated to promote the welfare of the people. As President of the Famine Relief Commission his services were very valuable and were appreciated as such by the Government and the public. He took a great interest in the education of our youths as was evidenced by his prompt acceptance of the honorary office of Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University and by his presiding on many occasions over the distribution of prizes to meritorious students. In social gatherings also Sir Francis Maclean was every affable though he always kept himself at a respectful distance from those with whom by virtue of his unique position he could not mix familiarly. The whole country now mourns his loss and we also share in their grief.

BABU GONESH CHUNDER CHUNDER, on behalf of the Attornies said :—My Lords,—On behalf of the Incorporated Law Society of Calcutta, I beg to associate myself with the expression of regret which has been made by the learned Advocate General, and I have to endorse every word that has fallen from him. I would only wish to add that it was in Sir Francis Maclean's time that the Incorporated Law Society was started, and it was through his kind assistance that we came into existence, and we all owe a debt of gratitude to him for this.

The HON'BLE THE CHIEF JUSTICE (SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS) said: Mr. Advocate-General, Senior Government Pleader and Babu Gonesh Chunder Chunder,—The sad event to which you have referred carries my mind back to the welcome which seventeen years, almost to a day was given by his colleagues and the Bar to Sir Francis Maclean when he first took his seat as Chief Justice in this very court-room; and the memory of the occasion must be fresh in the minds of many here to-day. The dignity of his presence, his courtliness of manner his strong common sense and his experienced grasp of equity principles and procedure fitted him in an eminent degree for the post he was selected to fill—a post he held with distinction for a longer period than any of his predecessors. Nor were his interests and activities confined to the narrow limits of this court; for during his term of office he took a leading part in the social and public life of Calcutta, where his kindliness, his generous hospitality, and his happy gift of speech will long be remembered. It is barely six years since he retired, and it was then hoped and believed that he had many years before him in which to enjoy the repose he had so worthily earned. But it was not to be, and to day, we and his many friends here and elsewhere mourn the loss of one who had gained our regard, respect and affectionate esteem.

Their lordships then rose and took their seats in their respective Courts and business was resumed.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Transfer of property in consideration of payment to third persons.

RAGHUNATH v. SADAGOPA, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 348.

The Plaintiff instituted a suit for the recovery from the Defendant of a sum of money which the latter had agreed to pay to two persons A and S as consideration for the transfer to him by the Plaintiff of two decrees in two suits. The Plaintiff alleged that the Defendant failed to pay the amounts due to the two persons named above and that he himself had to pay them.

Held—That the Plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount which the Defendant agreed to pay to third parties.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 104 (d)—Order filing an agreement to arbitrate if appealable and if an adjustment of suit.

VENKATA CHALA REDDI v. RANGIAH REDDI, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 353.

An order filing an agreement to arbitrate presented by the parties to a suit is a decree and is appealable.

An agreement to refer coupled with the award resulting from the reference may be treated as an adjustment but a simple agreement to refer cannot be so treated.

Civil Procedure Code, Act (XIV of 1882), sec. 231—C. P. C. (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, r. 15.

BADRUDDEEN v. GULAM MOIDDEEN, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 357.

Sec. 258 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 corresponding to Or. 21, r. 2 of the present Code lays down that unless a payment or adjustment has been lawfully certified it cannot be recognised as a payment or adjustment of the decree by any Court executing the decree. When an adjustment has been made it is no doubt the duty of the decree-holder to certify the adjustment to the Court; if he fails to certify it is open to the judgment-debtor to take steps to compel him to do so and the law allows him 90 days within which to take such steps.

A suit was instituted by the endorsee of a negotiable promissory note against the maker. The note was executed by the latter in favour of "C, agent of P." The endorsement in favour of the Plaintiff was signed merely 'C.'

Held—That the note being executed in favour of C in his character as agent of P the endorsement by him in his individual capacity and not as agent of P would not entitle the Plaintiff to maintain the suit.

(CRIMINAL.)

Indian Penal Code, sec. 499—Defamation—Absolute privilege.

In re P. VENKATA REDDY, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 216.

The statement of a person charged with an offence in answer to a question by the Court trying him. "What have you to say" is an absolutely privileged statement so as to make him not liable to be punished for an offence under sec. 499, I. P. C, in respect of the statement.

T. KAMAL KIRTTY v. UDAYAVARMA, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 275.

The essential requisite to give a Magistrate jurisdiction under sec. 145 is that he must be satisfied from information of some sort that a dispute exists likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning land or water or the boundaries thereof in his jurisdiction. Once he is so satisfied his jurisdiction is complete and his subsequent action must be considered in relation to procedure and not jurisdiction.

Omission to state in the preliminary order the grounds on which the Magistrate is satisfied as to the likelihood of a breach of the peace does not make the final order without jurisdiction.

The petitioner gave a false information of theft to the police stating that he suspected two persons. He was tried and convicted under sec. 211, I. P. C, but acquitted by the High Court which observed that the act committed amounted to an offence under sec. 182, I. P. C. Sanction was thereupon obtained from the Superintendent of Police and the petitioner was placed upon his trial under sec. 182, I. P. C.

Held—That under sec. 403, Cr. P. C., the prosecution under sec. 182, I. P. C., was barred.

Cl. (4) of sec. 403 refers, to the character and status of the tribunal when it refers to competency to try the offence. A sanction under sec. 195, Cr. P. C., is not a condition of the competency of the tribunal.

Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 107, 145, 403, 495.
In re MUTHA MOOPAN, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 315.
Secs. 403, 495 do not apply to proceedings under sec. 107.
An order under sec. 107 is not bad because a previous order under sec. 145 was made relating to the same dispute.

Criminal Procedure Code sec. 208 (3).
IMMUDI KUMARA, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 321.
Cl. (3), sec. 208, contemplates the intervention of the Magistrate to secure the attendance of witnesses and in regard to this evidence the Magistrate has a discretion for reasons to be recorded to refuse to issue process if he deems it unnecessary to do so.

Indian Penal Code, secs. 463, 471—Using a forged document—Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 177, 213—Commitment
ASSISTANT SESSIONS JUDGE, NORTH ARCOT v. RAMAMMAL, I L. R. 36 Mad. 387.
The production of a document in obedience to an order of the Court does not amount to using it as genuine. An involuntary production of a document in Court cannot be said to amount to any user of it.
The expression 'the Court of Session' in sec. 213, Cr. P. C., can only mean the Court of Session having jurisdiction to try the case under sec. 177, Cr. P. C.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL.—R. v. Rodley. Before JUSTICES LAWRENCE, BANKES AND ATKIN. 19th July 1913.

Irrelevant evidence of subsequent conduct, rejected in a trial for a charge of attempted rape.

This was an appeal from a conviction for burglariously entering a house at night with intent to ravish Miss Jones. The story for the prosecution was that one night between 12 and 1 A. M. the prisoner entered into her house by forcing a back door and when she got up to look for him he attempted to commit the offence.

Before the Magistrates a woman was called as a witness who deposed to the fact that about 2 o'clock on the same morning as that deposed to by Annie Jones, the Appellant had come to her house where she lived alone, and had gained access to her bed-room by coming down the chimney, and that he had then had connexion with her with her consent. Her house was about three miles from that of Annie Jones.

At the trial this evidence was also produced and conviction was obtained—The defence was that the Appellant had been invited by the girl and that he did not commit any offence. On appeal it was contended that the evidence of the second woman to show that he was raging with lust that morning was irrelevant and ought not to have been admitted. The Court gave effect to that contention and quashed the conviction. In the course of the judgment the law on the subject was thus summed up:—

In Rex v. Mean (21 T. L. R. 173), Mr. Justice Wills called attention to a fact which is sometimes overlooked, that the laws of evidence are the same in civil and in criminal cases. In Rex v. Fisher ([1910] 1 K. B., 152), Mr. Justice Channell puts the point thus:—"The principle is clear, and if the principle is attended to I think it will usually be found that the difficulty of applying it to a particular case will disappear. The principle is that the prosecution are not allowed to prove that a prisoner has committed the offence with which he is charged by giving evidence that he is a person of bad character and one who is in the habit of committing crimes, for that is equivalent to asking the jury to say that because the prisoner has committed other offences he must therefore be guilty of the particular offence for which he is being tried. But if the evidence of other offences does go to prove that he did commit the offence charged it is admissible, because it is relevant to the issue, and it is admissible not because, but notwithstanding that, it proves that the prisoner has committed another offence." As here pointed out by Mr. justice Channell, the governing rule must always be that any evidence to be admissible must be relevant to the issue.

The most recent decisions which lay down rules by which the relevancy of evidence which tends to prove offences other than those covered by the indictment may be tested are the following:—Makin v. Attorney-General for New South Wales ([1894] A. C, 65), where the Lord Chancellor lays down the rule in these words:—"It is undoubtedly not competent for the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to show that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the accused is a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried. On the other hand, the mere fact that the evidence adduced tends to show the commission of other crimes does not render it inadmissible if it be relevant to an issue before the jury, and it may be so relevant if it bears upon the question whether the acts alleged to constitute the crime charged in the indictment were designed or accidental, or to rebut a defence which would otherwise be open to the accused. In Rex v. Bond ([1906] 2 K. B, 389), Mr. Justice Darling, at page 409, and Mr. Justice Bray, at page 417, call attention to the fact that Lord Herschell's last words quoted above must have been intended to apply only to a defence which is really in issue, and that the words of the Lord Chancellor should be read with that limitation. In the same case Mr. Justice Bray, at page 414, says that a careful examination of the cases where evidence has been admitted shows that they may be grouped under three heads:—(1) Where the prosecution seeks to prove a system or course of conduct; (2) where the prosecution seeks to rebut a suggestion on the part of the prisoner of accident or mistake; (3) where the prosecution seeks to prove knowledge by the prisoner of some fact. In their judgments in this case it is pointed out by several of the learned Judges who formed the majority of the Court that a single prior act of a like criminal nature would in general not be admissible as evidence of a system. Then the more recent case of Rex v. Ball [(1911] A. C. 71) was referred to.

In summing up to the jury in the present case the learned Judge, in referring to the evidence which is now objected to, puts the case in this way. He says:—"Then the Appellant goes away, and the next thing that is heard is that hardly a stone's throw off the farm lives a woman with whom he has already had immoral intercourse. The suggestion of the prosecution is that he is raging with lust, and that, being foiled as regards the prosecutrix Miss Jones, he immediately went to gratify his passion upon the woman who he knew would not be unwilling to yield."

Is the evidence objected to admissible upon the ground thus indicated by the learned Judge, or under any of the rules formulated in the cases above referred to? This Court is of opinion that the evidence is not admissible. At the point in the trial at which the evidence was tendered the defences really in issue were:—(1) That the appellant never broke into the house at all; (2) that the appellant did not break into the house with any intention of committing a rape; (3) that the prosecutrix's story as to what occurred in the house was not true. The evidence which was objected to was not, in the opinion of this Court, relevant to any of those issues and was not, therefore, admissible to rebut any of the above defences. . . . .

KING'S BENCH DIVISION. The King v. Judge Mellor and anr. Before JUSTICES RIDLEY, SCRUTTON AND BAILHACHE. 20th October 1913.

Costs awarded against a Judge of the County Court who refused to comply with the order of the High Court.

An action was commenced in the High Court, but the master remitted it to the County Court of Manchester. The Judge of that Court His Honour Judge Mellor instead of obeying the order of the High Court which he was bound to do refused to try the action on the ground that his Court was already congested and that the action ought not to have been sent to him. This rule nisi was then obtained against the said Judge to show cause why he should not proceed to try the action. The Court held that the Judge should have obeyed the order of the High Court and made the Rule absolute with costs against the Judge personally.

MR. JUSTICE RIDLEY then said they had come to the conclusion, though with great reluctance, that they must order the Judge to pay the costs. The order of this Court went down to him, and he refused to obey it. If he had adjourned the case and reported it to this Court the circumstances would have been different. But on his own affidavit it was clear that the Judge had refused to obey the order, so he must take the consequences.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Gibson & Co., Ld." v. Gibson. Before MR. JUSTICE ATKIN. 9th July 1913.

Judgment of a foreign Court, when enforceable in England—Rule of domicil.

This was an action for recovery of money alleged to be due under a judgment of the Supreme Court of Victoria or on an account stated. The Defendant pleaded that the said Supreme Court had never had any jurisdiction over him. The Plaintiff contended that the judgment was enforceable for three reasons, namely, (1) that the Defendant was domiciled in Victoria, (2) that the Defendant was born in Victoria and (3) that the Defendant having instructed an agent in Victoria to instruct a Solicitor there to defend the action was estopped from denying that he had submitted to the jurisdiction. The learned Judge decided in favour of the Defendant's contention. In the course of his judgment he said:—

The third point was shortly disposed of. The solicitor did not defend the action, and he could see nothing in the facts alleged which would give rise to the estoppel relied on. As to the second point, the facts as proved by the answers to interrogatories, which were the only evidence available under the order of the Court of Appeal, were that the Defendant was born in Victoria, and lived at Melbourne for 20 years until 1890, when he came over to England. Since this time he had lived chiefly in London, but had visited Victoria at the periods stated. Neither of the Defendant's parents was born in Victoria, but both lived there a good deal, paying visits to England. From these facts he could not draw the inference that the Defendant's domicil of origin was Victoria, or that he had acquired there a domicil of choice. It was therefore unnecessary to consider whether if the Defendant's domicil had been in Victoria the Court would have been bound to give effect to a Victorian judgment against him.

The remaining question was whether the fact that the Defendant was born in the colony of Victoria entitled the Plaintiff to contend that the jurisdiction of the Victoria Court over him would be recognized when he was sued in this country on the Victorian judgment. The rule was that all jurisdiction was properly territorial. Extra territorum jus dicenti impune non paretur. The principles upon which the Court would enforce here a judgment of a foreign Court were stated in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Sirdar Gurdyal Singh v. Raja of Faridcote (1894, A. C. 670). Three decisions were cited in which the fact of the Defendant's being a subject of the country in which the foreign judgment was pronounced was treated as one of the conditions which would entitle the foreign judgment to recognition here. In Schibsby v. Westenholtz (L. R. 6 Q. B. 155), the Defendant was not a French subject, and the decision of the Court was that the French judgment could not be enforced against him. In Rousillo v. Rousillo (14 Ch. D., 351), Mr. Justice Fry, in stating the circumstances which he said had been held to impose upon the Defendant the duty of obeying the decision of a foreign Court, stated as first in the list, "When he is a subject of the foreign country in which judgment was obtained," but in that case the judgment was a French judgment obtained against a Swiss subject resident in England; and the decision of Mr. Juctice Fry was in favour of the Defendant. It was apparent that in none of these cases was the Defendant in fact a subject of the country where the judgment sued on was pronounced, and the judicial expressions he had referred to were therefore in the nature of obita dicta. They were, however, of so great weight that he would probably feel compelled to follow them and therefore had to consider in this case whether the Defendant was a subject of the country in which the judgment was obtained. In the ordinary use of the word it would appear to him that he was not. Being born within the British Dominions he became a British subject, and in respect of nationality his position was precisely the same as that of any of his fellow-subjects born in any other part of that wide and varied territory.

Nationality was based on the tie of allegiance: a personal duty to a Sovereign. There was one King of the British Dominions, one uniform tie of allegiance binding all persons born within the Dominions. On that point, as a Court of first instance, he was bound by the decision of Mr. Justice Farwell in the case of Re Johnson—Roberts v. The Attorney-General ([1903] 1 Ch, 821). It was, however, contended before him that though in the ordinary meaning of the word the Defendant was not a subject of Victoria, yet for the purpose of investigating whether the jurisdiction of a Colonial Court would be recognized in this country the word must be given an artificial meaning; and it was strongly urged that the case of Douglas v. Forrest (4 Bing. 686) was an authority to this effect that a Scottish judgment obtained against a Defendant resident abroad would be enforced in this country if the Defendant were a native of Scotland. It was, however, apparent that neither in the argument nor in the decision was it suggested that it would be sufficient for the Plaintiffs' case that the Defendant was a native of Scotland. The judgment belonged to a period when the law relating to foreign judgments had not been investigated as fully as at the present time, and unless precisely similar circumstances were to recur it appeared to him to be of little value. The only other authority which was referred to, or which he could discover, was the case of Turnbull v Walker (67 L. T., P., 767 [1892]). In that case the Plaintiff sued on a judgment obtained in the Supreme Court of New Zealand against the Defendant, who was not at the time resident in New Zealand. Mr. Justice Wright held that the judgment was not binding on the Defendant.

In the absence, therefore, of any express authority compelling him to hold that a person born in one of the British colonies became a subject of that colony, so that the judgments of its Courts obtained against him in his absence were binding upon him in all other Courts, he declined to accept so far-reaching a proposition. By the principles of the English law of nationality, not only the native, but his sons and his son's sons might be subjects. There were statutory means by which a British subject could put off his British nationality, but he knew of no statute by which a Victorian subject, if such there be, could cease to be a Victorian subject, and become a South African, Canadian, or English. At common law, nemo potest exuere patriam. As far as he could ascertain, the alleged principle had never been established or even contended for in any Colonial Court.

It was not argued before him that the judgment was binding in that Court because the judgment would be binding in Victoria—see Astbury v. Ellis, 1893 (A. C., 339)—or because the Defendant was a British subject. These points would, in his view, in no case have availed and were disposed of in the reasoning in the first part of the judgment of Mr. Justice Scrutton in the recent case of Phillips v. Batho, with which he respectfully agreed. He therefore decided the question raised by the second paragraph of the defence in favour of the Defendant.

the limitation applicable to certain specified suits, appeals and applications are to be found in the third schedule annexed to the Act. Sub sec. (1) of sec. 185 excludes the operation of secs. 7, 8 and 9 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1877 to suits and applications mentioned in sec. 184. Sub-sec. (2) of sec. 185 then lays down that, subject to the provisions of Chap. XVI of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the provision of the Indian Limitation Act shall apply to all suits, appeals, and applications mentioned in sec. 184. The application with which we are now concerned was made under sec. 174, and is not an application mentioned in the third schedule to the Bengal Tenancy Act. Consequently, sub-sec. (2) of sec. 185 is of no assistance to the applicant under sec. 174. The position, therefore, is that notwithstanding the fraud alleged by the Petitioner, he is not entitled to protection under sec. 18 of the Indian Limitation Act. Whether he had any remedy under r. 90 of Or. 21 of the Code of 1908 read with sec. 18 of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908, it is needless to consider now, nor is it necessary to consider whether he may still have a remedy by a regular suit, if the proceedings are fraudulent as alleged by him. On the present application, we are constrained to hold that the order of the Court below was made without jurisdiction.

The Rule is made absolute and the order of the Court below discharged. The sale will stand confirmed. There will be no order for costs either in this Court or in the Court below.

Rule made absolute.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 661 OF 1909.

JENKINS, C. J. 1913, 18, August. and 1, September.

COXE, J. RAY, J. 1913, 26, May. and 22, August.

MAHAMMAD GAUHAR ALI, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
SAMIRUDDIN SHEIKH and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 98—High Court Judges, difference between—Practice as to reference to third Judge, change of—Case to be conditionally decided and point only to be referred—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 153—Suit by lessee of landlord for rent against tenants, making landlord party—Tenants contesting validity of lease—Decree, if appealable—Ex parte rent decree, if res judicata on the question of relationship of landlord and tenant.

JENKINS, C. J.—The intention of sec. 98 of the C. P. Code is that the Judges hearing the appeal should come to a complete decision with the reservation on the point of law on which they differ, and they should by their judgments make it clear that if the point of law is decided in one way it will have a certain final result and if it is decided in another way it will have another and a different final result.

Where the Plaintiff claiming to have derived title under a lease from Defendant No. 3, the landlord, sued the tenants on the land for rent, but the tenants contested his claim on the ground that the lease given to him by Defendant No. 3 was invalid, though Defendant No. 3 himself did not appear or oppose Plaintiff's claim, and the lower Appellate Court sustained the tenants' plea and dismissed the suit :

Held by JENKINS, C. J. (agreeing with RAY, J., contra COXE, J.)—That the decree decided a question relating to title to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto, within sec. 153, Bengal Tenancy Act, and an appeal lay.

Held per COXE AND RAY, JJ.—An ex parte decree for rent obtained by the Plaintiff against Defendants in a previous suit is res judicata in a subsequent rent-suit, unless the Defendants can establish that the relationship of landlord and tenant established by the decree ceased since the passing of the decree.

This was a Reference made by Coxe and Ray, JJ., under sec. 98 of the Civil Procedure Code in connection with an appeal preferred on the 20th of April 1909 against the decree of S. N Huda Esq , District Judge of Pabna and Bogra, dated the 16th of January 1909, affirming the decree of Babu Jnan Chandra Bannerji, Additional Munsif of Bogra, dated the 14th of September 1908.

The Appeal was originally heard by Coxe and Ray, JJ., on 12th May 1913, and the following dissentient judgments were delivered by them on 26th May 1913.

COXE, J.—A preliminary objection has been taken in this case that no appeal lies. The suit was one for rent, valued at less than Rs. 100. The Plaintiff claimed to be a lessee under the Defendant No. 3. The contesting Defendants, who were the raiyats, pleaded that the lease was invalid, and that consequently the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between them and the Plaintiff. They also alleged that they were tanants under the Defendant No. 3, though clearly it was quite unnecessary for them to do so. The Defendant No. 3 did not appear.

The Courts below held that the lease of the Plaintiff was invalid, and accordingly dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiff appeals to this Court.

Under sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act an appeal does not lie unless the decree decides a question relating to title to land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto. The decree in this case may be said to decide a question relating to title to land ; but it does not appear to me that it decides it as between parties having conflicting claims thereto, because even if it can properly be said to decide it as between the Plaintiff and the Defendant No. 3, yet it is neither alleged nor proved that the Defendant No. 3 has a conflicting or any claim to the land. If the Defendant No. 3 had not been made a party, it is conceded that no appeal would lie. In such a case the decree, just as in the present case, might decide a question relating to title to land, and no appeal would lie, simply because it would not decide it as between parties having conflicting claims thereto. If in the present case the Defendant No. 3 had disputed the lease, or even if it had been alleged by the Plaintiff that she disputed the lease, and that statement had not been traversed by the Defendant No. 3 it might be held that conflicting claims existed. But here the Plaintiff does not allege that the Defendant No. 3 disputes the validity of the lease or has obstructed him in realizing rent, or colluded with the tenants, or in any way has put forward any claim to the landlord's interest. The Defendant No. 3 does not appear or put forward any claim at all. It would seem

therefore that there is neither conflict nor claim, that the Plaintiff and the 3rd Defendant are in entire accord and that the latter is endeavouring to transfer to the former property which she has no power so to transfer. I cannot see, therefore, how it can justly be said, on the pleadings, that the Plaintiff and the Defendant No. 3 have conflicting claims to the landlord's interest; and if they have not conflicting claims, the section clearly does not admit an appeal. If there is any conflict at all as to the proprietary interest it would seem to exist between the Plaintiff and the Defendant No. 3 on the one side, and the beneficiaries of the 3rd Defendant's trust on the other. They however are not parties to the suit. The suit is resisted only by the tenants; and there is nothing to show that they resist it at the instance of the Defendant No. 3, or that she has anything to do with their case. In these circumstances, I cannot see why the Plaintiff should have a right of appeal against the tenants merely because he has made the 3rd Defendant, who is supporting him, a party to the suit.

Reference has been made to the cases which are quoted on page 436 and the following pages of the 8th volume of the Calcutta Weekly Notes though the learned pleader for the Appellant did not cite them or rely upon them. Nor was it his argument that the case was appealable because the Plaintiff and the contesting Defendants laid conflicting claims to the land. It is somewhat difficult to reconcile all these cases with each other, but, in any case, they are, in my opinion, clearly distinguishable. In them the parties both claimed the same position under the superior landlord with respect to the same land; and in some of the cases it was held that the decision was therefore between parties having conflicting claims to the land. But here the Defendants are cultivating tenants of the land, while the Plaintiff has been given a mokurari lease of a large amount of land in two villages, of which the land in suit forms a portion. It is not quite clear whether the lease comprised all the land of the Defendant No. 3; but, in any case, it is clear that the Plaintiff and the Defendants are not claiming the same interest or the same position at all. The Plaintiff is the tenure-holder of the whole or a large portion of the 3rd Defendant's estate, while the contesting Defendants are mere raiyats of a holding said to be within the tenure. It is true, as I have said, that the Defendants allege that they are the tenants of the Defendant No. 3. It was not necessary, however, for their case, to put forward this plea. It was sufficient for them to plead that the Plaintiff's title was defective; and too much stress should not I think, be laid on this point.

In my opinion, therefore, the decree does not decide any question as between parties having conflicting claims, and an appeal does not lie. As my learned colleague does not assent to this view let the case be laid before the Chief Justice for reference to a third Judge.

RAY, J.—It appears to me that the judgment of the Court of Appeal below decided a question relating to title to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto. It cannot be distinguished from the case of Sita Nath Pal v. Kartick Gharmi (1), decided by Rampini and Wilkins, JJ. This case was followed by Mitra, J., in Ram Kanai v. Fakir

(1) 8 C. W. N. 434 (1900).

MAHAMMAD GAUHAR ALI v. SAMIRUDDIN SHEIKH.

Chund (2). The Plaintiff alleges that he has acquired a mokurari right from the Defendant No. 3 and is entitled to treat the Defendants as his tenants and the Defendants in denial of the Plaintiff's right assert that they hold directly under the Defendants. I do not see how it can be said that the claims of the parties do not conflict and the question certainly relates to some interest in land. If it were necessary to be very precise I would say that the particular interest about which there is conflict, is who is the tenant under the Defendant No. 3.

In the present case there is another aspect of viewing at it. The Plaintiff bases his right to receive the rents from the Defendants 1 and 2 on the mokurari grant which he obtained from the Defendant No. 3. That is the foundation of his claim. That grant he has sought to have established as against not only the tenants but also against the Defendant No. 3. This he may have done to avoid future trouble or to allay all anxiety on the part of the tenants. It is every day done and I do not think there is anything in the law to forbid it. I do not think it was necessary for the Plaintiff to allege or prove that the Defendant No. 3 had in any way questioned the grant in order to establish his competency to add the Defendant No. 3 as a party to the suit. He did not receive his rents and he might well have desired his right to receive them adjudicated in the presence of the party interested to dispute it. It appears to me that sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act itself contemplates such cases. Then there is undoubtedly a conflict of claim as between the Plaintiff and the Defendant No. 3 as to who is entitled to receive the rents from the tenants. The claim of the Plaintiff to receive those rents conflicts with the right of the Defendant No. 3 to receive them. Now this question has been raised though not by the Defendant No. 3 but by the tenant Defendants and the Courts below have decided it. The fact that the Defendant No. 3 did not raise the contest and did not appear in the suit, does not appear to me to be very material. I would quote here some observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council, though they were made in an appeal case:—"It was said that that appeal was heard ex parte. Mr. Doyne candidly admitted that he could not on that ground dispute the effect of it. It is in their Lordships' opinion quite clear that it is impossible to allow the Appellant to take advantage of her absence on that occasion, in order to re-open any question which either was expressly decided or might have been raised and determined on that appeal." Juggodumba Dossee v. Tarakant Bannerjee (3). I therefore hold that the appeal lies.

[Owing to this difference of opinion the learned Judges made a reference under sec. 98, Civil Procedure Code, stating the point of law as follows:—

"In the circumstances of this case, does an appeal lie?"

His Lordship the Chief Justice who took up the reference was of opinion that the reference was not in order, and on the 18th August 1913 returned the case to the Division Bench with the following observations:—]

JENKINS, C. J.—The reference to a third Judge is under the proviso to sec. 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This section with certain variations reproduces sec. 575 of the former Code. But there is a difference between the two Codes which makes a very important difference for the purposes of a reference such as that now before me. Under the old Code the appeal was referred to one or more of the other Judges. Under the present Code it is a point of law that is to be heard by one or more of the other Judges. The result is that whereas under the old Code I could have disposed of this appeal on a reference, under the present Code I cannot. The intention of sec. 98 is that the Judges hearing the appeal should come to a complete decision with the reservation on the point of law on which they differ, and they should by their judgments make it clear that if the point of law is decided in one way it will have a certain final result, and if it is decided in another way it will have another and a different final result. That has not been done here and the result is that if I express my opinion on this point of law at this stage the appeal will be left in a condition of suspense and my decision will not decide the appeal. It may be that while the Judges differ in their opinion on this preliminary point, they are in accord on the merits of the case and so the reference may be unnecessary.

In view of these circumstances, it appears to me that the reference is premature and it is impossible for me to deal with it at this stage. The case will go back to the Division Bench for decision in the manner that I have indicated.

COXE and RAY, JJ.—This case has been returned by the learned Chief Justice for a further finding. We are both of opinion that if any appeal lies the appeal should be decreed. It is found by the Courts below that the Plaintiff has no title to the land inasmuch as the Defendant No. 3 had no power to transfer it to him. It does not appear to us however that this question is still open to controversy but has been finally decided. The Plaintiff sued the predecessors of the Defendants for rent and obtained a decree. That decree establishes that when it was passed the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties. Under sec. 109 of the Evidence Act it is incumbent on the Defendants to prove that that relationship has ceased to exist but it is not their case that it has ceased to exist since the passing of the decree. Both the Courts below ignore this decree, on the ground that it was passed ex parte. But in our opinion an ex parte decree is just as effective as any other decree until it is set aside or proved to have been obtained by fraud. And in this case it may be added, though the addition does not really carry the case any further, that the decree was executed.

In our opinion, therefore, when it is not pleaded that any change has taken place in the position of the parties since the former decree, it must be taken to be finally determined between the parties that the relationship of landlord and tenant exists between them, and the question whether the lease to the Plaintiff was or was not valid becomes irrelevant. We think therefore that the learned District Judge erred in law in deciding the case on that point and that if an appeal lies his decision should be reversed and the Plaintiff should obtain a decree for the rent claimed with costs throughout. Let the papers be returned to the Chief Justice.

JENKINS, C. J.—This is a reference to me as a third Judge under the provisions of the Code, occasioned by a difference of opinion between two learned Judges of this Court. The case came before them by way of second appeal, and, on the merits they both agreed that the Appellant ought to succeed : but while one of the learned Judges was of opnion that an appeal would lie, the other considered that it would not. This is the only question that remains unsettled. The determination of this question turns upon the construction of sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for this was a suit instituted by a landlord for the recovery of rent, under that Act, and no second appeal would lie unless the decree has decided a question relating to title to land or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto. The only question then is whether the decree has had this effect. It appears to me that it undoubtedly has. The Plaintiff claims to be the lessee under Defendant No. 3, and the point determined adversely to the Plaintiff by the lower Appellate Court was that this lease was invalid and that he had no title. That has been decided by the decree in a suit to which they both were parties : and not only was it a decision relating to title to land or to some interest in land, but the Plaintiff and the Defendant No. 3 appear to me to be parties having conflicting claims thereto. The claims certainly are not identical claims to the extent of the Plaintiff's alleged interest— they are in conflict with one another, and none the less because the Plaintiff claims under Defendant No. 3. This does not appear to me to require the authority of cases but it seems to me to be fully illustrated by the accepted principle that as between a vendor and a purchaser, or a lessor and lessee, under instruments which are for some reason ineffective, the purchaser in one case and the lessee in the other, can, where the conditions permit, set up and successfully establish the plea of adverse possession, if there be adverse possession. It appears to me then that the rights are conflicting rights.

For these reasons I think that the Appeal should be allowed with costs as was determined by the two learned Judges in the event of my coming to the conclusion to which I have just given expression.

There will be no order as to the costs of this reference.

Appeal allowed.

This was an Appeal preferred under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent against a decree of Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea, dated the 6th of August 1912, in Second Appeal No. 1602 of 1910 which had been preferred against a decree of Babu Kishori Lal Sen, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Dacca, dated the 4th of February 1910, modifying a decree of Babu Jnanendra Chandra Banerji, Munsif, 3rd Court of that District, dated the 15th of February 1909.

The Plaintiff sued for declaration of his title to and recovery of possession of 3 plots of land as forming parts of his holding. The Defendant claimed the said lands as appertaining to his homestead land. Both the parties adduced evidence in support of their claim. There were possessory suits in respect of these lands and they were dismissed. The result was that the Defendant No. 5 was maintained in possession. The principal piece of evidence on the Plaintiff's side was a document purporting to be an amalnamah dated 13th Bhadra 1296. The Court of first instance decreed the suit in part. The Defendant appealed in respect of the lands decreed and the Plaintiff cross-appealed in respect of the plot dismissed. The Subordinate Judge found that the document purporting to be an amalnamah was not admissible in evidence, being a lease for an indefinite period and unregistered and further found that the Plaintiff failed to prove his title in respect of the plaint lands. He decreed the appeal and dismissed the cross-appeal.

The document purporting to be an amalnamah was in the following terms:—

"Sheik Menu, son of late Sheik Julmat of Duaripara, P.S. Keraniganj, District Dacca. This is a deed of amalnamah. Within tappe Ichapur Ph. the said homestead. You will dwell therein on payment of rent Rs. 15-1-10 gundas from year to year (san basan) to our Sarkar. You will abide by the survey and settlement. Within a month on executing a kabuliyat you will take a pattah which I shall grant. Finish. Dated 23rd Bhadra 1296 B. S."

On second appeal the High Court held that the amalnamah was admissible in evidence but the case was remanded for a finding upon the evidence in the record as to whether the Tehsildar of the landlord had power to grant the amalnamah. On the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court the Second Appeal was heard by Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea who passed the following judgment.

This case was remanded for a finding upon the evidence on the record as to whether the Tehsildar of the landlord had power to grant the amalnamah which have been rejected by the lower Appellate Court as inadmissible in evidence and which this Court by its order dated the 9th February 1912 held to be admissible. There was a further direction that if the Court find that the Tehsildar had no such power no other question would have to be gone into but that if it be found that the Tehsildar had power to grant the amalnamah then it will come to a finding as to the title of the Plaintiff upon the whole evidence after taking the amalnamah into consideration. The lower Appellate Court has now returned its findings and I have heard both parties upon these findings. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the Plaintiff could give no evidence as to any written authority from the landlord empowering the Tehsildar to grant amalnamah or lease nor is there any oral evidence that on the occasion of this particular settlement with the Plaintiff the landlord gave any authority verbally. He finds however that 'there is ample and very reliable evidence that various Tehsildars of the landlord who came to the service subsequently acted upon the settlement of the amalnamah. The settlement was accepted and one's rents were realized from the Plaintiff for series of years' He again says —"Thus there is satisfactory evidence that several Tehsildars accepted the settlement of the amalnamah and realized rents which were entered in the landlords' collection papers. All these evidence and circumstances afford materials in favour of a finding that the power of the Tehsildar was ratified and acquiesced in. If this acquiescence and ratification be taken as sufficient authority the amalnamah which is otherwise unimpeachable is a good evidence in favour of the Plaintiff's title and taking the amalnamah and the evidence of the witnesses into consideration he has come to the conclusion that there can be no doubt as to the Plaintiff's title to the lands in suit except plot No. 3 and thus agreed with the finding of the Munsif as to the title of the Plaintiff.

It is contended on behalf of Respondents that the learned Subordinate Judge has gone beyond the order of remand made by this Court; that having found that the Tehsildar had no written or verbal authority to grant amalnamahs he ought to have stopped there and ought not to have tried the case upon the merits. The learned pleader on behalf of the Appellant contends that the Subordinate Judge has not really gone beyond the remand order and he has practically come to a finding that the Tehsildar had the authority. It has no doubt been found that there was no evidence to show that the Tehsildar had any written authority or any verbal authority at the time of granting the amalnamah, but reading the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge as a whole I think he meant to find, having regard to the fact that the settlement under the amalnamah had been acted upon and rents realized thereunder and that the act of the Tehsildar was ratified and acquiesced in, that the Tehsildar had sufficient authority. The Court could on the facts have inferred that the Tehsildar had power to grant amalnamah; and though the learned Subordinate Judge does not say in so many words this is what he really meant to find. The amalnamah being admissible in evidence and the lower Appellate Court having found that taking it with the evidence of the witness it proves the title of the Plaintiff the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and that of the Munsif restored with costs.

This is an Appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against a judgment of Mr. Justice Nalini Ranjan Chatterjea in a suit for recovery of possession of land by which he has reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge, and restored the decree of the Court of first instance.

The substantial question in controversy between the parties is whether a document described as an amalnamah and granted by the landlord to the tenant on the 28th of August 1889 was admissible in evidence. The Appellant contends that the document is in essence an agreement to lease and is compulsorily registrable under sec. 17 of the Indian Registration Act. The Respondent contends, on the other hand, that it is not an agreement to lease but is a document of the description mentioned in cl. (h) of sec. 17 of the Indian Registration Act, 1877.

Now, the document first describes the land intended to be demised and sets out the boundaries. It then states that "according to your prayer, I (that is, the landlord) grant this amalnamah to you for erecting houses after reclaiming the said homestead. You will dwell thereon on payment of rent Rs. 15-1-10 gundas from year to year to our Sarkar. You will abide the survey and settlement. Within a month on executing a kabuliyat you will take a pattah which I shall grant." It is plain that this is an agreement to lease. The land to be demised is accurately defined ; the rent is settled and is made payable from year to year, and the lease is apparently a lease in perpetuity ; under these circumstances we must hold as was ruled by a Full Bench of this Court in Syed Sufdar Reza v. Amzad Ali (1), that the document was compulsorily registrable.

Reliance, however, has been placed upon the case of Dwarka Nath v. Ledu Sikdar (2), in which it was held that an amalnamah was not compulsorily registrable. The terms of the document in that case, however, were very different from the terms of the instrument now before us, and it is not necessary for us to express an opinion upon the question whether or not upon the terms of that document the case was correctly decided.

As regards cl. (h) of sec. 17 of the Indian Registration Act, we observe that it is clearly inapplicable. That clause lays down that a document not itself creating any title of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards to immoveable property but merely creating a right to obtain another document which will, when executed, create such title, is not compulsorily registrable. The document mentioned there is one which does not create title, but merely creates a right to obtain a subsequent document upon the execution and registration of which the right is to commence. In the case before us there is no room for controversy that the parties intended that as soon as possession was taken under the document of the 28th August 1889, the title of the grantee should commence. As a matter of fact no subsequent document has been executed and it is not the contention of the Respondent that his title has not yet commenced by reason of his failure to tender a kabuliyat to the landlord and obtain from him a pattah.

The view we take is supported by the decision in Narayanan Chetty v. Muthiah Servai (3) and is not opposed to the decision in Champakalatika Mitra v. Nafar Chandra Pal (4), where an amalnamah was produced at the instance of the landlord and no question was raised as to its admissibility.

The result therefore is that this Appeal is allowed, the decree of Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea reversed and that of the Subordinate Judge restored. This order will carry costs throughout.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 334 OF 1909.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. WALMSLEY, J. 1913, Heard, 2, 5, 8 and 9, May. Judgment, 1, August.	HITENDRA SINGH and ors., Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. RAMESHUR SINGH and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Babuana property—Darbhanga Raj—Government revenue and cesses whether payable to Raj—Revenue not paid to Raj—Debt whether a joint family debt—Mitakshara family—Decree against father personally—Debt not proved to be illegal for immoral—Whether the interest of the sons passes.

Holders of Babuana property in the Darbhanga Raj are liable to pay Government revenue and cesses to the Raj.

Where the income of the Babuana property was appropriated by members of the family, and the Government revenue and cesses payable were not paid, the liability to pay the Government revenue and cesses should be considered as a joint family debt and not the personal debt of the holder for the time being.

Even if it were considered to be a personal debt of the father, in execution of a decree against the father alone the entire family property could be sold and not merely the personal interest of the father, as the debt could not be attacked as an immoral debt.

Every debt incurred by the father in a Mitakshara family not for illegal or immoral purposes is of a nature to support a sale of the entirety of the family property. In execution of a money decree against the father alone for a personal debt of the father, the whole family property may be sold, if the debt was not contracted for immoral purposes and it is not absolutely necessary that the son should be a party either to the suit itself or to the proceedings in execution.

Where it appears from the form of the suit or of the execution proceedings or from the description of the property put up for sale that only the interest of the father in the property was intended to be sold and was put up for sale, the interest of the sons would not pass by such a sale, and in such a case, the absence of the sons from the suit or execution proceedings would be a material element for consideration.

Where, on the other hand, the proceedings show that the intention was to sell the entire property and the same was sold and bargained for, then the purchaser would be entitled to the whole, and the sons though not parties to the proceedings cannot claim their shares against the purchaser except by proving that the debt was contracted for immoral purposes.

The words "right, title and interest" of the judgment-debtor may either mean the share which the father might have sold to satisfy his debt or the share which he would have obtained on partition, and the question what was intended to be sold or was sold in each case will depend upon its own circumstances.

Where in the sale proclamation the property to be sold at an auction sale was described as "7 as. 8 gds. 3 karas of Pandaul . . Touzi No. 6473 . ." i.e., the entire family property, and the property was purchased by the decree-holder for Rs. 55,000, and an application for setting aside the sale was rejected on the ground that the evidence in proof of the insufficiency of price could not be deemed good and satisfactory, and the sale was confirmed with the following order: "whereas M purchased for 55,000 the rights and interests in the properties specified below, and thirty days have expired, and an application for setting aside the sale has been rejected the sale is hereby confirmed;" but in the certificate of sale, the description of the property was to the same effect as that in the sale proclamation, and finally it was not suggested that the price paid was not the full value of the property purchased:

Held—That the words "rights and interests" in the order confirming the sale do not raise any ambiguity, or induce the Court to hold that only the personal interest of the father was sold and that under the circumstances the entire family property passed to the purchaser.

Singh. The Maharaja of Darbhanga obtained a decree for Rs. 27,186, on the 18th February 1893, against Defendant No. 4, in respect of arrears of Government revenue and cesses payable for Pergana Jabdi the Babuana property, which, it is alleged by the Raj, were payable by the holders of the property but were not paid. In execution of the decree obtained in that suit the 7 as. 8¾ gds. share of Mouzah Pandaul which was the joint family property of the Plaintiffs and the Defendant No. 4 was sold and purchased by the Raj on the 20th March 1895.

The Plaintiffs allege that the Government revenue and cesses for Pergana Jabdi Babuana property are payable by the Raj and not by the holder of the property, that the claim in the suit in which the decree was passed, was not a just or equitable claim against Defendant No. 4, and that in any case the alleged liability for which the suit was instituted and for which the said decree was passed was not a liability of, or affecting, the joint property of the Plaintiffs and Defendant No. 4, that the decree being only a personal decree against Defendant No. 4, and the share of Mouzah Pandaul sold being the joint property of the Plaintiffs and Defendant No. 4, and in which they had an equal interest with the latter, their interest in the property sold was not liable to be sold and could not be sold under the said decree. The Plaintiffs, accordingly, prayed that a decree might be passed awarding them possession of the property sold or, at any rate, to the extent of their interest in the same. The defence of the Maharaja of Darbhanga inter alia was that the grantee and his heirs in the male line are liable to pay the Government revenue and other public demands in respect of the said Babuana property to the Darbhanga Raj, that the decree obtained against Defendant No. 4 was a valid decree passed in respect of a just claim, that the Plaintiffs were legally bound by the said decree, that the property in suit was legally attached and sold in execution of the said decree, and the Plaintiffs are not entitled to impugn the said sale which was legally binding upon them. The Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga dismissed the suit and the Plaintiffs have appealed to this Court. Four contentions have been raised on their behalf in this appeal :—

First, that the Government revenue and cesses of the Babuana property are payable by the Raj, and not by the heirs of the grantee ; secondly, that even if the Government revenue and cesses were payable to the Raj they were not payable by the Plaintiffs, but by Defendant No. 4, the holder of the Babuana property for the time being ; thirdly, that the decree was passed against Defendant No. 4 personally and not as karta of the joint family ; and fourthly, that the decree and the execution proceedings not being against the entire joint family, what was sold, was the mere personal interest of the Defendant No. 4 and not the interests of the Plaintiffs.

As regards the first contention, the Plaintiffs have examined some witnesses, who said, that the Government revenue and cesses for the Babuana property were never paid to the Darbhanga Raj and that no demand for them was ever made by the Raj. But the documentary evidence adduced by the Defendant is conclusive to show that the revenue and cesses were payable by the grantee, and had all along been realised from his heirs. The original sanad by which Pergana Jabdi was granted to Babu Kirat Singh, the ancestor of the Plaintiffs, does not appear to be in existence. But the sanad is recited in a later document dated 1807 executed by Maharaj Madho Singh, the father of Babu Kirat Singh, in favour of Maharaj Kumar Chhatar Singh, the eldest son of the former. After reciting that Pergana Jabdi had been granted to Babu Kirat Singh as Babuana maintenance property, and other Perganas to his other brothers, the deed states that the said Babus "will enjoy the Malikana Dustoors and profits of the said Perganas, and will pay to you the Government revenue, payable on account (of those Perganas), and you will pay the same to the Hakim (Government) along with the Government revenue of the Raj properties. Then it appears that in the year 1879 an application was made by the Manager of the Court of Wards of the Darbhanga Raj for the registration of the name of the minor, Maharaja Lachhmishwar Singh in respect of the Mouzahs in Pergana Jabdi. Thereupon a petition of objection was filed on behalf of Babu Durga Dutt Singh (the Defendant No. 4 in the present suit) in which he relied upon the said sanad of 1807 and distinctly stated that he and his brother Giridhari Singh had been paying the Government revenue of Pergana Jabdi through the Maharaja Bahadur. The deed of sale dated 1873 and the mortgage bond dated the 15th December 1890 executed by Babu Durga Dutt Singh show that large sums of money, which were due to the Raj for Government revenue and cesses, were paid by him. Then there are decrees for Government revenue and cesses for Pergana Jabdi passed against the Defendant No. 4; and even so far back as 20th October 1841 a decree was obtained by the Raj against Babu Kirat Singh himself for Governmnt revenue of Pergana Jabdi. The above documents and the judgments and decrees conclusively establish that the holders of the Babuana property are liable to pay the Government revenue and cesses for Pergana Jabdi to the Raj. The learned Counsel for the Appellants argued that they do not establish a custom; but it is really an incident of the grant and there can be no possible doubt that the Government revenue for the Pergana is paid by the Raj and realised from the holder of the Pergana. In the case of Babu Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Mokeshur Singh (1), the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council observed, that where an estate is granted to a younger son as a Babuana allowance, he continues to pay the rent and assessment to the Raja; the property is never separated from the zemindary at all. The first contention, therefore, must be overruled.

As regards the second contention, it is argued that even if Government revenue and cesses are payable to the Raj, the Defendant No. 4, the holder of the Pergana as Babuana for the time being, was liable to pay and that the Plaintiffs who are his sons and grandsons were not liable to pay. It is contended that the petition of Durga Dutt dated the 12th March 1879 (exhibit 2) referred to above shows that so long as Babu Kirat Singh was alive, he alone was in possession of the Pergana and that on his death his sons Giridhari and Durga Dutt were in possession. The right, therefore, accrues on the death of the last male holder, which is inconsistent with the case that the sons have joint interest with the father during his lifetime and reliance has been placed upon the case of Durgadut Singh v. Rameshwer Singh (2), in which it was held that Babuana property is impartible and alienable. But the question, whether the sons and grandsons have interest in the property during the lifetime of the father and the grandfather in the Babuana property does not require any discussion in the present case, as the Plaintiffs themselves state in the fourth paragraph of the plaint that Pergana Jabdi is a Babuana property of the Plaintiffs and Babu Durga Dutt Singh, Defendant No. 4. It was never suggested in the pleadings or in the arguments before the lower Court, so far as it appears from the judgment of the Court below, that the Plaintiffs had no present interest in the Babuana property. Their contention in the Court below was that the Government revenue and cesses were not payable by the holders of the Babuana property, but were payable by the Raj. It is contended, however, on behalf of the Appellants that they are not bound by an admission on a point of law, and that according to the view taken by the Privy Council, in the case cited above, the property belongs to Defendant No. 4 alone, so long as he is alive, that the debt for which he was sued (namely, the Government revenue and cesses) was his personal debt and that it was not a debt for which the joint family was liable. It was contended on behalf of the Respondent that the decision of the Judicial Committee proceeded upon a confession made by the learned Counsel for the Appellants in the case before the Privy Council; that the object of the Babuana grant being the maintenance of the grantee and his descendants in the male line, the property granted as Babuana becomes the joint property of the family, and that, otherwise, it would be open to the first holder of the property to alienate it altogether and thus frustrate the very object of the grant and that Babuana property cannot have the same incidents as the Raj itself out of which it is carved. It appears, however, that the judgment of the Judicial Committee did not proceed entirely upon the admission of Counsel, and their Lordships pointed out that if the holder of the Babuana property for the time being failed to pay the stipulated Government revenue to the Maharaja, and the latter himself was obliged to discharge the claim of the Government, he might sue the former for the amount so paid and, if necessary, recover the amount decreed to him by the sale of the Babuana property, and an involuntary alienation of this kind would as effectually defeat the claim of all the members of the family, who were at the time or might thereafter become entitled to maintenance out of the property, as would any voluntary alienation of it. But although Babuana property may be alienated by the person to whom it descends, it is held or managed by him for the maintenance of the family so long as it is not alienated, and the family has the benefit of it. It appears from the evidence of Amarendra Singh (the Plaintiff No. 2) that all the members of the family appropriated the income of the Babuana property. The revenue payable for the property, but which was not paid, therefore was enjoyed by all the members and it may in that sense be considered as a joint family debt. In the view, however, we take on the fourth point, it is unnecessary to discuss the matter any further.

Then comes the third question, namely, whether the decree was passed against Defendant No. 4 personally or as karta of the joint family. It appears from the plaint in the suit by the Raj against Babu

HITENDRA SINGH v. RAMESHUR SINGH.

Durga Dutt Singh (Ex. 2) that the Raj prayed for a decree against the person and properties of the Defendant to be recovered from the person and the properties of the Defendant. The decree directed the Defendant to pay to the Plaintiffs the amount decreed. The liability in one sense was a common liability of the family, and the Defendant, no doubt, was the karta of and represented the family, but the decree was not passed against him expressly as karta. The question would have been important, had the certificate of sale and the proceedings in execution raised any ambiguity as to the property sold. Having regard to the view we take on the 4th point this question also need not be discussed further.

The last question is whether in execution of the decree against the father alone, the father's interest only or the entire property was sold; and this involves the question whether the creditor in a judgment against the father in a Mitakshara joint family even though it is for a personal debt of the father is entitled to sell not only the interest of the father in the family property but the interest of the sons also in the property.

It has been contended on behalf of the Appellant that where the debt is a personal debt of the father and the decree is against him alone, all that can be sold in execution of such a decree is the personal interest of the father only. As a general proposition the contention on behalf of the Appellant that under a decree against one person (unless where he is sued in a representative capacity) the interests of others who are no parties to it cannot be sold is correct, but the position of a son under the Mitakshara is very peculiar. The father can sell any portion of the ancestral estate even for a personal debt, provided the debt was not contracted for illegal or immoral purposes. Now, under sec. 266 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the execution creditor can levy execution not only against property belonging to the judgment-debtor but also against property over which he has a disposing power, which he may exercise for his own benefit. So that, if the father in a Mitakshara family has the power to dispose of any property to discharge his debt, the creditor can avail himself of the right which the father himself may exercise for his own benefit. It was next contended on behalf of the Appellant that even if the creditor can realise the debt due by the father alone from the property of the entire family, he cannot do so unless the suit is so framed and the sons are made parties to the proceedings, and a large number of cases were cited as supporting the contention. The decisions, as pointed out in Nanomi Babuasin's case (3), are not on all points in harmony either in India or in the Privy Council. We must however see whether the cases support the contention of the Appellant. The first case relied upon is that of Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narayan Singh (4). In that case their Lordships observed:—"Whatever may have been the nature of the debt, the Appellant cannot be taken to have acquired by the execution sale more than the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. If he had sought to go further, and to enforce his debt against the whole property, and the co-sharers therein who were not parties to the bond, he ought to have framed his suit accordingly, and have made those co-sharers parties to it. By the proceedings which he took he could not get more than what was seized and sold in execution, viz., the right, title and interest of the father. If any authority be required for this proposition, it is sufficient to refer to the cases of Nugendra Chander Ghose v Kaminee Dossee (5), and Baijun Doobey v. Brij Bhookun Lal (6)." But the observations in that judgment must be read with reference to the circumstances of the case and not as laying down an invariable rule that in no case will the sons' interest pass in an execution sale, unless they are joined in the suit. Such a view will be in direct contradiction of the rule laid down in Muddun Thakoor v. Kantoo Lall (7). In the latter case where ancestral property had been sold in execution of a decree against the father alone, it was held, in a suit by the son to recover the property, that if the decree was a proper one, the interest of the sons as well as the interest of the father in the property, although it was ancestral, were liable for the payment of the father's debts and that in such a case, a purchser under an execution is not bound to go further back than to see that there was a decree against the father and if he bonâ fide purchases the estate under the execution and bonâ fide pays a valuable consideration for it, he is protected against the suit of the sons seeking to set aside all that has been done under the decree in execution, and recover back the estate as joint ancestral property. Sir James Colville who delivered the judgment of the Judicial Committee both in the cases of Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narayan Singh (4) and Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Prosad Singh (8) observed in the latter case as follows:—"This case [referring to the case of Muddun Thakoor v. Kantoo Lall (7)] then, which is a decision of this tribunal, is undoubtedly an authority for these propositions:—

First.—That where joint ancestral property has passed out of a joint family either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes, and that the purchasers had no notice that they were so contracted; and, secondly, that the purchasers at an execution sale, being strangers to the suit, if they have not notice that the debts were so contracted, are not bound to make enquiry beyond what appears on the face of the proceedings." The principles so laid down were held inapplicable to the case of Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Prosad Singh (8), as in that case the debt was found to have been incurred for immoral purposes and the purchasers were held to have purchased with knowledge of the Plaintiffs' claim which was preferred before the sale, and subject to the result of the regular suit, by which the execution Court held, they could obtain their remedy. The next case relied upon was the case of Hari Narain v. Rudar Perkash (9), where a money decree was made against the father of the family and the decree-holder caused the family estate to be attached, and brought to sale the father's right, title and interest therein, it was held, following Deendayal Lal's case (4) that only the father's rights and interests passed by the sale and not the interests of the family. But the decision in that case turned upon the construction of the sale certificate and the other proceedings, and the question whether a creditor, in execution of a decree against the father alone, can sell the entire family estate was neither raised nor decided. As pointed out in Minakshi Naidu v. Immudi Kamaka (10), all the documents in Hari Narain's case (9) showed that the Court intended to sell and that it did sell nothing but the father's share—the share and interest that he would take on partition and nothing beyond it—and the Privy Council in that case put it entirely upon the ground that everything showed that the thing sold was "whatever rights and interests the said judgment-debtor had in the property" and nothing else. The case of Minakshi Naidu v. Immudi Kamaka (10) is a clear authority for the proposition that in execution of a decree for money against the father alone, the debt not being contracted for immoral purposes, the property of the family can be sold and will pass to the purchaser. In that case the decree-holders obtained a decree for money upon a note against the father and attached a zemindary in execution thereof. The son intervened and sought by petition an order that his interest in the zemindary should be excluded from the sale, and that the sale should be made subject to his right. It does not appear what order, if any, was made on that petition; but notwithstanding that petition, the sale took place and it was held upon the documents in that case that the thing professed and intended to be sold and actually sold was not the father's share but the whole interest in the zemindary itself. The son impeached the debt as having been made for illegal and immoral purposes and that impeachment failed. Their Lordships held "that being the case there might have been a sale of this estate under this decree including the whole interest or of so much as was necessary. Upon the documents their Lordships have arrived at the conclusion that the Court intended to sell and that the Court did sell the whole estate and not any partial interest in it." It is true in that case the son does not appear to have even contended that no more than his father's interest was sold. His case was that the whole zemindary was sold out and out; he impeached the debt which led to the sale and asserted that the decree founded on it could not bind his interests. But the judgment of the Privy Council shows that the interest of the son may pass by a sale held in execution of a decree for money against the father alone where the debt is not one for immoral purposes, although the son is not a party to the decree or the sale. It is contended that in that case, the father contracted the debt as karta of the family, but it does not appear that he either contracted the debt or was sued as karta of the family.

That the entire family property may pass by a sale in execution of a money decree against the father alone was also established in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (3), where in execution of a decree for mesne profits, against the father alone, ancestral family property was sold, and the sons brought a suit in which they contended that nothing passed by the sale except such share as the father would have taken on partition. Their Lordships said as follows :—

"There is no question that considerable difficulty has been found in giving full effect to each of two principles of the Mitakshara law, one being that a son takes a present vested interest jointly with his father in ancestral estate, and the other that he is legally bound to pay his father's debts, not incurred for immoral purposes, to the extent of the property taken by him through his father. It is impossible to say that the decisions on this subject are on all points in harmony, either in India or here. But the discrepancies do not cover so wide a ground as was suggested during the argument in this case. It appears to their Lordships that sufficient care has not always been taken to distinguish between the question how far the entirety of the joint estate is liable to answer the father's debt, and the question how far the sons can be precluded by proceedings taken by or against the father alone from disputing that liability. Destructive as it may be of the principle of independent coparcenary rights in the sons, the decisions have for some time established the principle that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against his creditors' remedies for their debts, if not tainted with immorality. On this important question of the liability of the joint estate their Lordships think that there is now no conflict of authority." Then their Lordships said that they did not think that the authority of Deendyal's case (4) bound the Court to hold that nothing but Giridhari's (the father's) coparcenary interest passed by the sale. If the debt was of a nature to support a sale of the entirety, he might legally procure a sale of it by suit. All the sons can claim is that, not being parties to the sale or execution proceedings, they ought not to be barred from trying the fact or the nature of the debt in a suit of their own. Assuming they have such a right, it will avail them nothing unless they can prove that the debt was not such as to justify the sale. If the expressions by which the estate is conveyed to the purchaser are susceptible of application either to the entirety or to the father's coparcenary interest alone (and in Deendyal's case (4) there certainly was an ambiguity of that kind) the absence of the sons from the proceedings may be one material consideration. But if the fact be that the purchaser has bargained and paid for the entirety, he may clearly defend his title to it upon any ground which could have justified a sale if the sons had been brought in to oppose the proceedings." It is clear from the above decision that Deendyal's case (4) does not lay down an invariable rule, that in no case will the sons' interests pass in an execution sale against the father, unless they are joined in the suit, and it is also clear, that if the debt is of a nature to support a sale of the entirety of the property the creditor may legally procure a sale of it by suit against the father alone. In that case, the debt was found by the High Court to be a joint family debt, because the joint family presumably benefited by the mesne profits for which a decree was made against the father. The Privy Council held that the High Court was right and observed that if it was a joint family debt, a sale to answer it, effected either by the father, or in a suit against him could not be successfully impeached, that learned Counsel for the Appellant strongly relied upon the fact that there was a joint family debt as distinguishing that case. But their Lordships did not lay down that the interests of the sons would pass by a sale against the father, only where the debt is a joint family debt, meaning thereby that the debt is one which is incurred for the benefit of the joint family. What was laid down is that if the debt is of a nature to support a sale of its entirety, the father may legally sell it without suit, or the creditor may legally procure a sale of it by suit. Now, every debt incurred by the father not for illegal or immoral purposes is of a nature to support a sale of the entirety of the family property. The debt in the present case was revenue due for Babuana property which the evidence shows was enjoyed by the whole family. The debt therefore was as much a joint family debt as the debt in Nanomi Babuasin's case (3). But assuming that the debt was a personal debt of the father, there could be no doubt that the father could sell family property for discharging that debt, and if he could do so, his creditor might legally procure a sale of it by suit. Then their Lordships say—"But if the fact be that the purchaser has bargained and paid for the entirety, he may clearly defend his title to it upon any ground which would have justified a sale, if the sons had been brought in to oppose the execution proceedings" Now, apart from the question whether the purchaser bargained and paid for the entirety of the property in the present case, which we will deal with later, could it have made any difference, had the sons been brought in to oppose the execution proceedings? All that they could show is that the debt was not such as to justify the sale, in other words that the debt was incurred for illegal or immoral purposes which in the present case it was not.

The next case to be considered is that of Shimbhoo Nath Pandey v. Golap Singh (11). There the question was whether the whole estate belonging to a joint family living under the Mitakshara, including the shares of sons, or the share of their father only passed to the purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree against the father alone upon a mortgage by him of his right, and it was held that as the mortgage and decree as well as the sale certificate expressed only the father's debt, the prima facie conclusion was that the purchaser took only the father's share, a conclusion which the circumstances—the omission on the part of the creditor to make the sons parties and the price paid—not only did not counteract but supported. But their Lordships did not in that case lay down any principle different from that laid down in Nanomi Babuasin's case (3). Lord Hobhouse, who delivered the judgment of the Judicial Committee in both the cases, observed—"Each case must depend upon its own circumstances. It appears to their Lordships that in all the cases, at least the recent cases, the enquiry has been what the parties contracted about, if there was a conveyance, or what the purchaser had reason to think he was buying, if there was no conveyance, but only a sale in execution of a money decree."

The subsequent decisions of the Privy Council follow these principles. In Bhagbut Persad v. Girija Koer (12), the sale in execution of a decree against the father was found to be not merely of the right, title and interest of the debtor, but a sale of the property being right, title and interest of the debtor. The sons were no parties to the suit or the proceedings in execution, and before the sale, notice was given on behalf of the sons that the property was ancestral and joint. It was held that the sons could not set up their rights against the sale in execution of the decree against the father unless they could establish that the debt had been contracted for any illegal or immoral purpose. In Daulat Ram v. Mehr Chand (13), the mere fact that the other members of the family were no parties to the action, was considered not to be a ground for holding that their shares in the family property did not pass at a sale held in execution of a decree against the managing members of a joint trading family, upon mortgage executed by the managing members alone, and their Lordships quoted with approval the principles laid down in Nanomi Babuasin's case (3).

In the case of Mahabir Pershad v. Moheswar Nath (14), it was held, that it is only on condition of the son's showing that the father's debt has been contracted for an illegal or immoral purpose that the son, upon a decree against the father alone being executed by the attachment and sale of the family estate, can claim to have the liability limited to the father's own share under the Mitakshara. In the absence of such proof, whether the entirety of the family estate has been transferred at the sale in execution, or not, is a question of fact, in each case dependent on what was understood to be brought, and has been brought, to sale.

Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee observed—"There have been of late years a great number of suits of this kind, and some difficulties have been felt as to the proper mode of treating them. It is to be hoped that recent decisions by this Committee have lessened these difficulties. At all events, their Lordships feel none in this case, treating it on the principles laid down in the cases of Nanomi Babuasin v. Modun Mohun (10) and Bhagbut Persad Singh v. Girija Koer (12); and addressing themselves to the question of fact whether the thing meant to be sold and brought was the entirety of the estate or only a share in it."

Reliance was placed on behalf of the Appellants upon the fact that the decrees in the above case and some of the other cases cited above were based upon mortgages. But as pointed out by Sargeant, C. J., in Kagal Ganpaya v. Manjappa (15), in the case of an execution sale, the mere fact that the decree was a money decree against the father, as distinguished from one passed in a suit for the realisation of a mortgage security directing the property to be sold, is not a complete test, and we need only point out that the decrees in Minakshi v. Immudi (10) and Nanomi Babuasin v. Modun Mohun (3) were money decrees. The Appellants also relied on the fact that in some of the cases where the interest of the sons also was held to have passed by the sale, the purchaser was a stranger and not the decree-holder himself as in the present case, but that fact can make any difference only where the question arises whether the purchaser had notice of the debt being immoral. No such question arises in the present case.

We do not think it will serve any useful purpose to discuss the decisions of the Courts in India, which were cited at the Bar. Each case turned (as it must) upon its own circumstances and the decisions are not uniform on all points, and in some cases different views are taken of the effect of some of the Privy Council decisions. Some of the cases were decided before Nanomi Babuasin's case (3), and in so far as they lay down that the sons must be made parties to a suit against the father in order to bind them, they must be taken to have been overruled by the later decisions of the Privy Council.

The decisions of the Privy Council cited above show that the whole family property may be sold in execution of a money decree against the father alone for a personal debt of the father, if the debt was not contracted for immoral purposes, and that it is not absolutely necessary that the son should be a party either to the suit itself or to the proceedings in execution.

They further show that if it appears from the form of the suit or of the execution proceedings or from the description of the property put up for sale, that only the interest of the father in the property was intended to be sold and was put up for sale, the interest of the sons would not pass by such a sale and in such a case, the absence of the sons from the suit or execution proceedings would be a material element for consideration.

If, on the other hand, the proceedings show that the intention was to sell the entire property and the same was sold and bargained for, then the purchaser would be entitled to the whole and the sons, though not parties to the proceedings, cannot claim their shares against the purchaser except by proving that the debt was contracted for immoral purposes.

And lastly the words "right, title and interest" of the judgment-debtor may either mean the share which the father might have sold to satisfy his debt or the share which he would have obtained on partition; and the question what was intended to be sold or was sold in each case will depend upon its own circumstances.

We are now to apply the above principles to the facts of the present case. The decree against the Defendant No. 4, Babu Durga Dutt Singh, the father of the Plaintiffs, was, as we have already stated, for the recovery of arrears of Government revenue in respect of the Babuana property which was enjoyed by the family.

Even if it was not a family debt, it could not possibly be attacked on the ground of immorality, and there was no allegation even of any immorality on the part of the father. That being so, the father could have sold the share which the family had in the property, to satisfy the debt and the creditor, therefore, could sell the property and not merely the personal interest of the father in execution of the decree, although it was passed against the father alone. Now in the second paragraph of the plaint in the present suit the Plaintiff distinctly stated 'that the decree-holder caused the 7 as. 8¾ gds. share of Mouzah Pandaul to be sold by auction declaring it to be the property of the Defendant 2nd party (the father), and in the 5th paragraph of the plaint they stated, "that the said share sold is the ancestral property of the joint family of the Plaintiffs and the Defendant 2nd party and the Plaintiffs have each of them an equal interest in it as the Defendant 2nd party has. The right and interest of the Plaintiffs in the property sold was not liable to be sold and could not be sold under the said decree and the said late Maharaja acquired no legal right or interest to or in the Plaintiffs' right and interest to the said property under the said auction sale." The fact that the 7 and odd annas share in Mouzah Pandaul, belonging to the family, was sold, is not only not denied, but is admitted by the Plaintiffs in the plaint. All that is stated is that their interests were not liable to be sold and could not be sold. Having regard to the statements in the plaint, the question whether only the personal interest of the father or the entire interest of the family in the property was sold does not arise at all; and we are of opinion that it is not open to the Appellants, under those circumstances, to raise the question in appeal. But even assuming that it is open to them to raise the question, let us see what was intended to be sold and was sold. In the sale proclamation the property belonging to the judgment-debtor to be sold at auction was described as "7 as. 8 gds. 3 karas of Mouzah Pandaul, within Thana Barampore, the former Touzi Number whereof is 2417 and the present Touzi Number 6473 and the area of the entire mahal is 2925 acres 3 roods 1 pole and the Sudder Jama of the entire mahal is Rs. 2,554-11." The sale took place on the 20th March 1896 and the property was purchased by the decree-holder for Rs. 55,000. The judgment-debtor, the father of the Plaintiffs, applied for setting aside the sale on the ground of irregularities in conducting the sale; but the Court held that the sale was properly proclaimed, the process was actually served and that the evidence in proof of the insufficiency of price could not be deemed good and satisfactory; and the application was rejected. The sale was confirmed on the 13th July 1896. The order confirming the sale states "whereas Munshi Udit Sahay, Mukhtear for the decree-holder, purchased for Rs. 55,000 the rights and interests in the properties specified below sold by the bailiff of the Court on the 20th March 1896, in execution of the decree in Suit No. 3 of 1892 by this Court and thirty days have elapsed since then and a petition made by the judgment-debtor for setting aside the sale was rejected on the 2nd July 1896, it is ordered that the sale be and the sale is hereby confirmed." Then follows the inventory which is exactly the same as in the sale proclamation, namely, 7 as. 8 gundas 3 kouris share of Mouzah Pandaul, &c., &c. On the 7th September 1896, a certificate of sale was granted which states "This is to certifiy that Munshi Udit Sahay, the Mukhtear, has been declared purchaser for decree-holder for and in consideration of Rs. 55,000 in Suit No. 3 of 1892 at a sale by public auction on the 20th March 1896 of the undermentioned property, viz., 7 as. 8 gundas 3 kouris in Mouzah Pandaul (the further description being the same as in the sale proclamation) in execution of the decree in this suit and that the sale has been duly confirmed by the Court."

It will appear from the sale proclamation, which is the most important document, that what was intended to be and was going to be sold was the 7 and odd annas share of Mouzah Pandaul which was the only share belonging to the family in the Mouzah. The certificate of sale which is the title-deed of the purchaser also shows the same thing. There is nothing whatever to show in either of these two documents that only the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor was going to be sold or was sold.

It was contended on behalf of the Appellant that in the order confirming the sale, the words "rights and interest" in the property give rise to an ambiguity. We do not think, however, that they do. The words "rights and interests," we think, mean the entire rights and interests in the property; and even if these words mean the rights and interest of the judgment-debtor we think having regard to the terms of the sale proclamation and the certificate of sale, the words "rights and interests" in the order confirming the sale (which, moreover, could not override the terms of the sale proclamation) do not raise any ambiguity or induce us to hold that only the personal interest of the father was sold. The certificate of sale was followed by delivery of possession and the purchaser obtained delivery of possession of the entire 7 and odd annas share of Mouzah Pandaul belonging to the family without any objection on the part of his sons who were adults at the time, and the purchaser was in possession for ten years of the entire property when the present suit was brought in 1906.

It was not even suggested that the price paid was not the full value of the property purchased but only of the personal interest of the father. The only evidence we have on the record (the order refusing to set aside the sale) shows that the price was not insufficient; and the Appellants cannot complain that the matter was not gone into in the lower Court when they admitted that the sale was of the entire property and not merely the personal interest of the father.

Under the circumstances, we are of opinion that the interests of the Plaintiffs in the property in suit passed by the sale and that they cannot succeed as the debt for which the property was sold was not a debt incurred for immoral purposes.

We, accordingly, confirm the decree of the Court below and dismiss the Appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 1170 OF 1911.

MOOKERJEE, J.	DURGA CHARAN MAHTO,
BEACHCROFT, J.	Plaintiff, Appellant,
1913.	v.
Heard, 28, March and 7, April.	RAGHUNATH MAHTO and others, Defendants,
Judgment, 7, April.	Respondents.

Hindu Law—Succession—Custom of primogeniture—Allegation of family or local custom—What must be proved—Continuity and immemorial user—Onus—Finding that custom proved, if finding of fact—Record-of-rights pending suit—Judgment of revenue officer in settlement proceedings if evidence in suit—Attestation proceeding, finding in favour of custom recorded at, and based upon hearsay.

Whether certain facts found by the lower Appellate Court (and as such binding on the High Court) do or do not establish an alleged custom of primogeniture is a question of law.

Where a party relies upon a special custom of a family to take the succession out of the ordinary Hindu Law such custom must be proved to be ancient and continuous.

The alleged custom must be very satisfactorily proved by evidence of particular instances so numerous as to justify the Court in finding in favour of the custom.

Where subsequently to the institution of the suit, and at the attestation stage of proceedings for preparation of record-of-rights, an Assistant Settlement Officer found upon information gathered from the tehsildar of the Raja's estate that the custom of primogeniture prevailed amongst Kurmi Mahtos in 82 out of 84 of the villages within the estate and the lower Appellate Court relying upon this judgment found the custom established in the village in suit, the parties being Kurmi Mahtos:

Held—That apart from the circumstance that the fact of the record of-rights having been completed since the institution of the suit affected the value and importance of the decision of the Settlement Officer, his judgment had been used for a purpose for which it was not admissible in law.

That reliance might possibly have been placed upon it to show that the custom was recognised by the revenue authorities, but the findings of the Settlement Officer could not be incorporated into the evidence in the case and treated as practically conclusive between the parties.

That whether the Assistant Settlement Officer was competent or not to act upon information gathered from the Raja's tehsildar (which was clearly not legal evidence) that statement of the tehsildar was inadmissible in evidence in the Civil Court.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 15th of May 1911 against a decree of D. H. Kingsford, Esq., Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated the 13th of February 1911, reversing a decree of Babu Manmotha Nath Mullik, Munsif of Ranchi, dated the 12th of May 1910.

The Appeal arose out of a suit for partition in which the Defendant, Raghunath, claimed exclusive title under an alleged custom of primogeniture. Whilst the suit was still pending in the first Court, settlement proceedings were also going on in the village in dispute and neighbouring villages, and the Assistant Settlement Officer before whom at attestation the parties urged their respective claims held that a general custom of primogeniture prevailed amongst the Kurmi and Majhi tenure-holders in Nagedi, the village in dispute, and the neighbouring villages, and that Raghunath alone was in possession of the village and that Raghunath alone was to be recorded sole landlord. In the course of his judgment, he observed that the family was a Kurmi family, that he himself had attested more than 10 villages belonging to such Kurmi families and in all of them he had found the law of primogeniture to prevail. How it came to be introduced he could not say but he believed that it had been adopted from the family of the Raja of Silli. He had examined many Kurmis and was satisfied that the eldest son invariably succeeded to the estate of the father. He had asked the tehsildar of the Raja of Silli and had been informed that out of 84 villages under the Raja only in two villages it was found that all the brothers got shares. Even in this village of Nagedi he found that the younger sons got khorposh and not shares. It was alleged that even Kisto Charan, the eldest son of Ram Charan, who had predeceased him had got khorposh. But even that fact did not, in his view, go to prove that the younger sons got shares.

The Court of first instance decreed the suit but on appeal this decision was reversed and the suit was dismissed.

The Plaintiff preferred this Second Appeal.

Babu Kshetra Mohun Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Probodh Chandra Mukerjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof. The parties are descended from a common ancestor Satrughna Mahto who was governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law and died in 1846. He had three sons, Chandi, Nageshwari and Radha Nath, of whom the second Nageshwari succeeded to the estate upon the death of his father. Nageshwari died about the year 1804 and left two sons Ram Charan and Sridhar. Ram Charan died in 1904. He had four sons, Krishna who predeceased him in 1899, Narayan, Guru Charan who died in 1906 and Durga Charan who is the present Plaintiff. The first two Defendants are the sons of Krishna and the next three Defendants are the sons of Narayan. The Court of first instance overruled the contention of the Plaintiff that the parties were subject to the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law but found in his favour that he was entitled to an one-third share in the family estate. This in fact negatived the defence that the family was governed by the rule of primogeniture. Upon appeal, the Judicial Commissioner has reversed the decision of the Court of first instance and dismissed the suit on the ground that the Plaintiff as the youngest son of his father was not entitled to claim any share in the family properties. The substantial question in controversy between the parties, consequently, is whether this family is or is not governed by the rule of primogeniture.

On behalf the Respondents, it has been contended that the question is essentially one of fact and consequently not liable to be examined in Second Appeal. This proposition is in our opinion too broadly formulated. Whether certain events did or did not happen is no doubt a question of fact upon which the decision of the lower Appellate Court is binding upon us: but whether the facts so found do or do not establish the alleged custom is plainly a question of law to be determined by this Court. Besides as will presently be seen, the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner is based upon evidence not admissible in law, and must, on that ground alone, be deemed unsustainable.

When we examine the written statement of the Defendants we find that the alleged custom is set out in the following terms: "It is the custom observed from a long time past in the families of the Plaintiff, the Defendants and other Kurmis of Pergunnah Silli and other Pergunnahs of the provinces of Chotanagpur, that the eldest son becomes proprietor of the entire village and the remaining sons get something for their maintenance according to the family capacity." This statement, it will be observed, does not clearly specify whether the custom alleged is a family custom, or a local custom, or a class custom. Apparently the case for the defence is that the alleged custom falls within all the three categories.

In so far as a family custom is alleged the facts found are not only not sufficient to establish the custom, they do in reality negative it. It was pointed out by the

DURGA CHARAN MAHTO v. RAGHUNATH MAHTO.

Judicial Committee in the case of Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal (1), that if a party rely upon the special custom of a family, to take the succession out of the ordinary Hindu law such custom must be proved to be ancient and continuous. The rule is formulated in substantially the same terms in Hurrpursad v. Sheodyal (2), namely, that custom is a rule which, in a particular family or a particular district, has from long usage obtained the force of law: it must be ancient, certain and reasonable and being in derogation of the general rule of land, must be construed strictly. To similar effect is the statement of Chief Justice Tuidal in Tyson v. Smith (3). "It is an acknowledged principle that to give validity to a custom which has been well described to be an usage, which obtains the force of law and is in truth the binding law within the particular district or at a particular place, of the persons and thing which it concerns, it must be certain, reasonable in itself, commencing from time immemorial and continued without interruption: [see also Vayidinada v. Appu (4)]. Consequently the Defendants must establish that the alleged custom, if it is a family custom, has been continuous. Now in so far as, upon the death of Nageshwari, the property was taken by Ram Charan to the exclusion of his younger brother Satrughna, the circumstance is undoubtedly in favour of the Defendants. But this solitary instance is not by itself sufficient to establish the alleged custom. Sarabjit v. Indarjit (5). It is worthy of note that in the case of Chandika v. Muna (6), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee declined to find in favour of an alleged custom upon evidence which consisted of four modern instances. As pointed out in the case of Gopal v. Hanumunt (7), the alleged custom must be very satisfactorily proved by evidence of particular instances, instances so numerous as to justify the Court in finding in favour of the custom. Here, as we have already said, only one instance consistent with the alleged custom has been established. On the other hand, we meet with instances in which the custom would have been recognised, if it did really exist, but the course of succession was contrary to the alleged custom. It is significant that the Defendants allege that Nageshwari was the eldest son of Satrughna and succeeded as such to his estate; the Courts have found concurrently against their allegation. They now turn round and contend that Nageshwari succeeded because his eldest brother relinquished his claim in his favour, this was not only not their case in the Court of first instance but is contradictory to the case sought to be then established. The cases of Chuttardharee v. Tilakdharee (8) and Jeetnath v. Lokenath (9) to which reference was made in the course of argument are clearly of no assistance to the Respondents. Consequently the alleged custom, if it is a family custom, has not been established.

The question next arises whether the alleged custom, if it be deemed a local or a class custom, has been proved upon the facts found by the Courts below. The Judicial Commissioner has relied principally upon a judgment of an Assistant Settlement Officer delivered in the course of proceedings under Chap. XII of the Chotanagpur Tenancy Act. It has been pointed out that the present suit was instituted on the 18th September 1909 whilst the judgment mentioned was delivered by the Assistant Settlement Officer at the attestation stage on the 5th January 1910, and that the record-of rights in accordance therewith was finally published so late as the 6th March 1911. The fact naturally affects the value and importance of the decision of the settlement authorities. But, apart from this circumstance it is clear that the judgment of the Settlement Officer has been used for a purpose for which it is not admissible under the law. Reliance might possibly have been placed upon the judgment to show that the custom was recognised by the revenue authorities. But the findings of the Settlement Officer cannot be incorporated into the evidence in this case and treated as practically conclusive between the parties. It is further worthy of note that the Settlement Officer relied upon information gathered by him from the tehsildar of the Silli estate. Whether the Settlement Officer was competent to act upon information so obtained, which was clearly not legal evidence, may be a question for consideration, but it is plain that the Judicial Commissioner was in error when he based his decision on this statement of the tehsildar, who had not been examined as a witness in this litigation: It cannot be disputed, therefore that the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner is based upon material not admissible in law. But even if the material is used, how far does it carry the case of the Defendants? The statement of the tehsildar is to the effect that the custom of primogeniture exists in 82 out of 84 villages comprised in the Silli estate under which the parties to the present litigation hold their tenancies. The alleged custom, treated as a local custom, is not prevalent in all the villages, and if admittedly it does not prevail in two of the villages, an inference cannot very well be drawn that it does prevail in the village in question. The conclusion is irresistible that the materials upon which the Judicial Commissioner has based his decree do not justify the inference he has drawn from them.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs thoroughout.

Appeal allowed.

SUIT No. 488 OF 1911.

CHAUDHURI, J. 1913, Heard, 22, July. Judgment, 4, August.	GOURI SUNKER BYAS v. NIADER SING and others.

Hindu Law—Succession to a yati *(religious ascetic)—*Chela and sisya (disciple or pupil of a Hindu religious ascetic or mendicant—Heirs natural and special, under rules of Hindu Law.

A Brahmin who had left his home in early life and settled in Burrabazar in Calcutta where he lived the life of a Hindu mendicant and practised religious austerities but dressed himself in ordinary clothes and deposited monies with firms in Burrabazar on interest and had also acquired property in the Punjab cannot be taken to have renounced the world and was not a yati or a religious ascetic in the sense of the Hindu Law and on his death his natural heirs under the ordinary rules of the Hindu Law are entitled to succeed to his property.

Nor was the Plaintiff who claimed to be the heir of the deceased Brahmin as his chela was his sat-sisya or virtuous pupil in the sense of the Hindu law and was not entitled to succeed against his natural heirs who have proved themselves to be his legal heirs.

The facts are shortly these :—

A Brahmin Pundit of the name of Sobharam better known as Sudarsan Das Sadhu many years ago renounced his family and home in the Punjab when only a boy of ten years. Since then he resided in Calcutta and practised religious austerities, and led the life of a Hindu religious mendicant. In the course of his life he acquired considerable properties and died intestate and unmarried on the 28th of September 1910 aged 80. The Plaintiff claiming to be the chela or religious disciple of the deceased claimed to be the heir of the deceased to the exclusion of his kinsmen and brought this suit alleging that the Defendants had by representing themselves to be the blood relations of the deceased obtained from the District Court of Rohtak a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act to the estate of the deceased and that they were collecting monies left in deposit by him with certain firms in Calcutta and appropriating the same themselves.

The material facts are fully stated in the judgment.

Mr R N. Mitter (with him Mr C. C. Ghose) for the Plaintiff. --A yati is a religious mendicant of the Ramanuja sect. Entrance into a religious order is tantamount to civil death so as to cause a complete severance of his connection with his relations as well as with his property, inheritance to which opens on his renouncing the world by the adoption of a religious order; any property which may be subsequently acquired by persons adopting religious orders passes to their religious relations. Sarkar's Hindu Law, p. 335.

"Such persons broadly may be sub-divided into 3 classes :—"

(a) Naisthika or Brahmochary—Life-long student.

(b) Vanaprastha leaving the house-hold order and becoming a hermit.

(c) Bhiksu, yati or sanyasi, or one who renounces the world or becomes a religious mendicant.

Renunciation must be complete and not nominal. Gharpure's Hindu Law, p. 232, and Mayne, 7th Edn., p. 800.

The case of the Bairagis stands on a different footing. They adopt a religious order and still they buy, sell, marry and have children. They do not leave the "house-hold order." Therefore the case of Bairagis is quite different from ours. Tilak Chander v. Shama Charn (2).

In determining right of succession to property left by deceased head of a religious institution, the only law to be observed is to be found in the custom and practice which must be proved by evidence. Genda Puri v. Chatar Puri (3). Installation or confirmation by the brotherhood was not so important to the title being only ceremonial. Janoki v. Sri Gopal (4).

Gir (5), it has been laid down that "no successor having been nominated by a deceased mahant, at an assembly of mohants of the same sect, the Plaintiff a sanyasin, who had been khas chela of the deceased was installed by them.' It is clear from the authorities that to become a religious ascetic and exclude his heirs from succession to property subsequently acquired, he must bonâ fide retire from all worldly affairs and in fact become as it were dead to the world leaving all the property then vested in him to the legal heirs who succeed to it at once." S. D. A. decisions, for 1852, p. 1084. Wealth of a yati is inherited by his sat-sishya. Yajnavalkya in Asiatic Researches, Vol. XVI, p. 134.

A fellow disciple is by general usage allowed to be heir in default of main claimants. The person who becomes a follower of the spiritual teacher is universally termed a religious brother by the fraternity of devotees. Vyavastha Darpana, p. 215. There is difference between a yati and a sanyasi. Amarkosha, Brahmabarga, Verse. 43.

Mr. S. K. Mullick (with him Mr. S. N. Dutt) for the Defendant contended that the yati referred to in the text of Yajnavalkya is the tridandi sanyasi. Shama Charn's Vyavastha Darpana, Pt. II, p. 314.

This is an exception to the laws of inheritance laid down by the Mitakshara. Mitakshara, Chap. II, sec. 8, Verse 1. An ascetic has been very accurately defined by Shastri Golap Chandra Sarkar's Hindu Law, p 478. The deceased did not qualify himself under that definition. The Hindu Law of Inheritance requires that the sect of yati should be of pure caste and does not provide for any that is not pure. Vyavas ha Darpana, p. 316.

In the goods of Sitaram Das (6), the approved pupil after performing the ceremony becomes like the spiritual guide and does what he does and follows the peculiarity of dress which he observes. Ibid, p. 318. There are two classes of sishyas. (1) Disciple, (2) one who receives mantras without having to work in the temple. He does not succeed. Ibid, p. 319. A sishya in a menial secular employment is an impostor. The position of the Plaintiff is no better. As to rights and duties of ascetic see—Yajnavalkya, Bk. III, Verse 56-65. Mandlik, p. 250. Ramdhan v. Dalmir (7).

Amongst sanyasis no chela has the right to succeed to the property of his deceased guru. Nirunjun v. Padaruth (8), Madho Das v. Kamta Das (9).

An election or recognition by members of the sect is necessary. Ramdhan v. Dalmir (7).

The deceased did not fulfil any of the conditions imposed upon a yati by the shastras and the whole suit moreover is misconceived.

C. A. V.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CHAUDHURI, J.—The Plaintiff alleges that one Pundit Sobharam Sadhu who was also known as Sadhu Sudarsan Das was by caste a Brahmin and by faith and profession a religious mendicant, having renounced his family, relations and original home in Zillah Rohtak in the Punjab when he was only a boy 10 years old; that Pundit Sobharam never married, and permanently resided in Calcutta and practised religious austerities, and down to the time of his death led the life of a religious Hindu mendicant; that he died intestate at the age of 80 or thereabouts, on the 28th September 1910, leaving no issue of his body, no brothers, nephews or sister's son nor any blood relations either on his father's or mother's side. That inasmuch as he was a Sadhu, and had entered into the religious order of Bhikshus or mendicants, his relatives had no right to succeed to him; that he had taken the Plaintiff as his religious disciple or chela when the Plaintiff was only 10 years old, and that the Sadhu thereafter performed the initiation ceremony of the said religious order upon the Plaintiff, who thus became the recognised chela or disciple of the said Sadhu, and that he alone is entitled to succeed to the estate and effects left by the said Sadhu, as his heir according to Hindu Law in preference to the Defendants who, the Plaintiff alleges, have falsely put forward a pretended relationship to the said Sadhu. The Plaintiff further alleged in his plaint that the Sadhu who used to be revered by a large number of people in the town of Calcutta and other places in India was the recepient of various donations of money from various persons in order that the said money might be spent by him in religious and charitable purposes according to his absolute discretion, and in this way the said Sadhu during the whole period of his life as such "Bhikshu or religious mendicant" as aforesaid came to have in his hands, from time to time, considerable sums of money wherewith after defraying the expenses of such religious and charitable works as he considered proper, he used to deposit the surplus for safe custody with several respectable Hindu firms in Calcutta in whom he could trust, such as the firm of Messrs. Juggernath Madan Gopal of No. 70, Cross Street, Calcutta. where he had deposited Rs. 3,000, and that of Messrs. Dhunraj Gunpat Rai of No. 42, Armenian Street, Calcutta, with whom he had deposited about Rs. 2,600.

The Plaintiff further alleges that the Defendants on coming to learn of the death of the said Sadhu in Calcutta and having discovered that he had left some money in deposit with certain Hindu firms in Calcutta, began to pretend as aforesaid to be the distant kinsmen of the deceased Sadhu, and surreptitiously and without any notice or intimation to the Plaintiff applied for and fraudulently obtained a certificate under the Succession Certificate Act from the Court of the District Judge of Rohtak to the estate of the said deceased, and on the strength of such certificate, were trying to realise and appropriate the said sums of money. He therefore prayed that it might be declared that the Plaintiff was the sole heir under Hindu Law of the said Sadhu and entitled to his estate and effects, and that the succession certificate should be annulled by this Court, for an enquiry for the ascertainment of the assets which the said deceased died possessed of, and for other relief.

The first question therefore is as to whether the deceased was a religious mendicant or a yati, and whether the Plaintiff as his chela was entitled to succeed to him.

There is no doubt about the law on this subject. According to the text in Yajnavalkya the heirs of a hermit, of an ascetic, and of a professed student, are in their order, the preceptor, the virtuous pupil, and the spiritual brother and associate in holiness. Yajnavalkya II, 138.

The commentary on the text is, that the virtuous pupil, sat sishya, takes the property of a yati or ascetic. The virtuous pupil, again, is one who is assiduous in the study of theology, in retaining the holy science and in practising its ordinances.

The next question that I have to decide, is, is the Plaintiff the sisya and sat-sisya of the deceased. The text quoted above is the only text relating to succession to the property of a yati and subsequent commentaries and works on Hindu Law have dealt with this text alone in dealing with the matter. Mayne in his Hindu Law, p. 816, 7th edition, para. 603, say this:—

"One who has entered into an order of devotion is also excluded from inheritance, since he has of his own accord abandoned all earthly interests. The persons who are excluded on this ground come under three heads, viz, the Vanaprasatha, or hermit; the sanyasi or yati, or ascetic; and the Brahmachari, or perpetual religious student. In order to bring a person under these heads, it is necessary to show an absolute abandonment by them of all secular property, and a complete and final withdrawal from earthly affairs."

The Plaintiff alleges, as I have mentioned, that the Sadhu left his house when he was 10 years old, and, as it is stated, that he gave up his home and all his earthly connection with his family; that he came without any money, but that he had left a fairly large sum of money in Calcutta, is not disputed. Then how did he make this money. If he brought it from his house it does not shew complete abandonment of all earthly interest. If he made it in Calcutta, how did he make it? The Plaintiff alleges in the plaint that he received large sums of money from different parts of India, which were entrusted to him for charitable purposes, and this is the residue left over. There is absolutely no evidence that he ever received money in this way, and therefore I cannot but hold that he earned this money while in Calcutta. The Plaintiff gives no explanation how he made it. That he left Rohtak and lived in the very heart of a large commercial town, in Burra Bazar, shows that he had no intention of taking the sanyas and that he rather profitably employed his time, when he was living in Burra Bazar. It is ridiculous to ask me to hold that a person of this character satisfies the description of a "yati," as it is contained in the Hindu law books. The Plaintiff claims to succeed on an exceptional rule of succession, and he must shew that the requirements have been fulfilled. It has been rather poetically and unconvincingly argued that in the old days people were "giants" and that the present generation is a generation of "pigmies" and therefore a modern yati need not satisfy the ancient standard. I am unable to hold that in interpreting this particular text of the Hindu Law the old standard should be lowered. It must be shewn that the person was a "yati" according to its accepted meaning. The text has been strictly construed in different Courts in India. The Madras Court has refused to hold that it applies to Sudras because a yati belongs to an asram to which only the twice-born class is admitted, Dharmapuram v. Virapandiyam (1).

Witnesses have said that the deceased was a religious Brahmin; that he was not a mendicant in the sense that he begged and lived upon what he obtained by begging; that he practised his religion in a small room in the 3rd story of Monohar

(1) I. L. R. 22 Mad. 302 (1898).

GOURI SUNKER BYAS v. NIADER SING.

Dass's Kotra, which is a very populous quarter inhabited by a large number of Marwari merchants. He is respectfully spoken of by some of the witnesses as a 'Mahatma," some called him a "Babaji." He appears to have been a Brahmin, who lived in Burra Bazar and earned money as such, that is to say by performing, from the evidence that has been given although slender, "paths and poojas" in different places.

The Plaintiff admitted that the Sadhu had not given up his sacred thread, had not taken the danda, and did not wear sanayasi's clothes, as he said he was a Ramanuja Vaisnab, and according to the custom amongst Vaisnabs of this class it was not necessary to give up the sacred thread and take the danda, although they might become dandis. He wore leather shoes and dressed himself in the ordinary way, and did not dress himself in Gerooa or yellow clothes.

I am not satisfied, that there is any ground for holding that he was a yati. The plaint distinctly made him out to be a religious mendicant, which has not been proved.

The next question is has the Plaintiff shown that he is a sisya. He says he was taken as a chela when he was 10 years old. That he was taken as a sisya is nowhere stated in the plaint. It is merely stated therein that he was taken into the order, some time later, by which I understand he is referring to the order of a religious mendicant. Evidence has been given that he lives with his mother and brother. I entirely disbelieve the Plaintiff when he says that he has no connection with them, and does not live with them and does not even know where they live, although they live in Calcutta. Persons in the employ of his landlord have produced books and have spoken to having realized rent from him personally for the rooms which they stated he occupied with his mother and brother. I accept their evidence as true.

About his initiation, he is the only witness with the exception of a person of the name of Sugan Chand and another, both of whom, I consider absolutely untrustworthy witnesses. I disbelieve Sugan Chand's statements altogether without any hesitation. He was asked about certain allegations, which he had made in an affidavit, and he said that he knew nothing about them. If those statements were untrue he knowingly made them to support the Plaintiff's case. If true his present statements are untrue.

It is impossible to place any reliance upon him. I considered his conduct so serious, that at one time I thought that proceedings ought to be taken against him. The other witness was a person of the name of Gobind Ram Sett who spoke to the Plaintiff being a sisya; that he knew Sobharam Sadhu; he introduced himself as a jeweller who used to live in Monohar Dass's Kotra. I happened to know this man and I mentioned to learned Counsel on both sides what I knew about him. Learned Counsel for the Plaintiff then stated that he did not intend to rely on this man at all. Witnesses of this kind having been called shows that there are certain influences at work; some persons more influential than the Plaintiff appear to have been assisting him in this case. It lends support to the suggestion that Kanhai Lall has been engineering the case of the Plaintiff.

I hold that there is no reliable evidence that this man was ever taken as a sisya by Sobharam. He describes himself as a chela in the plaint. There is clear distinc-

NOTES.

Criminal Sessions.

The last Criminal Sessions of the year commences its sittings from date, Mr. Justice Fletcher presiding.

The Late Mr. Justice Pigot.

We regret to have to notice the death of the late Mr. Justice Pigot of the Calcutta High Court. He served on the Bench from May 1884 to March 1896. He was a barrister and an advocate of the Bombay High Court before he came to Calcutta as a Judge. He was regarded as a very sound judge and his judgments command great respect to this day.

The Lord Chief Justice of England.

The appointment of Sir Rufas Isaacs as the Lord Chief Justice of England and the chorus of approval with which the appointment has been hailed on all hands show how people's minds have widened and the out-look of things have changed within comparatively recent times. The present Lord Chief Justice is the first Lord Chief Justice of England of Jewish extraction. It is no doubt true that we have in our generation seen a statesman of the Jewish race attaining the position of the leader of the House of Commons and the Prime Minister of England. He too was, no doubt, a man of great talent. But his advancement was brought about by exigencies of party politics and in no small degree through his personal and political influence over the aristocracy and the royalty.

But the domain of law has always been more democratic. Merit and ability find a readier recognition in the legal profession than perhaps in any other sphere of life. The prejudice against the Jewish people in the days of Sir George Jessel was much stronger than it is to-day. Still he rapidly rose to the position of the Master of the Rolls and was universally admitted to be the most brilliant judge who ever sat on the English Bench. Sir Rufus Isaacs has also by sheer merit risen from a position of comparative insignificance to that of the highest judicial rank amongst the judges of England. He comes from the family of a fruit merchant and but for his talent, industry and perseverance the world would have never heard of him. He has been a brilliant advocate but he has never been dramatic in his advocacy. Nor has he been a technical lawyer. Clearness and perspicuity in the presentation of the law and facts and his power of focussing all the available light on the most favourable aspects of his case have been the keynote of his remarkable career at the Bar. There has seldom been a counsel who has been able to handle witnesses better or get more out of them from cross-examination. As a judge of facts and a sound exponent of law and justice he is expected to take the shine out of his many illustrious predecessors. He is only 53 years of age and many expect that he will be amongst the Lord Chief Justices of England what Sir George Jessel was amongst the Masters of Rolls.

The Attorney-General and law officers.

The present Attorney General Sir John Simon will be remembered by some members of the Calcutta Bar as their contemporary at Oxford. His rise in the profession and more particularly in the House of Commons has been almost unprecedented, so far as the career of a member of the Bar is concerned. He too belongs to the gifted Jewish race. He was called to the Bar in 1899. Although it cannot be questioned that his preferment to the position of the Attorney-General is due chiefly to his superior talent and merit, yet looking at the appointment from the point of view of a lawyer one cannot deny that the Government in conferring on him the office has been more influenced by political than legal considerations. Mr. Buckmaster, K. C., who succeeds Sir John Simon as Solicitor General is one of the most distinguished leaders of the Chancery Bar and is a lawyer of a very superior order. But he is not likely to make such an efficient party leader as Sir John Simon. Attorney-Generals have not before Sir Rufus Isaacs, as a rule, occupied the position of Cabinet Ministers. The recent tendency is to include the Attorney-General in the Cabinet. This is bound to have the effect of giving the appointment a more political complexion than before. From the public point of view it would be surely more desirable if the position of the Attorney-General is filled by the most eminent lawyer available. Such men would be in a position to give independent advice to Government, which does at times serve to safeguard public and personal liberty more than the professed liberalism of party leaders.

Peripatetic Privy Council.

We publish in another column Lord Haldane's speech at the London University about the future of the Privy Council as an Imperial Court of Appeal for the Empire. We have no objection to the amalgamation of the Judicial Committees of the House of Lords and the Privy Council. But the prospects of a peripatetic Privy Council does not cheer us at all. It is but natural that the self-governing Colonies do not desire that vital questions affecting their rights and liberties should be adjudicated upon by English Judges sitting in Westminister or Downing Street. But people in India prize the right of appeal to the Judicial Committee because they expect that English Judges of the highest rank and free from all local prejudice would bring to bear a fresh mind in the case and decide according to the most approved principles of English Justice. If Judges of indifferent merit are sent out to India to hear the appeals to the King in Council, they would lose confidence in such appeals. Besides that they would be deprived of the services of the best talents of the English Bar. So we join our English contemporary of the Law Journal in condemning the proposal.

The English Law Journal says :—

Lord Haldane appears to have been 'thinking aloud' at an educational function at University College, where he adumbrated a remarkable scheme for the future hearing of Colonial appeals, which the Times neatly sums up in its heading, 'An Imperial Assize.' The Lord Chancellor regards the House of Lords, as a judicial as well as a political chamber, as being in articulo mortis. What is to take its place? He says 'the great link of the Empire, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council—just as it has been proposed for Irish disputes in the Home Rule Bill. But the work will be far too great for the Judicial Committee as it is at present constituted; so, as the King is 'not a local institution but an Imperial institution,' so his Privy Council ought to be regarded as an imperial body, and there is no reason why it should not be as much localised in the dominions as it is localised in London at home. That way, it seems we shall get a Court which 'will not offend against the canon which the self-governing Dominions desire to set up—that their Supreme Court of Appeal shall not be outside themselves. But that does not entirely solve the problem. Having reduced the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to an abstraction, to an institution without local habitation, there is no reason, it is said, why it should not sit in more than one division, so that it need not be sitting always in the same place but might move, if necessary, from time to time about the Empire. 'What more easy than to export some members from London from the Judicial Committee to go and sit as the King's Imperial Privy Council in Canada?' That is the meaning of the 'Imperial Assize.' It rather takes one's breath away. But we are glad to see that Lord Haldane does not commit himself to the scheme.' We rather hope that he does not mean it.

Reduction of sentences.

We noticed in our last issue the principles enunciated by the new Lord Chief Justice of England regarding the reduction of sentences on appeal. The English Law Journal contains in its last issue a more detailed account of the cases in which the principle was given effect to.

The precedent established last week in Rex v John Martin (ante p 621) has been followed this week by the Court of Criminal Appeal in a number of appeals. In that case, as was pointed out in this column, the Lord Chief Justice adopted a principle not formerly acted upon generally by the Court, namely that there should be, within reasonable limits, a certain proportion between length of sentence and value of goods stolen in cases of larceny irrespective of the prisoner's record, and that sentences which greatly exceed this proportion ought to be reduced upon appeal. In Rex v James Connor (November 3) the prisoner had been sentenced at the West Riding of Yorkshire Quarter Sessions to 18 months' hard labour for stealing a pair of boots; he had been convicted twenty times since 1888, and seven of those convictions were for larceny. When the present crime was committed he had been only four days out of prison. Such a record has hitherto been generally considered by judges as requiring a sentence of penal servitude, but the Court, applying the test of value, reduced the sentence to nine months' hard labour. Again, in Rex v John James McKone, a sentence of three years' penal servitude passed at Sheffield Sessions after a conviction for receiving stolen goods—an offence usually treated with severity because it assists burglars to follow their avocation—was for similar reasons reduced to one of twelve months' hard labour. And in Rex v Charles Sanders, where the prisoner had received a sentence of nine years' penal servitude at Barnstaple Quarter Sessions, for obtaining goods by false pretences, the sentence was reduced to one of three years. Here, however, no novel principle was required, since, although the prisoner was an old offender, he had been living an honest life for the two years immediately preceding the crime—a fact which has already in several cases been held sufficient to justify a reduction of sentence (Rex v. John Hill, 2 Cr App. R 74; Rex v. Cullen, 4 Cr. App. R. 7; Rex v. Benjamin Smith, 4 Cr. App. R. 48).

We are glad to notice that the principle is already being acted upon in the Calcutta High Court.

LORD HALDANE ON THE FUTURE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE.

He understood the lecturer would deal with the judicial arrangements of the supreme tribunals of the Empire, and with the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. That was a body which was attracting more and more attention, and which he ventured to predict would attract still more. As some of them knew, appeals from England, Scotland, and Ireland went at present to the House of Lords. If a Bill of which they read a good deal in the newspapers were passed, then appeals from Ireland would go, like those from the Dominions, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council instead of the House of Lords in future. The other day when he was in Canada, he was struck with the feeling among those best competent to give an authoritative opinion that, if any change took place, what they did not want was to have to appeal to some new Court outside the Dominion It was easy to talk about an Imperial Court of Appeal, but not easy to define it in a way which did not trench on the just claims of the Dominions across the seas to be self contained What they said to him was that they valued the appeal to the King in Council very much, and did not want to interfere with that; but if anything was to be done to alter the judicial arrangements, they hoped the foundation of that appeal and the form of that Court would not be varied. That was probably the observation which every one of the self-governing Dominions would make. It meant they did not want to appeal to any Court outside themselves, but they regarded the King in Privy Council, advised by the Judicial Committee of that Privy Council, as something not outside themselves. Both parties of the State were agreed that the Second Chamber, as it existed at the present time, must be reformed and in a fashion which would make it impossible for it to be the supreme Appellate Court of England, Scotland and Ireland, and if that came they would have to find a new Appellate Court, What could that Court be? He was not speaking for anybody but himself, and was not committing even himself, but he thought they would find it would work out so that presently the great link of the Empire which the judicial functions of the King in his Council represented would be further developed and the appeals, whether from countries forming part of the King's Dominions outside these islands or from these islands themselves, would be to the King in Council, as it had been proposed with regard to Irish appeals in the Home Rule Bill.

AN ITINERANT COURT.

That would involve certain changes The change would be one of form rather than of substance. All appeals would be to the King in Council, and would be heard by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which committee, instead of sitting in one division as to-day, might sit in several divisions, and as the King was president in each of his dominions represented by his Ministers, and as the Privy Council was an Imperial body containing the chief justices and the most distinguished persons in the Empire, they had at once a Court which did not offend against the canon which self-governing Dominions set up, that the supreme court should not be outside themselves. The Privy Council was a real Imperial body, and if it could sit in more divisions than one it would solve a problem which had been vexing the minds of a good many statesmen from time to time Supposing, for instance, they had to deal with a question of boundary in Canada, what would be more easy than to export some members from London to go and sit as the King's Imperial Privy Council Committee in Canada, and deal with the thing on the spot? They might call in the assistance of some distinguished member just as the Privy Council in London had been strengthened by the assistance of eminent judicial personages from the Dominions The Lord Chief Justice of the Union of South Africa had been sitting in the House of Lords hearing Scotch appeals, and had been very useful owing to his knowledge of the Roman Dutch law. They had in existence a most valuable instrument, which, with very little development, would give one of the greatest tribunals and one of the most unifying influences for holding together the Empire which it was possible to conceive. A reform which transferred the hearing of all the supreme appeals of the various Dominions of the King to the King in Council, and enabled the Judicial Committee of that Council to sit in more than one division, moving about through the Empire, would be a great step in the solution of the problem of Imperial unification.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 539—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 42.

RAMADOS v. HANUMANTHA, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 364.

The Plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was the rightful Dharmakarta of the plaint temple the lands belonging to which were in the actual possession of tenants and for reinstatement in the office and also for an injunction restraining the Defendants who were in possession of the office from interfereing with him in that office. The Plaintiff's father had been dismissed from the office and thereafter on a suit by one of the Defendants and another under sec. 539, C. P. C., a scheme of management was framed under which the Defendants were appointed trustees of the temple. The questions for determination were among others—Is the suit maintainable without a prayer for possession of the property belonging to the temple?

Can the Plaintiff bring this suit in view of the scheme framed under sec. 539, C. P. C.?

Held—That assuming that the consequential relief referred to in sec. 43, Specific Relief Act, is a relief against the Defendants in the suit and not against third parties the Defendants could not give the Plaintiff physical possession of the temple property as the physical property was outstanding in the tenants and therefore the proviso to sec. 42 was no bar to the present suit.

That the present suit being one to enfore a private right the provisions of sec. 539 were not applicable to it and the scheme previously framed was no bar to the suit.

Promissory note.

KARUPPAPPA v. BAVA MOIDEEN, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 370.

The Plaintiff sued on the following document—"Promissory note executed in favour of—In the matter of the purchase of piece goods by me from your shop on this date, the sum found due by me as per list is Rs. 600, which sum I promise to you or to your order on demand with interest at 1¼ per cent."

The document was executed in Mysore to which was affixed a one anna stamp of the native state of Mysore in favour of one M who endorsed it to the Plaintiff in British India without affixing a British one anna stamp to it.

Held—That it is no doubt true that the question whether an instrument is a promissory note or not should be judged by the words used and that the instrument must contain in words an unconditional undertaking to pay a sum of money and it is not enough that the substantial effect of the instrument should be to make the executant liable to pay a sum of money but the instrument in question was a promissory note and it was not duly stamped as soon as it came into British India into the hands of the Plaintiff's transferor.

HANUMANTU PANTULU v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 373.

Certain Inam lands were acquired by the Government for a Municipality. The Plaintiff's suit was for a declaration that the Government was not entitled to levy ground-rent for the lands in his occupation and for the recovery of the amount collected from him by the Government as a ground-rent. It was contended that the Municipality acquired by the Land Acquisition proceedings the Inam right which belonged to the original owners of the land and that by successive sales the Plaintiff owned that right and the Government was entitled only to quitment ss from the Inamdar.

Held—That it was the Government that acquired the land and the title of the Municipality was derived from Government. When the land became vested in Government it became ordinary Government land liable to assessment in the hands of any person who might afterwards become the occupier.

Malicious prosecution, suit for—Onus of proof.

DYDINADIER v. KRISHNASWAMI IYER, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 375.

In a suit for malicious prosecution it is not on the Defendant to show that there was reasonable and probable cause but on the Plaintiff to prove its absence.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 6, r. 17—Amendment of plaint—Maintainability of suit.

SEVUGAN CHETTY v. KRISHNA AIYANGAR, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 378

The Plaintiff alleged that the Defendants were his servants on a monthly pay and had charge of his shop and he claimed that the accounts kept by them in regard to the business were his property and he sued to recover these accounts.

Before any evidence was recorded the Plaintiff put in a petition for amendment of the plaint. It did not allege any new facts but merely prayed that an additional relief might be granted on the facts stated in the original plaint.

Held—That the suit was maintainable and the petition for amendment of plaint could be granted under Or. 6, r. 17.

Karam Kas Tenure—South Malabar.

ACHUTHAN MENON v. V. C. SANKARA NAIR, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 380

The holder of a Karam kas tenure in South Malabar has only the permanent right of cultivation but has no right of alienation.

Limitation.

ANANT v. NARAYANARAZU, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 383.

The attachment of a person's property as if it belonged to another gives the owner a cause of action for a declaratory suit and the sale held in consequence of that attachment is a fresh invasion of the owner's rights and gives a fresh cause of action

PAKRICHI v. KUNHACHA, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 385.

A girl when married passes over to her husband's family under the Mahomedan law and there is no obligation on the members of her natural family to [illegible] her after her marriage even if she is divorced.

A gift made to the husband of a Mopla girl governed by the Mahomedan law does not become void even after the divorce of the girl and the property does not revert to the donor.

Review.

CHALMER'S NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS RELATING TO BRITISH INDIA. Fourth edition. By A. Eggar, Esq., B. A., Bar-at-Law. Advocate, Calcutta High Court. Messrs. Thacker, Spink & Co., Publishers, Calcutta.

The present Editor has changed the arrangement of the work. He gives the Indian Act XXVI of 1881 at the beginning without any annotation. Then he proceeds to classify the provisions of the Act under different headings such as "consideration," 'acceptance,' 'payment' &c. Under each of such headings the Indian law as also the English law are stated by reference to the Statutes and also the case-law. We have gone through some of the chapters and find the law accurately stated. This arrangement has no doubt its advantages inasmuch as it gives a comprehensive view of the general law as to 'consideration' and the like, all at a glance. But it has its drawbacks also. It is inconvenient for reference to the other provisions of the law which may have a direct or indirect bearing on the question of consideration or acceptance.

Notes of Cases.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Greenlands, "Ld." v. Wilmshurst & others. Before LORDS JUSTICES VAUGHAN WILLIAMS AND HAMILTON, AND MR. JUSTICE BRAY. 18th July 1913.

Libel—Qualified privilege and privileged occasion—Communications made as a matter of social or moral duty would be privileged but not communications made in self-interest or for profit.

This was an application by way of appeal. Messrs. Greenlands, Ld. sued for damages for libel and slander. The Defendants were the London Association for the Protection of Trade, their Secretary Mr. Hadwen and their correspondent Mr. Wilmshurst. A member of the said Association inquired of the Association as to the credit of the Plaintiffs. The secretary replied as follows:—

Greenlands, Ld. are in a large way of business. Hold very considerable stocks, and their turnover is extensive, but there are heavy debentures charged on their assets which is considered out of proportion to the break-up value of the assets. However, for such credit as your figures, £20 to £30, they are considered a fair trade risk.

The Court below held that the occasion was not privileged, and found malice against the secretary and awarded heavy damages against the Association and the secretary. On the present appeal a re-trial was ordered. In the course of his judgment Lord Justice Vaughan Williams said:—

Qualified privilege, Mr. Odgers, in his well-known book on Libel and Slander, grouped under five heads: but it was only heads (1) and (2) which he proposed to deal with. "(1) Where it is the duty of the Defendant to make a communication to another person who has an interest in the subject-matter of the communication or some duty in connexion with it. (2) Where the Defendant has an interest in the subject-matter of the communication, and the person to whom the communication is made has a corresponding interest or some duty in connexion with the matter." Mr. Odgers divided head (1) into two parts—(a) statements made in answer to inquiry; (b) statements not in answer to previous inquiry. The libel here complained of, whether regarded as written and published by Wilmshurst or regarded as written and published by the Trade Association and Hadwen, or both by Wilmshurst and the other Defendants, seemed to have been written in answer to respective inquiries made to the Trade Protection Association, the one with which he was dealing being the inquiry of Shand Kydd to the group of persons calling themselves the London Association; the other being the inquiry, or instruction to inquire, made of or to Wilmshurst by the London Association. Head (2), that is to say, where the Defendant had an interest in the subject-matter of the communication, and the person to whom the communication was made had a corresponding interest or some duty in connexion with the matter, was thus applied by Lord Esher, Master of the Rolls, in Hunt v. Great Northern Railway (1891, 2 Q. B., 189):—"The occasion had arisen if the communication was of such a nature that it could be fairly said that those who made it had an interest in making such a communication, and those to whom it was made had a corresponding interest in having it made to them. When those two things co-exist the occasion is a privileged one, and the question whether it was or was not misused is an entirely different one."

The association was merely an association of individuals who called themselves members, and who were elected, or rather, in fact, nominated by the secretary. The election was by the secretary's submitting to the committee of management the name of candidates for enrolment of members for their approval or disapproval at an ordinary meeting of the committee of management, and each member had to pay an annual subscription. One of the objects of the Association was the making of private inquiries as to the actions, respectability, and trustworthiness of individuals and firms, and another was the detection and exposure of swindlers.

He doubted very much whether the publication of information obtained from a person who was paid for the information he supplied was information given on a privileged occasion. The authority which was relied on as specifically dealing with that point was Waller v. Loch (7 Q. B. D., 619). Sir George Jessel, Master of the Rolls, in delivering judgment, said on page 621:—"According to Harrison v. Bush (5 E. and B., 344) a communication which a person makes bonâ fide in discharge of a moral or social duty of imperfect obligation is privileged," and later, on the same page, said:—"It is not necessary in all cases that the information should be given in answer to an inquiry. In Davies v. Snead (L. R 5 Q. B., 608), Mr. Justice Blackburn says that 'where a person is so situated that it becomes right in the interest of society that he should tell to a third person certain facts, then, if he bonâ fide and without malice does tell them, it is a privileged communication.' Now if the secretary believed that the lady to whom he gave the information in this case was making the inquiry to learn whether the Plaintiff was deserving of assistance with a view to relieving her or inducing other persons to relieve her, then he was discharging a moral or social duty in answering the inquiry, and was entitled to answer it."

Justice Blackburn in Davies v. Snead said:—"If a person who is thinking of dealing with another in any matter of business asks a question about his character from some one who has means of knowledge, it is for the interests of society that the question should be answered, and, if answered bonâ fide and without malice the answer is a privileged communication."

He doubted if the so-called Association or Hadwen were discharging a moral or social duty in obtaining and giving information which was got for the Association or a member of it at a price for the service by Wilmshurst.

There must be some limit to the proposition that the publication of information thus obtained by payment to a stranger was a publication on a privileged occasion, and that the publication was privileged unless the Plaintiff proved express malice of the Defendant. It could clearly not be said, in his opinion, that the occasion would be privileged if the Defendant obtained the information by the employment of a paid detective, who, independently of his duty arising from his employment as a detective, would owe no duty to Defendant such as that which was owed by the officers of the Charity Organization Society to the Society, or by servants to their masters, whether in private service or in public service—e.g., the servants of a railway company.

His Lordship Vaughan Williams, L. J., thought that the obtaining of information from Wilmshurst, even though the fee was small, fell within the principle of Lord Macnaghten's observations. But it should not be forgotten that trading for self-interest was the keynote that ran through the whole of the passage.

The members of the trade society, although they did, in his opinion, sell information at a price, and make a profit, yet were not traders in the ordinary sense of the word. They were all of them men of a commercial class accustomed to give credit, who joined together to get the characters, presumably of their would-be customers, and they conducted the business of getting these characters in such a manner that the payments they received from the subscribers, whom they called members, were such as to leave them yearly with a considerable profit balance, which from time to time they invested.' He did not think that the communications made as to the characters and pecuniary position of would-be customers were made in legitimate self-defence, or [fr]om a bonâ fide sense of duty. The interests considered were the interests of a class, and the information which they gave in return for the members' subscription was, in his opinion, not obtained cautiously and discreetly when they got it from Wilmshurst, who was not a servant or a confidential agent.

Taking the view which he had expressed, it [w]ould follow primâ facie that the appeal should [b]e dismissed, and the judgment of the Lord Chief [J]ustice affirmed. But since Several Defendants [h]ad conducted their case so as to be jointly liable separate judgmen s ought not to have been passed. And the damages also were excessive and there should be re-trial.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM THE CHIEF COURT OF PUNJAB.]

THE LORD CHANCELLOR. LORD MOULTON. LORD SHAW. 1913, October.	BIR BHAN, Appellant, v. THE KING-EMPEROR, Respondent.

Leave to appeal in criminal cases when granted.

This was an application for special leave to appeal.

The Petitioner was convicted under sec. 471 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of 5,000 rupees. The charge against him was that he fraudulently or dishonestly used as genuine an order for refund of Octroi duty which he knew or had reason to believe to be a forged document and thereby obtained a sum of money from the Municipal Fund of Sialkot, to which he was not entitled.

The Petitioner was the managing member of a joint Hindu family of which the adult members were Kripa Ram, Hira Lal and Joi Chand. The said joint family carried on the business of Corn Merchants under the name and style of a firm called Behari Lal Bir Bhan. As Behari Lal the Petitioner's father was dead, the said firm was popularly known by the name of Bir Bhan alone. The business of the firm was conducted by the several members of the joint family as well as by a manager Bhagwan Das and a servant Bishan Chand.

The firm entered into a Contract with the Commissariat Department at Sialkot to supply them with 4,600 maunds of barley and 7,500 maunds of gram from June to September 1911 but in accordance with the Departmental Regulations the Contract was actually made out in the name of the Petitioner alone.

In respect of the above Contract supply, orders for 400 maunds of barley and 492 maunds of grain were issued and the quantities of grain were supplied to the Store-keeper Supply and Transport Corps at Sialkot. In order to obtain refund of Octroi duty paid in respect of the said quantities of grain application was made to the Supply and Transport Corps Office at Sialkot which forwarded it to the office of the said Store-keeper and finally Certificates or Orders for the refund of Octroi in respect of 400 maunds of barley and 492 maunds of grain were issued. The figures in the said Orders were altered into 1,400 and 2,492 by prefixing the figures "1" and "2" to the quantities specified therein. The charge against the Petitioner was that he fraudulently or dishonestly used the said forged Orders for refund of Octroi knowing or having reason to believe that the said Orders were forged.

The Petitioner's defence was that there was absolutely no evidence on the record to show, first, that the application for refund was signed or presented or made by the Petitioner; second, that he had any knowledge of the said application for refund: third, that he knew or had reason to believe that the said Order for refund had been altered by any person or that it was a forged document; fourth, that he received the said order for refund or that it was received by some other person within his knowledge; fifth, that he received any money under the forged Order for refund or that some other person received the money thereunder.

The Petitioner was tried by the Sessions Judge at Sialkot with two Assessors for offences under secs. 420 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code. The case for the prosecution was that your Petitioner and no other member of the said firm had perpetrated the fraud. The said Sessions Judge delivered his judgment on the 25th June 1912. Agreeing with the Assessors he found the Petitioner guilty of both offences and sentenced him to a concurrent sentence already stated above.

The Petitioner appealed against the said conviction and sentence to the Chief Court of the Punjab which delivered its judgment on the 3rd August 1912. The learned Judge (G. C. Beadon, J.) set aside the conviction under sec. 420 and allowed the appeal to that extent but affirmed the conviction and sentence under sec. 471 of the Indian Penal Code.

The Petitioner submitted that there has been a great violation of the principles of natural justice and that substantial and grave injustice has been done to him and prayed for special leave.

Mr. DeGruyther (with him Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé).—This is an unusual application because it is an application to Appeal to His Majesty in Council in a criminal matter. We say there is no evidence whatever in this case as against the Appellant. What he has been convicted of is really this. A fraud had been perpetrated for or on behalf of a firm consisting of several members, who were all taking an active part in the management of the firm and there is nothing whatever to connect the head of the firm, the present Appellant, with the actual commission of the offences, and he really has been charged with and convicted of criminal liability and responsibility for the fraud because he is the head member of the firm and the amount which was obtained by fraud had been credited in the firm's books. May I very shortly state what the real point is?

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—There have been two trials.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—There has been one trial and an Appeal.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—There have been two hearings on this point.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—So there is in every criminal case in India There is first the hearing before the Sessions Judge and after he has delivered his Judgment there is an Appeal to the High Court.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—What you say is that the learned Judges who disposed of the case ought to have held that there was no evidence.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—That is so, my lord.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—But there was a great deal of evidence against other people.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—There is no doubt that a fraud had been perpetrated.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—And therefore the only question was the knowledge, or want of knowledge of your client. The King in Council does not review criminal proceedings as a rule; it is only in the most exceptional cases that he does. He does not sit as a Court of Appeal to hear cases of error; still less does he review the weight of evidence. He does not even review the question of whether there ought to have been a finding that here was no evidence, so long as the natural forms of justice have not been violated or some gross scandal occurred. It is difficult for you to bring a case such as you have described within the extremely limited category of cases in which His Majesty gives leave to Appeal.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—What I am going to urge before your Lordships is this, that, in fact, there is no evidence, and, therefore, there was a miscarriage of justice; in other words, that there was no evidence at all to go to the Jury on which they could come to the conclusion that the Defendant was guilty. I submit that a violation of those forms would be a miscarriage of justice and would bring this case within the Rule.

[LORD MOULTON.—The sums here were large. Was not the Court entitled, I will not say apart from evidence, to give great weight to inferences that the principal partner must have known it?]

Mr. DeGruyther.—The sum is trifling in this case: it is Rs. 200.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—On the principle you have put, it comes to this: You say there is no evidence.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—Yes, my Lord.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—That is not enough, because the Court may have thought there was enough evidence and have made a mistake. We do not review mistakes. We only review gross violations of the natural principles of justice.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—Would it not show a miscarriage of justice if the facts are as I say? The point is really this. The charge is in connection with obtaining a refund of octroi duty. The firm were contractors with the Indian Commissariat Department and the Supply and Transport Department and they obtained a refund of octroi duty which they were entitled to on goods supplied for the use of the Government. An application was made to the Supply Department for the issue of a certificate of the quantity supplied to the Government, and the certificate bears an alteration and is forged in regard to the quantity. With regard to the application for the refund made to the Supply Department and the issue of the certificate by the Supply Department certain witnesses were called from the Supply Department and every one of them came into Court and said: I cannot say which member of the firm it was. All the members of the firm carried on this business and one or other of them at one time or another came and made this application.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR: They all agreed that the firm made it. The only question was whether the senior partner knew of it, and the Court held that he did know].

Mr DeGruyther: The Court has held that the senior partner committed the offence without reference to the other partners. May I read one passage in the judgment to your Lordships. The judgment says: "In the present case the Prosecution avers that the accused and no other member of the firm perpetrated these frauds."

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR: That is the charge and the Court heard it and the Court held that there was evidence that the agents of the principal did it and they came to the conclusion on the evidence that the principal partner did it. You say there was not enough evidence. There may have been an error, but this is not a Court of Appeal to review on the ground of error.]

Mr. DeGruyther: May I just indicate to your Lordships what the point is. The first point is in connection with the application. There is no proof whatever that the head of the firm either signed it or knew of it.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—The Court has held that there was knowledge.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—They never held that there was; they inferred that he must have known.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—Sitting as a tribunal of fact, they found that he did know it. They had the witnesses before them and he did not go into the box.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—No; my Lord. There is no provision made for that in India.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—Evidence was called. Were people in his own employment called?]

Mr. DeGruyther.—The only person in his employment who was called was his Manager, but his Manager was called for the purpose of denying that he committed the offence himself, but even his Manager does not prove that any one of the applications was in the handwriting of the accused or that he made them. That is one part of the fraud.

[LORD MOULTON.—Did the accused call no evidence?]

Mr. DeGruyther.—No, my Lord.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—That in itself, is a circumstance which the Tribunal may have attached importance to. You may say that this finding was, in your opinion, against the weight of evidence, but you cannot say that there was no evidence before the Court.]

Mr. DeGruyther.—What there was before the Court consisted of three facts: one was that this man was head of the firm; the second was that, being the head of the firm, the whole of the proceedings were nominally in his name, and the third was that the amount which had been received from the Octroi Department was credited in their books of account, but not in the handwriting of the accused, and there is nothing to connect the accused with it. There is no proof that he applied for the certificate to the Transport Department. There is no proof that when he went to the Municipal Authorities and asked for a refund of this money, that he himself did anything. The Municipal Authorities say that sometimes it was one member of the firm and sometimes another member of the firm. They were all entitled to ask for the refund. Can it be said that there is any evidence whatever that the accused, and no member of the firm, perpetrated these frauds?

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—I can see that there was room for the Court to draw an inference against him. They may have drawn it wrongly, but you cannot say it is a case in which there was no evidence at all. There was a great deal of evidence, circumstantial evidence it may be, to connect the accused with the offence. In their Lordships' opinion this case does not fall within the class of cases where they advise His Majesty to give leave to Appeal].

tion between a chela and a sisya. A chela is a personal attendant who may be raised to the rank of a sisya, but there is no evidence of any value that he was ever taken as a sisya. Evidence has been given that he earns his livelihood by selling powders and sherbet, how far that is a fact, I need not determine. He has failed to establish his status, and therefore his suit must fail. One of the persons called by the Plaintiff, Radha Kissen Kabani, is a respectable person. The only thing that he said about the Plaintiff was that he was always with the Sadhu since 14 or 15 years." "Sabharam was a Babaji"; "he was a Sadhu." It has been argued that a yati does not necessarily mean a sanyasi, and a passage has been quoted to me which says that a person is a sanyasi and yati who does work (Karma) without having any desire for the effect (falam) that the work would produce. He should not be nivagin and he should not be akriya. That is not the definition of a yati in the text that I have quoted. "Yati" means a Bhikshu, a sanyasi—an ascetic or anchorite. Some reliance has also been placed on certain texts quoted from a work called the Vaisnab Dharma Ratnakar. It is a sectarian treatise in which Vaisnabs are described as asramis. I do not think it is a work of any authority and in fact, judging from certain quotations placed before me, I am not prepared to attach any weight to the work. One of the passages was that a Brahmin who gives up the Brahmanic religion by holding the danda, is sure to go to hell after death and a sanyasi who also gives up his sikha yagnopabit is equal to a Chandal when alive and goes to hell after death. I have gone through the book and found certain outrageous passages relating to the life of Sankar-acharja of a most revolting character. It is only a sectarian work, of a controversial character meant to glorify the Ramnuj Vaisnabs. I hold that the Plaintiff's case fails in both respects. Sobharam was not a yati and the Plaintiff has not proved that he was his sisya or sat-sisya and it must be dismissed. The Defendants have proved that they are the legal heirs of the deceased and in my view they are entitled to his property. They have shown by producing a certified copy of a conveyance, that in 1878 some property was acquired in the District of Rohtak in the name of the Sadhu, and I accept the Defendant's evidence that the property was purchased by Sovaram, which shewed that he had not only not cut off his connection with his native village, but went there and acquired property of considerable value. There is also evidence that he attended the wedding ceremony of the Defendant Naidar Sing. This is uncorroborated by any other evidence, and I am not prepared to place much reliance upon it.

It is also clear from the evidence given on behalf of the Defendant that Sobharam kept money in different Marwari firms in Calcutta which carried interest; that he kept his money with two different firms and transferred his deposit from one firm to another. The man seems to have been well known in Burra Bazar. He lived there for a number of years, and it is very curious that not a single Marwari merchant, a great many of whom live in and near Monohar Das's Kotra, has been called, nor any of the members of the firms or their gomastas with whom the money is now in deposit. Witnesses belonging to the old firm which kept his money have been called on behalf of the Defendant. One of them, a Marwari gomasta, said that he knew that Sobharam used to perform "paths" and was paid for them.

GOURI SUNKER BYAS v. NIADER SING.

The suit must be dismissed and dismissed with costs. There is not the faintest chance of the Defendant realising any of the costs from the Plaintiff. I was asked to make Kanhai Lall responsible for these costs, but there is no evidence justifying it.

Mr. Mullick—The rule will be discharged with costs and we are also entitled to the costs incurred before the Registrar on giving security.

CHAUDHURI, J.—Yes.

Mr. Mullick—We have put in certain books of various firms. May we have them back on putting in copies of the entries.

Judgment,

RAJA DURGA PRASAD SINGH
v.
RAJENDRA NARAYAN BAGCHI, since deceased, and others.

Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 92—Written lease, evidence to vary terms if admissible—Agreement to take reduced rent, not registered, if admissible—Want of consideration—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 107—Evidence of negotiation, if admissible—Lease of land specified by boundaries—Evidence to prove that area stated and not exist, if admissible—Abatement of rent, tenant's claim of—Onus—Tenant deprived of a portion of land by form of injunction, erroneously decreed, in landlord's suit to restrain encroachment by tenant on khas lands.

Where an annual rent of Rs. 2,800 was reserved in a lease, a subsequent agreement whereby the landlord agreed to take a reduced rent of Rs. 2,000 a year only would for want of registration be inadmissible in evidence and would also be unenforceable for want of consideration.

The receipt by the landlord of a reduced rent for some years, in the absence of reliable and admissible evidence to prove such an agreement, was held to be consistent with the reduction having been a mere voluntary and temporary abatement.

Where the area of demised land, which was described in the lease as lying within certain specified boundaries, was stated therein as 400 bighas, extrinsic evidence was not admissible to show that there was not the stated area within the specified boundaries.

Extrinsic evidence as to the negotiations which led up to the contract was inadmissible to vary the construction of the lease.

Where after a permanent lease had been executed, the landlord sued the tenant for alleged wrongful entry upon his khas land by the tenant and prayed for an injunction to restrain the tenant from committing such trespass, but the Court instead of granting the injunction as prayed decreed that the tenant be restrained from dealing with property lying outside the demised mouzah "as delineated in the map prepared by the Civil Court Amin," and the tenant preferred no appeal against the decree:

Held—That it was not intended by that decree to reduce the area of the land which the tenant was entitled to deal with under his lease, and in a suit for arrears of rent he could not claim an abatement of the rent if in fact the injunction, which was granted in wider terms than were called for, had that effect, as he did not avail himself of his remedy by way of appeal and submitted to the decree.

Where the tenant tendered a reduced amount of rent and interest, on the plea that owing to his having not been given possession of the entire area demised, he was entitled to an abatement of rent but no ground was made out by the tenant for such abatement, the tender was not a good tender.

It is for the tenant to make out a case, if he has one, for an abatement of the fixed rent.

This was an Appeal from a Judgment of the Calcutta High Court (Doss, and Richardson, JJ.) which is reported in I. L. R. 37 Cal. 293. The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the said report and the Judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. J. M. Parikh for the Appellant submitted that the lessee was not entitled to any abatement. The boundaries specified in the lease were quite definite and certain and the rights of the parties were governed by it. The mention therein of 400 bighas was a mere description. There was evidence that the land had not been measured by the lessor. In fact the Defendant himself deposed that the 400 bighas were fixed by guess and not by any measurement. Further the covenant in the lease provided that the rent was never to be varied. Even supposing that the area governs, the Defendant could not claim abatement. He could rescind the lease and we were willing to do so. Both parties being under a mistake of fact the contract was void under secs. 13 and 20 of the Indian Contract Act. And further, the Defendant has failed to prove that he was not in possession of what was leased to him. In his evidence he deposed that he got possession of the entire land leased to him. But his case is that he had since been dispossessed by virtue of the decree made in the suit of 1902. His remedy was to appeal against it, but he did not. In any case it was not proved that he had in fact been dispossessed by the lessor from the land leased.

Sir Earle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé for the Respondent submitted that the conduct of the parties both before and after the execution of the lease shewed that the dominant intention of the parties was that the area was to govern the rights. The rent was calculated on the basis of acreage, and the lessor throughout stated that 400 bighas of land were leased. The boundaries were uncertain, and the Amin who inspected the locality and drew a map deposed that he could not make a map upon the the basis of the boundaries in the lease. The Respondent was entitled to abatement of rent for the deficiency. The Amin's evidence was uncontradicted and he swore that we had only 275 bighas in our possession. It must follow that we have been evicted from the rest of the land. The injunction passed in the suit of 1902 made it illegal for us to work beyond the 275 bighas. Reference was made to the following authorities: Mortlock v. Buller (1), Hill v. Buckley (2), McKenzie v. Hesketh (3) where rent was proportionately reduced. Doe v. Meyler (4). Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., in reply referred to Llewellyn v. Earl of Jersey (6). He submitted that the eviction, if any, was due to the decree of a competent Court from which the Defendant could have appealed. He did not do so. But in any case he was not entitled to any compensation or abatement.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an Appeal by Raja Durga Prasad Singh, the Plaintiff, from a decree, dated the 26th August 1909, of the High Court at Calcutta, which varied a decree, dated the 27th April 1907, of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum in a suit for arrears of rent, cesses, and interest, which was brought on the 15th August 1906, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Manbhum, upon a mokurari kabuliyat of the 3rd December 1894

The kabuliyat was executed by Rajendra Narayan Bagchi, now dead, who, with others who derived title through him, was a Defendant to the suit. The pottah, corresponding to the kabuliyat, was executed by Raja Jaimangal Singh, now dead, the original lessor, whose interest vested before suit in the Plaintiff. In the kabuliyat, Rajendra Narayan Bagchi acknowledged having received from Raja Jaimangal Singh a pottah corresponding to the kabuliyat, and stated that "On the agreement that the heirs and representatives of both of us, yourself and myself, shall be bound by all the terms and conditions of the pottah and this kabuliyat, I execute this mokurari maurasi kabuliyat." The pottah has not been put in evidence in this suit, but it has not been suggested by either side that it differs in any material respect from the kabuliyat or that anything turns upon the construction of the pottah.

The material words of the kabuliyat so far as it affects the matters in issue in the suit are as follows :—

"I, having applied to get from you a settlement of the rights of cutting, raising, and selling, etc, the coal underneath the 400 bighas of land described in the schedule below, within mouzah Dobari, in pergunnah Jharia, recorded in towzi No. 8 of the district Manbhum Collectorate, and which is within the zemindari owned and possessed by you in ancestral right, and you having granted my application, I hereby execute to you a mokurari permanent maurasi kabuliyat for 400 bighas of land as per boundaries below, within the said mouzah and which will be enclosed by me on putting up masonry pillars at my own cost and according to demarcation made by you for your taking from me Rs 8,400 as salami and fixing an annual mokurari rental of Rs 2,800 for the rights in coal under the said 400 bighas of land; and I agree that year after year and according to the instalments, I shall pay to you into your zamindari kachari, every year in three instalments, the fixed rental and also the road and public works cesses and other taxes and cesses payable by me according to law, that may be imposed in future by Government, namely, in Sraban of each year, Rs. 900, in Aghran Rs. 900, and in Chaitra Rs. 1,000 out of the rental fixed; and after taking dakhilas for the same according to the usage in vogue in your serishta, I shall thereupon enjoy and continue to enjoy from generation to generation all the rights in the coal under the 400 bighas by cutting, raising and selling the same after making the said coal fit for the market, and vested with the power of gift, sale and all kinds of assignment of the same according to pleasure. The rental fixed shall never on any account be varied. . . . If I fail to pay any instalment of the rent or cesses, then for the unpaid instalment money, I shall pay interest at the rate of rupee one per cent. per mensem from the date of the lapsed instalment till the date of payment. If I fail to pay six consecutive instalments of the rent or cesses, &c., then on the next date of instalment you will be entitled to bring the settled coal lands into your khas possession. . .

(6) 11 M. & W. 183 (1843).

RAJA DURGA PRASAD SINGH v. RAJENDRA NARAYAN BAGCHI.

According to this kabuliyat I become vested with the right and title to the coal under the settled land from to-day. I shall have to pay nothing for the year 1301 B. S. as rent or cesses, &c. From the year 1302 B. S., I shall continue to pay the entire rent Rs. 2,800 by proper instalments. You are not liable to me for the return of the above amount of selami (premium) or for any other matter."

The schedule which is referred to in the kabuliyat is as follows :

SCHEDULE OF THE BOUNDARIES.

"On the south—boundary line of mouzah Fatehpur, as per thak.

"On the west—boundary line of mouzah Jharia Khas, as per thak.

"On the east—border of the 100 bighas of land settled with Gopal Krishna Roy and others and the Chatkari jore.

"On the north—boundary line of mouzah Bherakata as per thak, and the Chatkari jore.

"Right in the coal underneath the 400 bighas of land, within these boundaries."

The Plaintiff in his plaint alleged that default had been made in the payment of instalments of the fixed rent and of the cesses, and claimed a decree for Rs. 23,868 in respect of principal and interest and further reliefs. So far as is now material, the Defendants to this suit by their written statement alleged, that the coal underneath 400 bighas of land in mouzah Dobari had been demised by Raja Jaimangal Singh to the Defendant Rajendra Narayan Bagchi ; that they had not been given possession of the underground rights of the 400 bighas of land ; that they were entitled to an abatement of the rent which had been fixed by the kabuliyat ; and that they had made tenders of the rent which, according to them, was due, and consequently denied that the interest which was claimed by the Plaintiff was payable. Their tenders were based upon a reduced rent. It appears that the grounds upon which the Defendants alleged that the Plaintiff was not entitled to the rent fixed by the kabuliyat, and was entitled only to a reduced rent, were that Raja Jaimangal Singh had, according to them, in 1898 reduced the fixed rent from Rs. 2,800 a year to Rs. 2,000 a year on the representation of Rajendra Narayan Bagchi, that the coal which had been demised was of inferior quality and could not be sold as steam coal, and that under part of the land no coal was found ; and that by an injunction which was decreed on the 15th December 1902, in a suit which had been brought by the present Plaintiff on the 26th April 1902, the right of the Defendants to work coal under the demise was restricted to an area of 274 bighas 4 cottahs. The Defendants further alleged in their written statement that they had paid the cesses direct into the Collectorate, and denied that the Plaintiff was entitled in law to get any cesses. The Defendants claimed to set off pro tanto certain costs and interest thereon which had been allowed to them as against the Plaintiff by the decrees in the suit of the 26th April 1902.

The Subordinate Judge of Manbhum held in this suit that the rent fixed by the kabuliyat had been reduced by Raja Jaimangal Singh to Rs. 2,000 a year, and that the Defendants were not entitled to any further reduction. He also held that the Defendants had tendered the amounts of the reduced rent, and consequently that the Plaintiff was not entitled to interest in respect of the amounts so tendered. The Subordinate Judge also found that the Defendants had paid the cesses direct to the Collector, and were not liable to pay them to the Plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge properly decided that the Defendants were entitled to set off the costs, with interest, awarded in the suit of 26th April 1902. From the decree of the Subordinate Judge each side appealed to the High Court at Calcutta.

The High Court found that the document by which the Defendants sought to prove that Raja Jaimangal Singh had agreed to reduce the rent from Rs. 2,800 to Rs. 2,000 a year was, for want of registration, inadmissible in evidence to vary the terms of the kabuliyat, and that the alleged agreement for reduction of rent was without consideration and was not enforceable. On both points their Lordships agree with these findings of the High Court. There was no reliable and admissible evidence to prove that Raja Jaimangal Singh ever bound himself to accept a reduced rent. The fact that he did for some years accept a reduced rent is consistent with the reduction having been a mere voluntary and temporary abatement.

The High Court having found on evidence not contained in the kabuliyat that the rent of Rs. 2,800 a year had been fixed by Raja Jaimangal Singh and Rajendra Narayan Bagchi on the assumption that within the boundaries specified in the schedule to the kabuliyat there were in fact 400 bighas, concluded that the description by boundaries of the subject of the demise might be disregarded, and that the demise was a demise of 400 bighas, whether 400 bighas were or were not contained within the specified boundaries, and finding on the evidence of an Amin, which their Lordships will later consider, that within the specified boundaries there were not 400 bighas, and that the Defendants were in possession of only 275 bighas 3 cottahs 10 chittaks, the High Court decided that the Defendants were entitled to a proportionate abatement of the fixed rent.

Although, in their Lordships' opinion, the question as to what had been demised in 1894 turned upon the true construction of the kabuliyat, and that construction could not be varied by extraneous evidence as to the negotiations which led up to the contract which was, in fact, made, or by evidence showing that within the boundaries specified in the schedule to the kabuliyat there was not 400 bighas of land, their Lordships consider that it will be satisfactory to ascertain what evidence, if any, there is as to the actual bigha area of land within the boundaries specified in the schedule to the kabuliyat, and how it happened that the right of the Defendants to work coal was, at the time when the rent sued for accrued due, restricted, apparently, according to the High Court, to the coal under 275 bighas 3 cottahs 10 chittaks.

Before the lease by pottah and kabuliyat was made the land within the boundaries specified in the schedule to the kabuliyat had not been measured. There is no evidence to show that the land had, at any time, been measured by, or on behalf of, Raja Jaimangal Singh. The Defendant, Rajendra Narayan Bagchi, in his evidence in this suit, stated, "The 400 bighas were fixed by guess. It was not fixed by any measurement. When I took the settlement (the lease) it was settled that I would get 400 bighas of land. It was also settled that if the land was found to be less the deficit would be made good." He admitted that some months before the 26th April 1902 he had the coalfield in his possession measured by an Amin, but he stated that he did not remember how much land had been ascertained by that measurement. He said, "I never tried to ascertain the area myself." No evidence has been brought to their Lordships' attention which suggests that Rajendra Narayan Bagchi or any of the other Defendants ever complained to Raja Jaimangal Singh that they had not been placed in possession of the area or coalfield which had been demised in 1894. Raja Jaimangal Singh, who accepted in 1898 and subsequently a reduced rent, did so on the representation of Rajendra Narayan Bagchi that the coal was of inferior quality and was not saleable as steam coal, and that under part of the lands no coal had been found, and not on any representation or complaint that there were not 400 bighas of land within the boundaries specified in the schedule to the kabuliyat.

On the 26th April 1902, the present Plaintiff brought a suit against Rajendra Narayan Bagchi and others, who are either Defendants to this suit or are represented in title by Defendants to this suit. In his plaint of 1902 Raja Durga Prasad Singh alleged that the Defendants had wrongfully entered upon and worked his coal in mouzah Jharia Khas, and claimed damages and a perpetual injunction restraining the Defendants from cutting and raising the coal in Jharia Khas. In that suit of 1902 a Civil Court Amin was deputed to make measurements and to make a report. He made a report which is dated the 29th September 1902. It appears from that report that for the purpose of measuring and preparing a map he received but little useful or practical assistance from those who represented the Plaintiff, and that the Defendants pointed out to him the lands of which they alleged that they had been given possession under the demise of 1894. According to the Amin's report the lands so pointed out by the Defendants measured 346 bighas 4 cottahs 4 chittaks, but he reported that the boundaries of the lands which were pointed out to him by the Defendants did not agree with the boundaries as specified in the kabuliyat. In his report the Amin stated that of the 346 bighas 4 cottahs 4 chittaks, only 257 bighas 3 cottahs 4 chittaks were within mouzah Dobari. It is to be observed that the lands which the Defendants pointed out to the Amin included part of mouzah Jharia Khas, where the Defendants were alleged to have committed the trespass, and it is also to be noticed that the Plaintiff in the suit of 1902 had alleged in his plaint that he believed that the coal in Jharia Khas was of a better quality than the coal which had been demised to the Defendants, and found a ready sale in the market. The Amin prepared a map which was in evidence in the suit of 1902, and is in evidence in this suit. According to his report of 1902, it was not possible for him to lay down on the ground the northern, western, and southern boundaries of the Defendants' holding, as there was no field-book to show the bearing at the station points and the distances of the chain lines. The Amin was examined as a witness in this suit on the 27th March 1907, when he stated that he had made the map by relaying on it the lands of the Survey and the Thakbast map. It is to be observed that the boundaries according to the Survey map and the Thakbast map did not agree. In his evidence given in this suit the Amin stated that the area of the lands lying within the boundaries which were specified in the schedule to the kabuliyat were 275 bighas 3 cottahs 10 chittaks, and that in mouzah Dobari, according to the Thakbast, there are 788 bighas 15 cottahs and 2 chittaks of land. If the statements as to areas, which will later be referred to, contained in the Judgment of the Subordinate Judge in the suit of 1902 and in the Judgment of the High Court in Appeal in that suit, be correct, the Amin must have confounded the areas shown by the Revenue Survey map with the areas shown by the Thakbast map. No reliable conclusion as to areas can be drawn from the report or from the evidence of the Amin.

The Subordinate Judge in the suit of 1902, in his Judgment of the 15th December 1902, stated that "The Amin's report shows that out of the 400 bighas let out to the Defendants, they are in possession of 346 bighas 4 cottahs and 4 chittaks only. Measuring according to the Survey map, 86 bighas and 8 cottahs of this fall within mouzah Jharia Khas and Fatehpur, and 2 bighas 13 cottahs and 5 chittaks fall within mouzah Bharakata, and 257 bighas 13 cottahs and 4 chittaks only fall within mouzah Dobari. But measured according to the Thak map, the whole of the land in the Defendants' possession, excepting 1,600 square feet, falls within mouzah Dobari." In that suit the Subordinate Judge found that the Defendants had trespassed on the Plaintiff's coal to the extent of 1,600 square feet. On the 15th December 1902, the Subordinate Judge "decreed that an injuction be issued to the effect that the Defendants do not carry on operations outside mouzah Dobari, as delineated in the map by the Civil Court Amin, according to the Thakbast map, and that the remaining portion of the claim be dismissed." Except that an injunction was granted, the suit was dismissed with costs. Whether intentionally or carelessly it is difficult to say, but the injunction which the Subordinate Judge granted was wider in its operation than was the injunction which had been asked for in the plaint of that suit. The Subordinate Judge should have confined himself to the question which he had to determine, which was whether the Defendants had committed a trespass by working coal in the Plaintiff's mouzah Jharia Khas, and having found that the trespass had been committed, he should have confined the injunction to be granted to the injunction which the Plaintiff had asked for, namely, an injunction restraining the Defendants from trespassing in mouzah Jharia Khas. The Subordinate Judge was not concerned with the extent of the area demised in 1904 in mouzah Dobari. The result is that the Defendants are restrained from working coal outside the limits of mouzah Dobari, as delineated, correctly or incorrectly, by the Amin in his map, which he stated that he had prepared according to the Thakbast map.

From the decree of the 15th December 1902 of the Subordinate Judge, the Plaintiff appealed to the High Court at Calcutta. The Defendants submitted themselves to the injunction which had been granted, and did not appeal. The learned Judges of the High Court who heard the Appeal stated in their judgment that "The area demised to the Defendants was 400 bighas within Dobari, but they actually hold only 346 bighas. This actual area belongs to Dobari, if the boundaries of that village be taken according to Thakbast map, but only 257 bighas of it belong to that village according to the Revenue Survey map. It is possible that 346 bighas were leased to the Defendants as 400 bighas, but it seems impossible that only 257 bighas could have been leased to them as 400." The High Court dismissed the Appeal with costs. But whatever may be the area in bighas within mouzah Dobari of the land which the Defendants pointed out to the Amin as being in their possession, it is obvious to their Lordships that the Subordinate Judge and the High Court considered that the Defendants had 346 bighas of land within mouzah Dobari underneath which they might lawfully continue to work the coal under their kabuliyat, and that the Subordinate Judge had not intended that the injunction which he was granting should have the effect of reducing to 257 bighas the area in mouzah Dobari within which the Defendants might lawfully work the coal under the kabuliyat. Their Lordships have no means of ascertaining what was in bigha measurement the area in mouzah Dobari to which the Defendants were restricted by the injunction of the 15th December 1902, and whatever that area may in fact be, it must be borne in mind that there is no evidence to prove that the lands which the Defendants pointed out to the Amin were the lands of which they had, in fact, obtained possession in 1894.

It was for the Defendants to make out a case, if they had one, for an abatement of the fixed rent. On this part of the case their Lordships find that the Defendants have not proved how many bighas in fact were contained in the area of mouzah Dobari which is within the boundaries which are specified in the schedule to the kabuliyat, and they have not proved the area in bighas within those boundaries of which they were put in possession. They have not proved that the area which they pointed out to the Amin was the area of which they obtained possession under the kabuliyat. They have not proved that otherwise than by the action of the Court of the Subordinate Judge in the suit of 1902, in granting the injunction in the form in which it was granted, and by their own neglect to appeal from that decree, they have been deprived of the right to work any coal which otherwise they would have been entitled to work under the demise. The action of the Subordinate Judge in granting the injunction in the form in which it was granted gave the Defendants no right which they could enforce by suit, or of which they could avail themselves as a defence to a suit for the fixed rent, although the injunction probably restricted their right to work the coal which had been demised in 1894; they had their remedy by way of appeal from the decree which granted the injunction, but they did not avail themselves of it. In their Lordships' opinion the Defendants have failed to prove any facts which would entitle them to any abatement of the rent fixed by the kabuliyat.

It follows from what their Lordships have said that the tenders in respect of rent, and interest upon arrears of rent, which the Defendants relied upon, having been tenders based on a reduced rent, were not good tenders either as tenders of rent, or of interest on arrears of rent, and were ineffective.

The High Court in the appeal in this suit found that the Defendants had not proved that they had paid to the Collector the cesses and taxes which under the kabuliyat they were bound to pay to the Plaintiff, and gave the Plaintiff a decree for Rs. 301-3-0 in respect of cesses, calculated on a reduced rent; the Plaintiff is entitled to recover the sum of Rs. 525 in respect of cesses, the only defence pleaded as to the claim in respect of cesses having failed.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this Appeal should be allowed, and that the decree of the High Court should be varied by decreeing the Appellant's claim for Rs. 23,868 0 0 less

The jagirdars of the military jagirs into which, under Native Princes, the greater part of Killah Khurdah (in Orissa) was parcelled out (styled the Dalbeheras) and native revenue officers known as Pradhans, Bhuimals, Kotekharans, Kowri-Bhagias, when the jagirs were resumed by the British Government, engaged with Government under the denomination of sarbarakars for the collection and payment of the revenue assessed by it.

Held, on the evidence, that although from 1818 onwards the tendency of Government and of the majority of its officers was to regard the sarbarakars as mere office-holders, they themselves had never before 1861, distinctly acknowledged that this was their position, and on the other hand had asserted their status as tenants and there were circumstances connected with their tenure of the lands which militated against the Government's view of their position as servants and their status under their engagement with Government was something higher than that of servants.

That from 1861 to 1896, Defendant No. 1, the present sarbarakar, and his father before him were regarded and treated as tenants and they have successfully asserted their status and maintained their possession as such.

That the Defendant No. 1's status is that of a tenure-holder.

KRIPASINDHU ROY PITAM v. MOHUNT PARMANAND DAS GOSWAMI.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The suit out of which these 2 cross-appeals arise relates to 2 Mouzahs, Bande and Koranga, and a half share in a 3rd Mouzah Sardhapore all comprised within Gurh Atiri situated in Killah Khurdah in the District of Puri.

From the Government publication, entitled "Selections from the Correspondence on the Settlement of the Khoordah Estate," we find that Killah Khurdah formed part of the Crown lands of the Native Princes who once ruled over Orissa, and at the time of the British Conquest was in the possession of their descendant Rajah Mukund Deo. In 1804 Rajah Mukund Deo rebelled, and thereupon his estate was forfeited to Government and has ever since been treated as a khas mehal.

Under its Native Princes the greater part of Khurdah was parcelled out into Jaghirs, the holders of which were bound by the terms of their tenure to perform certain services, and also in some, if not in all, cases to pay a light quit rent. The most numerous and important class of jagirdars consisted of the Dalbeheras or hereditary Military Chiefs, having under them a body of "Paiks" performing police and military duties. The jagirs of these Dalbeheras were known as Gurhs and Gurh Atiri appears to have been originally a jagir of this nature. Whether the Dalbeheras were also responsible to the Rajah for the revenue assessed on the lands within their several jagirs is not clear but whether working as village communal officers, or under the Dalbeheras or directly under the Rajah's Sadar Sherista were a number of Revenue Officers known as Padhans, Bhuimals, Kotekharans, Kowri-Bhagias, and by other titles, all remunerated by service lands.

The British occupation was followed by a number of successive settlements of land revenue. At the earlier of these settlements, jagirs (other than the lands in the immediate possession of the jagirdars) were in general resumed. Apparently, in part compensation, the Dalbeheras and the revenue officers above referred to were admitted, when willing to do so, to engage, under the denomination of sarbarakars, for the collection and payment of the Government revenue assessed on their several Gurhs or villages.

From Exhibit "E," a hukumnamah, dated 7th March 1823 and signed by Mr. Wilkinson, the Deputy Collector then in charge of Khurdah, we find that at that time and for the settlement of 5 years from $\frac{1231}{1824}$ to $\frac{1235}{1828}$, the sarbarakars of Gurh Atiri were Parmeswar Ray Pitam Dalbehera, Charan Gajendra Kowri-Bhagia, Pindik Das Bhuimal, Dina Bandhu Mahanty Kotekharan and Lokenath Santra Behera Padhan. From Exhibit "F," a similar hukumnamah, dated 17th January 1831, we find that in the settlement of $\frac{1238}{1831}$ to $\frac{1247}{1840}$ Parmeswar Ray Pitam Dalbehera became the sarbarakar for the 2½ mouzahs now in question. This settlement is known as the "Decennial Settlement" and was in fact extended to 1856. In 1856 the Decennial Settlement was followed by what is known as the "Noyabadi" settlement for a term of 24 years from 1857 to 1880. From hukumnamah, Exhibit "G," dated 2nd August 1856, we find that the sarbarakar at that time of these 2½ mouzahs was Brindaban, the son of Parmeswar. Of the other half of Saidhapur, and of a 4th Mouzah named Atiri the sarbarakar at the settlement of 1857 was admittedly Gajendra Charan

KRIPASINDHU ROY PITAM v. MOHUNT PARMANAND DAS GOSWAMI.

Kowri-Bhagia and of a 5th, Mouzah Chulupalang the sarbarakar was Juggernath Das Bhuimal, the descendant of Pindik Das.

From Ex. 6, para. 7, we learn that the Gurh had been divided into 5 Kismats the remaining two being the Kotekharan and the Behera-Padhan.

During the currency of the 24 years' settlement made in 1850, that is to say in 1861, the Government of Bengal decided to discontinue an allowance of salt granted in the times of the Hindu Rajahs to 20 Mathdharis or Mahants of Maths in Puri, associated with the worship of the God Juggernath Mohaprabhu. In lieu of this allowance Government by its letter, 437A of 13th September 1861 (Ex. 1), made to the Mathdharis a grant of Gurh Atiri. The orders of Government were communicated to the local officers in the Board of Revenue's No. 1001 of 19th September and thereupon, on the 10th November 1861, Gurh Atiri, described as comprising 3 Kismats, Kismat Dalbehera, Kismat Kowri-Bhagia and Kismat Bhuimal, i.e., the 5 villages Bandeh, Koaranga, Satdhapur, Atiri and Chulapalang, was struck off the revenue roll and made over to the possession of the Mathdharis with effect from the beginning of the year 1269 (v. Exh. K)

For some time the local officers appear to have been in doubt whether the grant by Government represented a grant of the five villages or merely an assignment of the revenue payable by the sarbarakars. We find these doubts and the consequent difficulties discussed in Ex. 4 (letter 637 of 9th November 1875 from the Board of Revenue to Government), Ex. 6 (letter 364 of 24th March 1879 from the Commissioner to the Board of Revenue) and Ex. 5 (letter No. 185A of the 31st May 1880 from the Board of Revenue to the Commissioner). These doubts should have been set at rest when in 1875, in its No. 2755 of 25th November (Ex. 3), Government repeated or confirmed the grant to the Mathdharis of Gurh Atiri but in Ex. 5 already referred to, the Board of Revenue in 1880 found it necessary again to explain the position and to enjoin upon the local officers the necessity of refraining from all interference with the Mathdharis in the management of their properties. In the written statement in the present suit we further find a suggestion that the grant was made not to the Mathdharis but to the God Juggernath Mohaprabhu. This suggestion is also negatived by the terms of the grant (Exs. 1 and 3) and by the correspondence contained in Exs. 4, 5 and 6.

As we have already stated Gurh Atiri was transferred to the Mathdharis during the currency of the 24 years' settlement made in 1857. That settlement expired in 1880 but in the khas mehal portion of Khurdah was extended to 1882, when it was followed by the first Cadastral Settlement of the Estate, a settlement which remained in force from 1882 to 1897. That again was followed by the new current settlement made under the provisions of Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Neither the settlement of 1882 nor the settlement of 1897 affected Gurh Atiri which had become the property of the Mathdharis. When the khas mehal portion of Khurdah was under re settlement in 1880-82, the Mathdharis apparently did nothing, but in 1897 whether at the instance of the Mathdharis or at the instance of Government, under the provisions of sec. 101 of the Bengal Tenancy

KRIPASINDHU ROY PITAM v. MOHUNT PARMANAND DAS GOSWAMI.

Act, the making of a survey and the preparation of a record-of-rights in respect of the lands in Gurh Atiri was undertaken. The records were finally published and the proceedings completed apparently in 1899 (v. Exhts. 16a, 16b, 16c and Q, also para. 9 of the plaint). Meanwhile, some time about 1889, Kripasindhu Roy Padhan, Defendant No. 1, had succeeded his father Brindaban in the position of sarbarakar of Mouzahs Bande, Karanga, and Sandhapur (8 annas).

In the record-of-rights of Mouzah Bande (Exh. 16c) Kripasindhu is recorded as the holder of two plots of Sarbarakari jagir measuring 8,170 acres and similarly in the record of Mouzah Panasabasta (Ex. 9) he is shown as holding 6 plots of jagir measuring 19,077 acres. Otherwise he is not recorded as having any interest in any of the mouzahs in which he is or was sarbarakar.

On the 21st August 1873 in suit No. 116 of that year (v. the decree filed and admitted in evidence in this Court Exh. App. A) the representatives of the 20 Mathdharis partitioned Gurh Atiri and on this division the Dalbehera Kismat, that is the 2½ villages now in suit, fell to the Mahanta of 11 Maths.

On the 20th December 1899 the Mahants of these 11 Maths served upon Kripasindhu a notice of dismissal and as they failed to obtain or to retain possession, the suit out of which these appeals arise was instituted on the 5th October 1907. The 8 Plaintiffs and pro formâ Defendants 13 and 14 now represent the 11 Maths to which the villages in dispute fell at the partition of 1873.

The case of the Plaintiffs is that Defendant No. 1, his father and grandfather before him were mere officers or servants first of Government then of the Mathdharis, liable to dismissal for misconduct during the currency of a settlement, and having no right to any renewal of their appointments at the close thereof. They therefore sued for the ejectment of Defendant No. 1 from the 2½ mouzahs in suit, and also from the jagir lands recorded in his name in villages Bande and Panasabasta.

Defendant, on the other hand, contends that he and his ancestors were and are tenure-holders not liable to dismissal or summary ejectment and that he held the jagir lands in Bande and Panasabasta as Dalbehera and not as sarbarakar.

The Sub-Judge found that the Defendant was not a proprietary tenure-holder; at the same time he also held that he was not a mere servant, that his succession to the right or office of sarbarakar had been recognised by the Plaintiffs and that on his executing a kabuliyat undertaking during the currency of the present settlement to pay to the Plaintiffs year by year a sum equivalent to 80 per cent. of the rent assessed on the raiyats or tenants in the record-of-rights proceedings, he was entitled to retain possession. Against the decree both parties have appealed, and in the appeals the two questions that have been argued are (1) whether Defendant No. 1 is a tenure-holder or a servant and (2) whether his jagir lands in Bande and Panasabasta are his Dalbehera or his sarbarakari jagir. We may take both these questions together.

Of the documents independently exhibited in the case, the earliest in date are the hukumnamahs (Exs. "E., F and G") of 1823, 1831 and 1856. These are all addressed to the raiyats of the villages, direct them to pay rents to the sarbarakar at the assessed rate and recite that the sarbarakar or sarbarakars have executed kabuliyats or engagements for the term of the several settlements. Now when in 1861 Gurh Atiri was made over to the Mathdharis these kabuliyats or at least the kabuliyats of the then current settlement should in ordinary course have been made over to them. In 1865 (v. Exh. L) we found them suing Brindaban on his kabuliyat of 1856. We may therefore safely infer that the Plaintiffs have in their possession or have access to these kabuliyats or some of them or copies of them. When the appeals came on for hearing on the 28th of February we therefore thought it right to give the Plaintiffs a further opportunity of producing either the original kabuliyats or certified copies of one or more of them, but on the 28th of April when the appeals were finally heard, the pleader for the Appellants was still unable to produce any of these documents. He then placed before us certified copies of applications made to the Collector of Puri for certified copies of the kabuliyats executed by the sarbarakars in 1831, 1844 and 1856, but none re the the kabuliyat of 1823 The kabuliyats of which copies were applied for, it appears, could not be found. Apart from this no explanation of the non-production of the kabuliyats has been given in evidence and we can only infer that if produced they would not support or would not wholly support the Plaintiff's case. In this conclusion we are strengthened by such references to the kabuliyats as we can find in exhibited documents. Thus in his letter No. 304 of 24th March 1879 (Exh. 6) Mr. Smith, then Commissioner of the Orissa Division, in a marginal note to his para. 13 writes :—"The old form of agreement was somewhat that of a farmer and somewhat that of a servant."

Again in his note, dated 5th October 1880 (Selections, Vol. 2, p. 258), Mr. Metcalfe, then Commissioner, writes as follows :—Sarbarakars............have hitherto held their office under agreements which for purpose of reference have been called A. B. C. and D. Forms A and D were drawn up so far back as 1836........It has been held that the position of a sarbarakar holding under agreement A was that of a Mustagir" (lessee)...Sarbarakars holding under D agreements were considered by Mr. Smith to be in the position of farmers." Similarly in his No. 86 of 15th December 1879 Mr. Armstrong, then Collector of Puri, when forwarding the Settlement Officer's rate report for the purposes of the impending cadastral settlement of the khas portion of Khurdah, writes as follows :—"The new form of agreement for sarbarakars is a vast improvement on the old sanad which left their position very doubtful. It might however be still further improved by an acknowledgment on the part of the sarbarakar that he is a servant of the Government (Sel. Vol. II, p. 130, para. 22).

We next proceed to examine the documents contained in the 2 volumes of Selections in so far as they throw any light on the position of Dalbeheras and sarbarakars prior to the transfer of Atiri in 1861.

In 1817 occurred the insurrection of Jagabandhu Mahapatra, the hereditary Bukshi or Commander of the Forces to the Rajahs of Khurdah. The rising was quickly suppressed and, soon thereafter, an officer named Mr. Ewer was appointed Commissioner to enquire into the affairs of Orissa. On his report, dated 13th day of May 1818, that is on the portions dealing specifically with Khurdah (v. Selections, Vol. I, pp. 58, to 61 and p. 90, para. 235), the description of affairs contained in the first portion of this judgment has been largely based. From his report (v. pp. 12, 61-3) we further find that in the settlements of Major Fletcher and Gholam Kadir from 1804 to 1817 the sarbarakars were permitted to appropriate to themselves whatever they could realise from the raiyats over and above the sum which they themselves had engaged to pay to Government provided only that they adhered to certain imperfectly ascertained or wholly undefined rates and had thus, in Mr. Ewer's opinion, been given an interest of some sort in the soil.

Soon after Mr. Ewer's report followed the settlement of Khurdah for the years 1818 to 1820. The report on this settlement dealing more particularly with the year 1819-1820 is by Mr. Forrester, a Deputy Collector placed in 1818 in special charge of Khurdah, and is dated 17th October 1819. In this report (v. Selections, Vol. I, p. 105 et sequitur) Mr. Forrester states that he had in general admitted as sarbarakars the persons who had entered into engagements at the preceding settlements, that he had reverted to the rates fixed for different classes of land in the different villages by Gholam Kadir in $\frac{1218}{1808}$, that the sarbarakars were bound by their engagements to adhere to those rates and not charge more than 4 annas per man on new cultivation, and that they had no proprietary right in their Gurhs or villages (paras. 47, 8, 10 and 50). He further speaks of the general resumption of the jagir lands that had taken place after the rebellion of Rajah Mukund Deo and his followers, and states that with the previous approval of Government he had exempted from quit rent the small portions of jagir lands reserved for the Dalbeheras and some of the Dalvis, and in order to secure their more active assistance in police matters proposed some small augmentation to the reserved areas. (Paras. 63, 49 and 67). In Government's letter No. 8 of 24th December 1819, the Governor-General in Council confirmed Mr. Forrester's settlement, extended it to the close of the year 1228 (1821) and approved his suggestion for the improvement of the condition of the Dalbeheras (Selections, Vol. I, pp. 121-2, paras. 17, 18 and 24).

Mr. Forrester was succeeded by Mr. Wilkinson and in the selections we next find Mr. Wilkinson's report dated the 24th October 1836 on his settlement of Khurdah for the year $\frac{1238}{1831}$ to $\frac{1247}{1840}$ (Selections, Vol. I, p. 123). In this report he refers to a settlement made by him in 1825 for a period of five years. This is evidently the settlement referred to in hukumnamah Exh. E and though for five years in fact remained in force up to 1836. Mr. Wilkinson then proceeds to say that during the currency of the five years' settlement he had deputed officers to measure the lands in the estate, had fixed rates for the several descriptions of land, had distributed to the cultivators pottahs specifying their fields, areas, and rent assessed, and had then taken from the old sarbarakars engagements or agreements for the payment of the aggregate of the raiyati rents less 20 per cent. in lands and money. (Selections, Vol. I, pp. 123 126, paras. 4, 8, 10 and 11). He further stated that in this 20 per cent. he had included the assessed or estimated rents of the jagirs reserved for and confirmed to Dalbeheras and Dolois by Government orders dated 1st August 1822, and also the rent of additions to such jagirs made in subsequent settlements. In the 14th para. of his report he describes the classes of persons who as sarbarakars had entered into engagements for the collection and payment of Government revenue. From this we find that the Kotekharan, the Bhuimal and the Kowri-Bhagia were officers in the nature of accountants who had been admitted to engage jointly with the Dalbeheras of their Gurhs, and that Padhans or Behera-Padhans were officers appointed for the superintendence of cultivation and the collection of rents in villages held directly by the Rajah or his chief officers at head-quarters. In his description of the Dalbeheras he agrees in the main with Mr. Ewer but adds that they were removeable for misconduct and claimed no proprietary rights. He further states that the few Dalbeheras who had declined to engage for the revenue of their Gurhs were nevertheless in possession of their reserved jagirs. The hukumnamah Exh. F evidently refers to the settlement forming the subject-matter of this report of 1836 and the division of Gurh Atiri into 5 Kismats would seem to be explained by the suggestion made in Mr. Forrester's report of 1819 to the effect that in subsequent settlements, as opportunity occurred, Gurhs in the open country should be broken up and the component parts separately settled (Selections, Vol. I, p. 3, paras. 52-3, p. 116, para. 8).

Mr. Wilkinson's report was forwarded to Government by Mr. Halliday, then Member of the Board of Revenue. In its No. 1201 dated 22nd August 1837 (Selections, Vol. I, p. 136) Government confirmed the settlement with effect from $\frac{1244}{1837}$, extended it to the close of $\frac{1263}{1856}$, and in para. 5 observed as follows:—"As regards the sarabarakars who as the settlement has been formed by Mr. Wilkinson, are merely collectors of certain fixed rents, receiving in land and in a share of the rental about 20 per cent. on the collections His Lordship (i.e., the Governor) entirely agrees with Mr. Halliday that neither the engagements with Government, nor of course the lands by which the service rendered is remunerated should be matters of inheritance and liable to sub-division among heirs. Government has clearly the power to forbid its offices, and such the sarbarakarships of Khurdah clearly are, or the lands by which the holders of these offices are remunerated, from being subdivided." Those orders were communicated to the Commissioner by the Board in its No. 36 of 15th September 1837 with the following instructions: "You will cause it to be distinctly notified to the sarbarakars that at the expiration of the present settlement, Government will select its own engager, wherever they may choose to exercise the right so to do, and that the present incumbents will be held liable to dismissal for default or bad behaviour satisfactorily proved before the local authorities. It is very desirable that in all future cases individuals only should be acknowleged and allowed to treat as sarabarakars" (Selections, Vol. I, p. 138, para. 3).

The next settlement was made in 1857 and it was for a term of 24 years, i.e., for 1857/1880. This settlement merely extended the previous settlement in respect of areas then assessed, and added to it all subsequently cultivated lands. It is hence known as the "Nayabadi" settlement. The Collector Mr. Annand's report on this settlement, and Government orders thereon, add nothing to our information re sarbarakars and Dalbeheras. It may however be noted that it was at this settlement that hukumnamah Ex. G was issued, and it was of course during the currency of this settlement that the 3 Kismats of Gurh Atiri were transferred to the Mathdharis.

KRIPASINDHU ROY PITAM v. MOHUNT PARMANAND DAS GOSWAMI.

We have now dealt with all the important documents of dates prior to 1861 to be found in the volumes of Selections. But it would appear that with a view to the cadastral settlement which subsequently took effect from 1883 further enquiries into the fiscal history of Khurdah were initiated in 1875. The reports of the officers of that time are not of course of the same value as the earlier reports (e.g., the report of Mr. Ewer) except in so far as they reproduce their original sources of information. In Mr. Taylor's report of 21st May 1877 (Sel. Vol. I, p. 160) we find that Mr. Trower who was Collector at the time of Mr. Ewer's enquiry had in March 1818 begun a settlement for the years 1225-26. In the report of 23rd March 1818 Mr. Trower is quoted by Mr. Taylor as stating that so far as he could ascertain the collections from raiyats in the times of the Rajahs were made as follows :—"An Amin was deputed from the Sudder who, together with the Kajees on the part of the Rajah, his Dewan and the Bukshi made an estimate of the resources of each mehal. The collections were then entrusted to the Padhans and other village officers who from being employed in different duties were sarbarakars. These village officers appear to have been hereditary and they are the people with whom, generally speaking, all settlements under the British Government have been made. On the resumption of the jagir lands of the Paiks and of a portion of that of the Dalbeheras and Dullais by Major Fletcher these people also (that is the Dalbeheras and Dullais) appear also to have been admitted as sarbarakars (para. 12)."

This is the only indication we have that in Khurdah sarbarakars were known prior to the British occupation.

We may next notice that on the 19th February 1876 when dealing with questions arising in connection with the then impending settlement, Mr. Dampier, then Member of the Board of Revenue, wrote as follows :—

"A separate report is required on the subject of Dalbeheras and Dullais' jagirs. . . The services which the Dalbeheras and Dullais were bound to perform under the Rajahs were of a military and semi-military nature. At Mr. Forrester's or Mr. Wilkinson's settlement a certain number of these Dalbeheras were invited to become sarbarakars and executed agreements accordingly. The condition was that they should continue to enjoy their jagirs and should in addition receive a certain stipulated percentage on the collections. At the same time certain of their number were left alone enjoying their jagirs without being called on to perform any services in return."

The complaint is that those left in the possession of their jagirs have since been and are recognised as absolute proprietors of them, their title being heritable and transferable, whereas those who accepted service as sarbarakars have been very differently treated, their old military Dalbehera and Dullai jagirs have been declared to be mere sarbarakari jagirs and are being declared liable to forfeiture (as being part of their sarbarakari remuneration) if they are at any time removed from the sarbarakarship. The matter requires closer investigation (Sel. Vol. II, pp. 20-21, para. IV). After the investigation that followed Government in 1880 decided that the jagirs of those Dalbeheras, and other old service tenure-holders who had not been appointed sarbarakars and who therefore had been enjoying their lands free of rent in return for liability to perform some indefinite police service which was really not required should be assessed at favourable rates at the settlement of 1882-97 and thereafter at full raiyati rates (Sel. Vol. II, p. 170, para. 13).

Mr. Dampier appears to have been misinformed as to the attachment of any condition re their jagirs when Dalbeheras first became sarbarakars. In any case events subsequent to 1861 in the khas mehal portion of Khurdah cannot affect the title of Defendant No. 1 to his jagir and there is no suggestion that prior to the present proceedings any attempt was at any time made to oust him therefrom. On the other hand the statements made re the jagirs of Dalbeheras who did not become sarbarakars are of importance.

From the papers contained in the two volumes of Selections which we have now examined, it is clear that from 1818 onwards the tendency of Government and of the majority of its officers was to regard the sarbarakars as mere office-holders. But it does not appear that at any of the settlements prior to 1861 the sarbarakars distinctly acknowledged that this was their position. Moreover there are facts which militate against this view. For instance, the sarbarakars were held responsible for the full sum entered in their engagements whether they succeeded in realising from the cultivating raiyats less or more (v. e.g., Sel. Vol. 2, pp. 258-9, para. 41). Again they were entitled to retain for themselves the rent assessed on such waste lands as they succeeded in bringing under cultivation during the currency of a settlement [v. e.g., Sel. Vol. I, p 106, para. 10, Vol. II, p. 176 (9)]. Further in practice their position was hereditary.

On the whole the evidence we have discussed leads to the conclusion that when Gurh Atiri was transferred to the Mathdharis in 1861 the status of the sarbarakar under his engagement or sanad was something higher than that of a servant.

With regard to the jagir lands of the present Dalbehera sarbarakar [v. Exs. H and G Jamabandis of 1231 (1824)] it is manifest that they represent what was reserved to the Dalbehera on the general resumption of Dalbehera and other jagirs in 1804 5. They represent grants for police and semi-military services and even if the Plaintiffs could succeed in removing Defendant No. 1 from his position as sarbarakar they could not in the present suit succeed in resuming his Dalbehera jagir. Moreover with regard to the jagir lands lying in Mouzah Panasabasta, as no grant of that mouzah was made to the Plaintiffs or their predecessors, to those lands it does not appear that they have any title whatsoever.

We have now to consider the oral and documentary evidence of events subsequent to 1861.

We have already referred to the suit for rent brought by the Mathdharis against Brindaban Roy Pitam in 1865. From the judgment (Ex. L) it would seem that the sum due from the sarbarakars was claimed and was decreed as rent. Further, the sum due represented 3 years' arrears and it appears obvious that if he had been regarded as a servant he would surely have been dismissed for such a serious default.

It is next stated by the Plaintiffs that in 1866 they dismissed the sarbarakar of the Kowri-Bhagia Kismat. No papers relating to his dismissal have been put in evidence but from the recitals in the plaint (Ex. M) in suit No. 116 of 1873 it appears that the Kowri-Bhagia was not dismissed but was sued for arrears of rent and on his failure to pay was ejected under the provisions of sec. 78 of Act X of 1839. It is thus evident that he was treated not as a servant but as a tenant.

In the plaint (Ex. M) in suit No. 116 of 1873 brought by the predecessor in interest of Plaintiff No. 2 against Brindaban Roy Pitam, the Bhuimal sarbarakar, and the co-sharer Mathdharis, it is recited that the sarbarakari was "the property (Hakait) of 3 sarbarakars," that "the rent payable by them" was so much and that the remaining 2 sarbarakars were "in possession" of their Kismats.

When giving the Plaintiffs a further opportunity of producing the kabuliyats executed by the sarbarakars we thought it right to give to Defendant No. 1 also an opportunity of supplementing the plaint (Ex. M) by a copy of the decree in the suit. From the certified copy now produced it appears that the suit was compromised, that the Mathdhari Defendants, the sarbarakar Defendants and the Plaintiff respectively filed petitions of compromise and that the suit was decreed in terms of those petitions (which were embodied in the decree) on the 21st August 1873. The petition of the sarbarakars concludes thus: "Be it known that . . . . the sarbarakari right which we have in the disputed sarbarakari according to the terms mentioned in the rubakari dated 8th October 1861 of W. L. Heeley, Esq., Acting Salt Agent, will continue according to ancient custom."

The rubakari referred to (Ex. K) merely recites that the interests of the sarbarakars "will remain as hereafter" but from the proceedings in the suit it is fairly obvious that in 1873 the sarbarakar Defendant was asserting right as a tenant and was in 1865 not regarded as a servant.

The settlement made and the kabuliyat executed by Brindaban expired in 1880. Though the Mathdharis were well aware of their position as proprietors of the mouzahs in question, as is apparent from their resistance to the attempts made by Government officers to encroach upon their right (v. Ex. 6, para. 5 and Exs. 11 to 13), they made no attempt to oust the sarbarakar or to disturb the pre-existing state of things.

In 1889 Brindaban died and his son Kripasindhu, Defendant No. 1, succeeded him as sarbarakar. From the receipt (Exs. C series and P series) granted by at least 6 of the present Plaintiffs or their predecessors-in-interest and extending from 1890 to 1906 it is clear that the Mathdharis recognised Kripasindhu, and received rent and road-cess from him and that he remained in possession of the mouzahs as his father had done before him. This is also apparent from the oral evidence.

In fact it is not until 1894 or 96 that we find any attempt by any one of the Mathdharis to disturb Kripasindhu's possession. From Exh. N, judgment in rent-suit No. 143 of 1896, it appears that the Mahant of Revassa (predecessor of Plaintiff No. 6) realised or attempted to realise rents for 1302 and 1303 (1895-96) direct from at least one raiyat. Defendant No. 1 successfully asserted his claim to the rent.

Next followed the settlement proceedings of 1897-99. In this no doubt the Plaintiff succeeded in procuring the omission of the Defendant's name from the records. But apart from this, the notice of dismissal (Exh. 17 dated 20th Decr. 1900) and the uncorroborated oral evidence of the Plaintiff's sole witness Chintamani Dass to the effect that Plaintiff collected the rents of the raiyats from

KRIPASINDHU ROY PITAM v. MOHUNT PARMANAND DAS GOSWAMI.

1308 (1901), there is no evidence of any attempt actually to oust the Defendant until 1903-04. Exhs. 14 and 15, the judgment and decree in rent suit No. 317 of 1903-4, and the Exh. 10 series (deposits of rent in November 04 and January 1905) no doubt show in those years a serious attempt on the part of the Plaintiffs as a body to eject the Defendants and to collect the rents of the raiyats direct. But in this attempt from the oral evidence of Defendant 1 and his witness Ananta Gantra, Exh. O, the judgment in appeal in rent-suit No. 317, and the J series of Exhibits (deposits of rent) it is clear the Plaintiffs failed.

Thereupon on 5th October 1907 the Plaintiffs filed their present suit.

From the evidence we have discussed it is abundantly clear that from the transfer of the mouzahs in 1861 until 1896 the sarbarakar Defendant and his father before him were regarded and treated as tenants and that they have successfully asserted their status and maintained their possession as such from 1861 until the present day.

On a review of the whole evidence we must therefore hold that Defendant No. 1 is a tenure-holder.

Into the incidents of that tenure it is neither necessary nor proper to enter. The issues framed raised no such question and the evidence was not directed to any such issue.

It follows that the Plaintiffs' appeal No. 296 must be dismissed. Having regard to paragraphs 6 and 8 of the written statement and the 1st, 2nd and 3rd grounds of appeal, the declaration of the Plaintiffs' title as proprietors of the 2½ mouzahs in suit must be affirmed. In other respects the appeal of Defendant No. 1 (Appeal No. 219) is decreed and Plaintiffs' suit dismissed.

Under all the circumstances we direct that parties do bear their own costs throughout.

Decree modified.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2824 OF 1910.

HOLMWOOD, J. CHAPMAN, J. 1913, 23, January.	SATI PROSAD GARGA and anr., Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. MONMOTHA NATH KAR and ors, Defendants, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 61—Manager, tender of rent to, but not at village office, if valid—Tender of part as whole—Deposit of portion of rent due, if valid—Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec 38.

A deposit in Court by a tenant of less than the amount of arrears of rent due is not a valid deposit under sec. 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Any officer of the zemindar authorised to receive rent who happens to be in the village office can receive it and give a valid acquittance. But because a man happens to be the manager of the zemindari, he cannot be compelled to take rent tendered wherever he may happen to be and at whatever time or place it may be offered.

Nor can he be asked to take a small proportion of the rent due as the whole amount.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 22nd of August 1910 against a decree of Mr. C. Cornis, District Judge of Zillah Midnapur, dated the 6th of May 1910, modifying a decree of Babu Ambika Churn Mukherjee, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 29th of June 1909.

SATI PROSAD GARGA v. MONMOTHA NATH KAR.

The Plaintiffs sued the Defendants for recovery of Rs. 2,302-4 annas being arrears of rent with interest due from Jaista 1315 to Falgoon 1316 and cesses. In defence it was urged inter alia that a sum of Rs. 999 deposited in Court should be taken into consideration, and the claim of the Plaintiffs for interest and costs should be disallowed pro tanto. The Defendants took the further plea that there was tender of rent to the manager of the Plaintiffs at his house. The Subordinate Judge held that the deposit was not in accordance with law inter alia because no receipt was granted by the Court and no notice served on the Plaintiffs. As to tender he held that the Plaintiffs had appointed their manager to be the officer to realise the rents. He accordingly decreed the Plaintiffs' claim in full.

On appeal, the District Judge held that the tender (which appears to have been for the sum deposited in Court) was made to the proper person and was valid. He was of opinion that the Defendants were acting reasonably and in good faith, and that the Plaintiffs had ample opportunity of which they should have availed themselves of withdrawing the money deposited. In this view he modified the decree of the Subordinate Judge by depriving the Plaintiffs of the interest and costs on this amount.

The Plaintiffs preferred this Second Appeal.

Babus Monmatha Nath Mukherjee and Probodh Chandra Chatterjee for the Appellants.

Babu Surendra Nath Ray for Babu Baikuntha Nath Das for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Second Appeal refers only to the order of the lower Appellate Court refusing interest and costs upon a sum of 999 rupees deposited by the Appellants on the 14th April 1909. The plaint was originally filed on the 8th April in that year, but it was returned for amendment and was re-filed on the 16th April 1909. In the meantime, as we have seen, the Defendants deposited the money in Court and stated that they had tendered it to the manager and it had been refused. The money was certainly not all what was due, and it was nothing like what was due, for it has been found in the suit that over 2,000 rupees is due from the Defendants to the Plaintiffs. The deposit therefore was not a good deposit under sec. 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the Defendants therefore must fall back upon the tender to the manager. It has been held in Jagat Tarini v. Naba Gopal (1) that if the tenant is able to prove that he has made a valid tender which has been improperly refused and also that he has kept it good, he is not in any worse position than he would be in if he proves that he deposited it in Court. But the learned Subordinate Judge found that the tender was not a valid tender within the meaning of sec. 54 of the Bengal Tenancy Act ; and there can be no doubt that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in law in so holding. The whole of the money due on the kist must be tendered at the right time and at the right place to make the tender valid, and the section says nothing as to the person. Any officer of the zemindar authorised to receive money who happens to be in the village office certainly can receive it and can give a valid acquittance. But because a man happens to be the manager of the zemindari he cannot be compelled to take money wherever he may happen to be and at whatever time or place it may be offered. Moreover, he cannot be asked to accept a small proportion of the rent due as the whole amount.

We have therefore two separate considerations in the case, namely, that the deposit in Court was bad and the tender was bad, and these are questions of law and cannot, as the learned Judge seems to think, be dealt with as equitable matters. The learned Judge merely finds that the money was tendered to the proper person and he thinks that the Appellant acted reasonably and in good faith in this respect. But this is not law. In the case we have just referred to, Jagat Tarini v. Naba Gopal (1), the rule laid down in sec. 38 of the Contract Act was held to be perfectly good notwithstanding any hing contained in the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it was held that the tender to the eldest son of four joint sons in a Hindu family whose father had been recently deceased was a good tender to all the four. But the rules laid down in sec. 38 are in this case much stronger against the Defendant than the rules under the Bengal Tenancy Act; for it is laid down that the tender must be unconditional, must be made at a proper time and place and under such circumstances that the person to whom it is made may have a reasonable opportunity of ascertaining that the person by whom it is made is able and willing there and then to do the whole of what he is bound by his promise to do. If therefore sec. 38 of the Contract Act is relied on the Defendant is entirely out of Court, and we have seen that the law as laid down in the Bengal Tenancy Act is against him both as regards the alleged tender and as regards the deposit.

We therefore think that the order passed by the learned District Judge in the Court below must be set aside and that of the Subordinate Judge restored with proportionate costs, that is to say, the Appellants will be entitled to their full costs in the two lower Courts and to their costs on the value of this Appeal in this Court. We fix the hearing-fee at 2 gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL
No. 96 OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J. MOOKERJEE, J. 1913, Heard, 11 and 12, June. Judgment, 12, June.	SHIVA PROSHAD SAMANTA and ors., Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. GOSSAIN DAS DUTT and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Embankment Act (II of 1882), sec. 74—Apportionment of charges between zemindar and putnidar—Agreement by zemindar to indemnify putnidar in respect of such charges, if contrary to policy or void—Stipulation made before passing of statute, if abrogated—Suit for injunction against recovery—Cause of action—Apprehended breach of contract.

Where in a putni lease executed in 1870, it was stipulated that the zemindar shall pay "Government revenue, poolbundi and dak cesses, the putnidar having nothing to do with the same":

Held—That the stipulation had reference not merely to such poolbundi charges as were payable under statutes then in force, but also to similar charges imposed by the Embankment Act II of 1882.

That there is nothing in that Act to render the agreement contrary to the policy of the law or void for other reasons.

Where the Collector made an apportionment of embankment charges between the zemindar and the putnidar, refusing to give effect to the putnidar's plea of non-liability based on the above stipulation, and the putnidar sued for an injunction to restrain the zemindar from realising any share of those charges from him:

Held—That having regard to the wide powers of recovery of the amount to which the zemindar is entitled under sec. 74 of the Act under an apportionment order, such a suit was not premature.

That the zemindar having moreover admitted that he intended to take action notwithstanding the terms of the agreement, there was an apprehension of the breach of the contract justifying the institution of the suit.

This was an Appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent filed on the 1st of May 1911 against a decree of Mr. Justice Coxe, dated the 7th of April 1911, in Second Appeal No. 2071 of 1909, preferred on the 28th of September 1909, against the decree of Babu Ambica Charan Mukherjee, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Midnapore, dated the 12th of July 1909, modifying the decree of Babu Lall Behary Chatterjee, Munsif, 4th Court, of the place, dated the 9th of December 1908.

The material facts are set out in the judgment of COXE, J., which was as follows:—

COXE, J.—The Plaintiffs in this case are putnidars under the Defendants-Respondents and there is a stipulation in the putni that the zemindars shall pay the poolbundi cesses. Embankment charges were assessed by the Collector under the Bengal Embankment Act, 1882, and have been apportioned on the Plaintiffs as putnidars. The Plaintiffs have brought this suit for a declaration that they are not bound to pay these charges and that the orders of the Collector cannot be enforced and for an injunction against the Defendants from realizing these charges from them. The suit was decreed by the Munsif but dismissed, on appeal, by the Subordinate Judge. The Plaintiffs appeal to this Court.

Under sec. 54 of the Bengal Embankment Act, the whole sum assessed as embankment charges is payable to the Collector by the zemindars of the estates benefited. Under sec. 55, every zemindar is entitled to recover from the tenure-holders under him the sums apportioned to those tenures under sec. 59. This apportionment is made by the Collector after notice has been given under sec. 56 that an enquiry will be held for the purpose of apportioning amongst the zemindars and the tenure-holders the sums so payable; and sec. 59 enacts that the Collector shall charge or apportion the amount payable in respect of each estate upon the holders of the tenures therein rateably in the proportion of benefit received. When the apportionment has been completed, the Collector, under sec. 68, makes an order specifying the estates and tenures in respect of which the sums charged or apportioned are payable; and when that has been done, the Collector, under sec. 69, causes a copy of the said order to be published with a notice that the amounts apportioned on the tenure-holders are payable to the zemindars. Taking all these sections together, it is quite clear that the Collector is authorised to assess the embankment charges on tenures after due notice and that the tenure-holders are bound to pay those sums to the zemindars. There is no means by which Government can recover those charges from the tenure-holders.

The first point taken on behalf of the Appellants is that the Collector's orders apportioning the embankment charges on tenure-holders must be subject to any contract made between the tenure-holders and the zemindars; and that, if such an order is contrary to any such contract, it is a nullity. It is said that all these orders of the Collector must be construed as being passed on the assumption that there is no contract to the contrary. There is certainly nothing in the Act to support this view and I should have expected that, if this had been the intention of the Legislature, suitable words would have been introduced to indicate that the Collector's proceedings were subject to contracts between the parties. And that it was not the intention of the Legislature to make these orders so subject to contracts between the parties may be inferred from the arguments contained in the judgment of the Collector dated the 5th July 1904 on the objection of the present Plaintiffs to pay the charges. The Collector pointed out in that order that a contract of this nature might conceivably make the superior estate insolvent, unable to pay the charges itself, and unsaleable for arrears of such charges. In such a case, as the Government could not recover the charges from the tenure-holders, the result would be that they would not be collected at all. On these considerations, I am not at all prepared to accept the Plaintiffs' contention that, if the Collector's order under sec. 68 conflicts with a contract between the parties, it must be regarded as a nullity.

Secondly, it is argued that the Plaintiffs do not desire that the Collector's order should be set aside but merely that it should not be enforced as against them. This distinction is somewhat too fine for my appreciation. It seems clear that, if these embankment charges cannot be realized in accordance with the Collector's order, the Collector's order is to all practical intents and purposes set aside.

Thirdly, it is argued that the matter is concluded by the doctrine of res judicata; but I do not think that that contention can possibly succeed. The decision of the High Court which laid down that the zemindars would be bound to pay the poolbundi charges was passed in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 920 of 1880 and could not possibly conclude the Defendants in this case from pleading that they are not bound to pay the embankment charges assessed under an Act which had not been passed at the time of the previous decision.

The fourth point taken is that the Civil Courts are entitled to give relief under sec. 54 of the Specific Relief Act and that the present is a suitable case in which such relief should be given. No doubt, the Courts have such powers; but it appears to me that sec. 86 of the Embankment Act prevents any decree being given to the Plaintiffs in the present case. That section enacts that orders passed under sec. 68 (and I have no doubt whatever that the order now under criticism was passed under sec. 68) shall be final and not liable to be modified or altered otherwise than as expressly provided in this Act. I do not see that any advantage is gained by twisting the simple words of a statute and making them mean the precise opposite of what they appear to mean. I cannot hold that orders passed under sec. 68 are not final or are liable to be modified or altered at its discretion by a Civil Court under sec. 54 of the Specific Relief Act. The words seem to me to be perfectly simple and they cannot be evaded in this case without doing violence to the English language.

The view of the learned Subordinate Judge that a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs would interfere with the public duties of the embankment Collector has been criticized and it may not perhaps be sustainable. The effect of the orders of the embankment Collector is that the putnidars shall pay these charges to the zemindars and, if these charges are not paid, that default will not interfere with the duties of the embankment Collector, unless the zemindari estate is thereby rendered insolvent, a contingency which is hardly immediate enough to come within the scope of sec. 56, cl. (d) of the Specific Relief Act.

It appears to me that the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to modify or alter orders duly passed under sec. 68 of the Embankment Act and accordingly I think that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is right and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Babu Baidyanath Dutt (with him Babu Bhupendra Nath Ghosh) for the Appellants.—Under the stipulation in the lease, the putnidars are not liable for embankment charges. The Collector's order of apportionment cannot therefore bind them. The zemindar's right to recover such charges from subordinate tenure-holders is created by sec. 69 of Act II of 1882 (B. C.).

[JENKINS, C. J.—What proceeding would he have to take ?]

The zemindar can recover it as rent under sec. 74.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Is not your suit premature ?]

The zemindar tried to recover poolbundi by two previous suits, but failing therein, he got the Collector to make the present order declaring me liable. The Collector's order has hastened my suit.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Would not your proper course be to defend the zemindar's suit, when it is brought ?]

The zemindar means to enforce his order. I submit I come under sec. 54 of the Specific Relief Act. I am entitled to a declaration that I am not liable. The mere fact of the Collector's order cannot create against me a liability overriding the express contract between the parties. Reads the clause.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Does the contract cover the present charge ? The contract was in 1870, but the charge is created by the Act of 1882.]

The contract refers to poolbundi, which means charges for the construction, etc., of embankments. The previous Embankment Acts which were in force at the date of the lease also created these charges, though there might have been no provision for apportionment as now.

It is said that the Collector's order is final, but it is final only on the question of apportionment. There is nothing in the statute to forbid a contract like this between a zemindar and a putnidar. It is not opposed to public policy. In fact that was the law previous to the present Embankment Act.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Refers to a similar case as regards payments of cesses, viz., Ashutosh Dhar v. Amir Mollah (1).]

Lastly, I submit the present question is res judicata, as on the construction of this very lease, it was held by this Court in the previous suits of the zemindar, that the entire liability lay on the zemindar. See the judgment in S. A. 920 of 1880 (printed at p. 23 of the paper-book).

(1) 3 C. L. J. 337 (1900).

SHIVA PROSHAD SAMANTA v. GOSSAIN DAS DUTT.

Babu Nanda Lal Banerjee for the Respondent, submitted, first, that on the construction of the lease poolbundi did not include the present charge, and, secondly, that the Collector's order was final and conclusive. On the first point, reference was made to the previous Embankment Acts, Act XXXII of 1855 (India Council) and Act VII of 1866 (Bengal Council), in which there was no provision for the apportionment of the charge between zemindar and putnidar. The charge was wholly on the zemindar.

[JENKINS, C. J.—So that was the basis on which the contract was formed?]

A new liability was created by the later Act VI of 1873 (B. C.) under which poolbundi was for the first time made a charge on the putnidar and this provision was continued in the present Act II of 1882 (B. C.).

[JENKINS, C. J.—The charge was, therefore, now thrown on the putnidar contrary to the bargain of the parties.]

The word "poolbundi" in the lease referred to a different charge altogether from what arises under the present Act.

As to the second point, sec. 86 of the present Act, corresponding to sec. 60 of the old Act, made the Collector's order absolutely final.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Have you taken any steps to enforce the Collector's order?]

Not yet, but I intend to do so.

[JENKINS, C. J.—That is a very straightforward and very proper statement.]

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—This is a suit whereby the Plaintiffs seek to vindicate a right which they claim under a putni lease in their favour executed in 1870. By that document it was provided on the part of the Zemindar as follows :—"We (that is, the Zemindars) shall pay the Government revenue, poolbundi and dak cesses, you having nothing to do with the same." The Embankment Acts in force at that time were XXXII of 1835 (Government of India) and Act VII of 1866 (Government of Bengal) and for the purposes of this argument it has been assumed that the obligation in respect of embankment charges was on the Zemindars at that time. Whether that was under Act VII of 1866 in all cases we need not now determine, but we will assume the correctness of the view that the stipulation which I have read gave practical effect to the state of the law as it then stood. These two Acts have been repealed and that now in force is Act II of 1882 of the Bengal Legislature. There are provisions in that Act under which there can be an apportionment of embankment charges as between the Zemindar and his tenure-holders. There has been that which purports to be an apportionment under the Act and by it a certain burden in respect of poolbundi charges has been cast on the tenant. At the time of the proceedings before the Revenue Authority a protest was entered against this view on the strength of the stipulation in the putni lease of 1870. But the argument failed, and it was held that this made no difference for the purposes of the Collector's decision and arguments were advanced in the course of the decision to show how mischievous would be the result for which the Plaintiff claimed. It may be that the Collector merely had to apportion without regard to the contractual rights between the parties : but of this I am confident that he had no power to take away from the Plaintiff the benefit of any contractual right which he had against the Zemindar and that the Plaintiff is entitled to come to this Court for the purpose of having his contractual rights vindicated.

The first question then that we have to determine is whether this suit can be entertained. At one time I felt some doubt as to whether the suit was not somewhat premature, and whether the proper method of meeting any claim advanced by the Zemindar would not have been by defence to the suit. But any doubt on that score has been dissipated by a consideration of the provision contained in sec. 74, which vests in the Zemindar wide powers of recovery of the amount to which he is entitled under an apportionment order. He could possibly realise his claim without going to a Court, and therefore I felt it could be right for us to give protection to the Plaintiff now, if he is entitled to it. More than that, it has been very properly conceded before us that in this case the Plaintiff does intend to take action notwithstanding the terms of the agreement, so that the Plaintiff is within the provisions of the law which require that it should be shown that there is reason to apprehend the breach of the contract on which he relies. Therefore, I think the suit is properly conceived. The only question then is whether the Plaintiff has the contractual rights which he claims. The clause in the putni lease to which I have already referred is in wide terms and is in effect an indemnity against poolbundi charges. The first point, therefore, we have to consider is whether that in respect of which the Zemindar now intends to advance a claim is a poolbundi charge. Admittedly it is.

The next point for consideration is whether by reason of its being a poolbundi charge arising under an Act subsequent to the date of the putni it was outside the intention of the parties, so that, though covered by the words, it would not be fair to extend the agreement to this particular charge. There again, I think, there can be no doubt that the poolbundi charge with which we are concerned in this case is so similar to that which would have been in existence at the time of the putni lease that it is clear it was within the intention of the parties to include such a poolbundi as that with which we are now concerned. Indeed, the basis of the contract between them must have been that the putnidar was to be exempt from all charges to which the term poolbundi could reasonably be applied. Therefore, I think, this second point is established in the Plaintiff's favour and that the agreement extends to the present poolbundi charges though they arise under the Act of 1882. This view is, I think, supported by the decision of the High Court in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 920 of 1880, for it was there held that the agreement was operative, though prior to that suit Act VI of 1873 had come into operation and had superseded the previous Embankment Acts.

The final point is whether it is contrary to the policy of the law that we should enforce the agreement to which the parties came. I fail to see the fine distinction which embarrassed the learned Judge in reference to this point. The Government is in no way prejudiced by this contract between the Zemindar and the putnidar. It is merely a contract that the Zemindar will bear, as between him and the putnidar, certain charges. If the Government have any right against the property of the putnidar, this agreement would not prejudice in any way the assertion by the Government of its claim. I cannot bring myself to see the difficulty that there is in the Zemindar undertaking to discharge a burden in the place of the putnidar, in indemnifying the putnidar against this burden. Therefore, the final point, as appears to me, is also in the Plaintiff's favour, that is to say, there is nothing in the Act of 1882 that would render this agreement contrary to the policy of the law or void for other reasons.

To sum up, in my opinion the decree of the lower Appellate Court was erroneous, as was the judgment of Mr. Justice Coxe by which it was affirmed. The Munsif took a correct view.

We, therefore, restore the decree of the Munsif with this variation that we only grant an injunction restraining the Defendants from realising poolbundi and dak charges from the Plaintiffs in respect of the putni.

The Plaintiffs must receive from the Defendants their costs in all the Courts of Appeal as well as in the Court of the Munsif.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 39, r. 2—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 70—Temporary injunction—Order by Revenue Court, suit for setting aside—Competency of Civil Court to grant injunction—Temporary injunction if may be granted when perpetual injunction not sought for.

Although a decree may have been passed by a Revenue Court, when it is under execution in a Civil Court, proceedings may be stayed by the Civil Court if a suit has been brought for declaration that the decree was obtained by fraud or was made without jurisdiction and for a perpetual injunction to restrain the decree-holder from executing the decree.

In granting a temporary injunction the Court acts in aid of the legal right so that the property may be preserved in status quo.

Where the Plaintiffs sued for a declaration that a certain order by the Revenue Court was without jurisdiction, but did not ask for a perpetual injunction, it was not competent to them to ask for a temporary injunction during the pendency of the suit.

This was a Rule granted on the 5th of February 1912 against an order of J. C. Twidell, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Bhagalpore, dated the 18th of December 1911, reversing that of Babu Hem Chandra Mukherjee, Subordinate Judge, Monghyr, dated the 18th of November 1911.

The material facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Ganesh Dutt Singh for the Petitioner.

Babu Satish Chandra Ghose for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order by which the Court of Appeal below has discharged an order of the primary Court granting a temporary injunction. It appears that the landlord

JITLAL SINGH v. RAJA KAMALESWARI PROSAD.

Opposite Party obtained an order under sub-sec. (5) of sec. 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and proceeded to execute it by an application to the Civil Court. The Petitioner, thereupon, commenced a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a declaration that the order of the Revenue authorities had been passed without jurisdiction and was illegal and inoperative. During the pendency of this suit, an application was made under r. (2) of Or. XXXIX of the Code of 1908 for a temporary injunction to restrain the landlord from executing the order in question. The Court of first instance granted this application. Upon appeal, the District Judge has discharged the order on the ground that a Civil Court is not competent to stay execution of an order made by the Revenue authorities. In support of this view the District Judge has referred to the case of Onkar Singh v. Bhup Singh (1). It does not appear however to have been brought to his notice that this decision of the Allahabad High Court has not been accepted as well-founded by this Court in the case of Ram Lochan Singh v. Beni Prasad Kumri (2). This latter decision is an authority for the proposition that although a decree may have been passed by a Revenue Court, when it is under execution in a Civil Court proceedings may be stayed by the Civil Court if a suit has been brought for declaration that the decree was obtained by fraud or was made without jurisdiction and for a perpetual injunction to restrain the decree-holder from executing the decree. In the case before us, the ground assigned by the learned Judge for his order is therefore not well-founded. But it is clear that his order is right on the merits. An examination of the plaint shows that the suit is solely for declaration, there is no prayer for any consequential relief; the Plaintiffs do not ask for a perpetual injunction to restrain the decree-holder from executing the decree on the ground that the decree was made by the Collector without jurisdiction. An order for temporary injunction such as the Plaintiffs seek can under Or. 39, r. 2 of the Code of 1908 be sought only in aid of the prospective order for a perpetual injunction. If the Plaintiffs do not ask for a perpetual injunction, if therefore in the event of their success, they cannot obtain a decree for perpetual injunction it is clearly not competent to them to ask for a temporary injunction during the pendency of the suit. In granting a temporary injunction the Court acts in aid of the legal right so that the property may be preserved in statu quo [Saunders v. Smith (3), Hilton v. Granville (4), Harman v. Jones (5)]. Here, however, the Plaintiffs do not seek a permanent injunction in the suit and even if they are successful the Defendant will be free to execute the decree. They cannot on principle enjoin the Defendant temporarily when upon the disposal of the suit and dissolution of the temporary injunction the Defendant will be at liberty to proceed with execution. Under these circumstances we are of opinion that the District Judge rightly refused the application for injunction. But we do not express any opinion upon the questions whether the proviso to sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, or sub-sec. 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is a bar to the suit as framed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 145—Refusal of process against witness—Final order without jurisdiction.

Where in a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., the Petitioner applied for summons against a witness, a Sub-Inspector of Police, and the Magistrate made an order that the Sub-Inspector was to appear with his diaries, but on the date on which the case was to be heard the witness did not appear and on the Petitioner again applying for summons against him the Magistrate rejected the application remarking that the application was vexatious and ultimately passed the final order under sec. 145, Cr. P. C.:

Held—That the order under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., was made without jurisdiction.

This was a Rule granted on the 15th of April 1913 against an order of J. C. Dutt, Esq., Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Madaripur, dated the 20th of March 1913, declaring the Opposite Party under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., to be entitled to possession of the disputed land.

One Moharali, a tenant of the first party, lodged an information at the police station that some tenants of the second party had forcibly despossessed the tenants of the first party from a char where they had been living with their families. The Sub-Inspector in charge of the police station held an investigation and submitted a report that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace between the parties owing to the efforts of the first party to regain possession of the lands from which they had been dispossessed. Thereupon the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Madaripur drew up a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., in respect of the said char. After written statements were filed, the Petitioner second party applied for summons against the Sub-Inspector, and the Magistrate made an order that the Sub-Inspector was to come with his diaries but on the date which was fixed for the hearing of the case after several adjournments the Sub-Inspector did not appear and on the Petitioner applying for summons against him the Magistrate rejected the application as being vexatious, and after examining other witnesses on both sides made his final order declaring the first party to be entitled to possession of a portion of the disputed land and the second party of the remaining portion. Against this order the second party moved the High Court and obtained a Rule on the ground, that the Petitioner was not given an opportunity of examining the Sub-Inspector of Police and, secondly, that the judgment contained no finding of the fact of actual possession. The Magistrate in his explanation submitted: "The Sub-Inspector was not a material witness in the case. He had admittedly no knowledge as regards the actual possession. The case was already long pending. It was of no good to further adjourn the case for his evidence."

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri and Mr. A. K. Fuzlul Huq for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. L. Roy, Mr. K. Ahmed and Mr. Nuruddin Ahmed for the Opposite Party.

GAIJUDDI HOWLADAR v. AINUDDI HOWLADAR.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule was issued on the District Magistrate of Faridpur and the Opposite Party to show cause why the order passed under sec. 145 in this case should not be set aside on two grounds, first, that the Petitioner was not given an opportunity of examining the Sub-Inspector of Police; and, secondly, that the judgment contains no finding of the fact of actual possession.

It is not necessary to consider the second ground as this Rule must be made absolute on the first. Looking at the order-sheet of the Magistrate, we find that there was no proper reason for rejecting the Petitioner's prayer for the examination of the Sub-Inspector. The Sub-Inspector had been cited as a witness on behalf of the Opposite Party and afterwards as a witness for the Petitioner. On an application filed by the Petitioner on the 8th February asking for summons against the Sub-Inspector, the Magistrate recorded an order that the Sub-Inspector was to come with his diaries. After some adjournments in the case, on the date on which the case was to be heard, the Sub-Inspector did not appear, whereupon an application was made by the Petitioner to the Magistrate asking for summons against him. On this application, the Magistrate recorded an order which runs thus :—"This is simply vexatious. No process was asked for so long. Rejected." This order was clearly bad.

We think that the order under sec. 145 was a bad order and made without jurisdiction on the first of the two grounds mentioned in the petition.

The Rule is made absolute. The order under sec. 145 is set aside.

Rule made absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 202, 203, 476—Order of Magistrate taking cognizance making over case to another Magistrate for disposal after a local enquiry, if legal—Dismissal of complaint—Order for prosecution.

Where the Petitioner laid a complaint before the Magistrate against a police-officer charging him with various offences of wrongful confinement, extortion, mischief, &c., and the Magistrate who took cognizance of the case make it over to another Magistrate with a direction that the latter would make a local enquiry and then dispose of the case, and the Magistrate to whom the case was so made over made a local enquiry and after examining witnesses dismissed the complaint under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., and made an order under sec. 476 for the prosecution of the Petitioner under sec. 211, I. P. C.:

Held—That the order of the Magistrate before whom the complaint was laid was bad in directing the latter Magistrate to hold a local enquiry inasmuch as the Code of Criminal Procedure does not make any provision for such a course by a Magistrate to whom a case is made over for disposal.

On a consideration of the circumstances of the case the High Court set aside the orders under secs. 203, 476, Cr. P. C., and directed a further enquiry into the case.

This was a Rule granted on the 14th of March 1913 against an order of C. R. Mukerjee, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Jalpaiguri, dated the 24th of February 1913, dismissing the complaint of the Petitioner and directing his prosecution under sec. 211, I. P. C.

The Petitioner filed the following petition of complaint in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate of Jalpaiguri against the Sub-Inspector of Boda referred to below as accused No. 1 and others.

"In March last my antagonist made a complaint before the accused No. 1 against me and some other persons of killing a cow. In that case the accused No. 1 prayed for warrant against me but the case was dismissed after trial. In last January the other side brought a goat stealing case against my tenant Bhatchak Das and the accused No. 1 sent him up for trial. I looked after the case and gave evidence on behalf of my tenant. The case after trial was found to be false.

"That the accused out of malice and to commit mischief have damaged three of my huts by digging earth. They have demolished the steps and the mat walls.

"That they have further spoiled my paddy, dried rice and coarse rice and pulses by throwing them down on the floor and mixing them up.

"Finding no incriminating goods in my house the accused No. 3 suggested to accused No. 1 that I should be taken to the thana.

"That the accused No. 1 then took me alone elsewhere and proposed to release me if I could spend money and asked me to pay a sum of Rs. 200. Being afraid I paid them Rs. 100 on payment of which the accused left me.

"I therefore pray that the accused and his witnesses be summoned and that the case be enquired into and tried. During the time of the search I was kept outside under restraint and after the search the money was extorted from me putting me to fear."

The Deputy Magistrate examined the Petitioner on his complaint and recorded the following order:

"Babu C. R. Mukherji, 1st Class, will make a local enquiry and then dispose of the case."

Thereupon Babu C. R. Mukherji held a local enquiry, examined 17 witnesses for the prosecution and dismissed the complaint under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., and made an order under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., for the prosecution of the Petitioner under sec. 211, I. P. C. Against both these orders the Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained a Rule.

Mr. P. N. Dutt and Babu Hit Lal Guha for the Petitioner.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This was a Rule calling on the Deputy Commissioner of Jalpaiguri to show cause why the order complained of should not be set aside or why such other order should not be passed as to this Court may seem fit.

The Petitioner laid a complaint against the Sub-Inspector of Police charging him with various offences of wrongful confinement, extortion, mischief, etc., on which the Magistrate who took cognisance of the case made it over to Babu C. R. Mukerjee, a Magistrate holding first class powers, to make a local enquiry and then dispose of the case. Babu C. R. Mukerjee thereafter held a local enquiry, examined 17 prosecution witnesses and then passed an order dismissing the complaint under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., and directing under sec. 476 of that Code the prosecution of the Petitioner for an offence under sec. 211, I. P. C. Against that order, the Admission to the Inns of Court.

The Secretary to the Provincial Advisory Committee for Indian Students, Bengal, Mr. N. C. Sen, has sent to us the following information which will be of interest to Indian students who may be desirous of joining the Inns of Court in London for qualifying themselves for the English Bar.

"Three of the Inns of Court viz., Grey's Inn, Lincoln's Inn and the Middle Temple have raised the deposit payable by law students for admission from £50 to £100. This means that the payment on admission would be £140, £141-3*s.*-6*d*, £138-12*s.*-6*d.* in the the case of Lincoln's Inn, Middle Temple and Grey's Inn respectively. It is probable that in the case of Lincoln's Inn this regulation will not come into operation until the 1st January next year. So far as the other two Inns are concerned it applies immediately."

Besides the payment of the above fees Indian students will be required to read in barrister's chambers for qualifying themselves for enrolment in the High Court. This means another 100 guneas or £104. Then enrolment in the High Court costs Rs. 500 more and admission to the Calcutta Bar Library Rs. 1,000. All this together with the expenses incurred for three years' residence in England means in many cases a fortune frittered away and not to mvch useful purpose.

Laying of the foundation of the Behar High Court.

If the people of Behar want a High Court for the new Province, people of Bengal ought not surely to object to it. But we have all along been of opinion that the new Province formed by the combination of Behar, Orissa and a good slice of Bengal proper has not at all been a happy combination. If the Government of India had given a little more thought to the matter or had consulted people who are competent to give opinion on a question of this kind, a more homogeneous Province could have been carved out of the United Provinces and Behar, and then His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General would not have had to make the inconsistent speech that he did at the laying of the foundation stone of the High Court for the new Province. His Excellency while attempting to reconcile the too obvious anomalies of the new Province only brought them out in bolder relief.

For instance in saying that "it would be an administrative anomaly that its people should still have to carry on their litigation at a place beyond its limits where the obvious inconvenience of distance, cost and time are enhanced by the disabilities of a different atmosphere and a different vernacular," His Excellency, without intending it, emphasised the fact that a High Court at Patna would be an 'anomaly' for all the reasons above-stated so far as the people of Orissa, Dhalbham, Manbhum, the Bengalee speaking areas of Sontal Parganas, South Bhagalpur and Purnea are concerned. In the words of His Excellency, "the only difficulty of any magnitude that rises before us relates to the convenience of the people of Orissa," but, as we have just indicated, the inconvenience, which the people of the Bengalee speaking areas of Behar will be put to on account of "distance, cost and time, enhanced by the disabilities of a different atmosphere and a different vernacular," will not certainly be of any less magnitude. This reminds us of the singularly inconsistent argument of the late Sir (then Mr.) Herbert Risley's first Partition Resolution in which he urged in the same breath the cession of Ganjam to Orissa by reason of linguistic and ethnic ties and the severance of Eastern and Western Bengal in spite of such ties. With more care and thought the Government could have avoided anomalies of this kind and also much hardship to a large section of the community.

The Government of India confronted with the physical and linguistic barriers between the component parts of a heterogeneous Province, proposes to come to its rescue by suggesting that Judges should go on circuit in the new Province. This practically amounts to the adoption of our suggestion, without its substance, that constituted as the Province is at present, the only means by which justice could be brought nearer home to the people of the Province is by means of the circuit system. If the proposed High Court is to send out Judges on circuit to Orissa and very likely to Chota Nagpur, we cannot divine what harm could have been done to the people of Behar if some Benches of the Calcutta High Court, which is independent of the Local Government, were to sit at Patna. It would, to our mind, have been ever so much more preferable to have the Benches at Patna changed, say, every three months by Judges of the Calcutta High Court and thus avoid even the remote chance of their acquiring any local prejudice. However, we shall be content to wait and watch the course of this new experiment and wish our brethren of Behar every good luck. As for the people of Bengal, their only regret is the dismemberment of the Calcutta High Court to a certain extent. But it is not even 16 years now since we had thirteen Judges and even then the members of the Calcutta Bar and the Vakils got on very well. In fact, the laying of the foundation stone of the Behar High Court has caused no stir in professional circles in Calcutta.

Imperial Circuit of the Privy Council.

We are glad to find that the English Law Journal endorses our view that the chief utility of the Privy Council to the Empire consists in its being a tribunal which can view questions in a spirit of detachment and without any local prejudice and that its usefulness will be much impaired by its going on circuit all over the Empire. Considering also the dimensions of the Empire we wonder how it would be practicable not only to require a fair number of the Lords of Appeal to sit in London but also to sit simultaneously or even at different times in the different parts of the Empire. When the scheme has been received spontaneously both in London and here as impracticable, we are sure the Lord Chancellor will before long be convinced that it is so.

No better tribunal for the determination of a constitutional question can be imagined than the body of distinguished jurists who sit in Downing Street, far removed from the political influences that may prevail or the passions that may have been aroused in the colony where the question arose, If Lord Haldane's dream of an Imperial Assize were to be realised, it would be necessary at least to provide that cases involving constitutional issues should, as heretofore, be heard in the capital of the Empire.

The Lord Chief Justice and religious liberty.

We have in these columns already observed that the appointment of the present Lord Chief Justice of England indicates how the cause of religious liberty has triumphed in England within recent memory and also how racial prejudice has been relegated to the back ground in the conferment of the highest appointments to the most deserving subject of His Majesty. It is time that the same spirit should pervade the whole Empire. The reference to this question made by the Lord Chief Justice in his Guildhall Speech is both instructive and interesting.

I cannot address you here to-night in the City without recalling that I should not be here, occupying this position at this moment, if it were not for the great struggles of the City—now so many years ago—in the cause of religious liberty I should be ungrateful indeed if I allowed this opportunity to pass without reminding you that, first of all, it was the City that insisted upon members of my community being members of your Corporation And it was the City that led the struggle for representation, again by members of my community in the House of Commons. If I have strayed for a moment into those paths which, perhaps, are not peculiarly appropriate for the toast to which I am responding, it is because I should think that I were false to everything that is within me if I did not give utterance to these sentiments remembering as I do that memories so quickly fade, and that, where a whole nation now agrees that there should be the fullest religious liberty and toleration, that was not the case when the City fought the battle which placed me here.

The Lord Chief Justice and the Bench and Bar.

The portion of the Lord Chief Justice's speech relating to the relationship of the Bench and Bar in England is no less interesting.

I am privileged to speak for the Judges. I know them from my observation at the Bar more than in my association with them as Judges I know them from practising before them for so long, and it is, perhaps, for that reason that I may respond for them with less restraint, as I am accustomed, or have hitherto been accustomed, to take my place at the Bar, where there was greater freedom of expression, where impartiality was not a virtue, and silence was not golden. Now, in the very fact of which I am an illustration, at the Bar yesterday on the Bench to-day; at one moment fighting with or against opponents at the Bar, who never become enemies but only opponents, and the next either addressing them or being addressed on the Bench; where we know all their qualities; where, when I was at the Bar I used to say I knew their defects, and where, now I am on the Bench, though I am sure I shall not hear it, I know there will be many at the Bar who know my defects. In responding for the judges, I am privileged to say, from the little that I have yet seen, that it is indeed an honour to associate with them in the dispensation of justice.

The Lord Chief Justice on justice in haste.

We hear a great deal about the delays in the High Court of Calcutta. It is interesting therefore to note the views of the Lord Chief Justice on the question of the delays in the King's Bench Division of the High Court in England. His Lordship responding to the toast on behalf of the Bench said :—

I might be tempted to indulge in some speculation as to the result of the Royal Commission which His Majesty appointed to inquire into the causes of delay in the King's Bench Division, but I shall not attempt to do so I am quite certain that that Commission will have laboured to produce recommendations which we shall consider with the utmost respect—recommendations and views which I know that my brother Judges will attempt, not only to consider, but to give effect to if possible—and that the only view which they would put forward at this moment is that the Judges of England are animated by one single purpose—to serve the highest public interests of the State, and to do what in them lies to promote the course of justice, and in that way to do good and satisfy the public demands of the community. I know very well it is easy to criticise Judges, but it should always be remembered that it is the function of the Judges who preside in the Law Courts to interpret the laws and administer them, and that they must leave the function of making the laws to Parliament which is responsible. Perfection can never be attained by human beings, but we can labour, as I believe we have laboured and as I am sure Judges will labour in the future, to make justice swift, and yet not hurried—for justice in haste is, in my opinion, justice in jeopardy. Above all, whilst administering justice and passing judgment upon actions of men we shall always remember that justice is never less in peril than when it is tempered by mercy.

It must be for keeping on the safe side that His Lordship has been tempering mercy with justice. We have seen that sitting in the Court of Criminal Appeal the Lord Chief Justice has been giving effect to extenuating circumstances for the reduction of sentences.

The Attorney-General on misconceptions regarding the Bar.

The Attorney-General, in responding to the toast on behalf of the Bar at the Guildhall banquet said :—

The profession for which he spoke was, of all professions, the most constantly misunderstood. There were still some deluded persons who regarded a barrister as one who earned his living by fomenting strife and who took peculiar pleasure in bamboozling juries and misleading Judges by the exercise of acumen almost diabolic, stimulated by the payment of fees entirely extortionate. In every particular that picture was untrue. So far from strife being promoted by the practice of advocacy, more quarrels were settled, more controversies were closed, and more reconciliations were effected within the boundaries of the Temple and of Lincoln's Inn than in the whole of the United Kingdom besides This country had evolved a system by which Judges, who were themselves trained at the Bar, expected to receive from the advocates who practised before them the contentions appropriate to the case presented with fidelity to their clients, with fairness to their adversaries, and with candour to the tribunal itself. That was why barristers claimed, in some measure, themselves to be the instruments of justice. That was why, by the ancient tradition of that banquet, the Bench and the Bar were coupled in a single toast.

LAYING OF THE FOUNDATION-STONE OF THE HIGH COURT IN BEHAR AND ORISSA.

At the laying of the foundation-stone of the Patna High Court His Excellency the Viceroy said :—"The ceremony that I have been asked to perform to-day is one to which I set my hand with no small feeling of solemnity, for never have I been called upon to execute a task which reminds me so forcibly of that double character I have the distinguished privilege of bearing as the head of the Executive Government of India, and the personal representative of that most gracious sovereign from whom all judicial jurisdiction is derived and in whose name all justice is administered. The history which has led up to the laying of this foundation-stone is within the knowledge of you all, and I think you will agree that when once it has been determined that Bihar and Orissa should be promoted to the status of a separate province, it would be an administrative anomaly that its people should still have to carry on their litigation at a place beyond its limits where the obvious inconveniences of distance, cost and time are enhanced by the disabilities of a different atmosphere and a different vernacular. The only difficulty of any magnitude that rises before us relates to the convenience of the people of Orissa. After mature consideration my Government have come to the conclusion that the most effective device for meeting the case will be the establishment of a circuit system which will not only bring the administration of justice to the very doors of the people, but the Court will be brought in the closest touch with a portion of their jurisdiction where the conditions are in many instances peculiar and different from those of the rest of the Province I am pleased to be able to announce that in according his approval to the creation of a new High Court for the Province of Bihar and Orissa the Secretary of State has also agreed to the establishment of a circuit system for the benefit of Orissa."

His Excellency also laid the foundation stone of the New Legislative Council Chamber. The Viceroy in the course of his address said —

"I lay this stone in the knowledge that on this spot will rise a building worthy of the great uses to which it is destined to be put, and I trust that the successors of the present Legislative Councils will bring to their deliberations within its portals such sense of dignity and responsibility, such ripeness of judgment that from the conflict of jarring interests and clashing opinions from which we can never expect and hardly hope to be free, may emerge decisions and measures devised to advance in the highest possible degree the enlightenment and prosperity of the people of this Province"

(CIVIL.)

Limitation, restitution of conjugal rights.

MAHOMED v. SAKINABAI, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 393.

The Plaintiff served his wife with a notice demanding restitution of conjugal rights. This demand was refused on the 19th July 1906 but the Plaintiff took no action for more than two years. On the 16th June 1911 after the passing of the new Limitation Act which contains no Article prescribing a special period for suits for restitution the Plaintiff sent a fresh notice to his wife and on her noncompliance with it filed his suit on the 20th June 1911.

Held—That under the provisions of sec. 4 and Act 35 of the Limitation Act of 1877 the Plaintiff's suit was barred and the new Limitation Act could not be invoked in aid.

Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), sec. 2—Agriculturist, meaning of.

BHIKHA v. RAICHAND, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 398.

Any one who ordinarily engages personally in agricultural labour within certain specified limits is an agriculturist irrespective of the proportion which his strictly agricultural income may bear to any other income accruing to him.

Grant of land for reciting Puran in a temple.

MADHWACHAR v. SHRIDHAR, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 409.

A hereditary office of vritti for the reciting of Purans in a certain temple was created and certain lands were assigned as remuneration therefor.

Held—That the lands so granted were not resumable.

Where there is an interest in land coupled with a duty and the grant is not forthcoming so that its actual terms may be known it must always be a matter of great difficulty and no more than a mere conjecture to decide whether the interest was so coupled with the duty that the latter could confidently be said to have been the sole motive and condition of the former.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), sec. 60—Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

NARAYAN ANANDRAM v. GOWBAI, I. L. R. 37 415.

An agriculturist in order to resist the application of the general rule laid down in the Civil Procedure Code, sec. 60, must show that he belongs to the privileged class so as to render sec. 22 of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act applicable to his case.

Lis pendens.

ISHWAR LINGO DESAI v. DATTU GOPAL DESAI, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 427.

A covert dealing with property in suit pendente lite by any party to the suit cannot possibly cast any duty or obligation on the opposite party.

It is a part of a litigant's right so far as the subject-matter and conduct of the suit are concerned to know precisely where he stands. He is entitled to know who his opponents are and when that has been definitely and finally ascertained to insist that no dealing on their parts with the property in suit shall compel him to go further afield and bring in new parties who but for such dealing could have had no locus standi at all.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), sec. 104 (b)—Appeal.

RAGHAWENDRA [illegible], I. L. R. 37 Bom. 442.

Under cl. (b) of sec. 104 of the Civil Procedure Code there is an appeal against an order directing an award to be filed.

Where an award dealt, among other things, with manpan, matters relating to dignity and so forth, matters of a kind such that the Civil Courts have no jurisdiction to entertain suits arising out of disputes regarding them.

Held—That the award was not to be rejected on that ground.

Mortgage—Auction purchase—Admission by mortgagor of receipt of consideration.

BAKSHI RAM v. LILADHAR, I. L. R. 35 All. 353.

An admission as to the receipt of the consideration made by the mortgagor in the mortgage deed and again before the registering officer is admissible in evidence against the purchaser of the mortgaged property at an auction sale.

When such mortgagor was the father in a joint Hindu family and what was purchased was the right, title and interest of the father only.

Held—That the purchaser was not entitled to raise the question of the validity of the mortgage.

Secs. 69, 70 Evidence Act—Mortgage deed—Attesting witness—Proof.

GOBAR DHAN DAS v. HORI LAL, I. L. R. 35 All. 365.

Three illiterate persons executed a mortgage deed by affixing their marks thereto. All three of them and all the attesting witnesses to the deed died before the suit on the mortgage was brought. The evidence adduced to prove the mortgage consisted of (1) the statement of a witness who claimed to be acquainted with the handwriting of two of the attesting witnesses, (2) a deed of usufructuary mortgage executed by one of the executants of the mortgage in suit and by the representatives of the two other executants which recognised the genuineness of the mortgage in suit, (3) a deed of sale executed by the representatives or some of the representatives of the executants of the deed in suit which recognised the genuineness of the said usufructuary mortgage.

Held—That the evidence adduced did not comply with sec. 69 of the Evidence Act and the mortgage deed was not legally proved.

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 20, r. 2—Judgment, delivering of, by successor in office.

BASANT BEHARI GHOSHAL v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, I. L. R. 35 All. 368.

Or. 20, r. 2 provides that a Judge may pronounce a judgment written but not pronounced by his predecessor.

AN EPITOME OF LEADING CASES ON EQUITY. By W. H. H. Kelke, M. A., Bar-at-Law. Third edition. Messrs. Sweet and Maxwell, Ld., London. Price 6s.

This work is based on White and Tudor's classical work but all the same it is not a slavish summary. The author has not followed the alphabetical arrangement but has re-classified the case law according to the subjects, such as Trusts, Mortgage, Specific Relief, Fraud, Infants, &c. Although the book is intended for students as an introduction to the study of White and Tudor's work, it may with advantage be glanced over even by practitioners, as only the simplest cases are given for illustrating the principle and all complications have been avoided. The work is not in the form of a summary of cases but in that of propositions of law explained and illustrated by cases. In this edition reference has been made to the latest edition of White and Tudor and the author has used his discretion in leaving out or replacing references to older cases by more recent ones.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—In re Allsop. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES HAMILTON AND SWINFEN EADY. 20th October 1913.

Trustees, how far protected by the Statute of Limitation—Court's discretion to relieve a trustee when he paid money under an erroneous construction of the will, discussed.

The Appellant was a trustee under a certain will. The trustees under the terms of that will made payments to some legatees. The will was subsequently construed by the Court, and it was discovered that the said payments ought not to have been made. The Respondent brought the present suit claiming that the trustee ought to replace and make good the moneys found due on taking accounts. The trustees pleaded the Statutes of Limitation. The Court below allowed the claim against the trustee personally but on appeal the trustee was exonerated.

The MASTER OF THE ROLLS said that the Defendants claimed the benefit of sec. 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, in respect of any breach of trust more than six years before the issue of the writ, but in his opinion this defence failed. Sub sec. 1 of that section dealt with two cases—(a) where an existing statute would be available but for the fact of the fiduciary relation; and (b) where no existing Statute of Limitations applied. In his opinion the present case fell under (b) and not under (a). If the case fell within sub-section (b) it was clear that the statute would not avail because the proviso at the end said that the statute should not begin to run against any beneficiary unless and until the interest of such beneficiary was an interest in possession. In the present case the Plaintiff's interest was not in possession until 1908, so that the statute was no bar.

The Appellants then contended that sec. 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, gave the Court jurisdiction to relieve them from personal liability for the breach of trust, and that the circumstances were such that the Court ought in its discretion to exercise the jurisdiction. The Respondents contended that the section applied only to a case where the breach of trust arose from some executive or administrative blunder, and not to a case where money was paid to a person not entitled according to the true construction of the will. The point thus raised was of the utmost importance. Approaching the matter apart from authority, his Lordship could see no ground for narrowing or limiting the application on the wide words of the section. The statute was designed to protect honest trustees, and it ought not to be construed in a narrow sense. He shrunk from holding that, where trustees had divided an estate between A and B after taking competent advice that A and B were alone entitled, they could not plead the section in answer to a subsequent claim by C. So to hold would render the relief given by the section almost nugatory. The decision of Mr. Justice Kekewich in Davis v. Hutchings ([1907] 1 Ch, 356) might be right upon the facts of that particular case, but the general principles laid down by that learned Judge at p. 365 could not be supported. In his opinion, the case of The National Trustees Company of Australasia v. General Finance Company of Australasia ([1905] A. C., 373) was an authority that the Court had jurisdiction to relieve when payment had been made to a wrong person. Mr. Justice Parker in Re Mackay ([1911] 1 Ch. 307) used language which his Lordship desired to adopt—"If an ordinary business man might reasonably entertain a particular view of the construction of the instrument and the action of the trustee would have been justified if that view had been the true one, that trustee cannot be said to have acted unreasonably merely because this view of the construction of the instrument is wrong. Even when a trustee has distributed an estate on an erroneous construction of a will he has been relieved under the Act." It might be that there was no reported case in which this had been done, but in the opinion of all the members of the Court this might be done in a proper case. Mr. Justice Warrington had held that the Act had no application where a trustee had misconceived his duty and paid money to a person not entitled. With great respect he thought that the learned Judge was wrong in this. The jurisdiction was from its very width one which must be exercised with great caution. It certainly was not enough for a trustee to say "I thought A B entitled and I paid him accordingly." He could not be considered to have acted reasonably if he had neglected to obtain skilled advice. In considering what was reasonable regard must be had to the estate of which he was trustee. In a large estate it might be only reasonable that he should consult counsel of the first rank or apply by originating summons for the direction of the Court, whereas it would not be reasonable to insist upon all this where the estate was small. Applying these principles to the circumstances of the present case, and having regard to the perfect honesty of the transaction, his Lordship thought that the Court was justified in exercising the jurisdiction conferred by the section and relieving the Defendants from the breach of trust committed by their testator and to a small extent by themselves.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION. The King v. Simpson and others. Before JUSTICES RIDLEY SCRUTTON AND BAILHACHE. 23rd October 1913.

The practice of the English Courts is that a prisoner who has once stood in peril and been acquitted, will not be tried again for the same offence.

This was a rule calling upon the Respondents to show cause why an order of acquittal should not be quashed. The Respondents, who were Justices, tried two miners for an offence under the Coal Mines Act, 1911. The Justices acquitted the accused. It was subsequently discovered that one of the Justices was not qualified to try and for that reason it was contended that the acquittal was bad for want of jurisdiction. The Court discharged the rule. MR. JUSTICE RIDLEY said.—

In the case of Reg v. Duncan, 7 Q. B. D. 198, Lord Coleridge said :—"The practice of the Court has been settled for centuries and is that in all cases of a criminal kind where a prisoner or Defendant is in danger of imprisonment, no new trial will be granted if the prisoner or Defendant, having stood in that danger, has been acquitted." He thought that was a principle that the Court ought to be slow to transgress. It was true that in the present case the consequences might not be so serious as they might be in other cases. But the principle was one of great importance, and if they made an exception in this case it might be sought to be extended in other cases. If a person had stood in danger and been acquitted the Court could not interfere with that acquittal. The Coal Mines Act, 1911, provided that where proceedings were taken for offences under that Act a man employed in a mine should not, except with the consent of both parties to the case, act as a member of the Court. That was not the place to criticize the Act, although one might say that the Legislature were cutting out all persons who knew anything about the working of mines. One of the Justices sitting in this case was employed in a mine and therefore disqualified. No objection was taken at the time, and the proceedings ended in an acquittal. In those circumstances had the person who had been acquitted stood in peril? Upon that question the decision in Rex v. Justices of Galway, No. 2 (1906) Ir Rep. II, 499, was in point, although it was not binding upon that Court. In his Lordship's opinion the men in the present case did stand in peril of conviction, the conviction being voidable and not void, and therefore the acquittal could not be quashed.

Messrs. Sankey, K. C. and Trotter shewed cause.

Messrs. Thomas, K. C., and Higgins in support of the Rule.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION. Nicholls v. Evans. Before MR. JUSTICE CHANNELL. 29th October 1913.

Gaming debts paid by crossed cheque—Held, that the loser could not recover.

This was an action in which the Plaintiff sued to recover moneys from the Defendant. The parties made bets and the Plaintiff lost, and paid the Defendant by crossed cheques. The Defendant endorsed them to his bankers who collected the amount. It was contended for the Plaintiff that the Defendant's' bank were the holders of the cheques within the Act of 5 and 6 Wm. IV., ch. 41. The learned Judge found against the Plaintiff. He said :—

They started with the fact that as a rule bets were void and a document given in payment of a bet was given without consideration, but it seemed that the Act of 5 and 6 Wm. IV., c. 41, introduced a new matter and made them not merely void but illegal. If a person made a bet and, having lost, paid in cash, he could not recover the money. That was agreed to be the law. If that was the case it was rather ridiculous that it should make any difference if the person who had lost happened to pay by the machinery of a cheque, and where a cheque was the mere machinery by which payment was made the position as between the parties was exactly the same as if the loser had paid by any other machinery. He wondered what would be the case if the loser paid by a bank note, which in form was a promissory note and which was certainly negotiable. Could it be suggested that if the loser paid by a bank note he could recover the money, but that if he paid in sovereigns he could not? It was said that sec. 2 of 5 and 6 Wm. IV., c. 41, applied to the present case, and upon that section the whole of the argument addressed to him had been based. "Holder" there meant a holder deriving his title from the person to whom the bill was originally given and was intended to distinguish that person from the person to whom it was originally given. If that were the case the whole matter was in accordance with justice and common sense. If a person had given a cheque, note, or bill for the consideration mentioned in the section—namely, for the payment of bets—he could stop it and refuse to pay it at any time before it was actually paid and the transaction became a completed transaction. That being so, if the cheque were paid over to an indorsee he could be compelled to pay that indorsee if he was innocent, but as between himself and the payee of the cheque he ought to be placed in the same position as if the transaction had been an incomplete one, so, that he could stop the cheque. But if the machinery had gone through and the person named as the payee on the cheque had been paid there was no conceivable reason why the person paying should get the money back. The only difficulty in the case arose from the fact that these cheques were crossed by the Plaintiff, and made payable to the Defendant or his order. As they were crossed the Defendant could only get paid through the machinery of paying them into his bank, the bank being employed to collect them as his agent. If in the present case the payment had been made to the bank in the character of holders in their own right and not in the character of agents' for the Defendant there would have been some doubt whether the statute might not have applied, and if it had been proved that the Defendant's account at the bank was overdrawn possibly the statute might have applied because the bank might then have been the holders of the cheque. No proof that this was the case had been given, and upon the facts before him he drew the inference that the bank collected the money for the Defendant, the payee of the cheque, and upon that view the bank was not the indorsee, holder, or assignee of the cheque within the meaning of the statute, and the statute did not apply so as to make the sum sued for recoverable by the Plaintiff.

Messrs. Haldenstein, K. C., and Moses for the Plaintiff.

Messrs Hemmerde, K. C., and Rowen Hamilton for the Defendant.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD AND SHARFUDDIN, JJ. IN THE MATTER OF THE PETITION OF SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA. 26th November 1913.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 205—Personal attendance in Court, exemption from.

In a case under the Bengal Municipal Act pending in the Court of the Cantonment Magistrate of Barrackpore against the Petitioner, an order was made requiring the personal attendance of the Petitioner in Court. Against this order the Petitioner moved the High Court.

Mr. J. N. Roy, with Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterji, for the Petitioner.—The Petitioner is a member of the Imperial Council. He is also a member of the Bengal Council. He is the owner of several houses within the Barrackpore Cantonment. He was asked to remove some rubbish and the Petitioner referred it to his agent at Barrackpore. These proceedings were instituted against him and in these proceedings the Magistrate has made the order complained of.

Mr. Roy.—On two previous occasions we made such applications and twice we had to come to the High Court to have the order of the Magistrate set aside.

HOLMWOOD, J.—A gentleman of the position of the Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjea ought not to be called upon to appear in person in a Municipal case.

Their Lordships passed the following order:—

We would point out to the Magistrate that it is his bounden duty to allow a legal representative to appear in a case of this kind should any application under sec. 205, Cr. P. C., be made before him to do so. Even if the applicant did not appear personally to-morrow (the date fixed for hearing) but had a competent legal representative present in attendance to represent him, the authority of the case of Durga Das Rakhit v. Naresh Chandra Sen, I. L. R. 27 Cal. 985, is clear that no criminal proceeding could follow; and we can hardly imagine that the learned Magistrate would proceed to enforce personal attendance in a case of this nature.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before IMAM AND CHAPMAN, JJ. REV. NO. 1525 OF 1913. HIRU BALDEO, Petitioner v. THE DISTRICT BOARD OF MANBHUM, Opposite Party. 26th November 1913.

District Board Bye law (Manbhum), sec. 2 (2)—Encroachment of road—Hanging verandah if an encroachment.

The Petitioner was convicted by a Magistrate exercising second class powers under sec. 2 (2) of the Manbhum District Board Bye laws for having encroached on the District Board road by putting up a hanging verandah and was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50. Against the conviction and sentence the Petitioner appealed to the Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum who dismissed the appeal. The Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained a rule on the ground that the construction of a hanging verandah does not amount to an encroachment and was not found to have resulted in any obstruction to traffic or inconvenience to passengers.

Their Lordships after hearing both sides discharged the Rule holding that a hanging verandah like the one in question in the present was an encroachment within the meaning of sec. 2 (2) of the District Board Bye laws.

Babu Bepin Chandra Mullick for the Petitioner.

Babu Atulya Charan Bose for the Opposite Party.

Rule discharged.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CARNDUFF AND RICHARDSON, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1839 OF 1910. GURU CHARAN SHAHA, Defendant, Appellant v. SHEBAIT OF THE DEITY ISHVAR NARSINGH JIU AND OTHERS—Plantiffs, Respondents. Heard, 9th November. Judgment, 26th November 1913.

Indian Limitation Act (XV of 1877), sec. 19—Right, admission of—Inference—Kabuliyat—Acknowledgment of liability.

Plaintiff, as shebait of Thakur Narsingh Jiu, brought this suit in respect of a piece of land between the Thakur's Akhra and the present Municipal road. Plaintiff alleged that that piece of land always formed a part and parcel of the Akhra and was in possession as such for more than 12 years before suit. The Defendant with the permission of the pujari Mahant at first erected a ghar towards the north side of the disputed land about 10 or 11 years ago, then about 2 or 3 years ago he erected another hut to the south of ghar: again in 1913 Magh or Falgun the Defendant forcibly erected a ghar on the southern portion of the disputed land. Hence the suit for declaration of title and for recovery of possession of the land in suit by removing the structures erected by the Defendant. The Defendant denied Plaintiff's right to sue as shebait, denied Narsingh Jiu's title to the land in suit and pleaded limitation.

The Akhrabari was divided in two by a path. There was dispute as to the northern portion upon which a hut stood. In 1908 the shebait sued to eject the Appellant. The suit would be out of time unless a kabuliyat executed in 1897 by the Appellant contained what amounted to an acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of sec. 19 of the Limitation Act. The Court of first Instance held that it did not, but the lower Appellate Court took the opposite view.

The kabuliyat in question was executed by the Appellant in favour of certain members of the family of the Nawab of Dacca, who had no concern with either the suit or the Akhrabari. It related to several plots of land lying to the east of the road which ran along the eastern side of the Akhrabari, and, in a Schedule annexed to it, it described the two plots furthest south in the following terms:—"1 North of the khal of Tevar Bazar, east of the road to the karsa lands of my jama, mufafat, your khas tenant Akamaddi and of the Akhra lands of Narsingh Jiu &c."

The Appellant purchased some land from Akamaddi in 1894 and those lands were beyond and immediately to the north of Akhrabari.

Held—If a person admits a right, it is a necessary implication that he also admits the legal sequences of that right; so that where a person admitted that land of which he was in possession at the time was the property of another, he admitted that he was liable to be made to restore it to that others.

An acknowledgment, to whomsoever made, if it be an acknowledgment pointing with reasonable certainty to the liability in dispute or the right out of which that liability arises as a legal consequence, is an "acknowledgment of liability" within the meaning of sec. 19 of the Limitation Act.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Gopal Chunder Das for the Appellant.

Babus Jogesh Chunder Roy and Akshay Kumar Banerjee for the Respondents.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CARNDUFF AND RICHADSON JJ. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No 63 OF 1910. DWARKA NATH SEN GUPTA AND ANOTHER, Claimant No. 2, Appellants. v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND RAHIM BUKSH AND OTHERS, Respondents. 27th November 1913.

Agreement, construction of—Acquisition of land—Right to compensation.

The only question raised by the Appeal was as to the construction of an agreement between the Appellant, a landlord, and his lessee. The terms of the agreement were that, in the event of any acquisition of the land by the Municipality or by any Local Self-Government institution, the compensation awarded should go to the lessor. In the present case, the acquisition was by the Government of Bengal for the purpose of a Mahomedan hostel which it was proposed to establish.

It was contended by the Appellant that the parties could not have intended to limit the agreement in that way.

Held, that the words expressly so limited it.

In construing a deed the question always is, what is the meaning of what the parties have said, and not what did the parties mean to say.

Monypenny v. Monypenny (9 H. L. 114 at p. 146) followed.

Babu Gunada Churn Sen for the Appellants.

Babu Ram Churn Mitra for the Respondents.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

MAHOMED IMAMUDDIN v. DEBENDRA NATH.

Petitioner moved this Court and a Rule was accordingly issued in the terms mentioned above.

We notice that the order of the Magistrate before whom the complaint was laid was bad in directing Babu C. R. Mukerjee to hold a local enquiry inasmuch as the Code of Criminal Procedure does not make any provision for such a course by a Magistrate to whom a case is made over for disposal. It is quite clear that the provisions of sec. 202, Cr. P. C., have been misunderstood and consequently misapplied. The attention of the Magistrates to irregularities of this sort has, on many previous occasions, been drawn by this Court but it seems that Magistrates yet indulge in mistakes of this kind which have more or less become common in the practice of law of Criminal Procedure in the mofussil.

The Petitioners in this case complain that the order of Babu C. R. Mukerjee is wrong for many reasons. We have no desire to discuss the errors of that Magistrate in coming to the conclusion at which he arrived because we apprehend that it is possible that by any expression of opinion as regards the errors in the judgment, we may be causing some apprehension in the mind of the Magistrate who has to try this case as to what our own inclinations are on the general merits of the case. We are satisfied that the order of the Magistrate is not proper. The case against the Sub-Inspector may or may not be true. That will rest on the evidence that may be produced at the trial. All that we are concerned with at the present stage is to see whether the evidence produced before the Magistrate is or is not sufficiently strong to warrant the issue of process against the accused for his trial. The Magistrate's order which is a lengthy one leads us to hold that this is not a case in which an order under sec. 203 dismissing the complaint could be properly passed.

We, therefore, make the Rule absolute and direct the Magistrate to hold a further enquiry into this case according to law. The prosecution of the Petitioner under sec. 211 is consequently set aside.

We have no doubt that the learned Deputy Commissioner will consider the desirability of this case being heard by some Magistrate other than Babu C. R. Mukerjee. The case is of some importance affecting the conduct of a public servant against whom very serious charges are laid by a citizen living in his jurisdiction. While the public servant is entitled to every protection against false charges being laid against him, a citizen living within the jurisdiction of that public servant is equally entitled to every protection from his aggressions or oppressive acts. The Deputy Commissioner may consider perhaps the desirability of trying the case himself if his work permits him sufficient leisure to do so. We give no direction in this matter. A request has been made by the Petitioner that the case may be directed to be tried by the Deputy Commissioner. We leave it to the discretion of the Deputy Commissioner who will excercise it as the circumstances of the case may require.

Rule made absolute.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF SEYCHELLES.]

LORD DUNEDIN.
LORD SHAW.
LORD MOULTON.
SIR SAMUEL GRIFFITH.
1913,
5, November.

LOUIS EDOUARD LANIER
v.
THE KING.

Leave to appeal to the Privy Council in criminal cases, when may be given—Invasion of liberty and just rights of a citizen—Embezzlement—Criminal and civil liability, distinction between—Costs against Crown in criminal appeal.

The Appellant who was a member of a firm was authorised by the guardian of two minors by a power-of-attorney to act for the guardian in collecting and investing the minors' property. Acting under this authority funds were received and remittances made from time to time by the Appellant's firm with whom an account was opened in the name of the minors. A certain amount due to the minors from a creditor was paid by him in the shape of crediting it to the Appellant's firm in their account with their bankers which account was overdrawn. The minors' account with the Appellant's firm was duly credited with that amount. The Appellant being thereafter asked to give a guarantee for the funds of the minor in his hand gave security to the satisfaction of the authorities. Thereafter criminal proceedings were instituted against the Appellant who was tried by the Chief Justice without a jury and convicted of having embezzled the minors' money

Held—That the facts did not on any just or legal view of them warrant a conviction and the grounds of distinction between the categories of liability in a civil as distinguished from a criminal suit appeared in the present case to have been left out of judicial view.

That the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council does not lightly interfere in criminal cases but in the present case although the proceedings taken were unobjectionable in form, justice had gravely and injuriously miscarried and the sentence pronounced against the Appellant formed such an invasion of liberty and such denial of his just rights as a citizen that their Lordships felt called upon to interfere.

Having regard to the exceptional nature of the case their Lordships directed the Crown to pay to the Appellant the costs of the appeal.

Appeal from the Supreme Court of Seychelles.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Messrs. Pollock, K. C., and Lee for the Appellant.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., and Mr. O'Hagan for the Crown.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—This is an Appeal from a conviction and sentence of the Supreme Court of Seychelles. It was pronounced on the 5th July 1911 by the Acting Chief Justice, who tried the case without a jury.

The Appellant is a merchant in Mahe on one of the Seychelles islands. He was at the time of the proceedings a member of the Legislative Council of the Colony and Consul for the French Republic, and he held various important commercial agencies. He was managing director of the firm of Lanier and Company.

It is for obvious reasons undesirable to comment upon various peculiarities of the case, and it is expedient to confine even the statement of the circumstances to the barest narrative. Such a narrative is, however, necessary.

LOUIS EDOUARD LANIER v. THE KING.

There was in the colony a family of two minor children named Lablache. At a family council duly held under the law of the colony (derived from the French Civil Code) Miss Lucy Lablache was appointed to the office of their guardian. On the 14th November 1901 she executed in favour of the Appellant a Procuration or Power of Attorney, and on the 2nd April 1909, on the eve of her leaving with the children for Europe, she confirmed the Procuration by what is called a Deed of Maintenance. Under these deeds the Appellant had the amplest powers, to act for the guardian in the ingathering and the investment, either with or without security, of the property of the minors.

Acting under these powers, certain funds were received and remittances of money were from time to time made by Messrs. Lanier and Company, the Appellant's firm.

From beginning to end of these proceedings no suggestion has ever been made that either the minors personally, or Miss Lablache, their guardian, ever complained of, or are now or ever were dissatisfied with, the conduct of the Appellant or his firm. Miss Lablache's anxiety appears to have been solely that a high rate of interest should be obtained, and this was done.

A circumstance of importance is that these payments were made by the firm of Lanier and Company. This firm's interposition (presumably at the instance of the Appellant) appears to have been highly in the interest of the minors in past years. A regular account was opened, and from the year 1906 the minors' funds were received and advances made from time to time by the Company. The advances were sometimes far in excess of the receipts; and indeed in the end of 1908, whereas the receipts had been Rs. 6,119, the advances had been no less than Rs. 9,435.

In November 1910 a sum of Rs. 35,313 became payable to the minors by M. D'Emmerez de Charmoy. This gentleman proposed at first to pay by an order in favour of the Appellant and drawn upon the Appellant's bankers, Messrs. Said and Company, but the transaction took the shape of crediting the amount to Messrs. Lanier and Company in their account with their bankers, which account was overdrawn. This was an undoubted irregularity. Their Lordships incline to think that it occurred simply because the firm had been acting in the minors' interest and had had direct account with them for many years. No concealment of any kind was practised. The minors' account with Messrs. Lanier and Company was duly credited and all the entries throughout are openly and regularly made. After this date the firm continued to make advances as before out of this money which was lying with it at interest. The receipts for the last three remittances are produced; they are dated in February, April and May 1911 and cover payments of 1,500 francs. So far as M. D'Emmerez de Charmoy was concerned, he also saw no objection to his payment being thus dealt with. Instead of making it to Mr. Lanier and getting that gentleman's receipt he was aware that the bankers had simply credited their customers Lanier and Company with the amount. He was undoubtedly also aware of the history of the family, of the standing of the firm, and of its previous relations with the minors. That there was anything criminal being done does not at that time seem to have entered into any person's mind.

LOUIS EDOUARD LANIER v. THE KING.

On the 20th June 1911, however, a family council was held, which was presided over officially by Mr. Alexander Williamson, the Acting Chief Justice. A "Mr. Finlay Gemmel, friend" asked that Mr. Lanier "must show what cash he has in hand belonging to the minors." Thereupon the Appellant stated fully and with almost complete exactness how the matter stood. Mr. Gemmel suggested that the amount be invested or paid or that a guarantee be given by Mr. Lanier. This was perfectly reasonable, and an adjournment was made till the 27th June to enable one of these courses to be taken. Mr. Lanier acquiesced; and on the 27th June a guarantee for Rs. 34,000, with a mortgage over the properties, was offered by Mr. Lemarchand, and this offer was, of course, unanimously accepted. One would have thought that everything was now satisfactorily arranged and ended. The minors' interests were completely protected. Sharply as the Appellant had been pulled up, he had answered the call: the council were satisfied: and the guarantee and mortgage were put upon record. It seems incredible, but it is the fact, that it was after all this had been done that criminal proceedings were instituted against the Appellant under the Seychelles Penal Code.

On the same day an Information was filed charging Mr. Lanier with having wilfully, fraudulently and feloniously embezzled the minors' money on the previous 31st of May. And on that day, viz., 27th June, a warrant was issued for Mr. Lanier's arrest. On the next day, namely, the 28th June, the Chief Justice informed the family council that he had communicated with the Crown Prosecutor. The proceedings thus started were pursued with alacrity and vigour. The Prosecutor considered it desirable that a member of the Bar should conduct the case, and the family council, again presided over by the Chief Justice, appointed two, and arranged about their fees.

On the 1st November the Prosecutor moved the Chief Justice to be allowed to make drastic amendments to the Information, including one which altered the tempus delicti to the 20th June 1911. These amendments were objected to; the objections were repelled; and the trial was fixed for four days afterwards, namely, the 5th July.

On the 5th July an application was made for a week's adjournment to enable Counsel to be employed for the defence, and a telegram from Tamatavi, stating that Counsel's passage was booked, was produced. The application was refused. The evidence laid was substantially in accord with the narrative already given. The books were produced with all the entries in order. No further facts suggesting criminality were proved. In short, Counsel for the Crown at the Bar of this Board very properly admitted that he could not contend that any jury upon the evidence submitted would have convicted the Appellant of crime. The Chief Justice, however, convicted Mr. Lanier and sentenced him to be imprisoned for eighteen months with hard labour and to pay the costs of the prosecution.

Application for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Mauritius was refused, on the ground that the case was not appealable. This was correct. Had the sentence been for two years an appeal would have lain. A request was made that the sentence be increased, so as to make the case appealable. This was refused. An attempt was then made to bring the proceedings before the Supreme Court of Mauritius by certiorari, with a view to their being quashed. The learned Judges of that colony not obscurely intimated that the affidavits before them disclosed a grave question, but they were constrained to decide that they had no jurisdiction to entertain such an application.

LOUIS EDOUARD LANIER v. THE KING.

Application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was then made and was granted by this Board.

Many grounds for a reversal of the judgment appealed from have been made, and in the affidavits which form part of the present Record others also of a grave character are suggested. It appears to their Lordships, however, that the matter may be disposed of by a consideration of the facts above mentioned, of the judgment itself, and of the reasons stated therefor, the whole being viewed in the light of the Statute. The information, as amended, upon which the trial proceeded was as follows:—" That on or about the 20th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eleven, at Seychelles, at a place called Victoria, one Louis Edouard Lanier, Merchant, residing at Victoria, did wilfully, fraudulently, and unlawfully embezzle to the prejudice of the minors Lablache the owners thereof, the sum of thirty-four thousand one hundred and ninety-one rupees and thirty-three cents, which sum had been delivered to the said Louis Edouard Lanier merely in pursuance of a deposit or trust whilst he was acting in his capacity as agent or proxy of the said minors' dative guardian, viz., Lucie Lablache, and as sub-guardian of the said minors, with the condition that the same be returned or produced against the form of the Statute in such case made and provided and against the peace of our Lord the King his Crown and Dignity."

The statutory ground of the information was not stated in its text. But on the 1st July, when the motion for amendment of its terms was made, the Crown Prosecutor announced that he proceeded upon sec. 216 of the Seychelles Penal Code. That section is as follows:—

" Whoever embezzles, squanders away, or destroys, or attempts to embezzle, squander away, or destroy to the prejudice of the owner, possessor, or holder thereof any goods, money, valuable security, bill, acquittance, or other document containing or creating an obligation or discharge which has been delivered to such person merely in pursuance of any lease or hiring, deposit, agency, pledge, loan (prêt à usage) or for any work with or without a promise of remuneration with the condition that the same be returned or produced or be used or employed for a specific purpose, shall be punished with imprisonment and a fine not exceeding three thousand rupees (Rs. 3,000)."

In the construction of this section placed before the Board by the learned Counsel for the Appellant, an argument was presented that the section refers alone to the failure to restore or replace goods, money, &c., in forma specifica, and that the section was accordingly inapplicable to a position like that of the ordinary breach of agency or trust, in which money, in the sense of the actual notes, sovereigns, or the like, does not fall to be returned, but only its equivalent. And the argument proceeded substantially to exclude all such ordinary cases as embezzlement from the ambit of the Seychelles Code, as it was also maintained that that crime was not dealt with by any other or more nearly applicable section.

Against this argument Sir Robert Finlay, on behalf of the Crown, protested, and in their Lordships' opinion, the protest was well-founded. The Statute does not appear to be limited in the sense contended for.

Upon the other hand, no countenance can be given to the view that the language of the Statute can be used to rank within the category of crime, conduct, or actions which do not essentially partake of the nature of embezzlement in the sense in which that term is ordinarily and properly understood. Although the term "embezzle" is supplemented by the terms "squander away or destroy," the whole context and view of the section show that the latter expressions are amplifications or exemplifications of the operations which are of the nature of embezzlement, in the sense that the conduct which is libelled has been a wilful appropriation by the accused of the property of another, or, after possession of the same has been acquired, of the wilful squandering or destruction of it to his prejudice. The mixture of the funds of another with one's own funds may be in many cases natural and proper, in other cases convenient but irregular, and in the third, both irregular and criminal. The distinctions between these cases require to be treated with the greatest judicial care so as, while preserving the amplest civil responsibility, to prevent the third or criminal category from being extended to mistaken though convenient acts. This is only to say that apart from constructive criminal responsibility which of course may be imposed by Statute, a Court of justice cannot reach the conclusion that crime has been committed unless it be a just result of the evidence that the accused in what was done or omitted by him was moved by the guilty mind. It is sufficient with regard to the judgment before the Board of the Acting Chief Justice to remark that such distinctions and, in particular, the distinction between criminal liability and civil liability to account, hardly seem to have been present to his mind.

Two observations may be quoted which make this clear :—

"The act is wilful and fraudulent if he ought to foresee that a prejudice can result. It is not sufficient for him to state that he did not wish to cause prejudice, nor can he defend himself by saying that he did not foresee the result He ought to have foreseen it. It was his duty not only to himself, but to those for whom he acted to take such precautions and to have exercised such fore sight as would not have involved him in the possibility of causing prejudice"

In so far as this is a statement of law, it is a proposition of constructive crime, and does not appear to be warranted by any general principle of law or by any sound interpretation of the section.

The second passage applies the erroneous doctrine thus :—

"In this case the wilful and fraudulent intent resulted from the fact that the accused so used the moneys entrusted to him that he rendered himself unable to produce them when the demand was formally and legally made by the family council."

It is sufficient to say that, in the opinion of their Lordships, even though the legal doctrine proceeded upon were sound, the facts proved do not warrant, but negative, the conclusion drawn. The alleged date of the crime is the 20th June. That is the very date on which the position was explained by the Appellant, and it was arranged that full security should be given, and it was given as stipulated. It would be straining the Act to apply it to anything done on that date, or indeed to the facts as a whole which were proved in this case.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the rules thus laid down by the Judge are in no respect safe guides in a matter of criminal responsibility. If they were, all persons taking charge even for a day, or at the earnest solicitation of friends, of funds for investment, could be held criminally liable for errors in investment, or even for sanguine forecasts about investments, although their motives had been generous, and their conduct undeniably honest. These propositions are not made in order to mitigate the rigour of that civil responsibility which must attach to all the dealings with the property of others; but they are so elementary as grounds of distinction between the categories of liability in a civil as distinguished from a criminal suit, that their Lordships regret that they appear on this occasion to have been left out of judicial view.

This omission would in any case be serious, but in the present case the point is not merely formal, and the sentence pronounced against the Appellant formed such an invasion of liberty and such a denial of his just rights as a citizen that their Lordships feel called upon to interfere.

In criminal cases this Board does not lightly interfere. To use the language of Lord Watson in the case of Dillet (1):—

"Such Appeals are of rare occurrence, because the rule has been repeatedly laid down and has been invariably followed that Her Majesty will not review or interfere with the course of criminal proceedings unless it be shown that by a disregard of the forms of legal process or by some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done."

The Appeal will be allowed, but not on any matter of form. Having carefully examined all the evidence, their Lordships are of opinion that the facts did not, on any just or legal view of them, warrant a conviction. It is unnecessary to consider arguments as to the rushing of the procedure or the harshness of the sentence, for, in their Lordships' view, even although the proceedings are taken to have been unobjectionable in form, justice has gravely and injuriously miscarried.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the Appeal be allowed, that the judgment and sentence appealed from be quashed, and that the Appellant be declared not guilty of the offence charged. Looking to the exceptional nature of the case the Crown will pay to the Appellant the costs of the Appeal. There will also be restored to him the amount of the costs of prosecution paid under the judgment of the Court below.

account of the land acquired they were not entitled to a share of the compensation money and the zemindars' case was that as the putnidars did not get themselves registered in the books of the zemindars under the provisions of the Putni Regulation their title was not protected and they were not entitled to claim any portion of the compensation money,

Held—That the putnidars were entitled to the compensation money and the zemindars to no portion of it.

Under sec. 6 of the Putni Regulation the landlord may demand a fee for the registration in his books of the name of the purchaser of a putni as also security from him but the omission to pay the fee and the security does not affect in any way the title of the purchaser whose rights are perfected upon the transfer by the putnidar and are not in any way contingent for their validity upon the payment of the fee and security.

If the zemindars allow an abatement of rent to the putnidars the rent abated primarily represents their annual loss and they may reasonably claim out of the compensation money the capitalised value of that rent but if they do not allow such abatement they do not suffer any immediate loss by reason of the acquisition.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 21st of November 1908 against a decision of Babu Kissori Mohun Sikdar, Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpore, dated the 11th of August 1910.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an Appeal on behalf of the zemindars in proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act for apportionment of compensation money. The dispute is between the zemindars and the putnidars as to the mode in which the apportionment is to be effected. The Subordinate Judge has awarded the entire compensation money to the putnidars on the ground that as the zemindars have not allowed any abatement of rent on account of the land acquired, they are not entitled to a share of the compensation money. On behalf of the zemindars it is argued in this Court, first, that as the putnidars did not get themselves registered in the books of the zemindars under the provisions of the Putni Regulation of 1819, their title has not been perfected and they are consequently not entitled to claim any portion of the compensation money, and, secondly, that although no abatement of rent has been allowed by the zemindars to the putnidars, yet the zemindars are entitled to a share of the compensation money. In our opinion, there is no foundation for either of these contentions.

In so far as the first point is concerned, sec. 3 of the Putni Regulation of 1819 makes a putni tenure capable of being transferred by sale, gift or otherwise at the discretion of the holder in the same manner as other real property. Sec. 5 provides for the registration of the name of the purchaser in the books of the landlords. The landlord may demand a fee and security and he is entitled to refuse to give effect to the transfer till such fee and security have been paid, this is clear from the first paragraph of sec. 6. But it cannot be maintained that the omission to pay the fee and the security affects in any way the title of the purchaser. His rights are perfected upon the transfer by the putnidar and are not in any way contingent for their validity upon the payment of the fee and the security. This view is supported by the case of Joy Krishna Mukhopadhya v. Sarfannessa (1) and Chunder Pershad v. Shuvadra Kumari (2). Reference may also be made to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Lukhee Narain Mitter v. Khetturpal Singh (3). In that case, a durputnidar had paid money to save the putni from sale. He subsequently claimed a refund, and the question arose whether the claim was affected by his omission to register his name in the office of the superior landlord. It was ruled by this Court, Khettro Paul v. Luckhi Narain (4), that his title had been perfected and he was entitled to a refund, notwithstanding that his name had not been registered in the office of the superior holder. The only effect of his failure to secure registration of his name is that the landlord is not bound to recognise his purchase and may sell up his tenure in execution of a decree for arrears of rents, obtained against the registered tenant. Substantially the same view was taken in the case of a permanent tenure in Matangini Chowdhurani v. Sreenath Das (5), and the contrary opinion implied in Mungal Das v. Dhunpat Singh (6) cannot be regarded as good law. In other words, as observed in the case of Okhoy Coomar v. Maharaja of Burdwan (7), the status of a putnidar or durputnidar does not depend upon the registration or consent of the zemindars. The putnidars in the present case are consequently entitled to a share in the compensation money.

In so far as the second point is concerned, it has been broadly contended that the zemindars are entitled to a share of the compensation money even though they have not allowed any abatement of rent to the putnidars. In support of this view reference has been made to the cases of Godadhar Das v. Dhunpat Sing (8) and Khetter Kristo Mitter v. Dinendra Narain Roy (9). In the case of Dinendra Narain Roy v. Tituram Mukerjee (10), it was pointed out however that the observations of Sir Richard Garth, C. J., in the case of Gadadhar Das v. Dhunpat Singh (8), which were followed in Khettra Krista v. Dinendra Narain (9), were obiter dicta and were not binding upon this Court. It has not been seriously questioned that the view that the compensation money should be divided in equal halves between the zemindars and putnidars notwithstanding the fact that the zemindars have not allowed any abatement of rent to the putnidars cannot be maintained on principle. It has not also been disputed that the view militates against the decisions in Raye Kissory Dassi v. Nilcant Dey (11), Bepro Das v. Sarat Chandra (12) and Ram Ranjan v. Bunwari Lal Mitter (13). If we look at the matter as one of principle, it becomes manifest that the claim of the zemindars is clearly unfounded. The compensation money in the hands of the Collector represents the value of the land acquired by the State. That sum has to be distributed amongst the holders of interests of different degrees in the land acquired. Each claimant can prove the value of his interest, in other words, the measure of the loss sustained by him by the acquisition and when he does this, he becomes entitled to a proportionate share of the compensation money. If the zemindars allow an abatement of rent to the putnidar the rent abated primarily represents their annual loss, and they may reasonably claim out of the compensation money, the capitalised value of that rent. But if they do not allow any abatement of rent, if they recover from the putnidars the whole of the original rent, although the latter have lost the income derivable from the acquired portion of the land, what is the measure of their loss? Plainly, they do not suffer any immediate loss by reason of the acquisition. It has been ingeniously suggested, however, that although the rent is not abated, the zemindars may in certain events suffer loss; namely, their security for the rent is diminished in value and if the perpetual lease is ever forfeited, they will get back a smaller quantity of land than what was comprised in the original tenancy. This chance of forfeiture is indisputably very remote; indeed, whether under the terms of the putni in the present case it can ever be at all forfeited is by no means certain. But even if it be assumed that there may be a forfeiture of the putni in certain contingencies, the zemindars have wholly failed to establish the value of this remote chance of possible loss; they are consequently not entitled to any share of the compensation money.

The result is that the decree of the Court below is affirmed and this Appeal dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an Appeal on behalf of the Plaintiff in a suit for declaration that he has been wrongfully dismissed from Government service and for recovery of arrears of salary. On the 12th August 1890, the Plaintiff was appointed to a ministerial post in the Burdwan Collectorate. On the 12th November 1900 he was suspended. He was subsequently prosecuted along with two other persons for offences under secs. 116, 161 and 466 of the Indian Penal code. The Jury returned a somewhat ambiguous verdict which was interpreted by the Sessions Judge as a verdict of not guilty. The Sessions Judge made a reference to the High Court under sec. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as he disagreed with the verdict of the jurors. This Court ultimately acquitted the accused on the 20th May 1902. King-Emperor v. Chidghan Gossain (1). The Collector subsequently perused the records and came to the conclusion that although the Appellant had been acquitted by the High Court he was really guilty of abetment of bribery and forgery. He based this conclusion not merely on the materials contained in the record of the criminal trial, but also on several matters connected with the case of which in his own words both the Sessions Judge and the High Court were unaware. The Collector before he came to this adverse finding did not call upon the Appellant to show cause why he should not be dismissed. He stated explicitly that had he not been prosecuted he would have been called upon to show cause. Under these circumstances on the 3rd October 1902 the Collector dismissed the Appellant from Government service with effect from the date of his suspension. A notification, dated 20th July 1903, was subsequently issued in the Calcutta Gazette of the 22nd July 1903, to the following effect : "Ramdas Hazra, late a mohurir in the Burdwan Collectorate, having been dismissed from Government service is debarred from re-employment in any capacity under Government." The Appellant sent representations to the Local Government as also to the Government of India but with no effect. The order of the Government of India was passed on the 4th December 1905 and was communicated to the Plaintiff on the 20th January 1906. On the 17th January 1907, the Plaintiff commenced this action against the Secretary of State for India in Council substantially for declaration that he had been improperly dismissed from Government service. He prayed also for recovery of a small sum of Rs. 17 as arrears of salary. But this part of the claim has not been pressed in this Court. The Plaintiff further stated that he would subsequently sue the Secretary of State for damages for wrongful dismissal. The claim was valued for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 5,117. The prayers in the plaint were in these terms. (1) A decree may be passed declaring that there were no adequate reasons for dismissing the Plaintiff from his said post and that under the Government Rules the Plaintiff's name was not fit to be published in the Calcutta Gazette or in any other newspapers of the Government, (2) it be declared that the statement that the Plaintiff was dismissed as guilty of heinous offence which was published is untrue and that the said publication should not remain published, (3) it may be declared that the said dismissal and publication were due to the deep-rooted malice of the Sheristadar, Babu Tinkari Sarkar, against the Plaintiff and were done by him and through his exertion, (4) that a decree may be passed for Rs. 17-11 ans. 6 gds. claimed by the Plaintiff as due for his salary, (5) that a decree be passed for the costs of the suit. On behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council the suit was defended on the ground that the plaint did not disclose any cause of action and that the Plaintiff had not been unjustly dismissed and had not suffered in the estimation of the public. The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit on the ground that the Plaintiff has no cause of action and is not entitled to any of the declarations he seeks. The claim for arrears of salary has not been entertained as it was cognizable in a Court of inferior jurisdiction and no reference has been made to this part of the case in the course of the arguments addressed to this Court but it has been strenuously argued that the Plaintiff ought not to have been dismissed without an opportunity afforded to him to make his defence, that he has been seriously prejudiced by the ex parte order of dismissal passed in contravention of the rules prescribed by Government and that even if the Plaintiff is not entitled to be restored to Government service he is at least entitled to a declaration that his dismissal has not been made in accordance with the prescribed rules.

I am clearly of opinion that the Plaintiff ought to have been heard before he was dismissed from Government service. The Collector wholly misunderstood the scope and effect of the rules on the subject when he held that as the Plaintiff had been prosecuted he need not be called upon to show cause why he should not be dismissed. The Plaintiff had been acquitted by this Court at the criminal trial. His dismissal was not and could not be based on the ground that he had been convicted of a criminal offence. The Collector proceeded on the ground that he had other evidence before him of which both the Sessions Judge and the High Court were unaware; his decision was consequently founded upon matters which the Plaintiff was allowed no opportunity to rebut. Under these circumstances the Collector was bound to hear the Plaintiff before he was dismissed. The rule on the subject will be found in the Board's Rules, 1902, p. 70, sec. 14. The Resolution of the Government of India, dated the 29th July 1879, mentioned there, explicitly requires that (except in the cases of public servants who are dismissed in consequence of facts or inferences elicited at a judicial trial) in all cases of removal or dismissal the charge against the public servant concerned shall be reduced to writing and that the decision thereon shall also be in writing. The rule further provides that when witnesses are examined they should, when possible, be heard in the presence of the accused who should be allowed to cross examine, and a memorandum of the evidence shall be placed on the record. The rule specifically states that substantial compliance with these orders is not sufficient, that they are to be strictly carried out and that Commissioners and other appellate officers are precluded from confirming orders of removal or dismissal passed in contravention of these orders. The present case is plainly not covered by the exception ; the Plaintiff was not dismissed in consequence of facts or inferences elicited at a judicial trial ; he had been acquitted and he was dismissed because of facts or circumstances brought to the notice of the Collector but not known either to the Sessions Judge or to the High Court. The exception clearly contemplates cases where the public servant has been convicted at a judicial trial, as the Government of Bombay put it in their Proceedings, dated the 16th October 1883, para. 13 (Board's Rules, 1902, p. 91), a public servant unless himself convicted at a judicial trial has a right to defend himself departmentally against any imputation that he may have therein incurred, and this view is in accord with the Despatch of the Court of Directors of the East India Company No. 42 of the 6th August 1851 as to the effect of sec. 4, of Reg. I of 1829. There can, in my opinion, be no room for controversy as to the true scope of the exception and that this view is correct is conclusively established by the form in which the rule stands in the latest edition of the Board's Rules. I must take it, therefore, that the Collector misunderstood the effect of the Rule and acted in contravention thereof when he dismissed the Plaintiff without any opportunity afforded to him to make his defence ; he has consequently a grievance, namely, that he has been dismissed without a hearing and without an opportunity of justifying himself. It is worthy of note that at the hearing before us no suggestion was made on behalf of the Crown that the Court should not consider whether or not the Plaintiff was dismissed in contravention of the Rules. On the other hand, the matter was elaborately discussed for three days by the learned Vakils on both sides with great ability till the learned Government Pleader was constrained to admit with the fairness which always characterises his arguments that the Plaintiff had been dismissed in contravention of the Rules. I cannot appreciate why under these circumstances the Court should hesitate in the remotest degree to express its opinion upon the merits of the case. It is wholly immaterial that such conclusion may show that the officers of the Crown have failed to follow the prescribed Rules. It is not right till we know what has actually happened to pronounce an opinion upon the question whether the Court is competent to grant the relief claimed. The question now arises whether in the events which have happened the Plaintiff has any remedy against the Crown by a suit in the Civil Court.

It is now firmly settled that except where it is otherwise provided by statute as in Gould v. Stuart (2), all public officers and servants of the Crown hold their appointments at the pleasure of the Crown; Dunn v. Queen (3), and all in general are subject to dismissal at any time without cause assigned; In Re Tufnell (4), Young v. Adams (5), Exp. Robertson (6), Sheuton v. Smith (7), Grant v. Secretary of State for India (8), Dickson v. Combermere (9), nor will an action for wrongful dismissal be entertained. As Sir William Anson puts it (Law and Custom of the Constitution, Vol. 2, Part I, page 221, third edition, 1907) all offices are held either "at pleasure" or "during good behaviour" and unless it is otherwise stated their occupants hold "at pleasure." This principle has been repeatedly recognised in the Courts of this country, Voss v. Secretary of State (10), King v. Secretary of State (11), Cursetji v. Secretary of State (12). It is plain therefore that the Plaintiff was liable to dismissal at any time without cause assigned. What the Crown could do independently of any enquiry and without the assignment of any reason cannot very well be questioned in a Court of law on the ground that the enquiry has not been satisfactory or in proper form or that the reason assigned is unsound and open to criticism [see the observation of Denman, C. J., In the matter of Poe (13)]. It is thus impossible to hold as his tenure of office was so precarious that the Plaintiff can successfully claim any relief against the Crown. It has been suggested however that relief may be afforded to the Plaintiff by a declaration on either or both of two grounds, namely, first, that he has been dismissed in contravention of the rules and, secondly, that his dismissal ought not to have been notified. In my opinion he cannot possibly claim relief on either of the two grounds mentioned. The Plaintiff is not entitled to a declaration that his dismissal has been in contravention of the rules because it does not fall within the scope of sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act nor can it admittedly lead up to any consequential relief against the Crown which the Court is competent to grant. Sec. 42, as was explained in Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (14), does not sanction every form of declaration but only a declaration that the Plaintiff is entitled to a specific legal character or right as to property. Now there is obviously no claim by the Plaintiff as to right to any property, can we then say that he has a claim or title to any legal character which the Defendant is interested to deny? The question must obviously be answered in the negative. The Court invited the learned Vakil for the Appellant in the course of argument to frame a declaration which the Plaintiff may seek in this case in the terms of sec. 42; his endeavour to frame such a declaration was entirely unsuccessful; the only declaration he could suggest was that the Plaintiff has been dismissed contrary to the rules. In my opinion although the dismissal has been contrary to the rules the Plaintiff cannot be granted such a declaration under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. Nor is the Court able to grant the Plaintiff any relief on the ground that his dismissal should not have been notified. It has been argued with reference to the Resolution of the Government of India, dated the 15th June 1895 (Board's Rules, 1902, page 84) that the very fact that his dismissal was notified implied that he had been dismissed for a heinous offence as indeed was stated by the Collector in his order of the 3rd October 1902. It has been urged that in this view the notification of the dismissal of the Plaintiff amounted to a libel on his character. I am unable to accept this contention as well-founded. The Plaintiff has not sued the Secretary of State for India in Council for recovery of damages for libel; if he had made the attempt his suit would have been liable to dismissal on the principle explained in Grant v. Secretary of State (8) and Cursetji v. Secretary of State (12). The former of these cases arose under somewhat peculiar circumstances. By a general order it was declared that all unemployed Indian officers ineligible for public employment by reason of misconduct or physical or mental inefficiency should be removed to the pension list. Under this order the Plaintiff was removed to the pension list and a notification of such removal was published in the Gazette of India. It was ruled on demurrer, that no action lay either for the removal of the Plaintiff or for the official publication of the fact although special damage was alleged. [See also Doss v. Secretary of State for India (15) and Oliver v. Lord William Bentink (16)]. It is manifest therefore that the Plaintiff cannot sue the Crown for libel nor can he ask for a direction upon the Secretary of State that the notification be cancelled or withdrawn. Besides, the notification by itself is harmless; it merely states the fact that the Plaintiff has been dismissed from Government service and the object of the notification is to guard against the possibility of his re-employment in Government service in any capacity. But it is contended that as under the Resolution of the Government of India, dated the 15th June 1895, the dismissal of public servants is notified in the Gazette only in two classes of cases, namely, first, when it is necessary to notify the public of the removal from the service of an officer whether because his appointment was previously gazetted or from any other cause and, secondly, when it is specially desired to exclude from re-employment in the service of Government a public servant who has been dismissed for a heinous offence such as fraud or falsification of accounts, the inference may be drawn that the Plaintiff has been dismissed for such heinous offence. I am unable to hold that the Plaintiff has any real grievance in this matter. The inference adverse to him could be drawn at best only by people familiar with the rule in question but even such a person could not from the mere fact of the notification infer whether it had been issued on the first or the second ground. The order of the Collector was not published and the reason for the dismissal of the Plaintiff has never been made public by the Government in accordance with the well recognised principle that the reason for the dismissal of a public officer should not be stated in the notification regarding his dismissal even in cases in which a conviction has been obtained in a Criminal Court. In fact but for the publicity given to the order of the Collector in the present suit no one outside the official circle need ever have known the grounds upon which his order was based. In my opinion the Government clearly acted within its rights when it notified the fact of the dismissal of the Plaintiff solely with a view to prevent his re-employment in Government service in any capacity. The publication of the notification therefore does not entitle the Plaintiff to any relief against the Secretary of State. It may finally be added that although various imputations were made against the Sheristadar, Tinkari Sarkar, he was not added as a party Defendant and the third prayer in the plaint cannot consequently be granted.

I hold accordingly that the suit as framed must fail but in view of my conclusion that the Plaintiff has been dismissed without a hearing as required by the rules each party will be directed to bear his own costs throughout this litigation.

Under cl. 36 of the Letters Patent the view of the Senior Judge will prevail upon the question of costs and if any sum has been paid or deposited by the Appellant in that behalf it will be refunded to him.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I entertain no doubt whatever that the suit of the Plaintiff does not lie and that the Appeal must be dismissed.

The first two prayers in the plaint are (1) that a decree may be passed declaring that there were no adequate reasons for dismissing the Plaintiff from his said post and that under the Government Rules the Plaintiff's name was not fit to be published in the Calcutta Gazette or in other newspaper of the Government, (2) that it be declared that the statement that the Plaintiff was dismissed as guilty of heinous offence which was published is untrue and that the said publication should not remain published.

In arguing the appeal the learned pleader for the Appellant has conceded that the declaration asked for in the first part of the first prayer cannot be given but he presses for the declaration asked for in the second part of the first prayer and in the second prayer.

The case in which declaratory decrees can be made was recently considered by this Court in the case of Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (14), and on the authority of that decision and the plain words of sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act it is clear that the Plaintiff cannot get the decree which he seeks for in this suit.

Apart from the plain words of the statute it is clear that the suit must fail on general principles. It is settled by a long course of decisions that in the absence of a statute to the contrary the Crown can dismiss its servants at pleasure and that the servant has no remedy against such dismissal. If the Crown can so dismiss its servants, there can be no reason why it should not notify the fact of a dismissal and forbid re-employment. The Government notification in the present case does no more than that. It consists merely of a statement of fact and an order.

But the Plaintiff objects that the effect of the notification is to prevent his getting employment anywhere because it amounts to a statement that he was guilty of a heinous offence. In fact it does not amount to such a statement. Conceding however for the purpose of argument that the construction might reasonably be put on the notification that it amounted to a statement that he had been dismissed on the ground that he had been guilty of a heinous offence, I am of opinion that no suit lies. In that view it is in effect one for defamation, not, it is true, for damages but for a declaration that he has been defamed. But he could not maintain a suit for damages for defamation, Cursetji v. Secretary of State (12). In effect the Plaintiff is trying to do indirectly what he cannot do directly. The Court will not give declaration that a Plaintiff has suffered an injury if it is powerless to give compensation for that injury.

I purposely refrain from expressing any opinion on the question whether the Plaintiff's dismissal was in accordance with the Government's Rules or not. I think that is a question into which we ought not to enter. If the suit does not lie we ought not to look at the merits. For if we say the dismissal was not in accordance with the rules, I think we practically stultify ourselves, for we give in our judgment the declaration which we say we cannot give in our decree and encourage the institution of untenable suits.

I accordingly agree in dismissing the Appeal. I consider the Respondent is entitled to costs though possibly Government may not wish to enforce them.

Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 1980 OF 1910.

COXE, J.
RAY, J.
1913, Heard,
24, July.
Judgment,
29, July.

RAM LAL MONDAL and others, Plaintiffs, Appellants,
v.
KHIRODA MOHINI DASI and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Rent decree—Purchase by some of the judgment-debtors in the benami of a third person—Failure of execution of the decree against co-judgment-debtors—Suit for contribution—Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 69—Malice—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 232—Facts in plaint not traversed in written statement—Court not entitled to decide otherwise.

Where a co-judgment-debtor purchases a rent decree, such a purchase is equivalent to paying off the decree, and the purchaser is entitled to bring a suit for contribution from the other judgment-debtors although he tried to evade the provisions of sec. 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) by trying to execute the decree against them by a benamdar.

Where a statement of fact in the plaint was not traversed in the written statement or put in issue, the Court is not entitled to decide it against the pleadings.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 16th of June 1910 against a decree of F. Roe, Esq., District Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 4th of March 1910, reversing the decree of Babu Aghore Chandra Hazra, Subordinate Judge of that place, dated the 9th of June 1909.

The Plaintiffs instituted this suit for contribution under the following circumstances: One Narendra Nath Bose obtained a rent decree against Plaintiffs Nos. 1, 4, 5, the predecessor of Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, husband of Defendant No. 1 and Defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 and one Gopal Lall Mondal whose interests in the lands for which the rent was claimed was purchased by Plaintiffs. Narendra Nath in execution of the decree attached the moveable properties of Plaintiffs and realised Rs. 413 odd which was payable by the Plaintiffs in their share. The decree-holder subsequently tried to realise the balance of the decretal money by selling the immoveable properties of the Plaintiffs when they purchased the decree in the name of one Nilmony Das on payment of a consideration of Rs. 2,100 on the 7th Falgun 1312. Nilmony tried to execute the decree against the Defendants but on objection being taken by them that under sec. 148, cl. (h), Bengal Tenancy Act, it was held that Nilmony was not entitled to realise the decretal dues. The decree was then sought to be executed by the previous decree-holder on the ground that Nilmony had reconveyed the decree to him. This execution case was also dismissed on the ground that the decree was purchased by the Plaintiffs judgment-debtors in the benami of Nilmony Das and that the allegation that Narendra subsequently re-purchased the same was a myth.

The Plaintiffs having failed to realise the decree from the co judgment-debtors instituted this suit for contribution against them.

The defence was that the Defendants were not bound to contribute under the circumstances of this case.

The Court of first instance decreed the suit. The District Judge on appeal dismissed the suit on the ground that Plaintiffs did not come with clean hands. "The object of the purchase," said the District Judge, "of the decree was primarily to save the Plaintiffs' own property and secondarily to proceed severally and in turn against each one of the Defendants whom the Plaintiffs desired to attack either by reason of their wealth or some previous grudge." The learned District Judge on appeal also found that the Plaintiffs did not prove the amount they actually paid in purchasing the decree and therefore they could not get any decree against the Defendants. Against the above decision of the District Judge this Second Appeal was preferred.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Biraj Mohan Majumdar) for the Appellants.—The Defendants were benefited by my purchasing the decree. I am clearly entitled to contribution. See Soroop Chunder v. Troylakhya (1). The District Judge has found that the Plaintiffs have not been able to prove what they actually paid to the decree-holder; but the statement in the plaint was never traversed in the written statement and the District Judge was not entitled to find against the pleadings.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit (with him Babus Harendra Narain Mitra, Atul Krishna Roy and Prokash Chandra Sarkar) for the Respondents.—Contribution is an equitable relief. He who seeks equity must do equity. Here the District Judge finds that the Plaintiffs came with unclean hands. Moreover the Plaintiffs never intended to act on behalf of the Defendants in purchasing the decree. The subsequent proceedings clearly show that they never intended to benefit us by the payment. They harassed us as the subsequent proceedings show. The payment is officious and no suit for contribution lies. Suchand Ghosal v. Balaram Mardana (2).

(1) 9 W. R. 230 (1863).
(2) I. L. R. 38 Cal. 1 (1910).

RAM LAL MONDAL v. KHIRODA MOHINI DASI.

Moreover in this case no satisfaction has been certified of the decree and the purchase of the decree does not annul the decree. The landlord might have executed the decree even after the transfer and he did so in this case.

Then it is for the Plaintiffs to prove what they paid to the decree-holder. If they have not been able to prove that, the District Judge was right in dismissing the suit.

C. A. V.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The parties in this case were judgment-debtors under a decree obtained by one Narendra Bose. The Plaintiff's property was attached in execution and he then bought the whole decree benami. He tried to execute it against the other judgment-debtors but failed and he then brought this suit for contribution. The lower Appellate Court has referred in strong terms, which are not without justification, to the Plaintiff's conduct in execution and has held that in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience the suit should be dismissed.

The misconduct of the Plaintiff lay in his attempts to defeat sec. 232B of the former Code. That section forbids the execution of a decree purchased by one judgment-debtor against his fellows. This provision of law the Plaintiff tried to evade by falsely representing to the Court that somebody else had purchased the decree. The reason for the enactment of this provision is given in the case of Soroop Chunder Hazra v. Troylakhya Nath Roy (1). Apparently it was thought wrong that one judgment-debtor should buy the decree for less than the full amount due and then execute it against his fellows for the full amount due, and the position of co-judgment-debtors was compared to that of surety and principal. I do not myself fully understand why it is worse for a judgment-debtor to realise more than he has paid for a decree than it is for a stranger. The judgment-debtor need not necessarily stand in a fiduciary relation to the others. A stronger objection to my mind is that the purchasing judgment-debtor might execute the whole decree against one of his fellows who might then purchase it and execute the whole against another and so on. This would be prevented by driving the purchaser to a suit for contribution. But in any case there does not seem to be the least reason for supposing that the Legislature intended that a judgment-debtor purchasing a decree should be deprived of all claim to relief against his fellows. It has often been held that having regard to the provisions of sec. 232B such a purchase is equivalent to paying off the decree. In that case the judgment-debtor is clearly entitled to compensation on the principle of sec. 69 of the Contract Act.

Next the lower Appellate Court holds that the Plaintiff has not proved the payment of the purchase money. This point however was not traversed or put in issue and the learned District Judge was not entitled to decide it against the pleadings.

I would therefore decree the Appeal and restore the order of the Court of first instance but as the Plaintiff has been abusing the process of the Courts and for years has been harassing these Defendants by taking proceedings against them which he knew perfectly well to be illegal I would make him bear his own costs throughout.

RAY, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

DWARKA NATH v. RAM CHAND (1) distinguished.

This was an Appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent filed on the 25th of August 1911 against a decree of Mr. Justice Chitty, dated the 26th of July 1911, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2006 of 1909, which had been preferred against a decree of Mr. S. K. Nag, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Pabna, dated the 21st of June 1909, confirming that of Babu Kumudini Kanta Ray, Munsif of that place dated the 17th of August 1908.

The material facts will appear from the judgment of CHITTY, J., which was as follows :—

(1) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 428 : s. c. 3 C. W. N. 206 (1899).

CHITTY, J.—This is an appeal by Defendant No. 1 in a suit brought by the Plaintiffs for a declaration that they had jote rights in the land, that Defendant No. 1 had no such right and that the sum of Rs. 24-8-0 might be refunded to them, it being the amount of a decree passed against the Plaintiffs in a rent suit at the instance of Defendant No. 1. The main facts of the case are these. The zemindar was Maharani Surnomoyee. In 1278, Defendant No. 1 executed in her favour a kabuliyat for certain lands including the lands in dispute. In 1286, the Defendant sublet these lands to one Jamal Sheikh by taking a kabuliyat from him. The Plaintiffs are the descendants of Jamal Sheikh. Jamal Sheikh died in the year 1300. In 1303, the Maharani caused a re-measurement and a re-settlement of all the lands appertaining to Mouzah Malifa in which the lands in dispute are situate. A large number of kabuliyats were taken from various tenants. In Sravan of that year the Plaintiffs gave a kabuliyat in respect of the lands in dispute. In the following month, that is, in Bhadra, Defendant No. 1 gave a kabuliyat in respect of some lands in the mouzah, but not in respect of the lands now in dispute. The kabuliyat therefore of Defendant No. 1 of the year 1303 differed in that respect from the kabuliyat which he had given in the year 1278. In 1314, Defendant No. 1 sued the Plaintiffs for rent of the lands in dispute for the years 1308 to 1311, and obtained a decree in the Munsif's Court for the amount of that rent, for Rs. 24-8-0. The present Plaintiffs contested that suit but did not carry it beyond the Munsif's Court. They filed the present suit a few days after that decree had been passed claiming the refund which I have already mentioned.

Two points have been urged by the

SREENATH DUTT v. KASER SHEIKH.

Appellant, Defendant No. 1, in this appeal. The first is that the decision in the rent suit between the present Plaintiffs and Defendant No. 1 debars the Plaintiffs from prosecuting this suit by reason of res judicata; and, secondly, that there is no evidence of any relinquishment by Defendant No. 1 of his tenancy in regard to the lands in suit.

As to the questions of res judicata I do not think that the matter can be said to be res judicata in so far as the Plaintiffs' claim for relief is concerned in the present suit. It may be, and no doubt is, the case, that they cannot get rid of the rent decree against them by this suit; nor can they obtain, as they ask, a refund of the amount which was levied from them in execution of that decree. But apart from this it does not appear to me to be a case of res judicata. This is a suit for determination of the title of all the parties, the Defendant No. 2, the Maharaja, being added to the persons who were parties to the former suit. The question of the relationship of landlord and tenant was no doubt at issue in the previous suit for the purpose of determining whether the present Plaintiffs were or were not liable for the rent. But that does not necessarily mean that they can never again re open that question. The Full Bench Ruling in the case of Dwarka Nath Roy v. Ram Chand Aich (1) is in point, and a case very similar to the present was decided only recently by Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea and myself (Second Appeal No. 2924 of 1908). The question may have arisen incidentally in the former suit, but that would not prevent its being raised again substantially in a subsequent suit.

As to the second point, that there is no evidence of relinquishment, it appears that although there is no direct evidence that the Defendant No. 1 gave up his tenancy of the lands in dispute, there is a considerable amount of evidence from which the Court might reasonably infer that such relinquishment had taken place. Both the Courts have come to the same conclusion on the point and have discussed the evidence at a very considerable length. With that finding of fact this Court cannot interfere, even if it wished to do so, in Second Appeal.

The result is that the appeal fails in substance. But the decree of the Court below must be varied to this extent, namely, that the decree in favour of the Plaintiffs will be confined to a declaration that the Plaintiffs' have jote right to the lands and that Defendant No. 1 has no such right. The question as to when the Plaintiffs' right commenced and the Defendant's right ceased, need not, I think be determined nor can the Plaintiffs have a refund of the amount of Rs. 24-8-0 which the lower Courts have given them. To this extent the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be varied.

Under this circumstance, I direct that the parties do bear their costs of this appeal.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was delivered by JENKINS, C. J.—This is an Appeal by the first Defendant in a suit for declaration that the Plaintiff is not a tenant of the first Defendant but of the second Defendant, and also for refund of the money realised by the first Defendant in execution of a decree for rent obtained by him.

It appears that the land in question is situated within the zemindari of the Maharaja of Cossimbazar. On the 19th of August 1871, the first Defendant got a raiyati settlement from Maharani Surnomoyee. On the 8th of April 1880, he sublet the land to one Jamal Sheikh who executed in his favour a registered kabuliyat. Jamal Sheikh died in 1893. Thereafter his representatives continued in occupation of the land on the assumption that the under-raiyati interest created by the kabuliyat of the 8th of April 1880 was heritable. They were accepted as tenants and apparently paid rent to the landlord. In 1907, the first Defendant sued them for rent. The defence taken was that they were not the tenants under the then Plaintiff but held as tenants directly under the Maharaja of Cossimbazar. In support of this contention, reliance was placed by them upon a kabuliyat executed by them on the 26th of July 1896, and it was further alleged that the first Defendant had executed a kabuliyat on the 9th of July 1896, whereby he had ceased to be tenant of this land. The Court which tried the suit for rent overruled this contention and held that the present Plaintiff was a tenant under the first Defendant. A decree for rent was accordingly made on the 1st of June 1907. On the 3rd of July following, the Plaintiff commenced this suit for declaration in substance that the rent decree had been improperly made. He described the first Defendant as the principal Defendant and he also described the Maharaja of Cossimbazar as the pro formâ Defendant. The principal Defendant resisted the claim on the ground, amongst others, that the suit was barred by the principle of res judicata. This defence has been overruled by all the Courts below, and the sole question in controversy now is whether the suit is or is not barred by the principle of res judicata. On behalf of the Respondent reliance has been placed upon the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Dwarka Nath v. Ram Chand (1). That case is clearly distinguishable. There A brought a suit for rent against B. B pleaded that he held as a tenant, not under A but under C. The suit was tried on the merits and dismissed. A, thereupon, brought a suit against B and C, for declaration that he was the owner of the land. He further prayed that B might be ejected and in the alternative asked that if B remained in occupation, he might be held liable for damages for use and occupation. It was held that the decision did operate as res judicata in so far as A and B were concerned but not between A and C. A sought relief on the ground that the previous decision was conclusive between the parties: he treated B as trespasser, and so sought to eject him. In the case before us the question which was raised in the suit for rent was whether the kabuliyat alleged to be executed by Jamal Sheikh on the 8th of April 1880 was or was not genuine, and whether the present Plaintiff held as tenant under the first Defendant on the basis of the tenancy created thereby. This was found in favour of the present Defendant. The decision was by a Court of competent jurisdiction —a Court which was competent to try the issue now raised between the parties. It is clear therefore that so far as the first

SREENATH DUTT v. KASER SHEIKH.

Plaintiff and the first Defendant are concerned, the question is res judicata.

It has been finally suggested by the Respondent that the suit may be remanded to the Court of first instance in order that the Plaintiff may obtain relief as against the Maharaja of Cossimbazar. As already stated the Plaintiff treated the Maharaja as pro formâ Defendant and never sought any relief against him. It is too late now to ask for a relief which he did not ask for in the suit in the Court of first instance.

The result, therefore, is that the Appeal is allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

RULE NO. 470 OF 1913.

STEPHEN, J.	HARI NATH SINGH,

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 25—Addition of parties at late stage of case—Order for security for Defendant's costs—Poverty of Plaintiff if alone can justify such order.

The Plaintiff before bringing the suit made an agreement with one S by which the latter undertook to advance any amount that might be necessary to prosecute the suit up to the Privy Council. The amount so advanced was to be realised from any property recovered by a final decision or on compromise and the Plaintiff and S agreed to divide equally the balance of what was recovered. S was to be able to compromise the suit and if the suit was unsuccessful the Plaintiff was not to be liable to S for costs. The Plaintiff brought the suit on the 31st July 1911. It came on for hearing on the 1st April 1913. The Plaintiff closed his case on 22nd April and just before that the Defendant applied to the Court to have S made a Plaintiff and to have S and the Plaintiff ordered to give security for the payment of the Defendant's costs. The Court refused to make S a Plaintiff but ordered the Plaintiff to give security for the costs of the suit up to Rs. 5,000. The High Court issued a rule to show cause why S should not be made a Defendant and why the order about costs should not be set aside :

Held—That S should not be made a party Defendant partly because the original application to make S a party Plaintiff was made at too late a stage of the case and partly because it did not appear that S had any actual present interest in the property.

That the order about costs was not made and could not be supported under Or. 25 but the Court has inherent power to make it. The question however which should determine the granting of such an order was whether the Plaintiff had got a substantial interest in the suit or was he suing for another as a mere puppet. Such an order could not be made merely because the Plaintiff was a poor man, and the lower Court having made the order only on that ground it was without jurisdiction.

Held further—That it could not be said that S's interference was illegal in the sense that it was against public policy as described by the Privy Council in CHIDAMBARA CHETTY v. RUNGA KRISHNA (3).

This was a Rule granted on the 28th of April 1913 against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Rangpur, dated the 23rd of April 1913, directing the Plaintiff-Petitioner to furnish security for costs payable to the Defendants in case Plaintiff's case is dismissed.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, Tara Kishore Chowdhury, Mohini Mohan Chakravarti and Khirode Narayan Bhuiyan for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioner before us is the Plaintiff in a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rangpur in which he sued for the recovery of property valued at nine lacs. The case turns on an adoption relied on by the Defendants of which the Plaintiff denied both the factum and the validity. The suit was instituted on the 31st July 1911, and came on for hearing on the 1st April 1913. The Plaintiff closed his case on the 22nd April and just before he did so the Defendant applied to have one Surendra Chandra Lahiri made a Plaintiff, and to have Surendra and the Petitioner ordered to give security for the payment of the Defendant's costs. The Court refused to make Surendra a Plaintiff, but ordered that the Plaintiff should give security for the costs of the suit up to Rs. 5,000. A Rule has been granted to show cause why this order should not be set aside as being made without jurisdiction and why Surendra should not be made a Defendant.

The facts on which the order is made are that the Plaintiff before bringing this suit made an agreement with Surendra by which the latter advanced Rs. 3,000 to the former to pay the Court-fee on the institution of the suit, and undertook to advance any amount that might be necessary to prosecute the appeal up to the Privy Council. The amount so advanced is to be realised from any property recovered by a final decision or on a compromise : and Surendra will have a charge therefore on any decretal property or money. The Plaintiff and Surendra will then divide equally the balance of what is recovered. If the suit is unsuccessful the Plaintiff will not be liable to Surendra for costs. Surendra will be able to compromise the suit. The fact of this agreement was, it is stated, known to the Defendant before the institution of the suit.

We may say at once that the part of the Rule that relates to Surendra being added as a Defendant must fail : partly because the original application was made at too late a stage in the case for such an order to be appropriate, partly because it does not appear that Surendra has any actual present interest in the property. This part of the Rule is therefore discharged : but as it was not asked for by the Petitioner but was inserted by the Court, it is discharged without costs, which Surendra does not in fact deserve.

The order now before us was not made, and cannot be supported under Order XXV ; but the question is whether the Court has inherent power to make it. That the Court has some such power seems to be certain. So in Ram Kumar Kundu v. Chandra Kant Mukerjee (1), Sir Montague Smith, in delivering a judgment of the Privy Council, says, "It is ordinary practice, if the Plaintiff is suing for another, to require security for costs, and to stay proceedings until it is given. The new Plaintiffs were fully aware, during the pendency of the former suit, of the arrangement between the McFacens, another Defendant, but instead of applying for security for costs, they petitioned to make him co-Plain iff under the 73rd section of Act VIII." In this case the Defendant in the original suit was suing the maintainer of the Plaintiff, and thus though the facts relating to the contract of maintenance were very similar to those in the present case, the above observations were not necessary for the purpose of deciding the case in hand. They no doubt however can be taken as a correct indication of the existing law: and were so treated by Trevelyan, J., in Khasan Assenullahjoo v. Soloman (2), who after referring to that decision holds that the Court "has power to require security for costs if it finds that the Plain iff is not the real litigant, but that he is only a puppet in the hands of others." The Plain iff had parted with half his interest in the property that might be recovered in the suit: but it was held that he had a substantial interest in the suit, and that the suit was instituted on his behalf. The application for security was therefore dismissed.

On referring to English practice it seems that security may be demanded from a Plaintiff on the original hearing when he is only a nominal Plaintiff. We are however not aware of any cases where security was ordered for this reason except where questions of insolvency, which affect the whole legal status of the Plaintiff, were concerned.

The question which should determine granting of an order for security thus seems to be, Has the Plain iff got a substantial interest in the suit, or is he suing for another, in the capacity of what Trevelyan, J., convenien ly describes as a puppet? The Judge has not treated the matter from this point of view: but has dealt only with the question—can the Plain iff pay the costs if he loses? and on coming to the conclusion that he cannot, has made the order before us because he has the assistance of Surendra. The order admittedly cannot be made merely because the Plaintiff is a poor man. If Surendra's interference is not illegal, it cannot alter the position so long as the suit is in any way that of the Plaintiff.

We are asked to say that Surendra's interference is illegal in the sense that it is against public policy as described by the Privy Council in Chedam'a a Chetty v. Rurga Krishna (3). On the facts disclosed however we cannot say that this is so.

We hold therefore that the Court had no jurisdiction to make the Rule absolute, and set aside the order. We make no order as to costs.

Let the record be sent down as soon as it is convenient.

Rule made absolute.

[TESTAMENTARY AND INTESTATE JURISDICTION.]

MOOKERJEE, J. 1913, 27, August.

In the goods of HARRIETT TEVIOT KERR, Deceased.

Probate duty, assessment—Value of property, meaning of—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 11—Sec. 19I and Sch. III, Annex. A and B, sec. 5—Construction of Statute.

Sch. III, Annexures A and B, of the Court Fees Act make it clear that the duty payable at an application for Probate or Letters of Administration under Sch. I, Art. 11 of the Act is to be calculated upon the net value of the estate obtained by the deduction of the amount of debts from the gross value of the estate.

COLLECTOR OF MALDAH v. NIRODE KAMINI DASSY (2) may require re-examination and further consideration.

"The interpretation of the expression "value of property" in Sch. I, Art. 11 as the "market value" of property or the value of the entire property less the amount of encumbrance is the reasonable construction of the expression.

The true mode of interpreting a Statute like the Court Fees Act which has been repeatedly amended, is not to consider individual sections, but to take them as a whole and to give effect to the legislative intent upon a particular matter.

This was an application by the Administrator-General of Bengal for the probate of the Will of Harriett Teviot Kerr, deceased. In consequence of a difference of opinion between the Taxing Officer on the Original Side of the High Court and the Board of Revenue as to the scale on which probate duty was chargeable the question was referred by the Registrar (as Taxing Officer) on the Original Side under sec 5 of the Court Fees Act to the Hon'ble the Chief Justice under circumstances fully set out in his letter of Reference given below.

This is an application by the Administrator-General, for probate of the last Will of the deceased, upon which a question now arises as to what is the proper amount of duty payable in respect of the estate left by the deceased.

The application being by the Administrator-General, an affidavit of valuation, such as is required in the case of an ordinary applicant by sec. 19H of the Court-Fees Act is not necessary, under the decision In the goods of I. J. Aydall (1).

(1) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 401 (1899).
(2) 17 C. W. N. 21 (1912).

In accordance with the practice the Administrator-General has set out in his petition a list of the estate and in another list the debts payable out of the estate The value of the estate in the first list is given at Rs. 2,17,896-13-7 and the amount of the debts in the second list at Rs. 1,99,830-10-1¾ leaving a balance of Rs. 18,066-3-5¼.

The question now arising for consideration is at what rate should duty be charged on such balance.

This question arises owing to a letter from the Collector of Stamp Revenue No. 295 R. S. dated the 23rd September 1912.

When that letter came in I submitted it with the following note to Mr. Justice Fletcher for his opinion.

"The annexed letter from the Officiating Collector of Stamps Revenue No. 295, dated the 23rd September last, raises an interesting question with regard to the proper fee payable in respect of estates when Probate or Letters of Administration are applied for. By Art 11, Schedule I of the Court Fees Act XVII of 1870 the fee was 2 per cent on the amount or value of the property in respect of which the grant was made, if such amount or value exceeded Rs. 1,000.

"In the year 1904 a question seems to have been raised before the Board of Revenue as to the correct method of calculating the fee where the gross estate was over Rs 1,000, but, after deduction of the debts, etc, set out in Annexure B, the net value of the estate was reduced below Rs. 1,000

"The then Advocate-General's opinion was obtained by the Board; that opinion is set out on pages 20 and 21 of the Bengal Stamp Manual. The Advocate General was of opinion that 'in the first instance the Court is to see what the fee is when levied on the whole estate, and in order to find the true amount payable as duty, 2 per cent. of the whole amount or value, which the Petitioner is entitled to deduct, is to be deducted from the total fee leviable in respect of the whole estate, i.e., ... Duty, he thought, was payable notwithstanding the fact that the deduction of the debts brought the value of the estate below Rs. 1,000 Since then the Court following that opinion has always charged duty upon such estates in this manner.

"Now when the duty was 2 per cent. it did not matter whether you calculated the duty on the amount in Annexure B, the duty on the amount in Annexure A and deducted one duty from the other or whether you deducted the amount set out in Annexure B from the amount set out in Annexure A and calculated duty on the difference; the result was the same; and having regard to the form of the affidavit set out in Schedule III to the Court Fees Act by which the amount in Annexure B, which is not subject to duty, is deducted from the amount set out in Annexure A, and a net total shewn, we have always adopted the latter course calculating the duty on the net balance.

"Art. 11 of the Court Fees Act was by Act VII of 1910 amended and the fee chargeable was changed; 2 per cent. being charged when the amount or value of the property in respect of which the grant is made exceeds Rs. 1,000 but does not exceed Rs 10,000: 2½ per cent when such amount or value exceeds Rs 10,000 but does not exceed Rs 50,000: and 3 per cent when such amount or value exceeds Rs 50,000.

The office, however, does not appear to have changed its practice It has continued to deduct the amount set out in Annexure B from the amount set out in Annexure A and has charged duty on the balance at the rate (for such balance) given in Act VII of 1910.

"The Officiating Collector now claims that this is wrong having regard to the Advocate-General's opinion above referred to, and he has referred to three cases.

" For the purposes of illustration it is only necessary to refer to one of these. In the goods of E. S. Winger, the amount set out in Annexure A was Rs. 10,024-6-5, the amount set out in Annexure B was Rs 186, the net total being Rs. 9,838-6-5. Duty was charged on this net balance at 2 per cent, it being under Rs. 10,000.

"If the Collector's contention is correct we ought to have calculated duty at 2½ per cent. on Rs. 10,024-6-5, and then calculated duty on Rs. 186—at what figure? . . . The amount of duty calculated in that way would have been Rs. 246-4, whereas duty was only taken for Rs. 197, there being a difference of Rs. 49-4.

"Now the question is whether this method of calculation is correct or whether our practice of deducting the amount in Annexure B from Annexure A and taking the duty on the balance at the rate given in the amending Act VII of 1910 on the amount of such balance is correct. In this connection I would refer to the form of the affidavit of valuation given in Sch III of the Court Fees Act from which it will appear that from the total of the value of the estate set out in Annexure A is to be deducted the amount shown in Annexure B as not subject to duty If the amount in Annexure B is not subject to duty at all, is the Collector's contention that we should calculate duty upon it correct?

"I would also refer to sec. 19B of the Act which provides as follows.—

'Whenever it is proved to the satisfaction of such authority that an executor or administrator has paid debts due from the deceased to such an amount as, being deducted out of the amount or value of the estate, reduces the same to a sum which, if it had been the whole gross amount or value of the estate, would have occasioned a less Court-fee to be paid on the Probate or Letters of Administration granted in respect of such estate than has been actually paid thereon under this Act, such authority may return the difference, provided the same be claimed within three years after the date of such probate or letters.

"Before replying to the Collector I desire to take your Lordship's opinion on this point If your Lordship thinks that there is no doubt about it, or that, having regard to the fact that the opinion of the Advocate-General referred to has never been questioned, it would be more convenient to have these points raised when the next case comes up before me, when I could refer the point to the Chief Justice under sec. 5 of the Court Fees Act, I could so reply to the Collector."

His Lordship's (Mr. Justice Fletcher) opinion was as follows —

"In my opinion the views expressed by the learned Registrar in this note are clearly right I, as at present advised, do not agree with the opinion of Mr. O'Kinealy when Advocate General. The form clearly shows that duty is not to be calculated on the amount of the debts. I can see no answer to the Registrar's view.

"Take for instance the case of an estate in England exceeding one million gross but net only £20,000 Can it be seriously suggested that the duty is at the rate of 8 per cent. on the small balance of £20,000 instead of 4 per cent. on an estate of the value of £20,000."

IN THE GOODS OF HARRIETT TEVIOT KERR.

Thereupon I, under His Lordship's directions, informed the Collector that we should continue to follow our practice even in estates where the gross value is over Rs. 1,000 but the net value below that amount.

Subsequently the Board of Revenue in their letter No. 294A, dated 23rd January 1913, referred to this matter and drew attention to a recent ruling of this Court, The Collector of Maldah v. Nerode Kamini Dassy (2). The question in that case was simply whether duty was payable at all in a case where the gross estate was valued over Rs. 1,000, and the Appellate Court (Stephen and Richardson, JJ.) held that having regard to the wording of Art 11 of the 1st Schedule of the Court Fees Act, duty was payable on the ground, as I understand the judgment, that exemption is only allowed in cases where the gross amount or value of the property in respect of which the grant is made does not exceed Rs 1,000 The gross value of the estate in that case was only Rs 1,985. So no question arose as to the rate at which duty was to be charged on the net value.

In the present case however that question does arise.

If duty is to be calculated on the principle mentioned in the Collector's letter based upon the opinion of the late Advocate General, Mr. O'Kinealy, we ought to calculate duty at 3 per cent on the gross assets Rs. 2,17,900 – Rs. 6,537, then duty on the debts Rs 1,99,850 at the same rate = Rs. 5,995-8-0, making a duty of Rs 541-8-0

The applicant however contends that duty should be calculated at 2½ per cent. on the net assets, Rs 18,1050 – Rs. 452-8 only—the difference in the two methods of calculation being in the present case Rs 89

The difficulty has I think arisen by reason of the Court Fees Act having been amended piecemeal from time to time Originally by the Act of 1870 duty was payable on the gross value of estates where such value exceeded Rs. 1,000, the words in Art. 11 of Sch. I being "if the amount or value of the property in respect of which the grant . . . . is made exceeds Rs 1,000."

Those words are, as pointed out in the case in Collector of Maldah v. Nerode Kamini Dassy (2), unmistakably a description of gross and not net value, and there was no provision then in the Act allowing for deductions.

In July 1871 by Financial Notification No. 2004 the Governor General in Council remitted the fees in respect of property to which a deceased person was entitled as a trustee, and thereafter it was the practice to exempt from payment of duty such portion of the estate as proved to be trust property.

In 1872 a question appears to have arisen with regard to the power of the Local Government to allow refunds of stamp duty in cases where the assets were subsequently proved to be of less value than had been estimated at the time the duty was paid, and power was given to the Local Government to sanction such refunds pending legislation on the point; subsequently also by a Notification No 2504, dated 18th April 1873, the Chief Executive authority under the Local Government was empowered to allow refunds of duty, if he thought right, in respect of such portion of the assets as had been actually applied in discharging the debts of the deceased.

These two matters were subsequently embodied as secs. 19A and 19B of the Court Fees Act by the amending Act of 1875.

In 1899 however secs. 19H to 19K were added to the Act by the amending Act XI of 1899 By sec. 19I of that Act it is provided that "no order entitling a Petitioner to the grant of Probate or Letters of Administration shall be made upon an application for such grant until the Petitioner has filed in the Court a valuation of the property in the form set forth in the third schedule, and the Court is satisfied that the fee mentioned in No. 11 of the first schedule has been paid on such valuation."

Turning to the form in the third schedule it will be seen from para. 1 that the applicant is to set forth in Annexure A "all the property and credits of which the above named deceased died possessed or was entitled to at the time of his death, and which have come or are likely to come to my hands" and at the end of Annexure A it is stated "deduct amount shown in Annexure B not subject to duty."

From para. 2 of the affidavit it will be seen that the applicant is to set forth in Annexure B all the items which by law he is allowed to deduct, and from Annexure B itself it will be seen that the items he is allowed to deduct are debts due and owing from the deceased payable by law out of the estate :—

Funeral expenses; Mortgage encumbrances; Property held in trust; other property not subject to duty.

The result of this amendment by the Act of 1899, it is submitted, is that only the value of the estate in Annexure A after deduction of the value shown in Annexure B not subject to duty, is liable to duty. The Legislature, however, did not amend Art. 11 of Sch. I which still contains the words " in respect of which the grant is made." Hence the difficulty.

As I pointed out in my note to Mr Justice Fletcher when the duty was 2 per cent. it did not matter which way the calculation was made, but since the sliding scale was introduced by the Act of 1910 it makes a difference in the way I have pointed out.

If the Collector's method of calculating the duty at the higher rate leviable under the Act of 1910 on the gross amount, deducting duty calculated at the same rate on the value of the items set out in Annexure B is to be followed, it means that duty will have been calculated on items which are by this form of affidavit of valuation expressly stated to be not subject to duty.

The Administrator-General in a note he has made on this point, a copy of which he has sent me, draws attention to the words of Art. 11 of the 1st Schedule of the Court Fees Act "when the amount or value of the property in respect of which the grant is made," and he asks what is the amount or value of the property in a case where the estate is subject to a mortgage. He submits it is only the value of the equity of redemption as that is the only property which devolves upon the Administrator. He points out however that an Administrator would not be allowed to insert that in his affidavit of valuation inasmuch as the form in Sch III requires the property itself to be set out in Annexure A, and the mortgage incumbrance in Annexure B.

He also points out that where the deceased held property as trustee such property has (see the Form) to be shewn both in Annexure A and Annexure B, and if the Collector's principle is followed duty will have been taken on property not belonging to the deceased and which the Legislature has in the notification I have referred to exempted from payment.

I am requested by Messrs. Leslie & Hinds, Attorneys for the Administrator General, to refer this matter to the final decision of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice.

As the question is one of general importance I refer the same in pursuance of the provisions of sec. 5 of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870) to His Lordship's final decision.

Mr. L. P. E. Pugh, for the Administrator-General of Bengal.

Mr. G. H. B. Kenrick, K. C. (The Advocate-General) with Mr. B. C. Mitter, (The Standing Counsel) for the Board of Revenue.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is a reference under sec. 5 of the Court Fees Act, 1870, made by the Taxing Officer on the Original Side of this Court. The circumstances under which the reference has been made are fully set out in the order of reference and need only be recited very briefly. An application has been made by the Administrator-General for probate of the last Will of Harriett Teviot Kerr. As the application has been made by the Administrator General, no affidavit of valuation such as is required in the case of an ordinary applicant by sec. 19H of the Court Fees Act has been filed, as laid down in In Re Avdall (1). But in accordance with established practice, the Administrator-General has set out in his petition a list of the estate, and in another list the debts payable out of the estate. The value of the estate in the first list is given at Rs. 2,17,896-13 7, and the amount of the debts in the second list at Rs. 1,99,830-10-1⅝, leaving a balance of Rs. 18,066-3-5⅜. The question for consideration is, what is the proper amount of duty payable in respect of the estate left by the deceased.

(1) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 104 (1899).

IN THE GOODS OF HARRIETT TEVIOT KERR.

Art. 11 of Sch. I to the Court Fees Act provides that on a Probate of a Will or Letters of Administration with or without Will annexed, when the amount or value of the property in respect of which the grant of probate or letters is made exceeds one thousand rupees, but does not exceed ten thousand rupees, a fee of 2 per centum has to be paid on such amount or value. When such amount or value exceeds ten thousand rupees but does not exceed fifty thousand rupees, a fee of 2½ per centum on such amount or value has to be paid; when such amount or value exceeds fifty thousand rupees, a fee of 3 per centum on such amount or value has to be paid. On behalf of the Administrator-General, it has been argued that the fee payable ought to be calculated on the difference between the gross value of the estate and the amount of the debts, that is, in the present case, at the rate of two and one half per centum on Rs. 18,066. On the other hand, it has been contended on behalf of the Board of Revenue that the fee payable ought to be calculated in the manner following: namely, the fee payable on the gross value of the estate, reduced by the fee payable on the debts. In the case before us, according to this contention the fee payable would be the difference between three per centum on Rs. 217,896 and three per centum on Rs. 199,830. The question raised is of considerable nicety and by no means free from difficulty, which is attributable to the fact that the Court Fees Act has been amended piecemeal from time to time.

Sub-sec. 1 of sec. 19, of the Court Fees Act, which was inserted by Act XI of 1899, provides that no order entitling the Petitioner to the grant of Probate or Letters of Administration shall be made upon an application for such grant until the Petitioner has filed in the Court a valuation of the property in the form set forth in the third schedule, and the Court is satisfied that the fee mentioned in No. II of the first schedule has been paid on such valuation. When we turn to the third schedule, we find that the Petitioner is required to state in the form of valuation that he has truly set forth in Annexure B all the items which he is by law allowed to deduct. Annexure A is a statement of the valuation of the moveable and immoveable properties of the deceased. On the face of the form, it is clear that the Petitioner is required to state the value of the property and is allowed to deduct the amount shown in Annexure B not subject to duty. The Petitioner has thus to state the net total of the valuation of the moveable and immoveable properties of the deceased. When we turn to Annexure B, we find that it is headed "Schedule of Debts, etc:" then follow five different items, as to each of which a statement of value has to be made. These are as follows: (1) amount of debts due and owing from the deceased, payable by law out of the estate; (2) amount of funeral expenses: (3) amount of mortgage incumbrances; (4) property held in trust, not beneficially or with a general power to confer a beneficial interest: (5) other property not subject to duty. It is plain that each of the first four items constitutes property not subject to duty; consequently, the principle formulated on behalf of the Board of Revenue, namely, that duty should be calculated upon the gross value of the estate as also upon the debts and the difference taken, is contrary to the legislative provision that the amount of debts due and owing from the deceased and payable out of the estate constitutes property not subject to duty. It is further clear from the second paragraph of the form of valuation, read with the last clause of Annexure A, and the first and the last clauses of Annexure B, that the Legislature intended that the fee should be payable, only on the difference between the gross value of the estate and the amount of debt; in other words, as debts constitute property not subject to duty, the difference between the gross value of the estate and the amount of debts, alone constitutes property subject to duty. But it has been urged on behalf of the Board of Revenue that Art. II of the first schedule militates against this view, inasmuch as, that article requires the fee to be paid on the amount or value of the property in respect of which the grant of probate or letters is made, and it cannot be disputed that the grant of probate or letters is made in respect of the entire estate. In my opinion, the true mode of interpretation of a statute like the Court Fees Act, which has been repeatedly amended, is not to consider individual sections, but to take them as a whole and to give effect to the legislative intent upon a particular matter. It is conceivable that in 1899 when by sec. 2 of Act XI of that year, sec. 19I was inserted in the Court Fees Act as originally framed, the language of Art. 11 of the first schedule was not carefully considered; it is also possible that in 1910 when by sec. 2, cl. (i) of Act VII of that year, a progressive scale of duty was introduced, the effect of the amendment upon questions likely to arise, was not specifically realised by the framers of the amending provisions. Still it is the duty of the Court to give effect, as far as practicable, to all the sections of the statute as it stands, in its amended form, and the Court cannot rightly be invited to place such a construction upon the new sections introduced as would unquestionably destroy their effect. When the Legislature states explicitly in the third schedule, which was inserted in 1899, that debts due and owing from the deceased are not subject to duty, that the Petitioner is by law allowed to deduct the amount of debts from the gross valuation of the estate, and that he is to state in Annexure A the net value of the estate, the Court should not interpret Art. 11 of the first schedule as an isolated provision; but the Court should give effect to the combined provisions of Art. 11 of the first schedule and the third schedule. From this point of view, it appears to me indisputable that the fee should be calculated upon the net value of the estate obtained by the deduction of the amount of the debts from the gross value of the estate.

But it has been argued, on behalf of the Board of Revenue, that the construction for which the Administrator-General contends is opposed to the principle diducible from a long series of judicial decisions. An examination of the cases shows, however, that there is no force in this contention; there is really no judicial decision in which the precise point now under consideration has been examined. In the case of Collector of Maldah v. Nirode Kamini Dassy (2), the question for consideration was, whether duty is payable in respect of an estate the gross value whereof exceeds Rs. 1,000, but the net value after deduction of debts falls short of Rs. 1,000. It was ruled upon a construction of sec. 19, cl. 8, that the estate was not exempted from liability to pay duty. It is not necessary to decide on the present occasion whether this view is well-founded; it is sufficient to say that I reserve my opinion upon this matter with the remark that when it arises again, it may require re-examination and further consideration. But I do not appreciate how, in view of the provisions of cl. 7 of sec. 19H of the Court Fees Act, this Court reversed the decision of the primary Court in the case of Collector of Maldah v. Nirode Kamini Dassy (2). I further find it difficult to follow how this Court could interfere in the determination of the question of the duty payable by an applicant for Probate or Letters of Administration, upon even the most liberal interpretation of the scope of sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or sec. 15 of the Charter Act.

The next case to which my attention has been drawn is that of In the goods of Ram Chandra Das (3). In this case, Sir Richard Couch, C. J., held, with the concurrence of Mr. Justice Markby, that in estimating the amount of the ad valorem fee chargeable under cl. 11 of the first schedule of the Court Fees Act, the fee must be paid in respect of the property without deducting the amount of the debt to be paid out of it. The learned Chief Justice referred to the provisions of the law on the subject in England (55 Geo. III, c. 184, sec. 51) and observed that the Court had not to make the law but to put a construction upon the language which the Legislature had used. This decision, it will be observed, was given in 1872, long before the amendment of the Court Fees Act in 1899, and the Court was called upon to consider only the question of the construction of Art. 11 as it stood at the time. The Court accepted the contention of the Advocate-General that the duty was payable on the whole amount and overruled the arguments of the applicant for Letters of Administration that the word "value" means "the value of the estate after the debts have been deducted." It is not necessary to examine the grounds of this decision, as in my opinion the law has been materially altered by subsequent legislation. But before I leave this case, I may state that I don't appreciate how a reference under sec. 5 of the Court Fees Act by the Taxing Officer of this Court on the Original Side was heard by a Bench of two Judges. Sec. 5 makes it plain that such reference is to be heard by the Chief Justice or by such Judge of the High Court as the Chief Justice may appoint. Khachiera v. Kharag Singh (4).

The other cases to which my attention has been drawn do not support the contention of the Board of Revenue. In the case of In the goods of Peter Innes (5), it was ruled by Norman, C. J., that when Letters of Administration are granted in respect of property subject to a mortgage, the value of the property, within the meaning of Art. 11 of the first schedule of the Court Fees Act, is the value of the entire property less the amount of the incumbrance because, this is the value of that with which the Administrator is to deal. The same view was accepted in In the goods of Charles Edward Maclean (6), where it was held that the term "value" in Art. 11 means "market value" and that the market value of mortgage property is the value of the equity of redemption and of that only. To the same effect is the decision of Westropp, C. J., in In the goods of Ram Chandra Lakshmanji (7). These deci-

Fees of Pleader Commissioners in the Presidency Court of Small Causes.

We invite the attention of the Calcutta Small Cause Court Bar to the answer to their enquiry given by a Court Officer in Bombay regarding the scale of fees allowed at the Bombay Presidency Small Cause Court to Commissioners appointed in that Court from amongst the practitioners for taking evidence or making local inspection, &c. We had received the communication from the Bombay Court Officer about the time that our Courts closed for the Long Vacation. We held it over for publication after the vacation as it would attract more attention now than then. The Small Cause Court Bar will do well to draw the attention of the Chief Judge to the practice followed in Bombay, as it has everything to recommend it. We convey our thanks to the Court Officer in Bombay for favouring us from time to time with information concerning a matter of importance to practitioners and litigants in the Calcutta Small Cause Court.

The Privy Council and miscarriage of justice in a criminal case.

We invite attention to the decision of the Privy Council in Louis Edouard Lanier v. The King, reported at p. 98 of the last number of this journal. Their Lordships whilst affirming the general rule that the Judicial Committee will not lightly interfere in criminal cases, set aside the conviction of the Appellant for embezzlement by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Seychelles, on the ground that justice had gravely and injuriously miscarried and the sentence pronounced against the Appellant constituted an invasion of the Appellant's liberty and the denial of his just rights as a citizen. Lord Shaw in delivering the judgment of the Board advisedly refrained from commenting on the various "peculiarities" of the case and confined himself to the barest narrative of the facts. These show that the Appellant under power derived from the guardian of certain minors was charged with the duty of getting in and investing moneys on behalf of the infants and for this purpose had opened an account in their favour with a firm, of which he himself was a member, and which in the course of their dealings with the minors' property not only paid a high rate of interest but at times made advances far in excess of the receipts. The investment was not only in fact advantageous to the minors but was approved by the guardian.

Guilty mind necessary to constitute the crime of embezzlement.

In November 1910, a sum of Rs. 35,313 became payable to the minors by a creditor who paid the amount to the firm's Banker, the amount being with his concurrence credited to the firm's account which at that moment was overdrawn. But the minors' account with the firm was at the same time duly credited with the amount. No concealment whatever was practised and the firm continued to make advances as before out of the money lying with them at interest. Lord Shaw points out that the crediting of the amount to the firm in their over-drawn account with their Banker was, as is clear, an irregularity. But every irregularity is not a crime. If it were so, says his Lordship, "all persons taking charge even for a day, or at the earnest solicitation of friends, of funds for investment, could be held criminally liable for errors in investment or even for sanguine forecasts about investments, although their motives had been generous, and their conduct undeniably honest." His Lordship says elsewhere, "the mixture of the funds of another with one's own funds may be in many cases natural and proper, in other cases convenient but irregular, and in a third, both irregular and criminal. The distinctions between these cases require to be treated with the greatest judicial care so as, while preserving the amplest civil responsibility, to prevent the third or criminal category from being ex ended to mistaken though convenient acts. This is only to say that apart from constructive criminal responsibility, which of course may be imposed by Statute, a Court of justice cannot reach the conclusion that crime has been committed unless it be a just result of the evidence that the accused in what was done or omitted by him 'was moved by the guilty mind.''

Distinction between civil liability to account and criminal misappropriation.

In drawing the above distinction between criminal liability and the civil liability to account, his Lordship has merely applied to this class of cases the elementary rule that it is dishonesty of motive, guilty mind or mens rea alone which can convert an act, illegal or irregular though it may be, into a crime. Here on the facts there was a total absence of the guilty mind. When the amount was credited to the firm's over-drawn account, nobody concerned in the transaction had the remotest idea that anything criminal was being done. Not only that, but when on 20th June 1911 at a Family Council presided over officially by the Chief Justice, the Appellant was asked to show what cash he had in hand belonging to the minors and, on his making a full and fair statement, was further required to furnish a guarantee and security for the amount, he promptly fulfilled the requisition.

Risk of Prosecutor acting as Judge.

There was after this no room for doubting the Appellant's bonâ fides. And yet on the 27th June 1911, the very day on which the guarantee or security was given criminal proceedings, apparently at the instance of the Chief Justice, were initiated against the Appellant, and the Chief Justice again, as president of the Family Council, appointed two Counsel to conduct the prosecution and arranged about their fees, and finally after a trial at which the Appellant does not appear to have had given to him an opportunity to appear by Counsel, he was convicted of embezzlement by the Chief Justice. Lord Shaw in discussing the judgment of the Chief Justice bluntly observes that the distinction between criminal liability and civil liability to account hardly seems to have been present to his mind. The judgment of Lord Shaw is instructive from many points of view—but not the least so, because it brings into clear relief the danger of the prosecutor acting also as a Judge, even when the prosecutor from his high position may be [illegible] to be so far removed from common prejudices as a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. Not only was the prosecution started without any reasonable foundation, it was pressed with a degree of vigour which probably would have been absent in an ordinary prosecution. It is to be hoped that the judgment of their Lordships will be carefully studied by those who oppose the separation of the executive and judicial functions in India and that the lesson derived from its perusal will not be lost on them.

Racial discrimination and membership of the Bar.

Noticing the increased number of calls to the Bar, the English Law Journal with its characteristic breadth of view makes the following observations:—

> This growth in the membership of the Bar does not mean an increase in the competition in our Courts It is attributable to the larger number of students who come to the Inns from the King's dominions beyond the seas. More than one-third of the newly called barristers bear names that unmistakably indicate that they belong to other climes than ours The Inns of Court, like the Judicial Committee, may thus be regarded as a link of Empire, and any action by which the link is weakened will be a misfortune both from the Imperial and professional point of view. If any of the students who come from remote parts of the Empire to qualify for the Bar desire to remain here after they are called, no obstacle ought to be placed in their way of pursuing the profession to which they have been admitted. A little time ago a Circuit mess declined to elect an Indian gentleman merely because of his complexion. Such a discrimination if generally maintained—and we are glad to say that it has not been—would be wholly unworthy of the traditions of the Bar, and might prove to be seriously prejudicial to the interests of the Empire.

We are glad to be assured by our contemporary that invidious distinctions of kind are condemned by enlightened legal opinion in England. It would certainly be disastrous for the Empire if acts promoting racial prejudice were not put down from the Bench and the Bar.

Privileges of Doctors of Law in Medieval Europe.

Dr. David Murray in his erudite but somewhat inappropriately styled book, "Lawyers' merriments" (Glasgow: James MacLehon and Sons, 1912), has given an interesting account of the privileges, which Doctors of Law enjoyed in medieval times and of which the following account appears in a notice of the work in the September number of the Canadian Law Times.

"A Doctor of laws might wear such golden rings and chains as were forbidden to the lesser of the nobility; might, in his coat of arms, display a helmet with the visor raised; might carry weapons when other persons were forbidden to wear them. If convicted of crime, he was to suffer only a mitigated punishment; and finally if a person were killed in the presence of a doctor and some other man, this other man was [illegible] to be the guilty slayer. But the Univ which endowed a Doctor with all these privileges had need to be cautious as to whom they chose. For it was an arguable question whether any Faculty that had admitted to the degree an incompetent man might not be sued for damages by unsuccessful clients whose cases he had bungled. And the Doctor himself had his disadvantages; for he must not stand in a crowd to watch any sports, as this would be an unseemly loss of dignity."

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,—Owing to the closing of this Court in the current month under extraordinary circumstances I regret I could not comply earlier with Mr. Mullick's request in your issue of the 15th instant. I am glad the information I have furnished is found to be useful to the members of the Calcutta Small Couse Court Bar. There is no fixed scale of fees for remunerating the pleaders appointed as commissioners to examine accounts and report thereon, take measurements, make local investigations, etc. The fee, as I have already pointed out, varies in proportion to the amount of the claim and the quantity of the work to be done. As a rule, however, in suits for amounts exceeding Rs. 1,000 which are generally tried by the Chief Judge, the fee is Rs. 25 or 30 either side, that is to say, the Plaintiff and the Defendant have each to pay so much. If the accounts are lengthy or complicated and likely to occupy several hearings, the remuneration is occasionally increased even to Rs. 40 or 45, either side. In suits for Rs. 1,000 and under which are generally tried by the other Judges, the fee ranges from Rs. 7½ to Rs. 20 or even 25 at times, each side. In suits for very small amounts, between poor litigants, when the accounts to examine are not at all heavy the Judge fixes the fee as low as Rs. 5 only, either side. One noteworthy feature of the matter is that pleaders consider it their duty to take up the work for the work's sake and with a view to help the Court, no matter what fee the Judge fixes and the Judge has absolute discretion in the matter.

There is no officer on the establishment of the Court like an Accountant or Pundit to examine accounts, as there is, for instance, the Taxing Master in the High Court. Hence the necessity for appointing commissioners on each occasion, as required.

In exceptional cases, (though rarely) a pleader is deputed to take the evidence of an old infirm witness at his house, if he cannot attend in Court, or examine a person at his house who is exempt from such attendance. The evidence is generally finished in a day and the fee is, as a rule, Rs. 10, occasionally even Rs. 15.

HINDU WOMAN'S ESTATE (Non-technical Stridhana). By Bhagwan Das Sirvya, B. A., LL. B. Calcutta: Butterworth & Co., (India) Ltd., 1913.

The limited interest which a Hindu woman enjoys in proper y inherited from male or female relations is so peculiar and has formed the subject of discussion in Courts and schools so often and from such a variety of stand-points, that there can be no question that a separate treatment of the subject is not only justified but absolutely necessary. As the book under notice clearly demonstrates, the literature on the subject has far outgrown the modest limits which only can be assigned to it in any general treatment, however thorough, of Hindu Law as a whole. But no one who has had occasion even to glance cursorily over the pages of this book need complain that the treatment accorded to it by the author is inadequate or partial. It is thoroughly exhaustive and to show this within the limits allowed to us, we cannot do better than summarise the chapter headings. Ch. I. The Hindu widow. Ch. II. Females other than widow. Ch. III. Exclusions and disabilities. Ch. IV. Obligations and subsequent disabilities. Ch. V. Nature of estate in property taken by female heirs. Ch. VI. Female heirs as representatives of the estate. Ch. VII. Two or more female heirs. Ch. VIII. Nature of estate in income and accumulation: Partition. Chs. IX. and X. Extent of her powers in dealing with the property. Ch. XI. Power of alienation. Ch. XII. Reversioners—their rights and remedies. Ch. XIII. Declaratory relief, Injunctions, Receivers. &c. Ch. XIV. Limitations, Court-fees and Jurisdiction. Ch. XV. Evidence and equities. Ch. XVI. Miscellaneous provisions and proceedings (e.g., Succession Certificate, Probate and Letters of Administration, Guardianship, Registration, Stamp). Ch. XVII. Pleadings and procedure. There is besides an Introduction discussing the texts and their bearing on the law as at present administered, garnished here and there with generalisations of doubtful scientific value taken from books dealing with customs prevalent amongst savage tribes. In an appendix the author attempts to furnish graphical explanations of some of the leading principles underlying the subject, by means of geometrical figures. The book covers over 400 pages, every one of which is full of matter, and is printed at the Law Printing House, Madras, to whom every credit is due for its handsome get-up. From every point of view, the book deserves to hold an honoured place in the Indian lawyer's library.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Radley and anr. v. London County Council. Before JUSTICES AVORY AND LUSH. 17th July 1913.

Tram conductor pursuing and injuring a boy. Held, that the employer was not liable.

This was an appeal from a decision of a County

Court. Small boys are in the habit of taking surreptitious rides on trams to the great annoyance of the tram conductors. A tram conductor one day being annoyed by the boys got down, and pursued some boy. The Plaintiff, a boy of 9 years, was mistaken for one of the naughty children, and in pursuing him as well, the conductor fell over him and broke the boy's arm. Hence this suit for damages against the County Council. The Court below non-suited and this appeal was dismissed. The Court held that the employer was not responsible for the servant's act. In the course of his judgment MR. JUSTICE AVORY said—

He thought the most favourable way in which the case could be put for the Plaintiff was that the conductor in doing what was complained of was either enforcing or endeavouring to enforce the by-laws of the Defendants which were put in evidence, or that he might be reasonably supposed to be enforcing or endeavoring to enforce those by-laws which dealt with the exclusion of unauthorized persons from the Defendants' tramcars and provided that the conductor should enforce or prevent the breach of the by-laws to the best of his ability. It was admitted that the act of the conductor was done not to prevent the Plaintiff from there and then entering the tramcar or otherwise infringing the by-laws, nor to prevent other boys from doing so, but to punish either this particular boy or other boys who had broken the by-law with a view to preventing them from doing so in the future. Mr. Doughty, while frankly admitting that, contended that even though the act was done with that object, it nevertheless was an act done by the conductor, qua conductor, in the course of his employment and within the scope of his authority. So far as the decisions which had been quoted were concerned he was not going to attempt either to reconcile them or to say that they could be reconciled. He believed, however, that the principle upon which the case ought to be decided was that which was clearly approved in the case of Abrahams v. Deakin, (1891) 1 Q. B. 516. That was a case in which the barman of a public-house had given a man into custody after having followed him into the street, on a charge of having passed bad money at the public house. An action for false imprisonment was brought against his master and it was held that he was not liable upon the ground that the barman had not implied authority to arrest the Plaintiff, inasmuch as the master's property was no longer in danger and the arrest was made only for the purpose of vindicating the law by punishing the Plaintiff for an offence which he was supposed to have already committed. It was clear in the present case that the act done by the conductor was an act done to punish, not an offender, because the Plaintiff was not an offender, but to punish one who was supposed to be an offender, or to punish somebody with the object of preventing others from repeating the offence. He could not see the distinction between the present case and that put during the argument of a conductor's going the day after an offence of that kind had been committed and seeking out either the boy who had committed the offence or some boy who resembled him or who belonged to the same class and was about the same age as the offender and giving him a hiding in order to act as a warning to other boys in the neighbourhood. In such a case he did not believe that there was any authority which would support an action against the employer for such an act done by the conductor. If the facts were not consistent with any other view than that there was no evidence to go to the jury, that the act of the conductor was one for which his employers could be held liable, the Deputy-Judge was right in non-suiting the Plaintiff.

Mr. Henderson for the Respondents.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before FLETCHER AND N. CHATTERJEA, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 2421 OF 1911. RAKHAL CHANDER DAS MAITY, Appellant v. UMAPROSAD MISRI AND OTHERS, Respondents. Heard, 27th and 28th November. Judgment, 28th November 1913.

Declaratory suit—Right to compel recognition as tenant—Transferee of a portion of a putni tenure—Putni Regulation (VIII of 1819), secs. 5, 6—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 12, 14, 195 (e).

The Plaintiff was a partial transferee of certain properties comprised in a putni. It was contended that being only such a partial transferee, the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819 did not apply to him and that he was entitled to be recognised by the landlords under secs. 12 and 17 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The lower Appellate Court held that the Defendant were not bound to recognise the Plaintiff as a tenant.

Held, that the lower Appellate Court was right in so holding.

Guilty mind necessary to constitute the crime of embezzlement.

In November 1910, a sum of Rs. 35,313 became payable to the minors by a creditor who paid the amount to the firm's Banker, the amount being with his concurrence credited to the firm's account which at that moment was overdrawn. But the minors' account with the firm was at the same time duly credited with the amount. No concealment whatever was practised and the firm continued to make advances as before out of the money lying with them at interest. Lord Shaw points out that the crediting of the amount to the firm in their over-drawn account with their Banker was, as is clear, an irregularity. But every irregularity is not a crime. If it were so, says his Lordship, "all persons taking charge even for a day, or at the earnest solicitation of friends, of funds for investment, could be held criminally liable for errors in investment or even for sanguine forecasts about investments, although their motives had been generous, and their conduct undeniably honest." His Lordship says elsewhere, "the mixture of the funds of another with one's own funds may be in many cases natural and proper, in other cases convenient but irregular, and in a third, both irregular and criminal. The distinctions between these cases require to be treated with the greatest judicial care so as, while preserving the amplest civil responsibility, to prevent the third or criminal category from being extended to mistaken though convenient acts. This is only to say that apart from constructive criminal responsibility, which of course may be imposed by Statute, a Court of justice cannot reach the conclusion that crime has been committed unless it be a just result of the evidence that the accused in what was done or omitted by him was moved by the guilty mind."

Distinction between civil liability to account and criminal misappropriation.

In drawing the above distinction between criminal liability and the civil liability to account, his Lordship has merely applied to this class of cases the elementary rule that it is dishonesty of motive, guilty mind or mens rea alone which can convert an act, illegal or irregular though it may be, into a crime. Here on the facts there was a total absence of the guilty mind. When the amount was credited to the firm's over-drawn account, nobody concerned in the transaction had the remotest idea that anything criminal was being done. Not only that, but when on 20th June 1911 at a Family Council presided over officially by the Chief Justice, the Appellant was asked to show what cash he had in hand belonging to the minors and, on his making a full and fair statement, was further required to furnish a guarantee and security for the amount, he promptly fulfilled the requisition.

Risk of Prosecutor acting as Judge.

There was after this no room for doubting the Appellant's bonâ fides. And yet on the 27th June 1911, the very day on which the guarantee or security was given criminal proceedings, apparently at the instance of the Chief Justice, were initiated against the Appellant, and the Chief Justice again, as president of the Family Council, appointed two Counsel to conduct the prosecution and arranged about their fees, and finally after a trial at which the Appellant does not appear to have had given to him an opportunity to appear by Counsel, he was convicted of embezzlement by the Chief Justice. Lord Shaw in discussing the judgment of the Chief Justice bluntly observes that the distinction between criminal liability and civil liability to account "hardly seems to have been present to his mind. The judgment of Lord Shaw is instructive from many points of view—but not the least so, because it brings into clear relief the danger of the prosecutor acting also as a Judge, even when the prosecutor from his high position may be presumed to be so far removed from common prejudices as a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. Not only was the prosecution started without any reasonable foundation, it was pressed with a degree of vigour which probably would have been absent in an ordinary prosecution. It is to be hoped that the judgment of their Lordships will be carefully studied by those who oppose the separation of the executive and judicial functions in India and that the lesson derived from its perusal will not be lost on them.

Racial discrimination and membership of the Bar.

Noticing the increased number of calls to the Bar, the English Law Journal with its characteristic breadth of view makes the following observations:—

This growth in the membership of the Bar does not mean an increase in the competition in our Courts It is attributable to the larger number of students who come to the Inns from the King's dominions beyond the seas. More than one-third of the newly called barristers bear names that unmistakably indicate that they belong to other climes than ours. The Inns of Court, like the Judicial Committee, may thus be regarded as a link of Empire, and any action by which the link is weakened will be a misfortune both from the Imperial and professional point of view. If any of the students who come from remote parts of the Empire to qualify for the Bar desire to remain here after they are called, no obstacle ought to be placed in their way of pursuing the profession to which they have been admitted. A little time ago a Circuit mess declined to elect an Indian gentleman merely because of his complexion. Such a discrimination if generally maintained—and we are glad to say that it has not been—would be wholly unworthy of the traditions of the Bar, and might prove to be seriously prejudicial to the interests of the Empire.

We are glad to be assured by our contemporary that invidious distinctions of kind are condemned by enlightened legal opinion in England. It would certainly be disastrous for the Empire if acts promoting racial prejudice were not put down from the Bench and the Bar.

Privileges of Doctors of Law in Medieval Europe.

Dr. David Murray in his erudite but somewhat inappropriately styled book, "Lawyers' merriments" (Glasgow: James MacLehose and Sons, 1912), has given an interesting account of the privileges, which Doctors of Law enjoyed in medieval times and of which the following account appears in a notice of the work in the September number of the Canadian Law Times.

"A Doctor of laws might wear such golden rings and chains as were forbidden to the lesser of the nobility; might, in his coat of arms, display a helmet with the visor raised; might carry weapons when other persons were forbidden to wear them. If convicted of crime, he was to suffer only a mitigated punishment; and finally if a person were killed in the presence of a doctor and some other man, this other man was presumed to be the guilty slayer. But the Universities which endowed a Doctor with all these privileges had need to be cautious as to whom they chose. For it was an arguable question whether any Faculty that had admitted to the degree an incompetent man might not be sued for damages by unsuccessful clients whose cases he had bungled. And the Doctor himself had his disadvantages; for he must not stand in a crowd to watch any sports, as this would be an unseemly loss of dignity."

TO THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,—Owing to the closing of this Court in the current month under extraordinary circumstances I regret I could not comply earlier with Mr. Mullick's request in your issue of the 15th instant. I am glad the information I have furnished is found to be useful to the members of the Calcutta Small Couse Court Bar. There is no fixed scale of fees for remunerating the pleaders appointed as commissioners to examine accounts and report thereon, take measurements, make local investigations, etc. The fee, as I have already pointed out, varies in proportion to the amount of the claim and the quantity of the work to be done. As a rule, however, in suits for amounts exceeding Rs. 1,000 which are generally tried by the Chief Judge, the fee is Rs. 25 or 30 either side, that is to say, the Plaintiff and the Defendant have each to pay so much. If the accounts are lengthy or complicated and likely to occupy several hearings, the remuneration is occasionally increased even to Rs. 40 or 45, either side. In suits for Rs. 1,000 and under which are generally tried by the other Judges, the fee ranges from Rs. 7½ to Rs. 20 or even 25 at times, each side. In suits for very small amounts, between poor litigants, when the accounts to examine are not at all heavy the Judge fixes the fee as low as Rs. 5 only, either side. One noteworthy feature of the matter is that pleaders consider it their duty to take up the work for the work's sake and with a view to help the Court, no matter what fee the Judge fixes and the Judge has absolute discretion in the matter.

There is no officer on the establishment of the Court like an Accountant or Pundit to examine accounts, as there is, for instance, the Taxing Master in the High Court. Hence the necessity for appointing commissioners on each occasion, as required.

In exceptional cases, (though rarely) a pleader is deputed to take the evidence of an old infirm witness at his house, if he cannot attend in Court, or examine a person at his house who is exempt from such attendance. The evidence is generally finished in a day and the fee is, as a rule, Rs. 10, occasionally even Rs. 15.

HINDU WOMAN'S ESTATE (Non-technical Stridhana). By Bhagwan Das Sirvya, B. A., LL. B. Calcutta: Butterworth & Co., (India) Ltd., 1913.

The limited interest which a Hindu woman enjoys in property inherited from male or female relations is so peculiar and has formed the subject of discussion in Courts and schools so often and from such a variety of stand-points, that there can be no question that a separate treatment of the subject is not only justified but absolutely necessary. As the book under notice clearly demonstrates, the literature on the subject has far outgrown the modest limits which only can be assigned to it in any general treatment, however thorough, of Hindu Law as a whole. But no one who has had occasion even to glance cursorily over the pages of this book need complain that the treatment accorded to it by the author is inadequate or partial. It is thoroughly exhaustive and to show this within the limits allowed to us, we cannot do better than summarise the chapter headings. Ch. I. The Hindu widow. Ch. II. Females other than widow. Ch. III. Exclusions and disabilities. Ch. IV. Obligations and subsequent disabilities. Ch. V. Nature of estate in property taken by female heirs. Ch. VI. Female heirs as representatives of the estate. Ch. VII. Two or more female heirs. Ch. VIII. Nature of estate in income and accumulation: Partition. Chs. IX. and X. Extent of her powers in dealing with the property. Ch. XI. Power of alienation. Ch. XII. Reversioners—their rights and remedies. Ch. XIII. Declaratory relief, Injunctions, Receivers. &c. Ch. XIV. Limitations, Court-fees and Jurisdiction. Ch. XV. Evidence and equities. Ch. XVI. Miscellaneous provisions and proceedings (e.g., Succession Certificate, Probate and Letters of Administration, Guardianship, Registration, Stamp). Ch. XVII. Pleadings and procedure. There is besides an Introduction discussing the texts and their bearing on the law as at present administered, garnished here and there with generalisations of doubtful scientific value taken from books dealing with customs prevalent amongst savage tribes. In an appendix the author attempts to furnish graphical explanations of some of the leading principles underlying the subject, by means of geometrical figures. The book covers over 400 pages, every one of which is full of matter, and is printed at the Law Printing House, Madras, to whom every credit is due for its handsome get-up. From every point of view, the book deserves to hold an honoured place in the Indian lawyer's library.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Radley and anr. v. London County Council. Before JUSTICES AVORY AND LUSH. 17th July 1913.

Tram conductor pursuing and injuring a boy. Held, that the employer was not liable.

This was an appeal from a decision of a County

Court. Small boys are in the habit of taking surreptitious rides on trams to the great annoyance of the tram conductors. A tram conductor one day being annoyed by the boys got down, and pursued some boy. The Plaintiff, a boy of 9 years, was mistaken for one of the naughty children, and in pursuing him as well, the conductor fell over him and broke the boy's arm. Hence this suit for damages against the County Council. The Court below non-suited and this appeal was dismissed. The Court held that the employer was not responsible for the servant's act. In the course of his judgment MR. JUSTICE AVORY said—

He thought the most favourable way in which the case could be put for the Plaintiff was that the conductor in doing what was complained of was either enforcing or endeavouring to enforce the by-laws of the Defendants which were put in evidence, or that he might be reasonably supposed to be enforcing or endeavoring to enforce those by-laws which dealt with the exclusion of unauthorized persons from the Defendants' tramcars and provided that the conductor should enforce or prevent the breach of the by-laws to the best of his ability. It was admitted that the act of the conductor was done not to prevent the Plaintiff from there and then entering the tramcar or otherwise infringing the by-laws, nor to prevent other boys from doing so, but to punish either this particular boy or other boys who had broken the by-law with a view to preventing them from doing so in the future. Mr. Doughty, while frankly admitting that, contended that even though the act was done with that object, it nevertheless was an act done by the conductor, qua conductor, in the course of his employment and within the scope of his authority. So far as the decisions which had been quoted were concerned he was not going to attempt either to reconcile them or to say that they could be reconciled. He believed, however, that the principle upon which the case ought to be decided was that which was clearly approved in the case of Abrahams v. Deakin, (1891) 1 Q. B. 516. That was a case in which the barman of a public-house had given a man into custody after having followed him into the street, on a charge of having passed bad money at the public house. An action for false imprisonment was brought against his master and it was held that he was not liable upon the ground that the barman had not implied authority to arrest the Plaintiff, inasmuch as the master's property was no longer in danger and the arrest was made only for the purpose of vindicating the law by punishing the Plaintiff for an offence which he was supposed to have already committed. It was clear in the present case that the act done by the conductor was an act done to punish, not an offender, because the Plaintiff was not an offender, but to punish one who was supposed to be an offender, or to punish somebody with the object of preventing others from repeating the offence. He could not see the distinction between the present case and that put during the argument of a conductor's going the day after an offence of that kind had been committed and seeking out either the boy who had committed the offence or some boy who resembled him or who belonged to the same class and was about the same age as the offender and giving him a hiding in order to act as a warning to other boys in the neighbourhood. In such a case he did not believe that there was any authority which would support an action against the employer for such an act done by the conductor. If the facts were not consistent with any other view than that there was no evidence to go to the jury, that the act of the conductor was one for which his employers could be held liable, the Deputy-Judge was right in non-suiting the Plaintiff.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before FLETCHER AND N. CHATTERJEA, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2421 OF 1911. RAKHAL CHANDER DAS MAITY, Appellant v. UMAPROSAD MISRI AND OTHERS, Respondents. Heard, 27th and 28th November. Judgment, 28th November 1913.

Declaratory suit—Right to compel recognition as tenant—Transferee of a portion of a putni tenure—Putni Regulation (VIII of 1819), secs. 5, 6—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 12, 14, 195 (e).

The Plaintiff was a partial transferee of certain properties comprised in a putni. It was contended that being only such a partial transferee, the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819 did not apply to him and that he was entitled to be recognised by the landlords under secs. 12 and 17 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The lower Appellate Court held that the Defendant were not bound to recognise the Plaintiff as a tenant.

Held, that the lower Appellate Court was right in so holding.

Babu Taruk Chunder Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

IN THE GOODS OF HARRIETT TEVIOTT KERR.

sions clearly do not lend any support to the position taken up by the Board of Revenue. On the other hand, if we accept the interpretation of the term "value" as given in these cases, namely, "market value," the view may well be maintained that when probate is taken in respect of an estate out of which debts have to be paid, the value, that is, the market value, of the property is the value of the estate left after deduction of the amount of the debt. In essence, the estate is burdened with the payment of debts, and if the estate were put up to sale with the modification that whoever might purchase it, would have to pay thereout the debts of the deceased, a purchaser would pay for the property a proportionately reduced price. This, I venture to think, is a reasonable construction of the expression "value of the property" in Art. 11, and if this interpretation had been adopted in the case of In the goods of Ram Chandra Das (3), the complications which have followed would have been avoided. Whatever doubts, however, might have been entertained as to the true scope of Art. 11 as it stood in 1870, the effect of the legislation of 1899 is in my opinion obvious and plainly supports the contention of the Administrator-General.

I hold accordingly that the duty in this case must be charged at the rate of two and one half per centum on the sum which represents the difference between the gross value of the estate and the amount of the debts.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 36 OF 1911.

BEACHCROFT, J. NEWBOULD, J. 1913, Heard, 24, June. Judgment, 25, July.	MAHARAJA SIR RAMESHWAR SINGH BAHADUR, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. SREEMUTY JANESHWARI BAHOOASIN and anr., Defendants, Respondents.

Babuana grant by Darbhanga Raj—Liability to pay its share of revenue and cesses if a charge on subject of grant—Partition by two sons of grantee with concurrence of Raj subject to condition that non defaulting share would be sold for arrears after sale-proceeds of defaulting share found insufficient—Condition if creates a charge—Suit for arrears of one share—Death of owner thereof Substitution of the other co sharer as representative and widow not admitted as party at Plaintiff's instance—Decree against other co-sharer only—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 367, 368—Plaintiff to choose representative of deceased Defendant at his own risk—Claim to represent by person other than Plaintiff's nominee—Proper procedure Suit thereon, against estate in widow's possession, if maintainable—Limitation -Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 122, 132.

The condition in a babuana grant to a junior member of the Durbhanga Raj family that the grantee shall regularly pay the Government revenue and cesses due from the portion of the estate given in babuana to the Raj treasury, does not create a charge in favour of the Raj in respect of overdue arrears of revenue and cesses upon the property granted.

Where on the grantee's death his two sons, with the concurrence of the holder of the Raj, divided the estate equally and separate accounts of their liabilities were opened, subject however to the condition that on default by either the Raj would be entitled to join the other in a suit to recover the arrears, and that in execution of the decree obtained the defaulter's share was to be put up for sale first and only on the proceeds proving insufficient the share of the other would be sold for the balance :

Held—That the arrears payable by the defaulting co-sharer were not by this agreement made a charge on any portion of the estate granted, and, if at all, then on the share of the non-defaulting co-sharer only.

On the death of one of the two co-sharers, dispute having arisen between his widow and the surviving co-sharer as to their right to represent the deceased's estate exclusively as his heir, the Raja in a suit instituted against the two co-sharers to recover arrears due on account of the share of the deceased only, applied for substitution of the surviving co-sharer in the place of the deceased and the widow's application to be added or substituted as representative of the deceased was on the Raja's opposition dismissed on the express understanding that she would not be bound by the decree and that her interests would in no way suffer, and subsequently, being unable to execute the decree as the share of the deceased was in the possession of his widow and the share of the surviving co-sharer could not be proceeded against under the agreement until the other share was sold, the Raja instituted a suit for a declaration that the share in the widow's possession was liable to pay the arrears covered by the decree in the previous suit and that the arrears were a charge on that share :

Held—That the suit was not in the circumstances maintainable as a suit on a judgment, and the limitation of 12 years applicable to such a suit did not apply.

RAMASWAMI CHETTIAR v. OPPILAMANI CHETTI (1), KADIR MOHIDEEN MARAKKAYAR v. MUTHU KRISHNA AYYAR (2), PROSUNNA CHUNDER BHATTACHARJEE v. KRISTO CHYTUNNO PAL (3) distinguished.

That as the arrears in question were not a charge on the share, the suit could not be treated as one to enforce a charge and the 12 years' limitation applicable to such a suit also did not apply.

When a Defendant dies it is for the Plaintiff to choose against whom he proposes to proceed, and if some one else with an adverse claim to the nominee wishes to be made the representative, he should be added as a party. The provisions of sec. 367 of Act XIV of 1882 applied only in the case of the death of the Plaintiff and had no application to the case of the death of a Defendant.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 14th of February 1911 against a decree of Babu K. M. Sikdar, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Bhagulpur, dated the 21st of November 1910.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babus Ram Charan Mitra and Jogendra Nath Mukerjee for the Appellant.

Babus Baldeo Narain Singh and Naresh Chandra Sinha for the Defendants.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Plaintiff in the suit out of which this Appeal arises is the Maharaja of Darbhanga. The facts, which are not disputed, are that the grandfather of the Plaintiff granted certain properties, mentioned in the schedule, to his youngest son, Nitreshwar Singh, in accordance with a family custom by which portions of the estate, which is impartible, are given to junior members of the family for maintenance, subject to the condition that the grantees should regularly pay the Government revenue and cesses due from these portions of the estate, to the Raj treasury. These grants are well known as babuana grants.

(1) I. L. R. 33 Mad. 6 (1909).
(2) I. L. R. 26 Mad. 230 (1902).
(3) I. L. R. 4 Cal. 342 (1878).

Nitreshwar Singh died leaving two sons, Ekradeswar who is the second Defendant and Janeswar, whose widow is the first Defendant. These two sons succeeded jointly to the babuana property but subsequently separated, each taking half of the property.

Ekradeswar and Janeswar having made default in payment of revenue and cesses, a suit was instituted in 1898 by the then Maharaja, the elder brother of the Plaintiff, to recover the arrears due, which were for a period of nearly three years.

The Plaintiff succeeded to the Raj during the pendency of that suit and in April 1899 a compromise was effected between him and the two brothers. By the compromise the shares of the two brothers in the babuana property were defined and declared to be equal, and a separate account of their liabilities was opened, but it was also agreed that if in future either of the two brothers made default the Raj would be entitled, though not bound, to make the co-sharer of the defaulter a co-Defendant in any suit which it might be necessary to bring subject to this condition that in execution of the decree obtained in such suit the Raj would be entitled to put up for sale in the first instance only the share of the defaulter, but that if the proceeds of the sale of that share were insufficient to satisfy the decree, the share of the co-sharer might be brought to sale for the balance.

Subsequently in 1905 the Plaintiff brought a suit against Janeswar to recover Rs. 18,738-15-6 on account of arrears of revenue and cesses due for Janeswar's moiety share.

In accordance with the terms of the compromise entered into in 1899, Ekradeswar was also made a Defendant in that suit. During the pendency of that suit Janeswar died and a dispute arose between Ekradeswar and the widow of Janeswar as to the title to succession to the estate of Janeswar. The dispute culminated in a suit brought by Ekradeswar against the widow for possession of the estate. Ekradeswar succeeded in the first Court, but on appeal to this Court it was held that the widow was the successor and legal representative of the deceased and the suit was dismissed. An appeal is now pending before the Privy Council.

The suit instituted by the Plaintiff in 1905 against Janeswar had meanwhile proceeded, Ekradeswar having been substituted in place of the deceased Janeswar. Finally the principal claim was admitted by Ekradeswar though the interest claimed was disputed. On the 27th July 1906 the Court decreed the full amount claimed.

The substitution of Ekradeswar in place of the deceased Janeswar had not been effected without protest from the widow. The Plaintiff reported the death of Janeswar and applied for the substitution of Ekradeswar on the 21st May and the order for substitution was made the same day. On the 19th June the widow applied to the Court to be substituted in place of Janeswar. On the 25th June the application was heard and as no objection was offered by Plaintiff's pleader an order was made substituting the widow for Janeswar, though there was no order cancelling the previous order for substitution.

MAHARAJA SIR RAMESHWAR SINGH BAHADUR v. SREEMUTY JANESHWARI BAHOOASIN.

On the 20th July two petitions were put in by the Plaintiff's pleader, one on his own behalf and one on behalf of the Plaintiff. The first, after referring to the application to substitute Ekradeswar for Janeswar and the order passed thereon, stated that when the petition of the widow to be substituted had been presented the Court had enquired from him if he had any objection to her being made a party and he had in exercise of his own discretion stated that he had no objection to her being made a party and the case being proceeded with in presence of both parties, but he never meant to admit that she was the legal representative of Janeswar or should be recorded as such.

The other petition was to the same effect though it contains an allegation which is absent from the pleader's petition, viz, that when the Court enquired from the pleader if he had any objection to the widow being made a party, he said he had not, if she wished to be added, though he submitted that Ekradeswar was the legal representative of deceased. The petition went on to say that Ekradeswar alone ought to be a party as representative of the deceased and that the widow had no right to be substituted for Janeswar or even to be added as a party to the suit, and there was a prayer that the order adding her as a party should be revoked and the case tried in the presence of Ekradeswar alone. On both these petitions the widow's pleader noted his objection.

I may here for a moment to remark that these petitions do not bear the stamp of bona fides. The petition of the widow asking to be substituted was ordered to be heard on the date fixed for hearing the suit—it was put up on that date—the Court asked the pleader if he had any objection to offer: the pleader according to his own petition understood the enquiry of the Court to be whether he objected to her being added as a party and he said he had not according to the petition filed by him on behalf of the Raj, he urged also that Ekradeswar was the legal representative, yet in spite of his submission the Court did not merely add her as a party, but made an order for substitution in her favour and recorded that the Plaintiff's pleader had no objection to this course. It is difficult to imagine that the Court, understanding as it did that the widow's application was one for substitution, should in the face of the pleader's argument that Ekradeswar was the legal representative, have recorded that the pleader did not object to an order for substitution, if the pleader was merely not opposing her being added as a party.

When the petition of the Plaintiff was put up for hearing the widow's pleader opposed it. However, as is evident from the order of the 20th July, it was stated on behalf of the Plaintiff that he did not want a decree against her, and the result was that the Subordinate Judge struck her off the record, considering it inadvisable that she should remain on it against the wishes of the Plaintiff, and remarking that she would not be bound by any decree that might be passed and her interests would not suffer. Finally, as already remarked, the suit was decreed with this significant passage in the ordering portion of the judgment—the decree, I may remark, has not been exhibited in the case, but presumably is in accordance with the judgment—"this order will not enable the Plaintiff to make any portion of the estate of Janeswar in the hands of any person, other than the Defendant, liable for the decree."

MAHARAJA SIR RAMESHWAR SINGH BAHADUR v. SREEMUTY JANESHWARI BAHOOASIN.

When the widow was successful in the suit brought against her by Ekradeswar the Plaintiff who had supported Ekradeswar in that suit was in this difficulty that he could not under the terms of the compromise proceed against Ekradeswar's share in the maintenance tenure, until Janeswar's share had been sold, and he could not proceed against Janeswar's share which was not in the hands of the widow on the decree against Ekradeswar.

The result was the present suit, in which the Plaintiff asks (1) for a declaration that Janeswar made default to the extent of Rs. 18,738 15 9, (2) that the Court should hold that the widow being in possession of the estate under the High Court decree is liable to pay the arrears covered by the decree in the suit of 1905, (3) a decree for the amount with interest from the date of the previous decree, (4) for a declaration that the arrears are a charge on Janeswar's share of the maintenance tenure. There are also the usual prayers for costs and other reliefs.

It is alleged in the plaint that on Janeswar's death Ekradeswar attempted to get possession of the estate and succeeded to a great extent, and that some time afterwards the widow succeeded in getting possession. The allegation that Ekradeswar succeeded in getting possession to a great extent is traversed in the written statement of the widow and the only evidence that there is on this point in the very short examination of the three witnesses who were called in the case is in her favour.

It is also alleged in the plaint that the reason why the widow was not brought on the record as representative of Janeswar in the suit of 1905 was misconception on the part of the Plaintiff's agent. This misconception, it is argued, was a reasonable one in view of an alleged family custom that maintenance tenures never devolved on females, a custom which the Plaintiff tried to support in Ekradeswar's suit against the widow. Now whatever may be the truth as to the existence of the alleged family custom, it is quite clear that the Plaintiff was put on notice of the widow's claim by her petition of the 16th June 1906, a petition in which it was definitely asserted that Ekradeswar had made an attempt in the Court of the District Judge to get possession of the estate and had failed.

The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on two grounds (1) that in the previous suit the Plaintiff was satisfied with a decree against the assets in the hands of Ekradeswar and deliberately refrained from seeking a decree against the assets in the hands of the widow, and consequently the suit was barred by the provisions of sec. 43, C. C. P., (2) that the suit was barred by limitation.

It is now argued that sec. 43 has no application, for the Plaintiff was not splitting up his claim but that on the contrary he claimed the whole amount due from the estate of Janeswar. I am of opinion that this contention is sound and that sec. 43 has no application to the circumstances of the case.

It is next argued that the suit is not barred by limitation, for it is in fact a suit on a judgment, the period of limitation for which is 12 years. To support this contention it is argued that the decree in the previous suit binds the estate, though in fact the wrong person may have been substituted in place of Janeswar in that suit, and reliance is placed on the cases of Ramaswami Chettiar v. Oppilamani Chetti (1), Kadir Mohideen

(1) I. L. R. 33 Mad. 6 (1909).

Marakkayar v. Muthu Krishna Ayyar (2), and Prosunna Chunder Bhattacharjee v. Kristo Chytunno Pal (3).

I am of opinion that none of these cases support the contention of the Appellant. In the case of Ramaswami Chettiar v. Oppilamani Chetti (1), the person who was brought in to represent the estate of the deceased was his natural father, who was in fact in possession of the estate and who claimed under a Will which at the time had after contest been held to be genuine, though subsequently the Will was found not to be genuine. In the case of Kadir Mohideen Marakkayyar v. Muthu Krishan Ayyar (2), the person who was brought on the record to represent the deceased was one of three sons and three daughters of the deceased. He raised no objection that he was not the sole representative of the deceased, and the other heirs, whose interests were identical with his, did not apply to be brought on the record. The learned Judges remark "it will of course be open to any other person who is or claims to be the legal representative or one of the legal representatives of the deceased to apply to have his name also entered in the record as a legal representative in place of the deceased Defendant. . . . If the true legal representative or all the legal representatives do not intervene, it can be due only to his or their laches." In the case of Prosunna Chunder Bhattacharjee v. Kristo Chytunno Pal (3), deceased had been living with one Bibhuti as his wife. After his death, no relatives appeared and she continued to live in deceased's house and was in possession of his property. A creditor of deceased got a decree against Bibhuti as representing him. When he tried to execute it he found Prasanna, a distant relative of deceased, in possession claiming, not as an heir, but under a Will, of which he had obtained probate after the creditor had got his decree. It was found that the creditor had brought his suit in good faith believing Bibhuti to be the representative of the deceased. It was held, though with some hesitation, that the party who took possession of the estate of the deceased should be treated for some purposes as his representative, and that the judgment obtained against such a representative was not a mere nullity and was sufficient to enable the creditor to sue the executor to have the decree satisfied.

The essential features of these cases are wanting in the present case. The interests of Ekradeswar and the widow were not identical, the widow and not Ekradeswar was in possession, the widow appeared and claimed to represent the estate, but not only was she finally not even made a party but was removed from the record on which she had been placed, on the application of the Plaintiff, on the express understanding that she would not be bound by the decree and that her interests would in no way suffer.

An attempt has been made to throw the blame for the substitution of Ekradeswar in place of Janeswar on the Court, it being argued that the Court ought to have decided who was the proper person to represent Janeswar, and that the application to substitute Ekradeswar was bonâ fide. Now, not only have I grave doubts as to the bonâ fides of the application to substitute Ekradeswar, especially in face of the opposition of the widow, but it is clear that sec. 368 of Act XIV of

(1) I. L. R 33 Mad 6 (1909).
(2) I. L. R. 26 Mad. 230 (1902).
(3) I. L. R. 4 Cal. 342 (1878).

1882 does not lay on the Court the duty which the Appellant seeks to impose upon it. On the contrary, it is for the Plaintiff to choose against whom he proposes to proceed and if some one else with an adverse claim to the nominee wishes to be made the representative he should be added as a party. The provisions of sec. 367 apply only in the case of the death of the Plaintiff and have no application to the case of the death of a Defendant. The reason for the different treatment of the two cases is obvious.

Now not only is it clear that in the circumstances the decree cannot be held to bind the widow but it is perfectly clear that if a suit could be brought on the judgment it would be wholly infructuous as against her when that very judgment expressly decided that the decretal amount could be realised by the sale of the estate in the hands of Ekradeswar alone and that no portion of the estate in the hands of any other person was to be made liable.

It is next contended that the arrears are a charge upon the estate in whosoever's hands the asssets may happen to be, and as such the period of limitation is 12 years. The widow, it may be here noted, admits that the arrears were in fact due. It is argued that as from the nature of the agreement the maintenance holder is only to take the profits of the estate provided that he pays the Government revenue to the Maharaja, the payment of the Government revenue should be considered a charge upon the estate. To support this proposition reference is made to the case of Durgadut Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (4) in which their Lordships of the Privy council remarked "it never could be permitted that the subject of the grant could be enjoyed and the condition upon which it was made disregarded." But their Lordships were merely dealing with the question whether a maintenance estate was inalienable or not; and in the very sentence from which the above passage is quoted they remark that the Maharaja may sue for the amount of Government revenue paid by him and recover it by sale of the interest granted for maintenance. No authority has been shown to us to support the view that such a payment creates a charge. To support the opposite view, Respondent's pleader relies on the Full Bench decision of Kinu Ram Das v. Mazaffer Hussain Shaha (5). That case is distinguished on the ground that it was a suit brought by a co-sharer in a revenue-paying estate, who had paid the whole revenue due to save the estate from sale and that the real remedy of a co sharer in such a case is by a suit for contribution, a remedy which would not be available in the present case.

In that case Wilson, J., pointed out that there was no general rule of equity to the effect that any person having an interest in an estate, who makes a payment to save the estate, obtains a charge on the estate. No doubt the Maharaja has an interest in the maintenance estate in this sense that it is never separated from the zemindari, Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Moheshur Singh (6), and that on the failure of heirs the estate would revert to the Raj; but there is this difference between Kinu Ram's case (5) and one like the present, that in the former case there is no contract between the parties, whereas in the present there is, and in the former case the charge claimed was based on the theory that the payment saved the estate, whereas in the present case the claim of a charge is not based on the ground that the Maharaja had made a payment to save the estate, for he would have to pay the whole Government revenue due from the Raj in any event, but on the ground that Janeswar failed to carry out his contract to make certain payments to the Raj treasury. I am of opinion that that case has no bearing on the present question.

(6) 6 M. I. A. 164 at p. 197 (1855).

In reply it was attempted by the Appellant's pleader to support the theory of a charge on the analogy of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides that rent shall be a first charge on a tenure or holding, though the learned pleader expressly repudiated the applicability of that Act in the present case. It is obvious that an analogy cannot be drawn from the provisions of a Statute intended to meet a particular case.

A charge can be created only by operation of law or act of parties. In the present case there is no question of the first method. If a charge was created it must have been by the second method. The Subordinate Judge has disposed of the question by saying there is no evidence of a charge. All that we have is what is contained in the plaint, the first 12 paragraphs of which the Defendant admits to be correct. From that all that we know of the terms of the grant is contained in the statements that the grant was one for maintenance and that the grantee was to pay the Government revenue and cesses to the Raj treasury. Such conditions do not in my opinion suffice to create a charge.

But it was urged by the learned pleader who replied on behalf of the Appellant,—and I may note that this suggestion was not made by Dr. Rash Behary Ghose in opening the appeal,—that para. 10 of the plaint modified the original contract and created a charge. If that argument be correct then the theory of an original charge cannot be invoked to support the suit.

In my opinion the agreement which is recited in para. 10 of the plaint did not create a charge. What appears from the plaint to have happened was this. The grant was to the father of Ekradeswar and Janeswar and on his death the brothers divided the property. The Maharaja would apparently only recognise the partition on conditions one of which was that if the sale-proceeds of the share of one co-sharer was insufficient to satisfy a decree in case of default, the share of the other was to be liable to sale. The provision was really in favour of the brother, as it restricted the liability to sale in the first instance to the share in default. If no charge existed before, I do not think this compromise created one; if it created one at all it only created it on the share of one co-sharer, in respect of default by the other co-sharer.

I would therefore dismiss the Appeal with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 161 OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J.
RAY, J.
1913,
10, April.

BEJOY CHAND MAHTAP, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
SASHI BHUSAN BOSE, Defendant, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 169 (c)—Rent accrued due between the date of sale and confirmation thereof—Liability whether judgment-debtor's or auction purchaser's—Liability of the surplus sale proceeds—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 65.

In view of the alteration in the law made by sec. 65 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, the liability of the surplus sale proceeds under sec. 169 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is limited to arrears accrued due up to the date of the sale and cannot be extended to arrears due up to the date of confirmation thereof.

Arrears accrued due between these dates cannot be recovered from the judgment-debtor.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 24th of January 1911 against a decree of Babu Jnanendra Nath Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Hughly, dated the 27th of September 1910, affirming a decree of Babu Benode Behary Ray, Munsif of Arambag, dated the 30th of March 1910.

The facts of the case were as follows :—

In execution of a rent decree obtained by the Plaintiff-Appellant a tenure held by the Defendant was sold on 15th April 1909 and purchased by one Chakrapani Dutt and the sale was confirmed on 16th June 1909. After the sale the Plaintiff applied under sec. 169 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to take out the surplus sale proceeds for the rent which had accrued due between the date of institution of the suit and the date of confirmation of sale. The surplus fell short by Rs. 191-2-6, and this amount the Plaintiff sued to recover from the Defendant in the suit out of which the present appeal arose.

The Defendant urged that as under sec. 65 of the present Civil Procedure Code the title in the property sold vested in the purchaser from the date of the sale and not from the date of the confirmation of sale as was provided in sec. 316 of the old Civil Procedure Code, the Plaintiff should have sued Chakrapani Dutt, the purchaser, for whatever portion of the arrears fell due since the date of the sale.

The Court of first instance upheld the Defendant's plea holding that under sec. 169 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the surplus sale-proceeds, and not the judgment-debtor personally, were made liable to pay the arrears which accrued between the date of sale and date of confirmation thereof and this decision was affirmed by the lower Appellate Court.

The Plaintiff preferred this Second Appeal.

Babu Shoroshi Charan Mitra for the Appellant.

No one appeared for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—In our opinion the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be confirmed. The point turns upon the effect of sec. 169, cl. (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in view of the alteration in the law occasioned by sec. 65 of the new Civil Procedure Code as to the date of the vesting of property sold in execution. The scope of cl. (c) is limited to the rent that may have fallen due to the decree-holder in respect of the tenure or holding, between the dates mentioned. It must have fallen due from some person and that person must, I think, be the judgment-debtor. But as a consequence of the alteration occasioned by sec. 65, the judgment-debtor is not liable for rent beyond the time when the property is sold and the liability of the proceeds under cl. (c) must be similarly limited, so as to correspond with this. This view does not involve any inconsistency in the law or any conflict with the express words of cl. (c). All that it involves is that it is no longer necessary to carry matters up to the more extended margin of time permitted by that clause.

For these reasons, the decree must be confirmed. There will be no order as to costs as there is no appearance on the part of the Respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

A Receiver upon whom the Court has conferred all the powers of realisation that an owner has, can himself give a discharge in respect of a debt. He is not fettered by the restrictions which are laid upon any one of several joint creditors or upon a next friend.

Where a decree on a bond was passed on 5th August 1904 in favour of the Plaintiffs, some of whom were minors, the suit having been filed on 21st June 1904 through their Manager and ammukhtear, who was appointed Receiver by the District Judge on 15th September 1905 in a suit between the Plaintiffs and was put in charge of the whole business of the Plaintiffs with all its "pending and impending litigation," and a Receiver was in charge from that time onwards; and no steps were taken in execution of the decree until 11th May 1910 when one of the minors applied for execution alleging that he had attained majority on 5th June 1907, Held, that the application for execution was barred by limitation.

That the decretal debt vested in the Receiver when he was appointed on 15th September 1905 and, from that date onwards he was competent to give a discharge; when once the debt had vested in him the minority of one or more of the decree-holders ceased to have any importance for the rights of the minor no less than the rights of the majors were all absorbed by the Receiver.

JAGAT TARINI DASI v. NABA GOPAL CHAKI (1) referred to.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 25th of August 1911 against an order of Babu Hriday Nath Majumdar, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Muzufferpur, dated the 30th of June 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Lachmi Narain Singh and Moulvi Khursaid Hossain for the Appellant.

Babus Baldeo Narain Singh and Shoroshi Charan Mitra for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The judgment-debtor is Appellant; he borrowed money from Gajadhar Pershad Sahu, Baldeo Pershad Sahu, and Mahadeo Pershad Sahu, and executed a bond in their favour. On August 5th, 1904, an ex parte decree on the bond was passed in favour of Gajadhar and Mahadeo, and the three sons of Baldeo who was then dead. Baldeo's sons were described in the plaint as follows:—Jagannath Pershad Sahu, major, Mohan Pershad Sahu, minor, Kanhya Pershad Sahu, minor, under the guardianship of Jagannath Pershad Sahu, his full brother.

(1) I. L. R. 34 Cal. 305 (1907).

RAJ KUMAR GIRJA NANDAN SINGH v. KANHAYA PROSAD SAHU.

No steps were taken in execution of the decree until May 11th, 1910, when Kanhya filed an application for execution alleging that he had attained majority on June 5 h, 1907.

The judgment-debtor asser'ed that Kanhya had attained majority more than three years before the date of his application, and further urged that the application was barred because a discharge could have been given to him without the applicant's concurrence. He pressed this contention on three grounds, firs ly, because the applicant and his brothers formed a joint family, and Jagannath as karta of the family could have given a discharge: Secondly, because the money was lent by a banking firm and any one of the partners could have given a discharge; and, thirdly, because the banking business was in the hands of a Receiver appointed by the Court, and the Receiver could have given a discharge.

The learned Subordina'e Judge held that Kanhya had established that he attained majority in June 1907, so that his application for execution was made within three years of the date on which his disability ceased. We have read the evidence and think it warran's that finding, and we hold that Kanhya became of age in June 1907.

The learned Subordinate Judge went on to give reasons for holding that while Kanhya was a minor there was no one who could give a discharge without his concurrence, and therefore he could apply for execution within three years from the date on which he became a major.

We think, however, that this finding is wrong in respect of the third ground of the judgment-debtor's contention.

It appears that the suit in which the decree against Appellant was passed was filed on June 21, 1904, through Dr. Hindmarsh as Manager and ammukhtear of Gajadhar, Mahadeo, Jagannath, Mohan and Kanhya. In the same year a suit was instituted by Gajadhar against Mahadeo, wi h Jagannath, Mohan and Kanhya and in that suit a Receiver was appointed by the District Judge on September 15, 1905. The person chosen for appointment was Dr. Hindmarsh, and the order makes it clear that he was put in charge of the whole banking business with all its "pending and impending litigation." Dr. Hindmarsh was succeeded by Mr. Stevens on June 26, 1906, and on January 17, 1910, Babu Bhubaneswar Bose was appointed Receiver. This Bhubaneswar Babu was still Receiver when Kanhya made his application for execution, for mention is made of him in the last column of the petition.

It has not been suggested that at any time the banking business passed out of the hands of the Receiver, and we must hold that there was a Receiver in charge from September 15, 1905, onwards.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that this particular debt is not proved to have vested in the Receiver. We think however that this view is wrong: it was not necessary for each individual debt and decree to be mentioned: the words of the District Judge are very wide, and must be held to include this decre'al debt. This is the more certain when it is remembered that Dr. Hindmarsh was chosen to be Receiver because he had been acting as Manager, and as Manager he had filed the suit in which the decree was passed against the appealing judgment-debtor.

The powers of a Receiver were discussed at length in the case of Jagat Tarini Dasi v. Naba Gopal Chaki (1), and it was held that a Receiver could sue in his own name; and in commenting on the duties performed by a Receiver the learned Judges remarked: "All suits to collect or obtain possession of the property must be prosecuted by the Receiver, and the proceeds received and controlled by him." If the Receiver has the power to sue in his own name we do not think there can be any room for doubt that he can himself give a discharge. He is not fettered by the restrictions which are laid upon one of several joint creditors, or upon a next friend. The Court may confer upon him all the powers of realisation that an owner has, and in the present case the District Judge did so. We hold therefore that this decretal debt vested in the Receiver when he was appointed on September 15, 1905; and from that date onwards he was competent to give a discharge. When once the debt had vested in him the minority of one of the decree-holders ceased to have any importance, for the rights of the minor no less than the rights of the majors were all absorbed by the Receiver.

It is not necessary to discuss the other points.

We hold that Kanhya's application for execution was barred by limitation, and we therefore decree this appeal; the order of the lower Court is set aside, and the application for execution is rejected. The Respondent will pay costs in both Courts. The costs in this Court are assessed at 5 gold mohurs.

Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870)—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), sec. 77—Absolute gift by Will to Hindu widow—Property acquired after date of Will—Rule of law that will speaks from the death of the testator, before and after the Hindu Wills Act.

A Hindu testator executed a Will at Benares in which he provided: "Upon my death my wife shall get the lands, jamas, cash money, Government promissory notes, etc., and all other immoveable and moveable properties of which I am in possession and enjoyment save and except the lands and buildings mentioned in the schedule and possess and enjoy the same with the right to transfer by gift or sale, and no one will be entitled to raise any objection regarding any gift or sale to be made by her." The testator after the date of the Will purchased a house at Benares of which he was in possession and enjoyment at the time of his death:

Held—That the widow did not get merely a widow's estate in the property bequeathed but she took it as an absolute heritable estate.

That the Hindu Wills Act did not apply to the property in Benares.

That the words "upon my death my wife shall get all my properties of which I am in possession" meant that she was to take all the property which the testator would possess at the time of his death and there was no intestacy so far on the house at Benares was concerned.

Sec. 77 of the Succession Act which is incorporated in the Hindu Wills Act enacts in other words that the Will speaks from the death of the testator. The Hindu Wills Act did not vary the mode of construction of Wills in this respect nor is it correct to hold that in parts of India where the Act does not apply the ordinary rule that the Will speaks from the death of the testator does not obtain.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 24th of January 1910 against a decree of Babu Mohim Chandra Sircar, 2nd Subordinate Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahas, dated the 29th of September 1909.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The decision of these Appeals turns upon the construction to be put upon the Will of Tara Prosad Banerjee, dated the 13th August 1902. Tara Prosad Banerjee died at Benares on 20th April 1906 leaving his third wife, Durga Sundari Debi, and two grandsons, the sons of his daughter Khetra Moni Debi. One of these sons, Sanat Kumar Chatterjee, has since died and is represented by his sons Tarack Das and Durga Das, Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3. Plaintiff No. 1, Jitendra Kumar Chatterjee, is the other son of Khetra Moni.

By his Will, cl. (2), the testator said, 'upon my death, my wife, Sreemati Durga Sundari Debi shall get the taluks, rent-bearing, rent-free and Jabo Bahali (confirmed or held valid after resumption) lands and jamas, orchards, gardens, tanks, and cash money and Government promissory notes, etc., and all other immoveable and moveable properties of which I am in possession and enjoyment save and except the lands and the buildings mentioned in the schedule and marked with the letters (cha) and (chha), and she will possess and enjoy the same, with the right to transfer by gift or sale; and no one will be entitled to raise any objection regarding any gift or sale to be made by her." By cls. (3), (4) and (5) the testator left the properties specified in schedules (cha) and (chha) to his daughter Khetra Moni Debi, and, after her, to her sons, and he declared that his wife should not have any right, possession or claim in respect thereof. He appointed his wife Durga Sundari Debi to be the executrix of his Will.

The suit has been brought by the Plaintiffs to recover possession of the properties left by the testator on the ground that Durga Sundari, the widow, only took a widow's estate in the property left to her by her husband and that, on her death which occurred on 29th January 1908, the property passed to the Plaintiffs as heirs of the testator. The Subordinate Judge has decided against the Plaintiffs on this contention. He has given them a decree in respect of a house at Benares on the ground that was purchased by the testator after the date of the Will, and did not, therefore, pass under the bequest contained in cl. (2) of the Will. He has held that there was an intestacy as to this item of the property and that the Plaintiffs are entitled to succeed as heirs-at-law to this and to the moveable property specified in schedule (ga).

Appeal No. 36 is presented by the Plaintiffs against the main decision in the case while Appeal No. 42 is presented by Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and relates to the house at Benares and the moveable property in schedule (ga).

It was conceded that a simple gift by Will by a Hindu to his widow will give her merely a widow's estate in the property bequeathed, and it was argued by the learned pleader for the Appellants that the words in cl. (2) conferring upon her the right of alienation were not sufficient to enlarge that gift into an absolute heritable estate. We must not, however, in considering this Will, restrict ourselves to the consideration of cl. (2). The Will must be read as a whole and the intention of the testator gathered from it. We may, however, state that the cases referred to by the learned pleader for the Appellants do not, in our opinion, support his contention. In the case of Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (1), their Lordships of the Privy Council intimated that had the gift to the lady stood alone, they would have regarded it as an absolute gift; and that it was only because it was followed by a gift over that they held it to confer merely a widow's estate. The same was the case in Hara Kumari Dasi v. Mohim Chandra Sarkar (2). There the testator said to his widow: "You will have the right and power to alienate by gift or sale all the aforesaid moveable and immoveable properties." There had been no clear and absolute gift to the widow preceding these words; but the learned Chief Justice remarked that, if the Will had stopped there, it might have been difficult to say that the widow did not take the property absolutely. But very important words followed to which effect had to be given, namely, a gift over to Haramoni Dasi after the widow's death. Here, we not only have no such gift over, but Khetra Moni, the testator's daughter, is specially provided for by a bequest of the properties contained in schedules (cha) and (chha). Further, in cl. (5), it is clearly indicated that Khetra Moni will only get the properties in (cha) and (chha) for her life and that her sons will get them after her death. The sons were, after their mother, the testator's heirs and it is difficult to suppose that, if the testator really meant to cut down his widow's estate in the properties bequeathed to her, he would not have done so in the same express terms as he has cut down the bequest of properties to his daughter. We have no hesitation, therefore, in holding with the Subordinate Judge that, by his Will, the testator intended to leave all his property of whatever kind to his widow Durga Sundari with the exception of those portions left to his daughter Khetra Moni and her sons.

Turning to Appeal No. 42, it was argued that, because the present tense is used in cl. (2)—"all other immoveable and moveable properties of which I am in possession and enjoyment"—the Will did not operate to dispose of any property acquired after its date, i.e., 13th August 1902. Sec. 77 of the Succession Act which is applied by the Hindu Wills Act (1870) enacts that the description in a Will of property, the subject of a gift, shall, unless a contrary intention appears by the Will, be deemed to refer to and comprise the property answering that description at the death of the testator: in other words, the Will speaks from the death of the testator.

(2) 12 C. W. N. 412 (1908).

JITENDRA KUMAR CHATTOPADHYA v. NRITYA GOPAL MUKHOPADHYA.

This corresponds to sec. 24 of the English Wills Act. It was argued that, in this case, the Will was made at Benares and the property in question in this appeal is situate at Benares and that, therefore, the Hindu Wills Act (1870) had no application. This is so; but, in our opinion, it makes no difference. No authority has been cited to us to show that the mode of construction of Wills in this respect was varied by the passing of that Act or that, in parts of India to which the Act does not apply, the ordinary rule that the Will speaks from the death of the testator does not obtain. In England, it has been frequently held that a mere use of the present tense is not sufficient to prevent property from passing under a Will which may have been acquired between the date of the Will and the testator's death. (See Theobalds on Wills, 7th edition, pp. 145 and 146). The Courts will certainly not, where the testator has purported to make a complete disposition of his property, decide in favour of an intestacy as to a portion of that property unless it is absolutely unavoidable. The words in cl. (2) "Upon my death, my wife shall get all my property of which I am in possession" clearly indicate that she was to take all the property which the testator would possess at the time of his death. This is made the more clear by the inclusion in that bequest of cash money. It cannot be suggested that the testator intended to bequeath to his wife only the identical rupees which he might then have in his possession and to die intestate with regard to any other cash, which he might hold at the date of his death.

The result is that Appeal No. 36 will be dismissed and Appeal No. 42 will be allowed. The Plaintiffs' suit will be dismissed with costs in both the Courts. We assess the hearing-fee in Appeal No. 36 at Rs. 100 for Defendant No. 1 and Rs. 50 for Defendant No. 3 and in Appeal No. 42 at Rs. 200.

Suit dismissed.

SARADINDU NARAIN ROY, Defendant No. 1, Appellant
v.
BENODE BEHARY MOHATA and others, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Village Chowkidari Act (Ben. Act VI of 1870), secs. 58 59, 60, 61—Determination by a commissioner under sec. 61—Fraud—Review by subsequent commissioner—Civil suit.

An order by a Commissioner appointed under sec. 58 of the Village Chowkidari Act determining that certain lands are chowkidari chakran lands is final and conclusive.

Such orders cannot be reviewed by a second Commissioner even if the previous order was fraudulently obtained. An order under sec. 61 of the Village Chowkidari Act may be set aside on proof of fraud or of non-compliance with the provisions of the law, if at all, only in a regular suit by a Civil Court.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 25th of May 1910 against a decree of

SARADINDU NARAIN ROY v. BENODE BEHARY MOHATA.

S. B. Choudhury, Esq, District Judge of Zillah Birbhum, dated the 19th of April 1910, affirming a decree of Babu Kunja Behary Biswas, Munsif of Doberajpur, dated the 27th of September 1909.

This suit Plaintiffs instituted for recovery of possession of a quantity of 7½ bighas of land, on the declaration of the Plaintiffs' right and by ejecting the Defendants. The allegations in the plaint mainly were as follows: That the lands in suit were included within the Plaintiffs' jote under one of the Defendants. That the Collector of District of Birbhum made an order against law that the lands in suit were chowkidari chakran lands and transferred these lands in favour of the zemindar Defendant by his order, dated 26th February 1908, who dispossessed the Plaintiffs. That the real chowkidari chakran lands were ascertained long before and transferred by the Government to the landlord Defendant. That the landlord Defendant subsequently sued the Plaintiffs for recovery of possession of the said lands with wasilat but was unsuccessful as the Plaintiffs were never in possession of those lands. That the landlord Defendant thereupon with the object of taking some of the jote lands of the Plaintiffs applied to the Collector of Birbhum stating that the lands that were assigned to him were not the real chowkidari chakran lands, and that the real chakran lands were in the possession of Madhusudan Mahata. That thereupon the aforesaid illegal order of the Collector was made.

The defence was that the previous resumption was effected through the fraud of Madhusudan Mahata, the predecessor of the Plaintiffs, the Panchayet, who fraudulently suppressing the real chowkidari lands submitted a false report giving the boundaries of a fictitious waste land and stating the same as chowkidari land. That thereupon when the fraud was detected, the real chowkidari chakran lands were ascertained by Babu Bijoy Behary Mukerjee who was a Commissioner for ascertaining the chowkidari lands, under sec. 58, of the Chowkidari Act. That his order was final and conclusive under sec. 61 of the Chowkidari Act and cannot be challenged in a Civil Court. Both the Courts below decreed the suit and Defendant No. 2 appealed to the High Court. The appeal came on for hearing before Chitty and Teunon, JJ., who on the 16th December 1912 sent down an issue to the lower Appellate Court for a finding as to "whether the first resumption was made in consequence of an order of a Commissioner appointed under the Chowkidari Act stating that the land was chowkidari chakran land under sec. 61 of the Chowkidari Act."

As to the first part of the issue the finding was that the chakran lands were resumed by Babu Harish Chandra Banerjee who was a Commissioner under Chowkidari Act. As to the second part of the issue the finding was "that the Commissioner made no statement to the effect that the lands were chowkidari chakran lands under sec. 61 of the Act."

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose (with Babus Bepin Behary Ghose and Bankim Chandra Mukerjee) for the Appellant submitted that the first resumption was not by a Commissioner appointed under sec. 58 of the Chowkidari Act. There was no determination by Harish under sec. 61 of the Act. He never purported to act under the said section.

[CHITTY, J.—He transferred them as a Commissioner.]

Dr. Ghose.—The mere fact that he transferred them, and that he was a Commissioner under the Chowkidari Act is not enough. He must have purported to act under sec. 61 of the Act in order that his determination may have the finality referred to in the section. If he transferred under sec. 50 of the Act it cannot have the same effect. Refers to secs. 48, 49, 50, 58, 59, 60 and 61 of the Chowkidari Act.

[TEUNON, J.—The question as to whether these lands were chowkidari chakran lands must have arisen before Harish, and if he determined that, it would be within sec. 61 of the Act.]

Dr. Ghose.—The transfer here was under sec. 50 of the Act.

[CHITTY, J.—Order under sec. 61 is not forthcoming. Can it not be presumed?]

Dr. Ghose.—I submit not; refers to Nobo Krista v. The Secretary of State for India (2), Narendra Lal Khan v. Jogi Hari (3), Madhu Sudan Banerjee v. Girish Chandra Ghosh (4).

Secondly, I submit that even if it be assumed that the land was resumed by a Commissioner that order could be discharged by a subsequent Commissioner if he was induced to do so by the fraud of Plaintiff's father. Syed Tuffuzzool v. Rughoonath (5).

Babu Brajendra Nath Chatterjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The suit out of which this Second Appeal arises relates to 7½ bighas of land transferred to the zemindar Defendant by revenue officers acting, it is said, under the provisions of secs. 58 to 61 of the Village Chowkidari Act, 1870 (Ben. Act VI of 1870). It appears that in 1900 a different plot of land, measuring some 6 bighas, was resumed by the revenue authorities as the chowkidari chakran land of this Mouzah Bagkhela and was transferred to the zemindar. The zemindar sued for possession of that plot in 1905 and having succeeded in his suit he next in 1907 preferred an application to the Collector asserting that the proceedings in 1900 were vitiated by fraud and praying that the true chowkidari chakran lands should be correctly ascertained and made over to him. Proceedings were accordingly taken in the Court of the Commissioner appointed under sec. 58 of the Act, and by an order made by that office, under sec. 61, the lands now in suit were determined on the 24th February 1908 to be the chowkidari chakran lands of the village. By his order of the 20th March 1908 made under sec. 50 of the Act, the Collector accordingly transferred these lands to the zemindar. On the 25th February 1909, the Plaintiff sued to recover possession on the ground that the lands were not in fact the chowkidari chakran lands of the village but formed part of the jote chak Bagkhela.

The suit having been decreed in both the Courts below the zemindar Defendant appeals and his contention here is that by virtue of the provisions of sec. 61 of the Village Chowkidari Act, 1870, the Commissioner's order of the 24th February 1908 was final and conclusive.

On the authority of an expression of opinion to be found in the case of Hira Lal Mukerjee v. Premamoyee Debi (1) and ignoring the decision of this Court in the cases of Nobo Krista Mukerjee v. Secretary of State for India (2), Narendra Lal Khan v. Jogi Hari (3) and Madhu Sudan Banerjee v. Girish Chandra Ghosh (4), the Courts below overruled this contention, but here the answer of the Respondent is that the determination of the chakran lands in 1900 was also by an order under sec. 61 made by a Commissioner appointed under sec. 58 and that this order was final and conclusive and could not be reviewed by a second Commissioner in 1908.' The Appellant contends that the transfer in 1900 was made by a Collector in a summary manner and not after proceedings before a Commissioner appointed under sec. 58. Though in the judgments of the subordinate Courts in connection with the proceedings in 1900 there were references to a Commissioner appointed under sec. 58 of the Act, we found it necessary to remand the case for clear findings of fact on the questions raised The findings have been returned and it is now clear that the proceedings in 1900 were before one Harish Chandra Banerjee who had been appointed a Commissioner under sec. 58 of the Act by a Government notification, dated 26th June 1899. It is true that no order under sec. 61 has been produced but that is sufficiently explained by the fact that all the papers relating to the chowkidari chakran lands of this village and to the proceedings of 1900 have been destroyed. That the Commissioner, Babu Harish Chandra Banerjee, made an order under sec. 61 is clear from the references to such an order in Ex. IX, the order-sheet in the proceedings taken in 1907-8, see more particularly the orders numbered 10, 16 and 18. In order No. 16, the second Commissioner distinctly refers to his predecessor's order and professes to review it.

The proceedings in 1900 having been before a Commissioner appointed under sec. 58 of the Act and the Commissioner having made an order under sec. 61 we may safely presume that he acted in accordance with law and in his order set out the lands he had determined to be the chowkidari chakran lands and the boundaries thereof. In making this presumption we are fortified by the references in Ex. IX to the "old sanad": by the fact that in 1905, the zemindar Appellant sued to recover possession of specified lands, and by the fact that his application to the Collector in 1907 was one for rectification of boundaries.

The order made in 1900 being final and conclusive, we are clearly of opinion that the said order could not be reviewed by a second Commissioner in 1908, and that the proceedings of the second Commissioner in determining the lands now in suit to be the chowkidari chakran lands of the village Bagkhela were ultra vires and contrary to law.

It may be that, as held in the case of Nobo Krista Mukerjee v. Secretary of State for India (2), an order under sec. 61 may be set aside on proof of fraud or of non-compliance with the provisions of the law, but any such proceedings, we are of opinion, must be taken in the Civil Courts and in the present case the findings indicate that fraud, if fraud there were, was in connection with the second determination and not with the first.

This Appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs, three gold mohurs in all.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL No. 288 OF 1913.

NAFAR SHEIKH,
Appellant,
v.
KING-EMPEROR,
Respondent.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 422—Indian Oaths Act (X of 1873), secs. 5, 6 and 13—Evidence Act, sec. 118—Order admitting appeal on ground of sentence only, if legal—Trial by jury—Examination of child witness without affirmation, without investigation as to child's capacity to understand affirmation—Infant if may be sworn in a criminal case—Duty of Judge before examination—Non-interrogation by Judge to test child's capacity if invalidates trial—Question of capacity of witness, Judge's duty to determine—Understanding oath or affirmation if relevant to competency to testify.

The Appellant who was found guilty under secs 376/511, I. P. C, by the unanimous verdict of the jury and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 5 years preferred an appeal to the High Court which was admitted by a Bench of the High Court for consideration of the sentence only. On the appeal coming on for hearing before another Bench a direction was made enlarging the scope of the order of admission. The appeal subsequently came on for hearing before a third Bench and was disposed of on a consideration of the grounds taken by the Appellant besides the question of sentence.

An appeal admitted under sec. 422, Cr. P. C., is the whole appeal and consequently all the grounds taken in the petition of appeal are open for consideration at the final hearing and the Appellant cannot be restricted to any selected ground out of those specified in his petition and a restrictive order for admission is clearly not contemplated by sec. 422 and must be deemed ultra vires.

In the Sessions Court a girl of six years and two others of four years each were examined as witnesses without being affirmed, the Sessions Judge having assumed without investigation that the children were of so tender an age that they could not appreciate the value and significance of an affirmation :

Held—That the three child-witnesses were examined in contravention of sec. 6 of the Oaths Act and the Sessions Judge should not have adopted the course he did.

Quære :—Whether the irregularity is cured by sec. 13 of the Oaths Act, when the omission to take the affirmation is the result of a deliberate act of the Court.

Held—That in view of sec. 118 of the Evidence Act it is not obligatory on a Judge to test the capacity of a witness of tender years by appropriate questions and to form his opinion as to the competency of such a witness before the actual examination commences, and the mere circumstance that the Sessions Judge did not interrogate the witnesses before their examination began with a view to test their capacity did not invalidate the trial.

FAKIR v. EMPEROR (11) referred to.

That the question of the capacity of the witness to testify is a question for the Judge himself to decide and not for the jury although after he has decided in favour of the competency of a witness it is for the jury to determine the amount of credit to be given to the statements made by such a witness.

in other words, a Court has to ascertain from the answers to questions propounded to such a witness whether he appreciates the danger and impiety of falsehood.

Per BEACHCROFT, J.—The question whether a witness understands the nature and obligations of an oath or affirmation is foreign to the question of competency to testify. Intellectual capacity is the only test.

The High Court set aside the verdict of the jury on the ground of contravention of sec. 6 of the Oaths Act and because it appeared that the evidence of the child-witnesses had been admitted without consideration of their competency to testify with reference to the provisions of sec. 118 of the Evidence Act, and directed a retrial.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 1st of April 1913 against the order of S. C. Mullick, Esq., Sessions Judge of Zillah Nadia, dated the 23rd of January 1913.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Debendra Nath Bagchi for the Appellant.

Mr. Bagram for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—The Appellant, Nafar Sheikh, has been convicted of an offence under sec. 376 read with sec. 511 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for five years. The jury unanimously found him guilty, but recommended a light sentence on the ground that he is a young man and has got a young wife. The Sessions Judge accepted the verdict of the jury, but did not give effect to their recommendation for a light sentence. The appeal to this Court was in the first instance admitted by Harington and Coxe, JJ., for consideration of the sentence only, in view of the representation of the jury. The appeal, thus admitted, came to be heard by the Chief Justice and Sharfuddin, J., who held that, in view of the provisions of sec. 422 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, the appeal could not be admitted on a limited ground, and directed the scope of the order of admission to be enlarged. As the direction thus given was not formally recorded, it is desirable to draw attention to the terms of secs. 421 and 422 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Sub-sec. 1 of sec. 421 lays down that on receiving the petition of appeal, accompanied by a copy of the judgment or order appealed against or a copy of the heads of the charge in cases tried by a jury, under sec. 419 or sec. 420, the Appellate Court shall peruse the same and if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering, it may dismiss the appeal summarily. Sec. 422 then provides that if the Appellate Court does not dismiss the appeal summarily, it shall cause notice to be given to the Appellant or his pleader and to such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf, of the time and place at which such appeal will be heard, and shall on the application of such officer, furnish him with a copy of the grounds of appeal. It is plain that the appeal which has thus to be heard is the whole appeal; consequently, all the grounds taken in the petition of appeal are open for consideration at the final hearing, and the Appellant cannot be restricted to any selected ground out of those specified in his petition. A restrictive order for admission is clearly not contemplated by sec. 422 and must be deemed ultra vires. This view is strengthened by a consideration of the terms of sec. 422. It is worthy of note that a similar view has been taken by this Court with regard to appeals under the Civil Procedure Code. Srinivas v. Ram- chandra (1). Fresh notice of the appeal has been given to the Crown, and the appeal has been argued before us on behalf of the accused and the Crown.

The verdict of the jury has been assailed on behalf of the Appellant as erroneous by reason of three circumstances, namely, first, that the Sessions Judge allowed to be placed before the jury the evidence of three persons who had not made an affirmation as required by sec. 6 of the Indian Oaths Act, 1873; secondly, that the Sessions Judge has not considered, whether these three persons were, by reason of their tender years, prevented from understanding the questions put to them or from giving rational answers to those questions, within the meaning of sec. 118 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872; and, thirdly, that the Sessions Judge has failed to call the attention of the jury to material portions of the evidence.

In support of the first ground, reliance has been placed upon secs. 5 and 6 of the Indian Oaths Act. Sec. 5 provides that oaths or affirmations shall be made by all witnesses, that is to say, all persons who may lawfully be examined or give or be required to give evidence by or before any Court, or by person having by law or consent of parties authority to examine such persons or to receive evidence. Sec. 6 provides that where the witness is a Hindu or Mahomedan, he shall, instead of making an oath, make an affirmation. In the case before us, the complainant Zobeda, a girl six years old, and, two other girls, Haliman and Mowla, each four years old, were examined, though they did not make an affirmation. In fact, the Sessions Judge deliberately did not give them an opportunity to make an affirmation. The Judge appears to have assumed, without investigation, that the children were of so tender an age that they could not appreciate the value and significance of an affirmation. It is plain that the Judge should not have adopted this course. As was laid down in the case of King v. Braxier (2), an infant, even though under the age of seven years, may be sworn in a criminal prosecution, provided such infant appears, on strict examination by the Court, to possess a sufficient knowledge of the nature and consequences of an oath; in other words, a Court has to ascertain from the answers to questions propounded to such a witness, whether he appreciates the danger and impiety of falsehood. The course pursued by the Sessions Judge has led to the result that these witnesses were examined in contravention of the provisions of sec. 6 of the Indian Oaths Act. On behalf of the Crown, however, it was suggested that the irregularity in the proceeding, if any, may be shown, if necessary, to have been cured by the provisions of sec. 13 of the Indian Oaths Act. Sec. 13 lays down that no omission to make any affirmation shall invalidate any proceeding or render inadmissible any evidence whatever in or in respect of which such omission took place. In support of this view, reliance has been placed upon the decision of a majority of the Full Bench in Queen v. Shew Bhogta (3). On behalf of the Appellant, this position has been controverted and it has been argued that where there is an omission by a witness to take an oath or to make an affirmation by reason of the deliberate act of the Court, sec. 13 is of no assistance. The question raised is by no means free from difficulty, as is amply indicated by the divergence of judicial opinion on the subject. In this Court, judicial opinion has not been uniform, as appears from an examination of the decisions in Queen v. Itwaria (4), Queen v. Annunto (5) and Queen v. Shew Bhogta (3). It is further worthy of note that in the case of Nandolal v. Nistarini (6), when it was argued on the authority of some of the decisions just mentioned that sec. 13 of the Indian Oaths Act applied to cases where the omission to take the oath or affirmation was the result of the deliberate act of the Court or of the witness, Sir Francis Maclean, C. J., with the concurrence of Mr. Justice Macpherson and Mr. Justice Hill, described the contention as at once novel and startling. There has been a similar divergence of judicial opinion in the other High Courts, as is indicated by the cases of Queen v. Maru (7), Queen v. Lal Sahai (8), Empress v. Shava (9) and Empress v. Viraperumal (10). In view of this divergence of judicial opinion and of the course we propose to take with regard to the second ground urged by the Appellant, I reserve my opinion upon the difficult question of the true scope and effect of sec. 13 of the Indian Oaths Act.

In support of the second ground it has been contended that the record makes it reasonably clear that the Sessions Judge has not considered, whether the three girls mentioned were by reason of their tender years, prevented from understanding the questions put to them, or from giving rational answers to those questions. It has further been argued that under sec. 118 of the Indian Evidence Act, he was bound to ascertain, before those children of tender years were examined as witnesses, whether they had capacity to understand and to give rational answers. Reliance has been placed upon the decision in Fakir v. Emperor (11), which, it has been urged, is an authority for the proposition that it is obligatory upon a Judge to test the capacity of a witness of tender years by appropriate questions and to form his opinion as to the competency of such a witness, before the actual examination commences. It may be conceded that there are expressions in the judgment in the case mentioned which tend to support this broad statement; but, in my opinion, the proposition thus widely formulated is not justified by the terms of sec. 118 of the Indian Evidence Act. That section lays down that all persons shall be competent to testify, unless the Court considers that they are prevented from understanding the questions put to them, or from giving rational answers to those questions, by tender years. The Legislature has not prescribed an inflexible rule of universal application to the effect that before a child of tender years is questioned, the Court must, by a preliminary examination, test his capacity to understand and to give rational answers and must form an opinion as to the competency of the witness, before the actual examination commences. In fact, the case of Queen v. Whitehead (12) shows that the incompetency of a witness may very well appear in the course of his examination-in-chief, and that the evidence of a witness so found to be incompetent may at that stage be withdrawn from the jury. The true rule on the subject is concisely stated by Brewer, J., in Wheeler v. United States (13), in these terms: "The decision of this question (whether the child witness has sufficient intelligence) primarily rests with the trial Judge who sees the proposed witness, notices his manner, his apparent possession or lack of intelligence, and may resort to any examination which will tend to disclose his capacity and intelligence, as well as his understanding of the obligations of an oath. As many of these matters cannot be photographed into the record, the decision of the trial Judge will not be disturbed on review, unless, from that which is preserved, it is clear that it was erroneous." The mere circumstance that the Sessions Judge did not interrogate the witnesses before their examination began, with a view to test their capacity, does not, in the view I take of the true effect of sec. 118 of the Indian Evidence Act, invalidate the trial. But, in the present case, there are circumstances which, in my opinion, rendered it plainly desirable that such a course should have been pursued. In the first place, with regard to the girl Mowla, the Committing Magistrate had recorded the note that she was too young to make any rational statement, and, on this ground, he did not receive her testimony. In the second place, as regards the girl Zobeda, the Committing Magistrate had recorded the note that "she can hardly give rational answer to questions put to her." It further appears from the record that, on the first day that Zobeda was examined before the Magistrate, she could not answer the questions put to her, though, on the day following, she gave full answers. In the third place, as regards all the three girls, Haliman, Mowla, and Zobeda, the Sessions Judge deliberately omitted to follow the procedure prescribed by sec. 6 of the Indian Oaths Act; from this circumstance, the accused has invited us to draw the inference that, in the opinion of the Judge, the children were of too tender an age to be able to appreciate the distinction between truth and falsehood and the significance of an affirmation. The record of the Sessions Judge, as already stated, does not throw any light on these points, and there is nothing to show that his attention was drawn to the remarks made by the Committing Magistrate or that the provisions of sec. 118 of the Indian Evidence Act were present to his mind. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that it would not be safe to affirm the conviction. I am not unmindful that the Sessions Judge did invite the attention of the jury to the circumstance that the girls had not made an affirmation; this observation was, however, made, not with a view to exclude their testimony but with a view to make the jury consider the question of the weight to be attached to their evidence. The question of the capacity of the witness to testify is a question for the Judge himself to decide and not for the jury although after he has decided in favour of the competency of a witness it is for the jury to determine the amount of credit to be given to the statements made by such witness. Queen v. Hosseine (14). The second ground urged by the Appellant must consequently prevail. In this view, it is unnecessary to consider the third ground in detail, though I must state that I was not impressed by it.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed, the conviction and sentence set aside, and the case remitted to the Sessions Judge to be retried in accordance with law. The three girls mentioned must be examined in conformity with the provisions of sec. 6 of the Indian Oaths Act and sec. 118 of the Indian Evidence Act. It may be usefully added that children of six or even five years of age have been allowed to testify, upon the Court being satisfied as to their capacity to give rational testimony. R. v. Holmes (15), R. v. Perkins (16), R. v. Brasier (2).

NAFAR SHEIKH v. KING-EMPEROR.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree that the conviction should be set aside and a retrial ordered, on the ground that it is not clear that some of the evidence, and that the most important evidence, was admissible. The remarks of the Magistrate regarding the children Mowla and Zobeda raise a doubt as to their competency to testify and as the learned Judge does not appear to have considered the question from the point of view of sec. 118 of the Evidence Act, the conviction has been based on evidence, the admissibility of which is doubtful.

I respectfully dissent from the dictum in Fakir v. Emperor (11) that the Judge must form his opinion as to the competency of a witness before his actual examination commences. In many cases it may be desirable to take that course, but to lay it down as a positive rule of law is to read words into sec. 118 of the Evidence Act which are not there.

In my opinion the question whether a witness understands the nature and obligations of an oath or affirmation is foreign to the question of competency to testify. Intellectual capacity is the only test. But the Judge was bound under the provisions of the Oaths Act to have an affirmation made by the witnesses. The effect of the omission in this instance it is unnecessary to discuss.

In regard to the arguments as to misdirection I desire to refer only to one point. It was argued that the Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury had not pointed out to them that the medical evidence was consistent only with a case of attempted rape and therefore contradicted the evidence of the girl. This reading of the medical evidence depends on the view that vaginal penetration is necessary to complete the offence of rape. The extent of penetration required has not been defined in the Indian Penal Code, but it is open to argument whether vulval penetration, with which the medical evidence is consistent, is not sufficient to establish rape and whether the accused ought not in this case to have been committed on a charge of the completed offence and not on a charge of attempt only. I express no opinion in this point for it was not argued before us.

Retrial ordered.

NOTES.

Christmas and New Year holidays.

The High Court of Calcutta will be closed on all its sides after Court on Monday the 22nd of December and will re-open on Friday the 2nd of January next.

The Viceroy in Calcutta.

We accord a hearty welcome to His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India to this city. It would be an affectation to say that the citizens of Calcutta have not felt deeply on the question of the transfer of the seat of the capital from Calcutta to Delhi. We have no doubt consoled ourselves with the sentiment that we should not grudge the historic capital of India being restored to its former glory. But selfish instincts of men often get the better of nobler sentiments and the citizens of this the second city in the British Empire have not yet got reconciled to her dethronement after being the capital of British India from the very foundation of British rule in India. But all the same the people of the Presidency of Bengal are under deep obligation to His Excellency the Viceroy for the annulment of the Partition of Bengal and the raising of the Province to the status of a Presidency Government. The firm and eminently fair attitude that His Excellency has recently taken with regard to the South African question has also enhanced the high esteem and regard in which the people of Bengal have always held him. We do hope that the visit of the Viceroy in future years will extend to some weeks and not merely days and the city which has given birth to the British power in India will continue to enjoy the privilege and honour of welcoming him annually as in the past.

Jury trial in Bengal.

At a meeting of the Bengal Council held on the 1st of December last the Hon'ble Mr. Surendra Nath Ray interpellated the Government with regard to the extension of the Jury trial in the Bengal districts within the last twenty years. The Government in reply stated that in 1897, Jury trial was extended to Chittagong, Mymensingh, Rajshahi and Jessore, &c., in 1905 to Khulna. Thus it will be seen that within the last seven years no advance has been made in this direction. Having regard to the spread of education and, more especially the increasing desire amongst the educated public to participate in public duties, we think it is time for Jury trial to be extended to all Municipal towns in Bengal.

Repentant criminal and reduction of sentence.

The facts of the case of Rex v. Albert Porter, where the Court of Criminal Appeal in England reduced the sentence of the prisoner from one of penal servitude to six months' imprisonment with hard labour are both instructive and interesting. The prisoner in this case had pleaded guilty to charges of larceny. The circumstances under which he was apprehended were that he had confessed to having led a career of crime to an officer of the Salvation Army who urged him to make a clean breast to the police of his latest unpunished offence so that he might make such restitution as was still possible to the victims and then begin a new chapter of life. He accordingly confessed, and this led to the restoration of some of the properties to their rightful owners. From this and other evidence the Court of Appeal was satisfied that the repentance of the prisoner was genuine and the Court was of opinion that a long term of imprisonment was not calculated to promote the reclamation of the prisoner to an honest life.

Proof of attestation of mortgage bond when witness dead.

The case of Gobardhan Dass v. Hori Lal, I. L. R. 35 All 364, is worth noticing. The Plaintiff sued on a mortgage in his favour by three illiterate persons who executed the deed by affixing their marks thereto. When the suit was brought all the three executants as also all the attesting witnesses to the deed were dead. The Plaintiff sought to prove the deed by (1) the statement of a witness examined in the case who claimed to be acquainted with the handwriting of two of the attesting witnesses, (2) a deed of usufructury mortgage executed by one of the executants of the mortgage in suit and the representative of the two other executants which referred to and recognised the genuineness of the mortgage in suit and (3) a deed of sale executed by the representatives or some of the representatives of the executants of the deed in suit which recognised the genuineness of the aforesaid usufructuary mortgage. The Plaintiff contended that the two documents produced by him proved indirectly that the signatures of the three executants were in their handwriting.

Their Lordships held that the evidence produced by the Plaintiff to prove the signatures of the deed in suit did not comply with sec. 69 of the Evidence Act and consequently the deed was not properly proved. It is pointed out that sec. 69 of the Evidence Act reproduces as regards attesting witnesses part of a rule of English law according to which where a document is required by law to be attested one attesting witness must be called with this exception, among others, that if the attesting witnesses are dead, insane, out of the jurisdiction or cannot be found, secondary evidence of the execution may be given by proof of the handwriting of the witnesses or if this is not obtainable by presumptive or any other available evidence. But the Indian law does not in a case of this kind allow a party to rely on presumptive or other evidence of execution where he is unable to fulfil the conditions laid down in sec. 69 of the Evidence Act as regards the attestation by the witnesses or execution by the executants. The Judges, it seems to us, placed a very narrow interpretation on the section, and, in the particular instance, it has undoubtedly led to a failure of justice.

Criminal misappropriation of Municipal water.

In Emperor v. Bimala Charan Roy, I. L. R. 35 All. 361, the charge against the Petitioner was criminal misappropriation of Municipal water. The Petitioner was the waterworks inspector of the Cawnpur Municipality. Within the Municipal area he owned two houses one of which he let out to tenants. On being asked by them to get water connection in the house occupied by them the Petitioner had the Municipal main pipe tapped by plumbers who were his subordinates and had water laid on to the house and to his garden. He represented to his tenants that the Municipal tax for the two pipes amounted to Rs. 9 which was to be paid by him and them in equal shares and for some time the tenants' share was collected from them by the Petitioner. Subsequently it turned out that the Petitioner had the water connection without informing the Municipality thereof and had of course paid no tax for it. Their Lordships held that the Petitioner as a member of the Municipality, one of his duties being to supervise and check the distribution of water from the Municipal water works had dominion over the water belonging to the Municipality and in deliberately misappropriating that water for his own use and for the use of his tenants for which he paid no tax he committed the offence described in sec. 408, I. P. C.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Sale of property subsequently found invalid—refund of purchase money.

WAHDAD KHAN v. JANAK SINGH, I. L. R. 35 All. 370

The Defendant sold certain zemindari property to the Plaintiffs who were then minors. On a suit by third parties the Plaintiffs were dispossessed. The Plaintiffs having been unable to obtain a refund of the purchase money from the Defendant brought a suit for its recovery and also for the costs incurred in the litigation with the third parties.

Held—That the Plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the Defendant the purchase money which the latter had received from them.

Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 20—"Interest" meaning of.

ABDUL AHAD v. MAHTAB BIBI, I. L. R. 35 All. 378.

The word interest in sec. 20 of the Limitation Act means the interest or any part of the interest due on a debt.

Hindu joint family—Power of managing member.

ACHHAIBAR SING v. RAM SORUP SAHU, I. L. R. 35 All. 380.

The managing member of a joint Hindu family can execute decrees on behalf of the family and can receive payment and give good receipts on behalf of the family which are binding on the family.

Pre-emption.

KHETTAR CHANDRA BOSU v. NOBIN KALI DEVI, I. L 35 All. 385.

A certain house in Benares City was sold for a certain amount. The purchaser again sold the property for a much larger amount. Held on a suit for pre-emption, that the second sale must be taken to have been made subject to the right of pre-emption and the pre-emptor was only bound to pre-empt the first sale making the subsequent vendee a party to the sale so as to bind him by the proceedings.

Limitation—Execution of decree—Step in aid thereof.

TADAR MALL v. PHOLA KUNWAR, I. L. R. 35 All. 389

An application for transfer of a decree is an essentia and necessary step preliminary to the making of an application for execution in a Court which passed the decree. Such an application is an application to take a step in aid of execution.

Mahomedan law—Wakf.

MAHOMED IBRAHIM v. ABDUL LATIF, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 447.

A trust-deed which is an attempt to create a perpetuity in the nature of a family settlement under the guise of a wakfnama is void.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act—Right of audience of attorneys before officer appointed under sec. 6.

In re THE ADVOCATE-GENERAL OF BOMBAY, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 464.

Attorneys of the High Court have a right of audience before the officer appointed by the Chief Justice in the exercise of the powers conferred upon him under sec. 6 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908, sec. 60—Attachment—Policy of insurance.

SHANKER v. UMABAI, I. L. R. 37 Bom 471.

A policy of insurance effected upon one's own life but expressed to be for the benefit of another is attachable under sec. 60, C. P. C., as a security or other saleable property belonging to the judgment-debtor.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), sec. 97—Appeal—Finding on preliminary issue without formal decree.

SAKHARAM v. SADASHIV, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 480.

In a suit for redemption an issue was raised whether any of the Plaintiffs were agriculturists and it was found that one of the Plaintiffs was but no decree on this preliminary finding was drawn up. After the final decree for redemption was made one of the Defendants appealed taking inter alia the ground that the lower Court was wrong in finding that one of the Plaintiffs was an agriculturist. It appeared that the Defendant did not ask the Court to draw up the preliminary decree.

Held—That the Defendant had not waived his right to appeal and the Court of Appeal was entitled to consider the ground in question.

Dekkan Agriculturists Relief Act, sec. 20.

BALAHAND v. CHUNI LAL, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 486.

A Court cannot apply (for granting instalments) sec. 20 of the Dekkan Agicultarists Relief Act to the case of a judgment-debtor who was not an agriculturist when the decree was obtained but who by discarding trade and limiting himself more exclusively to profits in land came an agriculturist at the time of the execution of the decree.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), Or. 21, r. 100—Decree transferred to Collector, execution of—Objection of wrongful ouster, who to dispose of.

RAGHO CHANDRA RAO v. HANMATI CHANDRA RAO, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 488.

Where at a sale held by the Collector in execution of decree transferred to him the property was purchased by one A and the Collector put him in possession. Thereupon B applied to the Civil Court for restoration of possession on the ground that he had been in possession of the property on his own account and not on behalf of the judgment-debtor.

Held—That under Or. 21, r. 100 the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain such application complaining of ouster or dispossession but the proper officer to be applied to was the Collector.

Easement—Eaves for discharging water.

CHOTALAL v. MANILAL, I. L. R 37 Bom. 491.

The possession of eaves for the discharge of water overhanging another man's land is an easement.

(CRIMINAL.)

Bombay prevention of Gambling Act (IV. Bomb. of 1887), secs. 6, 7.

EMPEROR v. JAFFUR MAHOMED, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 402.

The Bombay prevention of Gambling Act is a penal statute and must be construed strictly. The presumption under sec. 7 that a house in which cards, &c., are found is a gambling house will only arise where the house in question is entered under a warrant issued under sec. 6 of the Act.

Indian Penal Code—Murder.

EMPEROR v. KANHAI, I. L. R. 35 All. 329.

Four persons were convicted of murder the facts being that at a time of the year when there was a great demand for water the deceased was irrigating his field one morning when the four accused persons came armed with lathis and asked the deceased to stop irrigating his field so that they might irrigate their own. A wrangle ensued and the deceased received such injuries that he died in consequence thereof. It was contended on behalf of the defence that the common intention of the accused could not possibly have been more than to voluntarily cause a grievous hurt to the deceased.

Held—That in the circumstances of the case the accused were rightly convicted of murder. The fourth clause of sec. 300, I. P. C., applied to the case.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before IMAM AND CHAPMAN, JJ. REV. No. 932 OF 1913. SADHU CHARAN MAHUNTY AND OTHERS, Petitioners v. KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party. 13th August 1913.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 147—Rioting—Technical offence—Absence of moral turpitude—Sentence, consideration of—Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 106—Bond for keeping the peace.

The Petitioners were convicted by the Deputy Magistrate of Bhadrak under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sentenced each to rigorous imprisonment for two months and two of them were sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50 each in addition and the rest to smaller fines. All the Petitioners were further ordered to execute bonds under sec. 106, Cr. P. C., in the sum of Rs. 50 each to keep the peace for one year.

The facts will appear from the following portion of the judgment of the Sessions Judge before whom the Petitioners preferred an appeal which was dismissed.

"It appears that some time in January last the house of the zemindar was destroyed by fire. He proceeded to levy contributions of straw and bamboos, from the villagers his tenants. On the night of Dol purnimah the zemindar attempted through his servants to levy a further contribution from one Dinai Barik, the informant in the present case. Denai Barik objected on the ground that he had already complied with a previous requisition. Then under orders of the zemindar the accused persons went to the threshing floor of the informant and committed rioting in an attempt to forcibly take straw assaulting both informant and his son."

Their Lordships delivered the following judgment in this case :—

The Petitioners have been convicted of the offence of rioting, it being alleged against them that in order to levy contribution on some tenants for the zemindar they went in a body and used violence against those tenants. We have considered the facts and circumstances of the case and we do not find in them any such magnitude as to raise the occurrence to the dignity of a riot, though technically that term may have an application. It was a very small village quarrel due to the zemindar's demanding from the tenants contribution of straw, etc., for the rebuilding of his house which had been burnt down by fire. The demand of the zemindar was in conformity with the custom that prevails in the country that when a zemindar's house is burnt down the tenants contribute towards the rebuilding of the house just in the same way as when a tenant's house is burnt down the zemindar contributes towards the rebuilding of the tenant's house. No doubt it is true that legally the zemindar was not entitled to levy any such contribution and therefore the conduct of those who acted on his behalf or in his interest is contrary to the provisions of the law. But there was no moral misconduct on the part of the Petitioners, or the zemindar in what they did nor was there any moral turpitude in the offence which he is said to have been committed. For the purpose of the law, sentence of fine ought to have been quite enough in a case of this character.

In the case of the Petitioners, Makar Jana and Sankar Jana, we reduce the sentence to a fine of Rs. 5 each and, in default, to rigorous imprisonment for a term of a week in each case. In the case of Sadhu Charan Mahanty, Bholai Mahapatra and Korban Khan we reduce the sentence to a fine of Rs. 25 each and, in default, to a rigorous imprisonment for a fortnight in each case. The order binding down the Petitioners to keep peace under sec. 106 is set aside, the Rule is made absolute.

The Petitioners will be discharged from bail.

Mr. J. N. Roy for Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Petitioners.

No one appeared for the Opposite Party.

Rule made absolute.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before BEACHCROFT, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1426 OF 1912. AKHOY KUMAR ROY AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Appellants v. Monsur and on his death his legal representative CELAMATULLA AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents. 1st December 1913.

Estoppel—Landlord and tenant—Dispossession of tenant in execution proceeding—Regaining possession.

The Appeal was by the Plaintiff in a suit for declaration of title and ejectment. The Plaintiff alleged that he had let out the land to four persons, his tenants, and that those four sublet to one Monsur, who was the contesting Defendant. The Munsif found that the Plaintiff was entitled to only 15½ annas share and he gave the Plaintiff a decree for joint possession with the Defendant to that extent. An appeal by the Plaintiff was dismissed. It was admitted that the Plaintiff was entitled to 15½ annas share; and the only question in the second appeal was as regards the remaining half anna share.

An issue was framed during the trial before the Munsif as to whether the Defendant was a subtenant under the four tenants of the Plaintiff or not, and the finding of the Munsif was that he was a co-sharer of the four tenants of the Plaintiff. It was contended in second appeal that the effect of ejectment proceedings in 1909 was to remove the bar of estoppel which would stand in the way of the Defendant, or in other words, the ejectment order had the effect of dissolving the tenancy, if one existed, and that the Defendant having subsequently gained possession in a claim case under Or. XXI, r. 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure, could be taken to be holding as a trespasser and, therefore, in a position to deny the Plaintiff's title.

Held, that the fact that the Defendant was dispossessed in execution and regained possession in the claim case would not have the effect of dissolving the tenancy.

Babus Jadu Nath Kanjilal and Braja Lal Chuckerbutty for the Appellants.

Babu Ambica Churn Das for the Respondents.

SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.

RAJKUMARI BHUBANESHWARI KUMAR, Appellant,
v.
THE COLLECTOR OF GAYA, Respondent.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870, as amended by Act XI of 1899), sec. 19H, cl. 4—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), sec. 98—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), sec. 277—Application by Collector for valuation of estate—Period of limitation—Inventory to be filed by executor or administrator, nature of.

Where after the issue of Letters of Administration with the Will annexed the applicant for the same filed a list of immoveable properties belonging to the estate of the deceased and some time after filed a list of the moveables of the estate but no document was filed which contained a full and true estimate of the properties and the Collector after the expiration of more than six months applied to the District Judge under sec. 19H, cl. (4) of the Court Fees Act for an enquiry into the valuation of the estate :

Held—That the six months provided in cl. (4) of sec. 19H of the Court Fees Act runs from the lodging of an inventory as required by sec. 98 of the Probate and Administration Act and no inventory satisfies the statutory requirement which does not contain a "full and true estimate of all the property in possession."

It did not satisfy the provision of cl. (4) that six months had elapsed from a period when a certain document which might be classed as or denominated an inventory satisfied a particular Judge.

That the application of the Collector was not barred under cl. (4) of sec. 19H of the Court Fees Act.

Quære :—Whether the inventory contemplated by sec. 98 of the Probate and Administration Act should not be embodied in one document.

This is an Appeal from a judgment and order of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 25th May 1909, on an application for the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction in respect of the judgment and order of the District Judge of Gaya, dated the 19th September 1908 and 2nd March 1909, respectively.

The main question for determination in this Appeal was whether a valuation of the property and assets of an estate, of which Letters of Administration with the Will annexed had been granted, made under sec. 19H, cl. (4) of the Court Fees Act, XI of 1899, should be set aside or not.

The facts connected with this litigation are shortly as follows :—

On the 31st March 1890 Raja Ran Bahadur Singh of Tekari died. He was the owner in possession of a seven annas share of the Tekari Raj.

He left a Will, dated the 23rd March 1890, by which he devised 10 villages to Mussamut Rameshwar Kumar, his son's widow, the Appellant above-named, for her maintenance, and the rest or residue of his estate to his and her daughter, Raj Kumari Ratan Kumar.

On the 7th April 1890 Raj Kumari Ratan Koer applied to the Court of the District Judge of Gaya for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed to the estate of the said Raja Ran Bahadur.

She estimated in her Petition the value of the estate at 11 lakhs of rupees.

Caveats were entered against the said grant.

On the 16th February 1891 the District Judge held the Will not proved, and dismissed the said application.

RAJKUMARI BHUBANESWARI KUMAR v. THE COLLECTOR OF GAYA.

On the 1st September 1891 the High Court at Calcutta on appeal reversed the said decision, held the Will proved, and made an order for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed to issue.

On the 8th December 1894 the judgment and order of the High Court were affirmed by the Privy Council.

On the 26th May 1893 Raj Kumari Ratan Koer died, having been in possession and enjoyment of the estate in the interim, but without having taken out the said Letters of Administration.

She left a Will, dated the 25th May 1895, of which she appointed her mother, the said Mussamut Rameshwari Kumar, and her husband, Babu Rajeshwari Prasad Narayan Singh, the executrix and executor respectively, and by which she devised the whole of her properties including the said seven annas Tekari Raj to her daughter, Raj Kumari Bhubaneshwari Kumar, as also residuary legatee.

On the 30th May 1895 the said executrix and executor applied for Probate of the Will of the said Raj Kumari Ratan Kumar.

On the 31st January 1896 probate issued. The Court-fee stamps paid amounted to Rs. 22,000 on an estimated valuation of the estate at Rs. 11 lakhs.

On the 9th January 1897 Rajeshwari Prasad Narayan Singh, the executor, died, and Mussamut Rameshwari Kumar, the executrix, remained in sole possession of the said estate of her daughter, including the estate of Raja Ran Bahadur Singh.

On the 13th August 1902 Mussamut Rameshwari Kumar applied as executrix of the Will of the said Raj Kumari for Letters of Administration with the Will annexed to the estate of the said Raja Ran Bahadur.

She again estimated the value of the said estate at 11 lakhs of rupees, and the Court-fee payable at Rs. 22,000.

On the 18th August 1902 an order was made for the Letters of Administration to issue, and for notice to be given to the Collector of Gaya, under the Court Fees Amendment Act [XI of 1899, sec. 19H, cl. 2]

On the 23rd August 1902 Letters of Administration issued to the applicant, and notice was sent to the Collector.

On the 18th September 1902 the Deputy Collector, in pursuance of the powers vested in him under the said Act, wrote to the District Judge and asked for a copy of the list of the properties of the estate and their valuation.

On the 22nd September 1902 the District Judge replied that there was no such list.

From that time onward the Collector entered upon an enquiry, and endeavoured to get information as to the real valuation of the said estate of which Letters of Administration had been granted to the said Appellant.

On the 13th May 1905 a list of immoveable properties belonging to the said estate was filed by the said Mussamut Rameshwari Kumar in the Court of the District Judge in response to a notice from him of the 8th April 1905, and a copy of the said list was sent by him to the Collector on the 23rd May 1905.

On the 28th July 1905 the Collector applied to the District Judge for a list of the moveables of the said estate, and on the 17th August a list thereof was supplied to him.

On the 21st May 1907 the Collector applied to the District Judge that she be ordered to file the inventory of the estate as required by law, i.e., under sec. 98 of the Probate and Administration Act.

On the 7th June 1907 a notice was issued to her to file an inventory.

On the 16th August 1907 she applied for cancelment of the said order, upon the ground, amongst others, that under the law she could not be called upon to furnish an inventory of the estate of the said Raja, and that she had already filed lists of the immoveable properties belonging to his estate, and also that a list o moveables was upon the record.

The District Judge thereupon considered that no further action was necessary, holding that the said lists constituted an inventory.

On the 14th January 1908 the Collector again applied to the District Judge for an inventory under sec. 98 of the Probate and Administration Act, but with no result.

On the 8th June 1908 the Collector issued a notice to Musammut Rameshwari Kumar under the Court Fees Act, XI of 1899, sec. 19H, cl. (3), valuing the said estate at Rs. 54,03,424, and calling upon her to pay an additional Court-fee duty in respect of the excess, i.e., upon Rs. 43,03,424.

On the 16th July 1908 the Collector applied under the said Act, sec. 19H, cl. (4), to the District Judge to enquire into the valuation of the said estate, and on the 17th July 1908 a notice was issued to Musammut Rameshwar Kumar to appear at the said enquiry.

On the 15th September 1908 a petition of objection to the said enquiry was filed by the said Musammut Rameshwari Kumar in which she raised various contentions, and, amongst others, the following pleas in bar:—

(a) That her application of the 13th August 1902 was not a new application under sec. 64 of the Probate and Administration Act, but was covered by sec. 20 thereof, and was unaffected by the provisions of the Court Fees Act, XI of 1899, sec. 19H, which had not retrospective effect in regard thereto.

(b) That the application of the Collector for an enquiry as to valuation was barred by limitation [sec. 19H, cl. (4)], inasmuch as an inventory of the estate had been filed by her, i.e., in 1905.

On the 19th September 1908, the Collector filed a written statement in answer to the said objection, and on the said date the said pleas in bar were heard as preliminary issues by the District Judge, who delivered judgment thereon, deciding against the said executrix on all the points raised by her.

On the last-mentioned date the District Judge appointed Babu Rakhal Das Mukherji as Commissioner to hold an enquiry for the purpose of ascertaining the true value of the said estate, and directed him to report the result to the Court.

On the 25th February 1909 the said Commissioner made and filed his Report.

On the 26th and 27th February 1909 the hearing of the said proceeding took place before the District Judge on the consideration of the Commissioner's Report and on the 2nd March 1909 he passed his final orders.

He held that the valuation of the estate had been underestimated by a sum of Rs. 24,10,894 8. 24, that a further Court-fee at 2 per cent. on the said sum had still to be realized amounting to Rs. 48,217. 14. 2 and he made an order and decree against the Appellant for payment of the said amount with costs.

On the 29th April 1909 the Appellant applied for and obtained from the High Court at Calcutta exercising its Revisional jurisdiction, a Rule Nisi under sec. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the Respondent to show cause why the said Order should not be set aside on the ground of material irregularities committed by the District Judge in the exercise of his jurisdiction.

The Respondent showed cause against the said Rule Nisi, and on the 25th May 1909 the High Court (Stephen and Vincent, JJ.) delivered judgment and discharged the same with costs.

It affirmed the decision of the District Judge on the preliminary issues above referred to, which formed the ground for the Appellant's said application, and held that consequently it was unnecessary to consider the questions raised by the Respondent as to whether the High Court had jurisdiction in its Revisional jurisdiction under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or otherwise to set aside or vary the said order and decree of the District Judge.

Hence this appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Bhugwandin Dube for the Appellant submitted that the Respondent's application under the Court Fees Amendment Act, sec. 19, cl. 4, (Act XI of 1899) was barred by time. The object of the section was to protect the revenue of the State, and the Collector was given only 6 months to make the necessary inquiry as to the valuation of the property. The lists of moveable and immoveable properties that we filed and of which the Collector had due notice were quite sufficient for enabling the Collector to estimate the value. They constituted an inventory within the meaning of sec. 98 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881. It was a full and true estimate of all the property inspite of the fact that the value of each immoveable property was not separately given. Further it was none the less an inventory because in the lists the debts were not shewn—there were no debts owing to the estate, there were heavy debts due from the estate. The District Judge whose jurisdiction it was to refuse or to accept the inventory as satisfying the provisions of sec. 98 held that they were good inventories. That being so, it could not be contended now after the lapse of years that they were not inventories simply because they might have been more full and more detailed and more true if the District Judge had objected. The section (19H, cl. 4) is for the protection of the subject, and it was the Collector's fault that he did not enquire into the value of the properties earlier than he did.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Dunne for the Respondent were not heard.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—This is an Appeal from a judgment and order of date the 25th May 1909, which was pronounced by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, and which affirmed a judgment and order of date the 23rd September 1908, and the 2nd of March 1909, of the District Judge of Gaya.

The present proceedings were instituted on the 16th of July 1908 by an application which was made by the Collector to the District Court under sec. 19H, cl. 4, of Act XI of 1899. Before reading that section it may be stated that the general nature of the application was to declare that no inventory of the estate of the deceased as required by law had been filed, and that the Appellant was not willing to amend the valuation of the estate to the satisfaction of the Collector.

RAJKUMARI BHUBANESWARI KUMAR v. THE COLLECTOR OF GAYA.

In the defence lodged to those proceedings this declinature and inability were re-affirmed by the Appellant, and accordingly the proceedings have taken their course.

The section of the Act of 1899 to which particular reference is made, defines the function of the Collector in the following terms:—"The Collector, within the local limits of whose revenue-jurisdiction the property of the deceased or any part thereof is, may at any time inspect or cause to be inspected, and take or cause to be taken copies of the record of any case in which application for probate or letters of administration has been made; and if, on such inspection or otherwise, he is of opinion that the Petitioner has under-estimated the value of the property of the deceased, the Collector may, if he thinks fit, require the attendance of the Petitioner (either in person or by agent) and take evidence and enquire into the matter in such manner as he may think fit, and, if he is still of opinion that the value of the property has been under-estimated, may require the Petitioner to amend the valuation."

The Collector, having a strong opinion as to the valuation emerging as a lump figure in the previous proceeding, initiated these proceedings under discussion. What the Appellant before their Lorships pleads is that the action or proceeding on the part of the Collector is excluded by the proviso of sub-sec. 4 of the Statute last quoted. That proviso is "that no such motion shall be made after the expiration of six months from the date of the exhibition of the inventory required by sec. 277 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, or, as the case may be, by sec. 98 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881."

It is, in the opinion of their Lordships, not a justifiable construction of this proviso to date the period of running from anything less than the lodging of the inventory required by the Statute. It will not satisfy this proviso that six months have elapsed from a period when a certain document, which might be classed as or denominated an inventory, satisfied a District Judge or any Judge. What he has to be satisfied of is that the punctum temporis from which the six months runs is the lodging of an inventory as required by sec. 98. It was admitted by the learned Counsel for the Appellant that accordingly the correct decision to be arrived at here depended upon the construction of certain words in sec. 98, and as those are of general importance, the following citation is made:—"An executor or administrator shall, within six months from the grant of probate or letters of administration, exhibit in the Court by which the same has or have been granted an inventory containing a full and true estimate of all the property in possession, and all the credits, and also all the debts owing by any person or persons to which the executor or administrator is entitled in that character." The remainder of the section has no bearing on the subject in dispute in these proceedings.

Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that no inventory satisfies this statutory requirement which omits the essential of this detail, namely, that its contents shall include "a full and true estimate of all the property in possession." This being the statutory provision, it is not alleged by the Appellant that any one document did contain such a full and true estimate,

RAJKUMARI BHUBANESWARI KUMAR v. THE COLLECTOR OF GAYA.

The argument presented to their Lordships was that by massing together a variety of documents, including two which will now be referred to, and a mass of documents in another case, none of which have been brought in detail before the notice of the Board, there was, in the result, produced to the Court an inventory containing a full and true estimate.

In their Lordships' opinion, the first objection to this operation, even although the operation itself as distinguished from the production of one document containing the details were legitimate, is that the first document to which reference is made is a list of the immoveable property belonging to the deceased. It has been not obscurely suggested in these proceedings that the immoveable property bore the relation to the moveable property of no less than at least nine in ten. So that with regard to nine-tenths of the estate of the deceased nothing is supplied except a list of the properties, a list without a single figure, and containing nothing, even by approximation to the words of the Statute, in the nature of a full and true estimate of the property in possession.

In their Lordships' opinion that is sufficient for the disposal of the case. Their Lordships are satisfied that a just conclusion has been arrived at by the Courts below, and they will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this Appeal should be dismissed, and that the Appellant should pay the costs.

TINKARI MUKERJEE v. SATYA NIRANJAN CHAKRABUTTY.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal by the Defendant in a suit for rent. The rent is claimed for land which was originally chowkidari chakran and was, upon resumption, settled with the zemindar, the predecessor in interest of the Plaintiff. The Defendant resists the claim on the ground that the name of the Plaintiff has not been registered in the books of the Collector under sec. 78 of the Land Registration Act of 1876. Upon this question the Courts below have taken divergent views. The Court of first instance held that the objection was well-founded and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the District Judge has held that sec. 78 has no application and has accordingly decreed the suit.

Sec. 78 of the Land Registration Act of 1876 provides that no person shall be bound to pay rent to any person claiming such rent as proprietor of an estate in respect of which he is required by the Act to cause his name to be registered, unless the name of such claimant shall have been registered under the Act. We have consequently to determine whether the Plaintiff is, within the meaning of this section, a proprietor of an estate with respect to which he is required by the Act to cause his name to be registered. The question is apparently one of first impression and is by no means free from difficulty. Sec. 51 of the Village Chowkidars Act of 1870 describes the effect of transfer of resumed chakran lands to the zemindar. It provides that the order of the transfer shall operate to vest in the zemindar lands therein mentioned subject to the amount of assessment. Sec. 52 then provides that the amount of such assessment shall be a permanent yearly charge on such land and shall be payable to the collecting member of the Punchayet yearly in advance by the persons for the time being entitled to recover rent of such lands from the occupier thereof. The District Judge has held that inasmuch as the amount of assessment is payable to the collecting member of the Punchayet, it is not 'revenue' within the meaning of that word as used in the definitions of the terms 'estate' and 'proprietor' in cls. 2 and 8 of sec. 3 of the Land Registration Act of 1876. We are not prepared to accept this view as well founded. But the provisions of the Village Chowkidars Act which are really relevant to the question in controversy are to be found in secs. 54 and 55. These describe the procedure for service of notice of arrears upon the defaulter as also the mode and effect of sale of the land in the event of non payment of the assessment. Sec. 55 provides that unless the arrears are paid within the time mentioned in the notification for sale issued under sec. 6 of Act XI of 1859 such land shall be sold according to the provisions of Act XI of 1859, as if such lands were an estate within the meaning of Act VII of 1868. The language used here may lend some support to the contention that resumed chakran lands, when transferred to the zemindar, constitute an estate. But sec. 55 does not indicate that the resumed lands are to be deemed an estate for all purposes; it merely provides that the sale is to take place as if such lands were an estate within the meaning of Act VII of 1868. Consequently it would not be right to infer, merely from the language used in secs. 54 and 55, that resumed lands, when transferred to the zemindar have the character of an estate impressed upon them for all purposes We are fortified in this view, when we find that the Board of Revenue has in the matter of the preparation of the registers contemplated by the Land Registration Act acted on the theory that lands so resumed and transferred to the zemindar do not constitute an estate within the meaning of that Statute. This circumstance completely destroys the force of the objection urged by the Defendant. For even if it be assumed that the Board of Revenue has proceeded upon an erroneous interpretation of the provisions of the Statute, the fact remains that no register is maintained by the revenue authorities of the registration of transfers of such lands, in which the name of the Plaintiff could have been registered. It has been established conclusively that, under the orders of the Board of Revenue, the only register maintained in respect of this land is a register in which the land is shown as settled with the zemindar: transfers are recorded only when such transfers have taken place by reason of sales held for realisation of arrears in accordance with sec. 65 of the Village Chowkidars Act of 1870. But the revenue authorities have expressly ruled that in such register no entries are to be made of intermediate private alienations. Consequently if the Plaintiff had applied to have his name registered, his application would have been refused. We are not prepared to hold that sec. 78 is a bar to the suit; in our opinion, that section cannot rightly be applied to penalise the Plaintiff for failure to do what it was impossible for him to perform. We hold accordingly, that sec. 78 does not bar the claim, although not for the reasons assigned by the District Judge. In this view the decree of the District Judge must be affirmed: but it has been pointed out that the District Judge upon the findings of the Court of first instance which were not challenged before him by the Plaintiff should have allowed credit to the Defendant for Rs. 71-3 instead of Rs. 69. The decree will be amended in this respect. Subject to this variation the decree will stand affirmed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM ORDER
No. 565 OF 1909.

Judgment, 3, July.

SUNDARMANI DEI,
Petitioner-Appellant,
v.
GOKULANAND CHOWDHURY and anr.,
Objectors, Respondents.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), secs. 8, 11, 21—Application by relative or friend of minor—Notifying such application, object of—Stepmother if disqualified from being guardian of person of stepson, where parties governed by Mitakshara school of Hindu law—Purdanashin lady if may be appointed guardian of person and property of infant—Minor stepmother if competent to act as guardian of infant adopted son—Considerations which should guide Courts in appointing guardian—Appointment of stranger as guardian of person.

One Dayanidhi died leaving a widow S. a daughter and an infant son whom he had adopted during the lifetime of his first wife before marrying S. The widow applied to be appointed guardian of the person and property of the infant; the application was opposed by the relations of her husband. The objection was that the widow was herself a minor and was not competent as a purdanashin lady to take effective charge of the person and property of the infant and that the application in substance was not made bonâ fide in the best interests of the minor concerned. One of the objectors proposed that G, a pleader, who was related both to the widow and to the infant should be appointed guardian and the Collector also acting under sec. 8 of the Guardians and Wards Act intimated to the District Judge that a guardian should be appointed, and that the other objector was the most suitable person available for appointment as guardian. The District Judge appointed G guardian of the person and property of the infant :

Held—That the petition of objection suggesting the appointment of G as guardian was in substance an application by a relative or friend of the minor for the appointment of a guardian within the meaning of sec. 8, cl. (b) of the Act and the fact that this application was not notified in accordance with sec. 11 did not constitute a fatal defect inasmuch as the object of sec. 11 is to bring the application to the notice of persons interested in opposing it and in the present case all the persons interested in the matter of the appointment of a suitable guardian for the minor were present before the Court.

That under the Mitakshara school of Hindu law the stepmother is not the heir of her stepson and she cannot be deemed disqualified from being appointed guardian of the stepson on that ground.

That it cannot be laid down as an inflexible rule of law that a purdanashin lady should not be appointed guardian of the person and property of her infant son but in the circumstances of the present case the widow could not be appointed guardian of the property of the infant with any prospect of advantage to the infant.

That sec. 21 of the Act clearly refers to the guardian of the person of an infant and there is much force in the contention that the section is wide enough to cover the case of an adopted son and the stepmother, even if a minor, is competent to act as guardian of the person of the infant adopted son.

That in the matter of choosing a guardian of an infant the Court must be guided entirely by the interests of the ward and in the circumstances of the present case the stepmother should be appointed guardian of the person of the infant, such appointment being for the benefit of the infant.

The effect of the appointment of a stranger as the guardian of the person of a minor considered.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 3rd of December 1909 against the order of L. C. Adami, Esq., District Judge of Cuttack, dated the 31st of July 1909.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal is directed against an order appointing a guardian of the person and property of an infant under the Guardians and Wards Act of 1890. It appears that one Dayanidhi Patnaik died on the 8th August 1908 leaving properties, moveable and immoveable, of considerable value. During the lifetime of his first wife, Dayanidhi adopted a son. The adoption took place in 1899 and the adopted son by name Bangsidhar Patnaik is the minor in respect of whose person and property the guardian has been appointed. After the death of his first wife, Dayanidhi took the Appellant, Sundarmani Dei, as his second wife in February 1908. The the family at the time of the death of Dayanidhi therefore was, that he left a widow, a daughter and an adopted son. On the 14th December 1908, the widow applied to be appointed guardian of the person and property of the infant son of her husband. This application was opposed by two relations of her husband, Durga Charan Mahapatra and Sreekrishna Mahapatra, and also by one Lakshindhar Mahanty. The objectors contended that the widow was herself a minor and was not competent as a purdanashin lady to take effective charge of the person and property of the infant. They also urged that the application in substance was not made bonâ fide in the best interest of the minor concerned. One of the objectors, Sreekrishna, also proposed that Babu Gokulanand Chowdhury, a leading pleader of the Cuttack Bar, who was related both to the widow and to the minor, should be appointed guardian. The Collector of the District also took action under sec. 8, cl. (b) of the Guardians and Wards Act and intimated to the District Judge his opinion that a guardian should be appointed and that the most suitable person available was Durga Charan Mahapatra. The position, therefore, was that the District Judge had before him an application by the widow for appointment of herself as guardian, there was a suggestion by the Collector that Durga Charan should be appointed guardian; there was also a proposal by one of the objectors that Babu Gokulanand Chowdhury should be appointed guardian. The District Judge took evidence and came to the conclusion that the mother should not be appointed, but that Babu Gokulanand Chowdhury was the best person to act as guardian of the infant. The learned Judge accordingly appointed him. Since the order was made, Babu Gokulanand Chowdhury has furnished security and has intimated his willingness to accept the position of a guardian. In the present appeal which has been filed by the widow, the order of the District Judge has been assailed substantially on two grounds; namely, first, that Babu Gokulanand Chowdhury should not have been appointed guardian as the provisions of secs. 8 and 11 of the Guardians and Wards Act had not been strictly followed: and, secondly, that the application of the widow has been refused on grounds erroneous in fact and insufficient in law.

In so far as the first contention is concerned, our attention has been invited to the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act applicable to the matter. Sec. 7 provides that where the Court is satisfied that it is for the welfare of a minor that an order should be made appointing a guardian of his person or property or both, the Court may make an order accordingly. Sec 8 then provides than an order under sec. 7 shall not be made except on the application of the person desirous of being or claiming to be, the guardian of the minor or any relative or friend of the minor or the Collector of the District or other local area within which the minor ordinarily resides or in which he has property or the Collector having authority with respect to the class to which the minor belongs. Sec. 10 defines the contents of an application under sec. 8 by a person other than the Collector. Sec. 11 then provides that if the Court is satisfied that there is ground for proceeding on the application, it shall fix a day for hearing thereof and cause notice of the application and of the date fixed for the hearing to be served. On behalf of the Appellant it has been pointed out that the present case does not fall within cl. (a) of sec. 8, because there was no application by Babu Gokulanand Chowdhury, nor does cl. (c) of sec. 8 cover the case because there was no application by the Collector such as was entertained by the District Judge in conformity with the provisions of the Statute. On behalf of the Respondent reliance has however been placed upon the petition of one of the objectors, Sreekrishna Mahapatra, dated the 14th June 1909, in which it was suggested that Babu Gokulanand Chowdhury should be appointed guardian of the person and property of the infant. It has been contended that this petition of objection might be treated in substance as an application by a relative or friend of the minor for the appointment of Babu Gokulanand Chowdhury as guardian. In answer, it has been contended that if the application be treated in this manner, it ought to have been notified as provided in sec. 11, and it has been suggested that the failure to comply with the provisions of that section is a fatal defect which invalidates the proceedings of the District Judge. In our opinion, there is no substance in the contention of the Appellant. As already stated, there was an application by the widow for the appointment of herself as guardian. There was also an application by a relation for the appointment of Babu Gokulanand Chowdhury as guardian. No doubt the application was not notified in accordance with sec. 11, but that did not constitute fatal defect. The object of sec. 11 is to bring the application to the notice of persons interested in opposing it. There is no room for controversy that all the persons interested in the matter of the appointment of a suitable guardian for the minor, were present before the Court, and the evidence shows that the question of the suitability of Babu Gokulanand Chowdhury as a guardian was fully considered by the Court. The case of Jaiwanti Kumri v. Gajadhar (1), where it was ruled that a guardian cannot be appointed without an application under the Guardians and Wards Act, has no application to the case before us. In that case, the Court proceeded to appoint the Nazir as guardian though his name had not been suggested by any of the parties to the proceeding. We are, therefore, of opinion that the order of the District Judge has been made substantially in conformity with the provisions of the Act and cannot be set aside on any technical ground.

In so far as the second contention is concerned, it has been argued that each of the three reasons assigned by the District Judge for the refusal of the application of the widow is unsound. One of the reasons assigned is that the Petitioner, as the stepmother, was the next heir and it was consequently undesirable that she should be appointed guardian of the person of the infant. This view, it must be conceded, cannot be supported. As was pointed out by this Court in the cases of Lala Joti Lal v. Musst. Durani Kowar (2) and Jahaldai Kumri v. Gaya Pershad Sahu (3) and by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Rama Nand v. Surgiani (4), under the Mitakshara school of Hindu Law the stepmother is not the heir of her stepson. Consequently, the applicant cannot be deemed disqualified on this ground. The second reason assigned is that the Petitioner is herself a purdanashin lady and that the estate which is apparently of considerable value cannot possibly be effectively managed by her. No doubt, it cannot be laid down as an inflexible rule of law that a purdanashin lady should not be appointed guardian of the person and property of her infant son. But in the case before us, the circumstances show that in so far as the property of the infant is concerned, the Petitioner cannot be appointed guardian with any prospect of advantage to the infant. She is herself a young widow, and the estate, if she is appointed guardian must be managed on her behalf by her father. Her father, it has been pointed out, is in embarrassed circumstances and it would, therefore, be not beneficial to the infant to place his estate practically in charge of the father of his stepmother. The third ground assigned is that the Petitioner herself is an infant, and is, therefore, not competent to be appointed guardian of the person and property of her infant son. The evidence as regards her minority points, we think, to the conclusion that the estimate of the age of the Petitioner, as made by the Dirtrict Judge, is approximately correct. But it has been pointed out that even in that view, the Petitioner has now attained majority, and that whatever disqualification might have existed at the time of the application, there is no disqualification at the present time. Our attention has also been drawn to sec. 21 of the Guardians and Wards Act which provides that a minor is incompetent to act as guardian of any minor except his own wife or child, or, where he is the managing member of an undivided Hindu family, the wife or child of another minor member of that family. This clearly refers to the guardian of the person. In so far, therefore, as the question of the appointment of guardian of the property is concerned, the District Judge was right in the view he took. The conclusion, therefore, follows that the order of the District Judge, in so far as it appoints Babu Gokulanand Chowdhury as guardian of the property of the infant, must be affirmed. In so far, however, as the District Judge has appointed Babu Gokulanand Chowdhury to be the guardian of the person of the infant, the order must be discharged. Sec. 21, it has been contended, is wide enough to cover the case of an adopted son, and the stepmother, even if a minor, is competent to act as guardian of the person of the infant. There is much force in this contention [see Rangubai v. Gopal (5), Lakshmibai v. Shridhar (6)]. But even if the section was strictly construed, as the applicant has now attained majority, she is entitled to be appointed guardian of the person of the infant. We are further of opinion that, in the circumstances of the case, it is for the benefit of the infant that he should not be separated from his stepmother and his sister, and he has plainly indicated his preference for the family circle, to which fact some weight must be attached. Ex parte Edward (7). The effect of the appointment of a stranger as the guardian of the person of the minor would be that he would be removed from the family, but it is not desirable that the feeling between the stepmother and the infant son or between the sister and the brother should be estranged ; at the same time, there are advantages in family life which cannot be altogether ignored.

SUNDARMANI DEI v. GOKULANAND CHOWDHURY.

The only question is, whether suitable provision can be made for the education of the infant, if the stepmother be appointed guardian of his person. We are of opinion that necessary safeguards may be provided by suitable directions. We accordingly appoint the Petitioner as guardian of the person of the infant, as, after all, the Court, in the matter of choosing a guardian of an infant, must be guided entirely by the interests of the ward, Johnstone v. Beathe (8). We direct, however, that the infant should reside at Cuttack. A house will be taken for him and he will live with his mother and sister. As regards his education suitable directions will be given by the District Judge. Possibly the best course will be, as the estate is of considerable value, to appoint for him a tutor, and to place him in one of the schools in the town. It has been apprehended by the Respondent that the infant may be removed from the town, but we are assured by the learned Vakil for the mother that the fears are groundless. At any rate, if the mother as guardian does not carry out the directions of the District Judge she will be guilty of contempt of Court and will be liable to removal from her office of guardian.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed, in part; the order of the District Judge in so far as the appointment of Babu Gokulanand Chowdhury as guardian of the property is concerned, is affirmed; but in so far as the guardianship of the person is concerned, the order is varied and the mother is appointed such guardian. There will be no order for costs for any party other than Babu Gokulanand and the mother, who as guardians will be entitled to their costs out of the estate of the infant.

Appeal allowed in part.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The rent claimed is at the rate of Rs. 274 and odd, that being the rent settled in the year 1904 by the direction of the Special Judge on appeal, in a proceeding under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The amount thus fixed, included Rs. 35 and odd, the rent assessed on the excess land. It appears that the Defendants brought a suit for a declaration that the Special Judge had no power to direct assessment of additional rent for the excess land in a proceeding under sec. 105, Chap. X, of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as it stood after the amendment in 1898. That case came up in Second Appeal to this Court and it was held by Mr. Justice Carnduff that the Special Judge had jurisdiction to do so. On appeal under the Letters Patent, however, it was held that the suit could not be maintained having regard to the provisions of sec. 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act because it was a suit concerning a matter which had been the subject of an application made and proceedings taken under sec. 105 of that Act; and the learned Judges observed :—"How far it may be open to the present Appellant in some ulterior proceeding to raise the objections that have been urged in this suit is a matter which it is premature for us to discuss or decide at this stage." The Courts below have in the present case given a decree to the Plaintiff at the rate of Rs. 274 and odd relying on the said decision of the Special Judge and the Defendants have appealed to this Court.

The only question that we have to decide in this Appeal is whether the Settlement officer had jurisdiction to settle fair rents and whether the Special Judge had the jurisdiction to direct settlement of fair rent on excess lands in a proceeding under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as it stood in 1904. Now, sec. 105, cl. (1) provides :—"When either the landlord or the tenant applies for a settlement of rent, the Revenue officer shall settle a fair and equitable rent in respect of the land held by the tenant." The words "in respect of the land held by the tenant" are wide enough to include excess lands held by the tenant. Under sec. 102, the Revenue officer may be required to record, among other particulars, the situation, quantity, and one or more of the boundaries of the land held by each tenant or occupier; and the record-of-rights ordinarily include the excess land as well and we do not see any reason to hold that the Revenue officer when asked to settle the rent has the power to settle only the rent of the land originally let out to the tenant and not of any excess land which may have been found in his possession. Sec. 52, cl. (5) says "when in a suit under this section the landlord or tenant is unable to indicate any particular land as held in excess, the rent to be added on account of the excess area may be calculated at the average rate of rent paid on all the lands of the holding exclusive of such excess area;" and sec. 105, cl. (4) provides:—"In settling rents under this section, the Revenue officer shall have regard to the Rules laid down in this Act for the guidance of the Civil Court in increasing or reducing rents, as the case may be." It is difficult, therefore, to see how the Revenue officer can, in a case coming under sec. 52 where the landlord is unable to indicate any particular land as held in excess, determine the land originally let out to the tenant or settle the rent thereof leaving the rent of the excess area unassessed. It was contended that sec. 104, cl. (2) of the Act before its amendment by Act III (B. C.) of 1898 expressly provided for settlement of rent on excess lands and the omission of that clause from sec. 105, sub sec. (1) of the amending Act shows that the power to settle rent on excess lands has been taken away by the amending Act. No doubt, the power of the Revenue officer on his own motion to settle rent under sec. 104 (1) and (2) has been taken away by the amending Act; but, in so far as the Revenue officer was empowered to settle rent on excess lands under sec. 104, cl. (2), we think that that power has not been taken away by the provisions of sec. 105, cl. (1). Sub-sec. (1) of sec. 104 of the Act before its amendment provided:—"When it does not appear that the tenant is holding land in excess of or less than that for which he is paying rent and neither the landlord nor the the tenant applies for a settlement of rent, the officer shall record the rent payable by the tenant and the land in respect of which the rent is payable;" and sub-section (2) laid down "When it appears that a tenant is holding land in excess of, or less than, that for which he is paying rent or either the landlord or the tenant applies for a settlement of rent or in any case under sec. 101, sub-sec. (2), cl. (d), the officer shall settle a fair and equitable rent in respect of the land held by the tenant." It appears, therefore, that sec. 105, cl. (1) consolidates the provisions contained in sub secs. (1) and (2) of the Act as it stood before the amendment only with the modifications pointed out. The words "in respect of the land held by the tenant" include a case in which there is no excess land, that is, a case under sec. 104, sub-sec. (1) as well as a case in which there is excess land, that is, a case under sec. 104, sub-sec. (2), and it is to be noticed that sec. 105 (1) uses the very same words, namely, that the Revenue officer shall settle a fair and equitable rent in respect of the land held by the tenant as were used in sec. 104 (2). We are accordingly of opinion that the omission of the express provision contained in sub-sec. (2) of sec. 104 of the old Act has not taken away the power of the Revenue officer to settle rent on excess lands. In the case of Rameswar Singh v. Bhubanesswar Jha (1), in considering the question whether a Second Appeal lay to this Court, it was observed by the learned Judges that "the operation of sec. 105, sub-sec. (1) cannot be limited to variation of rents on the grounds specified in sec. 30 but necessarily includes variations contemplated by sec. 52," and that notwithstanding that sec. 104 has been repealed. Sec. 113 indicates that the Revenue officer has, under sec. 105, sub-sec. (1), power to increase rent on the ground of excess area or to decrease the rent of a holding, if it be found to contain less land than that for which the landlord was getting rent." In another case, however (Lukhi Narain Serowji v. Sri Ram Chandra Bhuiya (2), where a Second Appeal was preferred in a proceeding under sec. 105 for settlement of fair and equitable rent on excess land, and a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the landlord Appellant that the appeal was entirely incompetent, it was held that, although the proceedings had been nominally described as framed under sec. 105, questions had been raised and decided which appropriately fell within the purview of sec. 106. It seems that according to the view taken in that case, settlement of rent on excess land does not come within the purview of sec. 105. But even assuming that it does not come under sec. 105 but that it comes under sec. 106, it cannot be said that the Revenue officer had no jurisdiction to go into the question. As pointed out in Prithee Chand Lal Chowdhury v. Basarat Ali (3), "it is quite possible that the same officer having to deal with proceedings under sec 105 and suits under sec. 106, matters coming under either section are indiscriminately dealt with in the same proceeding, even if it is headed as one under sec. 105, and that this practice has prevailed for a series of years.". Assuming therefore, that the case did not come properly under. sec. 105, the Revenue officer and therefore the Special Judge on appeal had jurisdiction to assess rent on the excess lands, although the proceedings might have been headed as being one under sec. 105. In this view the Appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

(1) I. L. R. 33 Cal. 837 (1906).

PALTOO PANDEY v. SRI NEWAS PROSAD SINGH.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES

NOS. 2100 AND 2157 OF 1910.

COXE, J.
RAY, J.
1913,
Heard, 16 & 17, June.
Judgment, 17, July.

HARI MOHAN MAJUMDER, Plaintiff Appellant,
v.
SRI MOHAN GHOSH, Defendant, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 158—Tenant holding same land under separate leases of undivided shares from co-sharers if may proceed against co-sharers separately.

An application under sec. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to determine the incidents of a tenancy cannot be made against persons who have only a portion of the proprietary interest in the land of the tenancy even when the tenant applicant appears to have taken separate leases from different landlords of their respective undivided interests therein.

These were Appeals preferred on the 1st of July 1910 against the decrees of F. Roe, Esq., District Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 24th of March 1910, reversing the decrees of Babu Mohim Chandra Sarkar, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 18th of September 1909.

The material facts will appear from the judgment

Babus Ram Chundra Majumdar and Hira Lal Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

COXE, J.—A preliminary objection is taken in these cases that no appeal lies. I think, however, that sec. 187 is clear on this point and that the objection must fail.

The appeals themselves however must, in my opinion, be dismissed on the ground that an application under sec. 158 to determine the incidents of a tenancy cannot be made against persons who have only a portion of the proprietary interest in the land of the tenancy. In this case the applicant obtained separate leases from different landlords of their respective undivided interests in the same land. They, of course, can collect their rent separately from him but it seems to me concluded by authority that there is only one tenancy. This follows from the decision of the Full Bench in Guni Mahomed v. Moran (1). I may refer also to Gopal Chandra Das v. Umesh Narain Choudhry (2) and Baidya Nath De Sarkar v. Ilim (3) and Hari Charan Bose v. Runjit Singh (4), and this view seems to me only common sense. How is it possible to take a lease of an undivided share in land for the purpose of cultivation? And even when the bulk of the land is sublet to tenants there is usually some nij-jote in khas possession. How can anybody cultivate an undivided share of land? And it is easy to see the difficulties that must necessarily arise in the case of a lease of an undivided share of land cultivated by sub-tenants when the boundaries of the land are uncertain and it is not known what land cultivated by sub-tenants near the boundaries is included in the lease and what is not.

The learned Judge relies on the case of Moheeb Ali v. Ameer Ali (5), in which it was held that an application under sec. 158 cannot be made by a co-sharer landlord and he holds that the converse must apply. In this I think, he is right. I can certainly see no reason why when a co sharer landlord is precluded from having the incidents of a tenancy determined against a tenant, the tenant should be allowed to have the incidents determined as against a co-sharer landlord.

The tenant in this case had brought four separate applications against different co-sharers. These have been decided separately and probably, they have been decided differently. What then is the result? The tenancy, in my opinion, is one and the same and it cannot be doubted that the land is one and the same. It is surely impossible to hold that the Court can decide that the same land is of a certain area, and lies within specified boundaries as against one co sharer and is of quite a different area and lies within different boundaries as against another. And as against a third co-sharer both decrees would be evidence and neither conclusive, so that the whole matter would have to be threshed out again. And if one co-sharer who had obtained a decree became also by purchase or inheritance the representative in interest of another co-sharer, who had obtained another decree, two contradictory decisions would be final and conclusive between him and the tenant. I would therefore dismiss the appeals.

A cross-objection has been put in on the question of costs. The Subordinate Judge directed that all the costs should be paid by the landlord. The District Judge decreed the appeals and dismissed the suits, but added 'I make no order as to costs either in appeal or in the lower Court.'

I think it is impossible that the learned

(3) I. L. R. 25 Cal. 917 (1897).
(4) I. L. R. 25 Cal. 917n (1896).
(5) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 538 (1890).

Judge meant by this that the decision of the first Court on the question of costs should stand, that the successful landlord should be saddled with almost all the costs of suits which in the opinion of the Judge were not maintainable at all. He probably intended that the parties should bear their own costs and did not advert to the question of the cost of the local investigation by a Commissioner. I would accordingly direct that the landlord pay half the cost of the enquiry and that otherwise the parties bear their own costs in all Courts.

Ray, J.—I agree in holding that four different applications under sec. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by the same person and in respect of the same land do not lie. The words "the landlord or the tenant of the land" occurring in this section clearly mean the landlord or the tenant of the whole land and not of a share of it. If there are several landlords or several tenants they must all join. The landlord means the whole body of landlords and the tenant means the whole body of tenants, if there are more than one. This is the ordinary meaning of the words. It is immaterial whether the rights of the landlords or the tenants are of the same kind or not. Thus if A is proprietor of a half share of a tract of land and B is putnidar of another half share, A and B must join in an application under this section. So if X holds a half share of the same land as a tenant in one right, Y holds the other half share in another right, X and Y must join in an application under it. It is immaterial whether there is one or several tenancies over the land. There will arise no difficulty in following the provisions of the section and that is what the section contemplates. There is to be one proceeding under the section and all matters pointed out in the section are to be determined under it. In this case the tenant was bound to proceed by one application and as he has not done that his applications must fail and I would dismiss them.

Appeal dismissed.

The Bengal Rent Recovery Act of 1865 contemplates the sale of an entire tenure.

A decree obtained against some only of the registered tenants cannot be executed as a decree for rent.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 17th of May 1911 against the order of D. H. Kingsford Esq., Judicial Commissioner of Zillah Chota Nagpore, dated the 20th of March 1911, affirming the order of Moulvi Mohamad Yusuf Ali, Deputy Collector of Ranchi, dated the 16th of December 1910.

The material facts are set out in the judgment.

Babus Ram Chundra Majumdar, Biraj Mohan Majumdar and Nogendra Nath Ghose for the Appellant.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Dey for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal is directed against an order for execution of a decree for rent, obtained by the Respondent on the 13th July 1907 under the Chota Nagpore Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act of 1899. On the 14th April 1910, the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree. On the 11th July following, two persons, not parties to the decree, preferred claims under sec. 211 of the Chota Nagpore Tenancy Act of 1908 which had come into force after the date of the decree and before the date of the application for execution. On the 16th September 1910, the claim was allowed in respect of one of these claimants who established his interest to the extent of a fourth share in the defaulting tenure. It was found in substance that the decree for rent had been obtained against persons who did not represent the entire tenure and that the holder of a fourth share had been left out of the suit, although his name had been registered in the books of the landlord. As soon as the claim was allowed, the decree-holder prayed that the decree might be executed against the remaining three-fourths share of the tenure. The owners of this three-fourths share thereupon objected that the sale could not take place under sec. 208 of the Chota Nagpore Tenancy Act of 1908, and, that, in any view, they could be held liable only in respect of a proportionate share of the rent due. This objection has been overruled by the Courts below and sale directed of a three-fourths share of the tenure. In our opinion, this order cannot be supported.

Sec. 208 of the Chota Nagpore Tenancy Act of 1908 provides that when a decree passed by a Deputy Commissioner is for arrears of rent due in respect of a tenure, the decree-holder may apply for the sale of such tenure and the tenure may thereupon be brought to sale in execution of the decree according to the provisions for the sale of under-tenures under the Bengal Rent Recovery Act of 1865, all the provisions whereof, except secs. 12, 13, 14 and 15, shall, as far as may be, apply to such sale. It cannot be seriously contended that this sub-section contemplates the sale of a share of a tenure. In fact, the provisions of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act of 1865 clearly contemplate the sale of an entire tenure. It has been argued however on behalf of the decree-holder

CHANDRA NATH TEWARI v. PROTAP UDAI NATH SAHI.

Respondent upon the authority of the decision in Madan Mohan Nath Sahi v. Protap Uday Nath Sahi (1), that it is competent to the Court to execute a decree for rent against a share of a tenure. In our opinion, the case mentioned is clearly distinguishable and is of no assistance to the Respondent. In that case, the Commissioner had prohibited the sale of a portion of a tenure under cl. (a) of the proviso to sub-sec. (1) of sec. 208. Under these circumstances, it was held that the remainder of the tenure, the sale whereof had not been prohibited by the Commissioner, might be sold under sec. 208, read with the provisions of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act of 1865 as if it were a tenure by itself and that the purchaser at such sale would acquire the same status as the purchaser of an entire tenure. That case obviously bears no analogy to the one before us. Here the decree-holder originally sought to bring to sale the entire tenure in accordance with sub-sec. (1) of sec. 208. He now finds himself unable to sell the entire tenure, because an order adverse to him has been made in favour of a claimant under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 211. It is, therefore, impossible for us to hold that an application for sale of the remainder of the tenure stands on the same footing as an application for sale of a part of a tenure the remainder whereof has been exempted from sale by an order of the Commissioner under cl. (4) of the proviso to sub-sec. (1) of sec. 208. This view is confirmed by an examination of the provisions of sub-sec. (1) of section 211. That sub-section provides that if, before the day fixed for the sale of a tenure in pursuance of sec. 208, a third party appears before the Deputy Commissioner and alleges that he and not the person against whom the decree has been obtained was in lawful possession of or had some interest in the tenure when the decree was obtained, the Deputy Commissioner shall examine such party according to the law for the time being in force relating to the examination of witnesses; and if he sees sufficient reason for so doing, and if such party deposits in Court, or gives security for, the amount of the decree, the Deputy Commissioner shall stay the sale and shall, after taking evidence, adjudicate upon the claim, provided that no transfer of a tenure shall be recognised unless it has been registered in the office of the landlord or sufficient cause for non-registration is shown to the satisfaction of the Deputy Commissioner. It is worthy of note that this sub-section, though based upon sec. 125 of the Chota Nogpore Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act of 1897 which substantially reproduced the terms of sec. 106 of the Bengal Rent Recovery Act of 1859 differs from the corresponding provisions of the earlier statutes in one important respect. Under the statutes of 1859 and 1897, a claim could be preferred only by a person who asserted that he was the owner of the entire tenure sought to be brought to sale. Under sec. 211 of the statute of 1908 the claimant could allege that he was in lawful possession of or had some interest in the tenure, when the decree was obtained. Consequently it is open to a person who has some interest only in the tenure sucessfully to assert his claim under sec. 211. But although a claim by such a person is admissible under the section, yet he has to furnish security for the entire amount of the decree, and, if his claim is established, what is stayed is the sale, that is, the entire sale and not merely the sale in respect of the interest asserted by him. The inference may legitimately be drawn that the Legislature intended that if the claim has been allowed in respect of some interest in the tenure under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 211, the decree should not be executed as a decree for rent under sec. 208. This view is in accordance with the well-established principle that a decree obtained against some only of the registered tenants cannot be executed as a decree for rent. Anund Kumar v. Hari Das (2) and Giris Chandra Guha v. Khagendra Nath Chatterjee (3). It follows therefore that the decree-holder is not entitled to execute the decree against a three-fourths share of the tenure under the provisions of the Chota Nagpore Tenancy Act of 1908. It is open to him, however, to treat the decree as a decree for money against the judgment-debtor and to execute it in the ordinary Civil Court. The contention of the judgment-debtors that they cannot be held liable for the entire rent cannot be entertained at this stage. The defence might have been available to them if it had been urged in the course of the suit for recovery of arrears of rent; they cannot now be permitted to get behind the decree; nor is it open to them to invite the Court to break up the decree. Consequently the decree must be executed, as it stands, against the judgment-debtors, if an appropriate application is presented to a Civil Court competent to execute such a decree.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed, and the order of the Court below discharged. The application for execution will be forthwith returned to the Respondent decree-holder with an endorsement by the Deputy Registrar that it has been so returned for presentation to the proper Court. When it is so presented, whether any question of limitation will arise or not must depend upon the applicability of the terms of sec. 14 of the Indian Limitation Act. That, however, will be a question for the execution Court to determine, if the objection of limitation is urged there. The Appellants are entitled to their costs throughout these proceedings. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed.

The Judgment of the Court was as follows :—

We are invited in this Rule to set aside proceedings in execution of a decree for money, which have been taken under circumstances of a somewhat exceptional character. On the 18th February 1909, Pelaram Mondal, the Opposite Party in this Rule, obtained a decree for mesne profits against Surendra Nath Ray whom he described as the infant adopted son of Panchanon Ray. His claim was against Punchanon Ray; but before he could commence his suit, Punchanon died. He accordingly sued the alleged infant adopted son represented by Ashi Bhusan Dasi as mother and guardian ad litem, and obtained a decree. Before execution could be taken on the basis of this decree, in another suit tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction, it was declared that the infant had not been validly adopted. The decree-holder, however, proceeded to attach properties which formed part of the estate of Punchanon Ray. Objection was thereupon taken by Ashi Bhusan Dasi, who claimed to be in possession as the widow of Punchanon Ray. The objection was allowed, and there is no room for controversy that it was allowed very properly. The decree-holder then proceeded to make an application that Ashi Bhusan Dasi might be substituted in place of Surendra Nath Ray in the decree, and that execution might proceed against her. The order was made ex parte, and in proceedings in execution the properties in the hands of Ashi Bhusan Dasi have been sold and purchased by the decree-holder himself. In our opinion, these proceedings are entirely without jurisdiction and must be set aside. The decree was obtained against Surendra Nath Ray as the representative of Punchanon Ray, and could be executed against him to the extent of the assets in his hands. Admittedly there are no assets in his hands, because he is not the adopted son of Punchanon Ray. The decree holder has not got any decree against Ashi Bhusan Dasi and he is not entitled to ask that her name be substituted in the place of Surendra Nath Ray. If we were to give effect to the contention of the decree-holder, the result would be really a new decree in his favour against Ashi Bhusan Dasi. But it has been argued that she is bound by the decree against Surendra Nath Ray, the alleged adopted son, because she acted as his guardian ad litem. It is plain, however, that she is in no way bound by the decree made against Surendra Nath Ray [Mohunt Das v. Nil Komul Dewan (1) and Joy Chandra Banerjee v. Sreenath Chatterjee (2)]. The remedy of the decree-holder may possibly be by way of a suit against Ashi Bhusan Dasi, if it be still open to him to sue her successfully, in view of the provisions of the statute of limitation; but it is clear that it is not competent to him to execute the decree against Ashi Bhusan Dasi.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the order of the Court below set aside. The sale will stand cancelled. The Petitioner is entitled to his costs of this Rule. We assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur.

Rule made absolute.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 174—Rent sale—Application to set aside sale by deposit—Deposit made by judgment-debtor at the instance of prior purchaser and with money found by him—Subsequent withdrawal of application if to be allowed—Refund of money deposited and withdrawn, order for—Enforcement, as decree for money.

Where some of the judgment-debtors applied under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to set aside a sale for arrears of rent and also deposited the requisite amount in Court, Held—That the application was in order as in fact made by the judgment-debtors though it was stated in a note appended thereto that the tenants had long before the sale transferred the holding to a stranger and that the money had been furnished by the purchaser.

When, therefore, after the deposit, the judgment-debtors withdrew the application to set aside the sale with the consent of the decree-holder:

Held—On the application of the purchaser, that the Court should have set aside the sale.

The money deposited having been withdrawn by the judgment-debtors they were ordered to refund it in Court within 7 days, and if they failed to do so, the lower Court was directed to execute the order as a decree and thus realise the money.

This was a Rule granted on the 7th of February 1913 against an order of Babu Deba Brata Mukerji, Munsif of Contai, dated the 14th of May 1912.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babu Upendra Nath Chatterjee for the Petitioner.

Jyotish Chandra Hazra for the Opposite Party.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order by which the Court below has refused to cancel a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent on the 19th July 1911. On the 28th July 1911, two of the judgment-debtors applied under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for reversal of the sale, and the requisite amount was brought into Court on the 29th July. Although the application was made by two of the judgment-debtors, a note was appended thereto, to the effect that on the 17th May 1902 the tenants had transferred the holding to the present Petitioner and that the money deposited had been furnished by the purchaser. On the 1st August 1911, the applicants presented a fresh petition, in which they asked for permission to withdraw their previous application as also the sum deposited. This application was taken up for disposal three days later, and by consent of the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors, the application under sec. 174 was allowed to be withdrawn, with the result that the sale stood confirmed. The purchaser under the prior conveyance, when apprised of this circumstance appeared in Court on the 16th August 1911 and prayed that the sale might be set aside on the ground that as soon as the requisite amount was deposited by the judgment-debtors on the 29th July 1911, it became the duty of the Court to record an order for reversal of the sale. He further stated that there had been collusion between the judgment-debtors and the auction-purchaser and that they had, by contrivance, got the sale confirmed, with the consequence that the judgment-debtors had withdrawn the money borrowed from him and had also become entitled to appropriate the sale proceeds which stood to their credit in Court. The Court refused to entertain this application of the prior purchaser." We are now invited to set aside this order. A bare statement of the facts makes it manifest that the order of the Court below cannot be supported.

Sub sec. 2 of sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that if the deposit mentioned in sub-sec. (1) is made within 30 days by the judgment-debtor, the Court shall pass an order setting aside the sale. It cannot be disputed that the application in this case was made by the judgment-debtors; nor is there any contorversy that the requisite amount was deposited. The mere circumstance that the judgment-debtors stated in their application that they had obtained the money from a person to whom they had previously transferred the holding is, in our opinion, immaterial. The case before us does not belong to the class of cases of which Ranajit Kumar v. Jogendra Nath (1) may be taken as the type, and in which it has been held that when an application under sec. 174 is made by a stranger to the proceedings, on behalf of the judgment-debtor, he is bound to establish his authority to make the application. In the present case, the application was made by the judgment-debtors. We hold accordingly that the order of the 4th August 1911 cannot be supported. The result is that this Rule is made absolute, and the execution sale set aside under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It has been represented to us that the money deposited on the 29th July 1911 has been withdrawn by the judgment-debtors. If this turns out to be true, the judgment-debtors will be called upon to bring the money back into Court within seven days from this date. If they fail to do so, the Court below will forthwith proceed to realise the money from them by execution of the order of this Court, as if it were a decree for money against them. There will be no order for the costs of this Rule.

Rule made absolute.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 1138 OF 1913.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1913, Heard, 26 and 27, August. Judgment, 27, August.	ISRAIL and ors., Plaintiffs, Petitioners, v. SAMSER RAHMAN and others, Defendants, Opposite Party.

Temporary injunction—Co-owner building on joint land in his exclusive possession—Other co-owners if may apply for injunction—Question to be considered on such interlocutory application—Defendant building after notice of suit—Court's power to order demolition—Revision by High Court—Charter Act (24 & 25 Vict., c. 104), sec. 15.

Where in a suit by certain co-owners to restrain the remaining co owners from building on land of which the latter only were in occupation with the consent of their co-owners, the Court upon an application for a temporary injunction found that the Plaintiffs had come before the Court in proper time and that the Defendants had raised the greater portion of the building since the institution of the suit and with full knowledge of the proceedings:

Held—That it was not only a proper case for granting an ad interim injunction restraining the Defendants from proceeding further with the building, but the Court might, if so desired, order the removal of the building already erected.

ISRAIL v. SAMSER RAHMAN.

DANIEL v. FERGUSON (8), VON JAOL v. HORNBY (9), AYNSLEY v. GLOVER (5), CURRIERS' COMPANY v. CORBETT (6), NEWSON v. PENDER (7) referred to.

The real point, upon such an interlocutory application, is not how the question ought to be decided at the hearing of the cause but whether there is a substantial question to be investigated and whether matters should not be preserved in statu quo until that question can be finally disposed of.

JONES v. PACAYA (4), WALKER v. JONES (3), MORAN v. R. S. N. Co. (2) referred to.

The mere circumstance that one co-sharer has taken possession of a portion of a joint property does not necessarily constitute ouster of the other co-owners. But at the same time it does not follow that because one co owner is in sole occupation of a portion of the joint property with the tacit or express consent of his co-sharers, that he is entitled to change the nature of that possession or to use the property in a mode different from that in which it had been previously used.

The High Court in exercise of its power under sec. 15 of the Charter Act set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court discharging a temporary injunction granted by the first Court.

This was a Rule against an order of Babu Jogendra Nath Bose, Subordinate Judge, Khulna, dated the 5th of August 1913, reversing an order of Babu S. C. Mitter, Munsif of that place, dated the 26th of June 1913.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babus Nil Madhub Bose and Haripada Chatterjee for the Petitioners.

Babus Ram Chundra Majumdar, Narendra Nath Sen, Bhudar Haldar and M. A. K. Fazlul Huq for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioners are Plaintiffs in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for an injunction to restrain the Defendants from building on the land. The Plaintiffs and the Defendants are joint owners in respect of this property, but the Defendants alone have been in actual occupation of the land with the consent of their co-owners. On the 11th May 1913, the Defendants began to dig for the foundation of a substantial building which they intended to erect on the land. On the 24th May the Plaintiffs commenced this action and applied for a temporary injunction. Notice of this application was served on the Defendants on the 7th June, and on the 26th June the Court granted an injunction by which the Defendants were restrained from proceeding with the erection of the building during the pendency of the suit. The Court found that the Plaintiffs had come before the Court in proper time, and that it was impossible to deny that the greater portion of the building had been raised since the institution of the suit, apparently with full knowledge of the proceedings. The matter was then taken by the Defendants on appeal to the Subordinate Judge, who on the 3rd August modified the order of the primary Court. His order is ambiguous and its precise effect has been the subject of discussion before us. The Subordinate Judge has held that the Defendants would not be entitled to make any new construction, save the construction of a staircase to the north of the small projection of the building, for reaching the projection; that no equity will arise in favour of the Defendants for completing the building, over and above what, if any, they may be entitled to claim by reason of the construction already made; and that the Defendants would be entitled to improve the condition of the existing huts, to make them fit for kitchen and for use by servants, but they would not be entitled to construct any new hut. The formal order, as embodied in the decree which was drawn up in the case, however, does not embody these conditions; it records merely that the appeal is allowed. The Plaintiffs have now applied to this Court, and on their behalf it has been contended that the order made by the Subordinate Judge is manifestly erroneous and should be discharged.

The Subordinate Judge has held that inasmuch as the Respondents were in sole occupation of the land with the consent of their co-sharers, they were entitled to erect buildings thereon and that the Plaintiffs were in no way prejudiced by the erection of such a building, because in the event of a partition of the entire joint property of the parties, the Plaintiffs might be awarded some other piece of land. In our opinion, the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is opposed to the well-established rule applicable to cases of this description. As was pointed out by this Court in the case of Dwijendra Narain Roy v. Purnendu Narain Roy (1), the mere circumstance that one co sharer has taken possession of a portion of joint property does not entitle the other co-sharers to claim joint possession: in other words, sole occupation by one co-sharer does not necessarily constitute ouster of the other co-owners. At the same time it does not follow that because a co-owner is, with the tacit or express consent of his co-sharer, in sole occupation of a portion of joint property, he is entitled to change the nature of that possession or to use the property in a mode different from that in which it had previously been used. It is not necessary for our present purposes, indeed it is not right, that we should further examine this point with reference to the special facts before us and thus anticipate the decision of the question in controversy between the parties, in the suit. What the Court has, at this stage, to determine is, whether there is a bonâ fide contention between the parties, or, as was said by Mr. Justice Markby in Moran v. R. S. N. Co. (2), whether there is a fair and substantial question to be decided as to what the rights of the parties are. To the same effect is the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Walker v. Jones (3), where Turner, L. J, observed as follows:—"The real point is, not how these questions ought to be decided at the hearing of the cause, but whether the nature and difficulty of the questions is such that it was proper that the injunction should be granted until the time for deciding them should arrive." It is quite sufficient if the Court find a case which shows that there is a substantial question to be investigated and that matters should be preserved in statu quo until that question can be finally disposed of [Jones v. Pacaya (4)]. Now upon the facts stated in the present case, there is no room for controversy that the Court has to decide a fair and substantial question as to what were the relations subsisting between the parties, and what were the rights and obligations flowing from those relations. Under circumstances like these, the matter for consideration at this stage is, where does the balance of convenience lie: is it desirable that the status quo should be maintained or is it right that the Defendants should be allowed to continue to alter the character of the land. It is well settled that the Court will not refuse an injunction in a case of this description so as to give the Defendants an undue advantage over the Plaintiffs. If the Defendants in the case before us were allowed to proceed to the completion of the building which has been erected by them on the land, it is indisputable that they will be placed in a position of undue advantage over the Plaintiffs. In this connection reference may be made to the judgment of Sir George Jessel in the case of Aynsley v. Glover (5), where that learned Judge observed as follows:—"At all events, this being an interlocutory application, let me continue my building, and I will undertake to pull down if the Court shall so think fit. That is a very specious argument to address to the Court, but one must have regard to the effect of allowing such a proceeding. Supposing a Defendant erects a building at great cost, when he comes to the hearing he will say to the Court: 'compare the injury to me, in pulling down the building with the injury to the Plaintiff in allowing the building to remain.' Ought or ought not the Court to give weight to such a representation? I think upon this point the observations of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley in the case of the Curriers' Company v. Corbett (6) are very important. The Vice-Chancellor says: 'If the Defendant's buildings had not been completed, there would have been ground for interference by injunction; but as they have been completed, the question is, whether the Court ought to or would order the pulling down of the buildings, or give compensation in damages. The Defendant's new buildings are of considerable magnitude and importance, while the two houses of the Plaintiffs are comparatively of small value and importance: and it has been decided that in such a case the Court will not as a matter of course order the Defendant to pull down his new buildings but will give to the party injured by the erection of those buildings compensation in damages. It appears to me that this is precisely one of such cases.' Consequently the learned Vice-Chancellor considered that, the buildings being erected, the comparative values of the Defendant's buildings and the Plaintiff's were sufficient to induce him to refrain from granting an injunction in a case where, if the buildings had not been erected, he would have granted the injunction. If that is so, and if those considerations are to weigh with the Court upon the question of damages or injunction, I ought not to allow the Defendant to proceed with his building, which will put him in such an advantageous position as regards the Plaintiffs when the case comes to a hearing." To the same effect is the decision in Newson v. Pender (7). In the case before us, therefore, prima- facie, the Defendants should not be allowed to proceed to complete the building which they have erected. But the case for the Plaintiffs is materially strengthened when we bear in mind the conduct of the Defendants. The Court of first instance found that there was good reason to hold that a substantial portion of the building had been erected after the Defendants had become aware of the institution of this suit and of the application for temporary injunction. In a case of this description, the Court would, if necessary, proceed not only to grant a temporary injunction restraining the further erection of the building, but also to direct that the building already erected be taken down. In Daniel v. Ferguson (8), the Plaintiff filed a suit for an injunction restraining the Defendant from building so as to obstruct his ancient light and gave notice of motion for an interim injunction. The Defendant, thereupon, working day and night, ran up the wall to a height of 40 ft. Mr. Justice Stirling granted an injunction restraining future building and ordering the removal of the wall, and this order was confirmed on appeal. Similarly, in the case of Von Jaol v. Hornby (9), when the Defendant had evaded notice of the writ in the action and continued to build until substituted service was effected, a temporary injunction was granted ordering the Defendant to pull down all that had been built since the Plaintiff had warned him of his intention to bring an action. In the case before us, the Plaintiffs did not invite the Court to direct the Defendant to take down so much of the building as had been erected after the 6th June 1913: they simply ask that the Defendants should be restrained from proceeding with the building any further. In our opinion, upon the merits of the case, there is no room for controversy that the order made by the Subordinate Judge cannot possibly be supported. The only question for consideration is whether this Court is competent to interfere in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. We do not feel pressed by the objection suggested, because obviously it is competent to this Court to interfere under sec. 15 of the Charter Act: and in view of the conduct of the Defendants which, in substance, amounts to a defiance of the authority of the Court, we are of opinion that this is a case in which ample ground has been made out to justify our interference.

(8) [1891] 2 Ch. 27.
(9) [1895] 2 Ch. 774.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute, the order of the Subordinate Judge discharged and that of the Court of first instance restored. The Petitioners are entitled to the costs of these proceedings in all the Courts. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at three gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

APPEAL No. 561 OF 1913.

CHITTY, J.
TEUNON, J.

1913, Heard,
1, August.
Judgment,
4, August.

OFEL MOLLAH, Appellant,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR.

Trial by Jury—Misdirection in charge to Jury—Questions of fact, Judge's expression of opinion in dogmatic and unqualified terms—Material evidence, omission to refer to—Conditions precedent to using certain evidence and drawing adverse inference against accused, omission to point out—Absconding not incompatible with innocence, omission to point out—Retrial by a new Judge.

OFEL MOLLAH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Where the accused was convicted under secs. 304, 328, I. P. C., for having administered arsenic mixed with sugar to two boys and thereby caused the death of one and hurt to the other, and the Sessions Judge in his charge to the Jury expressed his own opinion on the evidence in terms too dogmatic and unqualified, although he informed them that on questions of fact they were not bound by any opinion of his, and omitted to refer to some statements of one of the two boys before the Committing Magistrate and before the Sessions Judge and did not warn the Jury that before drawing inferences against the accused they must first be satisfied that he knew of the presence of arsenic in the sugar and that the evidence negatived the possibility of accident or mistake and that before using the chemical examiner's report they must be satisfied on the evidence that the substances examined were in fact what they were said to be, and in discussing the question of accused's absence from his village did not warn the Jury that even if they believed that he absconded, absconding is not necessarily or invariably incompatible with innocence :

Held—That the charge to the Jury was vitiated by misdirection.

The High Court set aside the conviction and sentence and ordered a retrial by a new Judge on the ground that the trying Judge had formed a strong opinion on the case.

This was an Appeal against the order of H. C. Liddel, Esq., Sessions Judge of Jessore, dated the 30th of April 1913, convicting the Appellant under secs. 304 and 328, I. P. C., in agreement with the verdict of the majority of the jury and sentencing him to ten years' transportation under each section, the sentences to run concurrently, being awarded under sec. 59, I. P. C., instead of rigorous imprisonment for a like period under each section.

The Session Judge's charge to the Jury was as follows :—

"The accused before you is charged under secs. 302 and 328. The case is briefly this that he gave two boys, Kasem and Hakim, sugar in which arsenic had been mixed, that the boys ate it or part of it with the result that one of them died the same day while the other recovered after a serious illness.

The points which you will have to decide are not involved : they are really only these :—

(i) Did Ofel administer poison to the boys ?

(ii) Did he thereby cause the death of Kasem ?

(iii) What offence did he commit ?

The charge against the accused is a serious one. On the other hand, the poisoning of two boys and the death of one by poisoning is a heinous crime. You have therefore the responsible duty of deciding whether the heinous crime was committed and, if so, it was committed by the accused now before you.

The accused denies the charge : he gives no explanation as to how he has been accused : he gives no evidence to prove that he is innocent. The prosecution however must stand by its own strength : and you have to decide whether you have been satisfied by the evidence for the prosecution that the accused is guilty.

The case has been fully discussed before you on both sides : I shall now put the case before you as briefly as I can deal with the more important facts. There is considerable evidence in the case to show enmity between the parties. This however gives us little help : it might supply a motive for the crime, viz., to take revenge, it might also supply a motive for accusing Ofel as the person who had given the poison. It becomes necessary therefore to examine the oral evidence carefully wherever it implicates Ofel. The evidence falls into various groups (i) there is the evidence of Hakim an eye-witness and the only person who makes a definite charge that Ofel gave the sugar, (ii) there is the evidence of relatives of Hakim and Kasem as to the vomitting and purging and as to what the boys said when asked the reason: The evidence is likely to vary for many reasons, e.g., the boys may not have said the same thing each time—they would be asked many times in different ways, sometimes they would be feeling worse than at others, different witnesses heard the answers given at different times, they may have heard more than one answer and may combine them in their evidence; there is also a possibility that the boys may have grown more definite in their story from hearing the comments of their relatives.

OFEL MOLLAH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

This evidence therefore has to be taken carefully.

(iii) There is the evidence of witnesses who saw the boys near Ofel's house—e.g., being called by Ofel or vomitting near Ofel's house.

(iv) There is the medical and chemical evidence which shows from what the boys suffered, particularly Kasem, the presence of symptom of poisoning and the detection of arsenic in the vomit and stools of both and in the body of Kasem.

(v) There is the evidence of the finding of the paper with arsenic on the ash heap.

(vi) There is the evidence as to the conduct of the accused how he left the village at that time and did not return.

(vii) There is the evidence as to the interview between the accused and Juran Kapali."

Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Appellant.

Babu Brajendra Nath Chatterjee for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

In this case on a trial by Jury before the Sessions Judge of Jessore the Appellant, Ofel Mollah, has been convicted of an offence punishable under sec. 328 and sec. 304, I. P. C., and sentenced to transportation for ten years.

The case against him was that on the 8th of December last he had administered arsenic mixed with sugar to two boys Kasem and Hakim and had thereby caused the death of Kasem and hurt to Hakim.

In appeal it is urged that the learned Sessions Judge's charge to the Jury is vitiated by misdirection and that a retrial should be ordered.

We have gone through the whole of the record, and, after carefully considering the charge, are constrained to the conclusion that it is open to the objections taken.

No doubt the learned Sessions Judge did inform the Jury that it was for them to weigh the evidence with care and caution and that on questions of fact they were not bound by any opinion of his. But it is doubtful whether the isolated passages in which these warnings were given were sufficient to outweigh the fact that throughout the charge, for instance, in his observations on the criticisms levelled against the first information, on the evidence of Abadulla re the addition or admixture of cocoanut, on the question of the reliability of Monaulla's evidence, on the Kabiraj witness's treatment of the boy Hakim for cholera and on the evidence regarding the Appellant's absence or disappearance from the village, he has expressed his own opinion in terms too dogmatic and unqualified.

We next find that so far as appears, when discussing the boy Hakim's evidence and the statement of the Kabiraj regarding the name mentioned to him, the learned Sessions Judge made no reference to Hakim's evidence before the Committing Magistrate and no reference to the opening statements in the boy's depositions in the Sessions Court. Further, though when discussing the questions of the accused's absence from his village, the Sessions Judge does say "would he (the accused) behave like that if the poisoning were accidental;" it nowhere else appears that he placed before the Jury this aspect of the case and warned the Jury that before drawing inferences against the accused they must first be satisfied that he knew of the presence of arsenic in the sugar, and that the evidence negatived the possibility of accident or mistake.

Similarly it does not appear that he warned the Jury that before using the Chemical Examiner's report they must be satisfied on the evidence that the substances examined were in fact what they were said to be.

Lastly, while discussing the question of the accused's absence or disappearance from his village, not only does the Sessions Judge, as we have already said, express his own opinion on the evidence in too unqualified terms but he has further failed to warn the Jury that even if they believed he did abscond, absconding is not necessarily or invariably incompatible with innocence.

On the whole we are not satisfied that the case was fairly and fully placed before the Jury.

We therefore set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the Appellant be retried. As the learned Sessions Judge appears to have formed a strong opinion on this case, we further direct that the retrial be held before the Sessions Court of Khulna.

Appeal allowed:
Retrial by a new Judge ordered.

REV. No. 337 OF 1913.

IMAM, J. CHAPMAN, J. 1913, Heard, 25, June. Judgment, 2, July.	MUSAI SINGH, Petitioner, v. THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs 233, 234, 535 (1), 537 (a)—Three separate complaints of offences of the same kind—Framing of a single charge setting out one offence in respect of three complaints—Irregularity if vitiates trial.

Where three different tenants laid three separate complaints of cheating against the Petitioner who was an officer of the Bettiah Raj entrusted with the work of collecting rents from the Raj tenants, and the Magistrate tried the three complaints at one trial and framed only one charge setting out only one offence of cheating in respect of all the three complaints and the Petitioner made no objection at the time of the trial:

Held—That the trial was not bad merely on the ground of the omission to draw up separate charges for each offence.

This was a Rule against an order of the Joint-Magistrate of Bettiah, dated the 13th of December 1912, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 420, I. P. C., and sentencing him to suffer rigorous imprisonment for 2 years and to pay a fine of Rs. 100 or in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for six months an appeal from which order was dismissed by R. Sheepshanks, Esq., Sessions Judge of Mozufferpore, on the 6th of January 1913.

The Petitioner was a Sazawal of the Bettiah Raj. He was accused of cheating three tenants of the Raj of Rs. 6, Rs. 10, and Rs. 11-2 respectively. The three tenants separately complained against the Petitioner under sec. 420, I. P. C. The Magistrate framed one charge under sec. 420, I. P. C, against the Petitioner in respect of the three complaints and under sec. 234, Cr. P. C., tried the three complaints together and convicted and sentenced the accused as stated above.

Mr. M. Zaker Ali with Babu Biswa Nath Bose for the Petitioner.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

At the time of the alleged offences the Petitioner was a Sazawal of the Bettiah Raj and was entrusted with the work of collecting rents from the tenants of the Raj. Three tenants are said to have been cheated by him while he was so engaged in the collection of rents. They laid three separate complaints against him before the Magistrate who purporting to act under sec. 234, Cr. P. C, tried the Petitioner for the three offences at one trial and framed only one charge setting out only one offence of cheating in respect of all the three complaints.

If the Magistrate had treated the three complaints as complaints of distinct offences and had drawn up three separate charges, the procedure would have been without defect. There was no obstacle to the disposal of all three cases at one trial. There was no misjoinder and no contravention of any law limiting the joinder of offences in one indictment [Subramania Ayyar v. King-Emperor (1)].

The defect was one of "duplicity," not of misjoinder, (Archbold's Pleading, Edn. 1910, page 76). It was not the mode of trial that was wrong, it was merely the form of the charge. The law on the subject in the words of the Code of Criminal Procedure is as follows :—"for every distinct offence . . . there shall be a separate charge, but no finding or sentence . . . shall be deemed invalid merely on the ground that no charge was framed or shall be reversed or altered on account of any error, omission or irregularity in the charge unless a failure of justice has been occasioned." It seems clear therefore that it is not open to us to hold that the trial was bad merely upon the ground of the omission to draw up separate charges for each offence.

We are of opinion that the Petitioner clearly understood what he was being tried for and was not in any way prejudiced. Moreover, he made no objection at the time of the trial (see Explanation to sec. 537).

The result is that we see no reason to interfere with the conviction. The sentence was, however, too severe. It is reduced to nine months' rigorous imprisonment. The sentence of fine and imprisonment in default will stand.

Rule discharged.

NOTES.

New Year honours to Mr. Garth and Mr. Ali Imam.

We note with pleasure that a knighthood has been conferred on Mr. William Garth of the Calcutta Bar and a K. C. S. I., on Mr. Ali Imam, the present Law Member of the Viceroy's Executive Council. The honours conferred are fully deserved by the position that these gentlemen occupy in their respective spheres. Sir William Garth has been a leader of remarkable ability at the Calcutta Bar for some time past. Latterly, owing to reasons of health, he has visited India and attended to professional engagements only during the cold weather. We understand that he at present proposes to practise chiefly before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. In recent years he was briefed by the Government in all the important political cases which have been tried in Bengal and we need hardly say that he conducted them with his usual ability. Few could place their cases and particularly the facts more forcibly than he. Although he did not pay much attention to legal technicalities his grasp of principles was always remarkably sound and his exposition of it equally lucid. He was often a terror to witnesses who are disposed to prevaricate or anxious to conceal facts. The honour conferred on him is fully deserved and our only regret is that it was not conferred on him in the zenith of his career at the Bar. The honour conferred on Mr. Ali Imam is both timely and opportune and he fully deserves it as a wise councillor of His Excellency the Viceroy.

Obituary—Mr. Justice Sundara Iyer.

We deeply regret to record the untimely death of Mr. Justice Sundara Iyer of the Madras High Court. A lawyer of proved ability and repute, his interests, like those of the late lamented Mr. Justice Krishnasawmy Iyer, were by no means confined within the limits of the profession, and his elevation to the bench was as popular as it was well-merited. His judgments were invariably well considered and sound. It is a great pity that a life of promise has been cut off in its prime. His death is a great loss to the Bench and to the Indian Community.

Judgment read by successor of trial Judge.

Is the judgment in a case and the decree founded thereon bad because the judgment was written by the Judge after he had ceased to be the Judge of the particular Court in which the case was heard? In Basanta Behari Ghosal v. The Secretary of State for India, I. L. R. 35 All. 368, the appeal preferred to the High Court was against the judgment and decree of Mr. Tute, Officiating District Judge of Allahabad, in a suit under the Land Acquisition Act. It appeared that the judgment in the case was written by Mr. Tute when he was no longer the District Judge of Allahabad and it was delivered by his successor in office and it was contended on behalf of the Appellant that the judgment and decree were bad on this account. Their Lordships Richard, C. J, and Banerji, J., overruled the contention and held that this ground alone was not sufficient to vitiate the judgment inasmuch as it was provided under Or. XX, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 that a Judge may pronounce a judgment written but not pronounced by his predecessor. In taking this view reference is made to Satyendranath Roychowdury v. Kastura Kumari Ghatwalin, I. L. R. 35 Cal. 756 : s. c. 12 C. W. N. 682, in which a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that a judgment written ten months after the Judge had ceased to have jurisdiction in the particular division was good and fulfilled the conditions of the corresponding section of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882.

Onus of proof in suit for malicious prosecution.

In Vydinadier v. Krishnaswami Iyer, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 375, their Lordships have clearly laid down that in a suit for malicious prosecution the onus is on the Plaintiff to prove the absence of reasonable and probable cause. The Defendant charged the Plaintiff with abetment of assault committed by certain other persons. The complaint was dismissed and the Plaintiff brought a suit for malicious prosecution. The allegation in the criminal case was that the Plaintiff used certain words which showed that he was guilty of abetment. The lower Court without coming to any finding as to whether the language alleged was used, proceeded to argue that even assuming that the Plaintiff used the words charged there was no reasonable and probable cause for the charge of abetment against him. In coming to this conclusion the lower Court threw the onus on the Defendant and their Lordships point out that it was clearly wrong. Their Lordships further point out that all that the Defendant had to be satisfied about was that there was reasonable and probable cause for the charge and reasonable grounds for believing that the Plaintiff was guilty of abetment and not reasonable grounds for coming to the conclusion that the Court would convict him of it.

Policy of insurance on deceased's life for wife's benefit if saleable in execution of decree against deceased.

Shankar v. Umabai, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 471, is of importance to insurance policy holders. It is an authority for the proposition that a policy of insurance executed upon one's own life but expressed to be for the benefit of another is attachable under sec. 60, C. P. C., as a security for money or other saleable property belonging to the assured. The Plaintiff's husband executed a policy of insurance on his own life but the policy was expressed to be for the benefit of his wife. Under the policy the Insurance Company promised on proof of the death of the assured to pay the policy monies to the trustee or trustees who might be appointed by the assured by separate writing and in default of trustees to the beneficiary (i.e., the widow of the assured) and, if the beneficiary was dead, to the assured's heirs, executors, administrators or assigns. After the death of Plaintiff's husband, in execution of a decree obtained against him the judgment-creditors attached the policy and the Plaintiff applied to raise the attachment but was unsuccessful. She then filed a suit for declaration that the policy could not be attached in execution of the decree obtained against her deceased husband. The Plaintiff's contention which was overruled by the Court was that the Insurance Company and the assured entered into an agreement which was clearly a trust in favour of the wife and the husband could not change this contract, the result being that he had practically divested himself of his beneficial interest under the policy.

Their Lordships held that unless and until trustees were appointed on behalf of the wife it was in the power of the assured at any time to put an end to the contract by ceasing to pay the premia or otherwise to defeat the expectation of his wife by assigning the policy to a creditor. The assured could divest himself of his beneficial interest under the policy only by assignment in writing as provided by sec. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act or by signed declaration of trust as provided by sec. 5 of the Trusts Act and neither course having been adopted by him the policy on his death formed part of his estate, the right of action against the company being in his executors or other representatives untrammelled by any trust in favour of his wife. That being so, the policy fell within the description contained in sec. 60, C. P. C, as a "security for money or other saleable property belonging to the judgment-debtor over which he had a disposing power which he might exercise for his own benefit."

Inam land acquired by Government if may be assessed like ordinary Government land.

Does land, subject only to quit-rent, change its character when it passes into the hands of a private owner after acquisition by Government under the Land Acquisition Act? This was the question which came up for decision in Hanumanthu Pantulu v. The Secretary of State for India, I. L R. 26 Mad. 373 The Plaintiff sued for a declaration that the Government was not entitled to ground rent for certain land in his occupation and for the recovery of the amount collected from him by Government as ground-rent. The land which was originally inam land was acquired by Government for a certain Municipality under the Land Acquisition Act. The Plaintiff subsequently came to be in occupation of it and his contention was that Government was entitled to levy from him only quit-rent in respect of the land as from the Inamdar. The learned Judges held that it was the Government that acquired the land and the title of the Municipality was diverted from the Government. The effect of the Land Acquisition proceedings was that the land became vested in Government and it became ordinary Government land liable to assessment in the hands of any person who might afterwards become the occupier and unless the Plaintiff could prove a special grant by Government he could not claim exemption from payment of such assessment as the Government might fix.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CRIMINAL.)

Indian Penal Code, sec. 408—Criminal misappropriation.

EMPEROR v. BIMALA CHARAN ROY, I. L. R. 35 All. 361.

The Petitioner was a water-works inspector in the employ of the Cawnpur Municipality. He was the owner of a house which was let out to tenants and he had the main water pipe tapped by plumbers who were his subordinates and connected it by means of an old pipe to the house occupied by the tenants and to his garden. No report of the new connection was made to the Municipality. The Petitioner represented to the tenants that the Municipal tax for the two pipes in the house and the garden came up to Rs. 9 and he and the tenants should pay the tax in equal shares. The tenants agreed to the proposal and paid him Rs. 9 for two years. It was subsequently discovered that water had been laid on to the house and the garden without giving any information to the Municipality.

Held—That the Petitioner deliberately misappropriated water for his own use and for the use of his tenants for which he paid no tax and about which he gave no information to his employers nor obtained permission for tapping the main. In doing this he committed the offence described in sec. 408, I. P. C.

Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 517, 520—Powers of an Appellate Court.

EMPEROR v. AZMAT SHAH KHAN, I. L. R. 35 All. 374.

Sec. 520, Cr. P. C., gives full power to an Appellate Court to pass an order under sec. 517, Cr. P. C.

(CIVIL.)

Compensation, apportionment of, between landlord and occupancy raiyat.

SRI RAJAH BAMMADEVARA v. A. SUBBARAYUDU, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 395.

Where compensation has to be apportioned between a zemindar and raiyats with a permanent right of occupancy, certain factors are to be taken into consideration and apportionment made after a consideration of those factors. In Appasami v. Ringappa, I. L R. 4 Mad. 367, the Court considered among others the expenses of cultivation and the fact that the cultivator has a home and a sphere for labour for himself and his family. In that case however it was not intended to lay down a general rule applicable to all cases.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), sec. 14 (3)—Matters to be considered before adjudication.

BAVA JUR CHETTI v. BAVA RANGASAMI CHETTI, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 1902.

On an application by the debtor himself for being adjudicated an insolvent, the debts exceeding Rs. 500, the Court is not bound before making the order of adjudication to decide whether the debts were real or fictitious and whether the Petitioner was really unable to pay his debts as stated by him in his petition. Uday Chand Maiti v. Ram Kumar Khara, 15 C. W. N. 213, followed.

Decree against Defendant in representative capacity.

SAHIB v. HAMID, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 414.

The general rule of law is that in a suit where one person is allowed to represent others as Defendant in a representative capacity, any decree passed binds those others only with respect to the property of those others which he can in law represent and no personal decree can be passed against them although the parties on record may be made personally liable.

Dispute regarding church—Onus—Facts of public history—Canon law.

When in a suit for declaration that a certain church and its properties were dedicated to and impressed with trusts for worship according to the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church, the Defendants being at present members of the Syro-Chaldean Church, it was found that for more than sixty years before the Defendants' secession, Catholic form of worship prevailed in the Church.

Held—That the onus was on the Defendants to establish by satisfactory evidence that the Church was Syro-chaldean at the inception.

The Court can dispense with evidence only of what may be regarded as notorious facts of public history.

The canon law can be invoked as a guide in deciding questions respecting temporal rights in Roman Catholic churches.

THE INDIAN DECISIONS (New Series), Allahabad, Vol. IX. Published by T. A. Venkasawmy Row and T. S. Krishnasawmy Row. Law Printing House, Madras. 1913.

The publishers are to be congratulated on their being able to present the profession with the concluding volume of the Allahabad Series of these useful reprints within such a short time. The present volume brings the reprints of the Indian Law Reports, Allahabad Series, down to the end of 1900. The references to all other law reports and journals in which the same case is reported as also to all subsequent cases in which a particular decision has been judicially noticed considerably enhance the value of these reprints.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Miss Marjorie Bebb v. The Law Society. Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES SWINFEN EADY AND PHILLIMORE. 10th December 1913.

A solicitor's profession is the monopoly of man under the Common Law and the statute.

This was an appeal from a decision of 2nd July 1913 shortly reported in 17 C. W. N. ccliv. The

... a mandamus or an order ... mandamus requiring the Law Society ... to the preliminary examination. Th... Society was a modern creation of statute ... d the right which the Plaintiff claimed against the Society depended on the Solicitors Act, 1843. The argument which had been adduced was that reading the Act from beginning to end it would be found that certain obligations were imposed on the Law Society requiring them to admit any person who came before the Society and complied with certain conditions; and the Plaintiff said that, if sec. 48 were examined, it would appear that "every word importing the masculine gender only shall extend and be applied to a female as well as a male . . . unless . . . it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction." It was not really contended by counsel for the Appellant that there was anything in the Act of 1843 which destroyed or removed any existing disability, and his Lordship said that, in his opinion, all that the Court had to consider was whether at the date of the Act women were under a disability to become attorneys or solicitors.

Three grounds were alleged as proving disability. First, it was said that Lord Coke had laid it down 300 years ago that a woman was not allowed to be an attorney. (Co. Lit., p. 128a) It might be that the Mirror of Justice was not a work of the highest authority, but the reference to it did not in the least take away from the value of Lord Coke's opinion. An opinion of his as to what was the Common Law required no sanction from anybody else. That alone, therefore, was evidence of what the Common Law was, and at Common Law women were under a disability which prevented their being attorneys. Apart from this opinion of Lord Coke there was the fact that no woman had ever been an attorney. There had been a long, uniform, and uninterrupted usage. Such usage was the foundation of the greater part of the Common Law and the Court ought to be very loth to depart from anything supported by long usage. He decided this case on the fact that at the time of the passing of the Act of 1843 there was an existing disability which prevented women from being attorneys and which had not been destroyed by that Act. The Court had been asked to hold that in education, intelligence, and capacity there were women, including the present Appellant, who were at least equal and often superior to the candidates who were admitted as solicitors. That was really not a matter for the Court to consider. Its duty was to consider and ascertain the law, and he disclaimed any right to legislate on matters of this kind.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and SHARFUDDIN, JJ. LALIT MOHAN SINGHA ROY, Complainant, Petitioner v. KUNJA BEHARI GHOSH AND ANOTHER, Accused, Opposite Party. 27th November 1913.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 250—Compensation order if to form part of judgment of acquittal—Imprisonment in default of payment of fine.

On the complaint of the Petitioner the Opposite Party was placed upon their trial before the Deputy Magistrate of Baraset on a charge under sec. 379, I. P. C. The Magistrate after trial discharged the accused under sec 253, Cr. P. C, and passed an order to the following effect in the judgment: "I therefore declare the case to be vexatious and direct under sec. 250, Cr. P. C.. that subject to any cause to be shown by him the complainant do pay Rs. 50 to the accused as compensation."

The day after, the Magistrate passed the following order—"No cause shewn by complainant who was present yesterday. Above order made absolute, complainant to suffer simple imprisonment for 30 days in default of payment of the compensation." The complainant moved the Sessions Judge of 24-Pergunnahs who under sec 438, Cr. P. C, made a reference to the High Court recommending that the order should be set aside on the ground among others that the order awarding compensation must be contained in the order of discharge or acquittal and not passed after the accused has been discharged.

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

CLARKE v. BROJENDRO KISHORE ROY CHOWDHURY (3) referred to.

Fraud which by its very nature is secret in its movements is in a large number of cases not capable of establishment by positive and express proof and although circumstances of mere suspicion are no proof of fraud, its establishment must depend in a large measure on theories and inferences from facts proved. But the Plaintiff who alleges fraud should at least know and formulate precisely what the fraud is which he alleges and against whom he charges it and he should be able also to definitely formulate in an intelligible way what his theory and scheme is and how it fits in with the facts.

A charge which cannot be reasonably formulated or supported on the evidence should be withdrawn.

It is a well known and fundamental rule not of technicality but of substance that when fraud is charged the plaint must set forth the particulars. The evidence must be confined to the allegations. The charge must be substantially proved as laid and when one kind of fraud is charged another kind cannot on failure of proof be substituted for it.

If a case as framed does not commend itself to the Court's judgment, it should dismiss it and not decide it on some other ground because it thinks that that ground is more credible than the Plaintiff's allegations and because it thinks that the Plaintiff might have made a case in another way and on which, if he had, he would have been entitled to succeed.

Where the Defendants were charged in the plaint with having conspired to commit malicious search and trespass and malicious arrest, imprisonment and prosecution of the Plaintiff, and they were so charged as joint tortfeasors, the Court was not justified in extending the scope of the suit by treating the case set up as one of a general conspiracy to cause damage to the Plaintiff of which the tortious transactions alleged were merely the overt acts.

There is but one rule of evidence which in India applies to both civil and criminal trials and that is contained in the definition of the terms "proved" and "disproved" in sec. 3 of the Evidence Act, which in conformity with the general tendency of the day adopted the requirements of the prudent man as an appropriate concrete standard by which to measure proof. The test in each case is, would a prudent man after considering the matters before it (which vary with each case) deem the fact in issue to be proved or disproved? In a matter of this kind the conscience of the Court can never be bound by any rule but that which coming from itself dictates a conscientious and prudent exercise of its judgment.

Where, whatever be the form of the proceeding, charges of a fraudulent or criminal character are made against a party thereto, it is right to insist that such charges be proved clearly and beyond reasonable doubt, though the nature and extent of such proof must necessarily vary according to the circumstances of each case. There is a presumption against crime and misconduct, and the more heinous and improbable a crime is the greater of necessity is the force of the evidence required to overcome such presumption.

The English rule in such matters (whatever it be, for authorities are not at one) does not as such apply to India.

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

When the production of a document is resisted on the ground of privilege the Court must first determine whether there is privilege or not. But after the Court has once held that a document or subject-matter of enquiry is privileged with the result that the other party cannot compel production or answer, it is not open to the Court to draw adverse inferences from its non-disclosure. Still less is it permissible to draw adverse inferences when the privilege is claimed and allowed in favour of a third party.

Although sec. 125 of the Evidence Act does not in express terms prohibit a Police witness, if he is willing, from saying whence he got his information, the protection should not be made to depend upon a claim of privilege put forward, but it is a duty of the Judge apart from objection taken to exclude the evidence.

When Counsel knows or has reason to believe that he will be an important witness in a case he ought not to accept a retainer therein.

There is nothing necessarily unprofessional in Counsel giving evidence in a case in which he appears as such. Though it may be undesirable, there is no absolute bar to Counsel being examined as witness even in respect of matters with which he was acquainted before he was retained.

SETHNA v. MIRZA MAHOMED SHIRAZI (5) doubted.

The true rule is that though engaged in the case Counsel is in law competent to testify whether the facts in respect of which he gives his evidence occurred before or after his retainer. The Court has no authority to exclude such evidence if tendered. At the same time it is recognised by both the Court and the profession that as a general practice it is undesirable, when the matter to which Counsel deposes is other than formal, that he should testify either for or against the party whose case he is conducting. In judging the matter from the point of view of what is desirable as opposed to what is legal much must depend on the circumstances of each case.

Where from the circumstances it appears that Counsel, because he was a material and necessary witness, ought not to have accepted the retainer, his client's opponent is entitled to ask the Judge to draw adverse inferences from the fact that he was not called as a witness. His client cannot plead his own act which made it undesirable for Counsel to come forward as witness against such comment.

CHATTERJEE, J.—Counsel is not debarred by any rule of professional ethics from appearing as a witness in a case in which he has accepted a retainer, and he ought to offer himself for examination if his evidence is found necessary.

WOODROFFE and COXE, JJ.—It is unprofessional on the part of Counsel to cross-examine a witness as to facts within his personal knowledge.

When Counsel in the course of cross-examination makes a charge against a witness or third parties, the Court is entitled to ask whether he made the charge on instructions and if so on whose. Instructions to Counsel are privileged only in the sense of being protected from disclosure to the opponent. There is no privilege as against the Court.

[SEMBLE :—The Court's disciplinary power over advocates in relation to questions put in cross-examination is not confined to questions reflecting on the witness personally, but extends to questions reflecting on third parties as well.]

It is not sufficient for Counsel in such cases even to plead instructions, they have a responsibility in the matter and are not justified in making charges of fraud and crime unless they are personally satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for putting them forward.

(5) 9 Bom. L. R. 1044 (1907).

Held—That the reference by the Judge to some medical works after the trial was over was open to the objection that whatever a Judge relies on should be made known at the trial to the parties so that they may have an opportunity of adducing evidence or argument on the point.

A conspiracy for an unlawful purpose in respect of an act which if done by an individual would not be either a crime or a tort would be actionable in this country, by reason of special damage having been caused thereby, and the limitation applicable to such an action would be that provided in Art. 36 or Art. 120 of the Limitation Act.

But facts which give rise to a cause of action for a definite tort would necessarily exclude a cause of action for a conspiracy.

A suit brought against several persons as joint tortfeasors for damages in respect of certain acts alleged to have constituted malicious arrest, imprisonment and prosecution of the Plaintiff is governed by Arts. 19 and 23 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act.

A judgment of acquittal only decides that the accused had not been proved to be guilty by the Crown of the offences with which he had been charged. To this extent only and no more is it to be taken as correct and conclusive in a subsequent civil proceeding between private parties, the opinions and conclusions expressed in the judgment being otherwise irrelevant and inadmissible in such proceeding.

CHATTERJEE, J.—Quære :—Whether in this country conspiracy alone apart from and independently of specific acts of tort furnishes a distinct cause of action even when special damage is proved.

There is no authority for holding that a tort when committed by several persons acting in concert is different from the same tort committed by a single individual.

WOODROFFE and COXE, JJ.—A Judge sitting on the Original Side may revise his judgment after delivery thereof, and in so doing may add to it.

This was an Appeal preferred by the Defendants against the judgment of Fletcher, J., passed on the 7th of August 1911 (see 16 C. W. N. 145).

The material allegations of the parties and the findings of the Court thereon so far as they are material to this report will appear from the portions of the judgment set out below.

Messrs. W. Garth, A M. Dunne, Eardley Norton, W. Gregory and S. Sharfuddin for the Appellants.

Messrs. K. B. Dutt and H. D. Bose for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT so far as is material to this report was as follows :—

WOODROFFE, J.—If one confines one's attention to the relevant and material facts in this lengthy case, the issue may be very shortly stated. The Plaintiff alleges that the Defendants, who were the District Magistrate, Deputy Superintendent and Inspector of Police, respectively of Midnapore, in pursuance of their object, which is now (though not in the plaint) stated to be a wicked and concerted plan falsely to implicate in an imaginary "Bomb Conspiracy" "the respectable and wealthy inhabitants of Midnapore and other parts of India," placed and connived at the placing of a bomb in his house. They then, he says, pretended to search it and "discovered" the bomb which they themselves had placed or knew to have been placed there. Falsely alleging that the Plaintiff's son Santosh Das was responsible for the presence of the bomb, they arrested and imprisoned him. Then subsequently they arrested the Plaintiff as well, not in the belief that they were entitled to do so as the owner of the house in which the bomb was found or otherwise, but in order to extort a false confession from his son that the latter had put the bomb in the house which they knew had been placed there in pursuance of a conspiracy amongst themselves. The Plaintiff was after his arrest kept in detention for some time—for more in fact than a month—after the confession had been secured, to obtain which he is alleged to have been arrested, and then discharged for want of evidence. His son Santosh and another accused were at first convicted by the Sessions Judge, but were subsequently acquitted on appeal by this Court. The Plaintiff now sues in respect of the alleged pretended search and trespass in his house, his alleged false arrest, imprisonment, and malicious prosecution.

The first and main issue therefore is whether the bomb was placed in the Plaintiff's house by and with the connivance of the Defendants as alleged. If it were so placed, then there was a pretended search, trespass, malicious arrest, imprisonment of the Plaintiff, and assuming that what was done constituted a prosecution in fact, it was a malicious one. The existence of all these charges follows on proof of the first, just as on disproof of the first all subsequent charges are negatived, if we confine ourselves to the case made in the pleadings.

Mr. Justice Fletcher, before whom the suit was tried, was of opinion that the Plaintiff had failed to establish his charge that the bomb was placed in his house as he alleged, but for some reason unexplained (unless it be that in his view of the suit as one on a general conspiracy to cause special damages, which, in my opinion, it was not, proof of one overt act was considered sufficient) omitted to come to any conclusion whether there was either a pretended search or trespass. Whatever may have been the learned Judge's reason or whether it was due to an oversight, we must, I think, assume that as he omitted to find on these charges in favour of the Plaintiff, it was because in his opinion the Plaintiff had not established them. Nor did he determine whether there had been a malicious prosecution, unless it can be said that such determination is involved in his finding on the next two issues, to which I now refer.

The learned Judge has, however, found that there was a malicious arrest and imprisonment, and has given the Plaintiff a thousand rupees damages therefor.

If, however, as the learned Judge has found, the bomb was not placed in the house by the Defendants or with their knowledge, then it was truly discovered by them there. If they then honestly believed that the Plaintiff as owner of the house or otherwise was so implicated by such discovery as to entitle them to proceed against him under the provisions of the Indian Explosives Act (VI of 1908), then the only question which remains for determination was (apart from limitation) whether the act in fact justified his arrest.

The discovery of the bomb was in itself primâ facie justification (though liable to be rebutted) for that belief, as also for the arrest, if the warrant was issued under a provision of the Act which authorised it. On this issue Mr. Justice Fletcher, holding that the District Magistrate Mr. Weston had not spoken the truth, and that the Plaintiff had, found that the Defendants had no such bonâ fide belief in their right to arrest the Plaintiff, nor had they authority therefor. The issue then on the judgment (given according to the previous finding, the presence of the bomb) was whether the Defendants had such belief and authority: or to put the matter from the point of view of the Plaintiff, did the Defendants maliciously arrest him for the purpose and with the object of extorting a false confession from his son. I have said "on the judgment" because I here reserve the question whether the judgment has not travelled beyond the proper issues in this suit: and because Mr. K. B. Dutta who appears on behalf of the Respondent has challenged all the findings in the judgment which are against him, and therefore we have as regards Mr. Dutt's client also to ascertain whether the bomb was placed in his house as he alleges but Mr. Justice Fletcher has negatived.

The Defendants deny all these charges. Their defence, shortly stated, is this: The District of Midnapore at the time of the events in question was and had been for some time past in a very disturbed state, and Midnapore town was one of the chief centres of sedition. The Defendants received reports of a "Bomb Conspiracy," as it is called, which they thought credible and acted upon. Learning from such reports that the Plaintiff's son Santosh had taken to and kept a bomb in his father's house, they searched it. They found the bomb which they did not place there, but which on the faith of their informer's report they believed had been placed there by Santosh. The finding of this bomb, they contend, justified both the report received and the action taken on it, including both the search of the house, the arrest of the Plaintiff's son, and the arrest of the Plaintiff himself, who as owner of the house was called upon to explain its presence there. They deny that the Plaintiff was arrested as a means of extorting a false confession from his son. And they say that when after enquiries, including the confessions of his son and another co-accused, it was found that there were not sufficient grounds to further proceed against him, he was, some five or six weeks after his arrest, released on the 31st August 1908.

The gravity of the relevant charges made doubtless justified a full enquiry. The trial, however, exceeded all ordinary limits and lasted some eleven months The enquiry went with lengthy cross-examinations (that of the Deputy Superintendent of Police Maulvi Mazarul Huq, referred to shortly as "the Maulvi," alone taking over one month and extending to between 800 and 900 pages) into various matters, which in my opinion are irrelevant, and at length presented itself last April before us in the form of twelve quarto volumes of some 10,000 printed pages. The appellate hearing has taken some three months, fourteen months in all having thus been occupied in the discussion of what is supposed to be the Plaintiff's case.

The latter, I should have mentioned, is an old man, formerly in Government service as a Sub-Registrar of Deeds. In the year 1884 he was dismissed from Government service in connection with his action in having returned, to a party presenting the same, a forged deed. Whether any moral blame attached to him in the matter, or whether it was merely a breach of departmental rules, does not appear. It may be, and I assume it was, only the latter. Years ago he was an Honorary Magistrate in virtue of his office as Sub-Registrar, but he ceased to be that on his dismissal from the post of Sub-Registrar. His position at any rate in Midnapore was a comparatively humble one, and his means appear to be modest. His son Santosh was employed as a probationer in the Police, and his other son Ashutosh in the Post Office.

The evidence given in this suit covers a period extending from the Partition of of Bengal in 1905 to the decision of this Court in what is called the Midnapore Bomb Conspiracy Case in June .1909. Generally speaking, the evidence and judgment relating to this period discusses the political condition of Midnapore, the action of Government, the conduct of the district officials as regards not only the Plaintiff but third parties, the conduct of other officials who appear at different stages of the history, the decisions of this and other Courts in other Midnapore cases, the provisions of the Criminal and Jail Codes, and other matters with an exhaustive particularity which covers practically all administrative and judicial acts, which on the widest principles of admissibility can be said to precede, concern, or follow the alleged "Bomb Conspiracy" and connected matters between 1905 and 1909.

It is therefore not without reason that this case, which in the ordinary course would be entitled after the names of the actual litigants, has been known as "The Midnapore Case." But it is not only the extensive nature of the enquiry which justifies such an appellation. For I have no doubt that this suit is not the Plaintiff's suit only (if it is his suit at all), but that he is the mouthpiece of others whose implication, and possibly in some cases false implication, in the alleged "Bomb Conspiracy" or other personal reasons have caused them to prompt or support this suit with its extraordinary and as I find malicious charges. Mr. Weston seems not to have been a popular man at Midnapore with the Nationalist Party, whether of the right wing or "soft" (naram) or Moderate Party, of which Mr. K. B. Dutt was a leader, or the left or "hot" (garam), or as it is called Extremist Party. It is idle to suppose that a man of somewhat humble position and modest means, and who is so chary of expending them as to be described by his witness Bonomali as a miser, should, for the sake of the Rs. 1,000 which Mr. Justice Fletcher has given him, prosecute and carry on a suit for over fourteen months at the necessarily enormous cost involved. His real interest, if he had any, would in fact have been injured, as his real case has been embarrassed, by the introduction of charges which are not necessary to it, however they may have served the purposes of others. It would have been feasible for the Plaintiff to have framed a suit for illegal arrest (which is the Plaintiff's real cause of action, if (he has any), along in fact the lines of the alternative case put before us by Mr. Dutt, without resorting to the mass of charges of fraud which have encumbered this suit and have helped by their failure to discredit it. It is these charges also which have helped so largely to contribute to the great volume of this suit, which is probably as Mr. Dunne put it, one not merely (if at all) to right the supposed wrongs of a somewhat obscure resident of Midnapore, but of those other more wealthy or influential inhabitants of that town who conceived themselves to be aggrieved by the action of the Defendants taken by them during their administration of the District. The Defendants have in fact been called upon to justify their informer's reports not only as regards the Plaintiff's son, who took the bomb to his father's house, but also as against as many of the other persons implicated rightly or wrongly by those reports as the Plaintiff chose to call. As I pointed out at the hearing, there was no reason but the relative moderation of the Plaintiff, or the limitation of his purse, or those of his supporters, which on the principle on which evidence has been admitted in this suit, stood in the way of his calling every one of the 154 persons implicated by the reports and supporting the statements of each of such persons by such further corroborative testimony as he thought fit.

Mr. Justice Fletcher at one time seems to have been sensible of the dangers ahead, for he is recorded as having remarked to Mr. Dutt that he must be careful not to introduce other cases into this. Learned Counsel, however, was able to persuade the learned Judge that all that he introduced was part of a conspiracy. The question was not that, but whether it was part of the particular conspiracy mentioned in the pleadings. A suit possibly might have been brought by one of the persons claiming to be falsely implicated by the reports, in which, if such a conspiracy as has been here tried was alleged, evidence of the character now adduced might have been admissible. But this is not such a suit, and the conspiracy alleged in the plaint is different both from that which has been tried and that which has been found by the learned Judge.

A considerable portion, which is said to be one-sixth of the record, is concerned with the alleged ill-treatment in jail not only of the Plaintiff but of his son Santosh and a third party, Surendro Mukerji, unconnected with either save as co-accused of the latter. All this evidence has had eventually to be ruled out, as it was not shown that the Defendants were in any way connected with it even if it were true, which is denied. This evidence, in my opinion, should not have been admitted at all. Assuming it was all relevant, which I am not disposed to think, it should not in any case have been admitted until it was shown that the Defendants were connected with the ill-treatment alleged. Several witnesses have been called merely to prove the fact that this Surendro Mukerji was kicked by one of the Police Defendants, and other evidence has been given which is of equally little assistance in the determination of this case. There is also a considerable body of charges against officials other than the Defendants and also against the Police, which I deal with separately at the conclusion of the judgment, and which sometimes directly, and in other cases only remotely, if at all, affect the the issues which were allowed to be raised. The Defendants have also introduced some evidence of doubtful necessity and gone into it with some unnecessary prolixity, but of them it may be said that they were driven to do so either to meet evidence which was permitted to be given for the Plaintiff or to prove facts which the learned Judge has found to exist, though the Plaintiff's Counsel unreasonably refused to admit them.

Were I to deal with only what is absolutely necessary, it would be sufficient to say that the Respondent has not been able to disturb Mr. Justice Fletcher's finding that he had not proved his main charge on which his whole suit turns—the alleged introduction of the bomb. I should then point out that both Appellants and Respondent admit that other findings of the learned Judge are inconsistent and cannot stand; that his finding that the reports (upon which the search for the bomb was made) were wholly false was inconsistent with the previous finding that a bomb was in fact discovered, which therefore corroborated the reports. For the same reason, I should point out that the learned Judge's finding that the Police Defendants knew the reports to be all false could not stand when the discovery of the bomb (and I may add also of another) showed that the reports were not all false and were at least not false in that very particular which is the material one in this case. The same grounds which lead to the conclusion that the Defendants had, by reason of the discovery of the bomb, ground to believe in the reports which spoke of its possession by Santosh would also show that they had ground for believing in his confession which admitted possession of such bomb. These and other considerations would further show that whatever may have been the object of the Defendants in arresting the Plaintiff, it was not to procure a confession from Santosh which they knew to be false. But this was what the Plaintiff alleged, and according to the judgment of the learned Judge, has failed to prove. His suit should therefore have been dismissed as the Appellants contend. I should have then pointed out that the learned Judge has only avoided the natural conclusion to which his previous and other findings in the case should have led him by adjudicating on a new case for the Plaintiff, not that in the plaint and which was inconsistent with it. It would only have then remained to show that even if it were open to the Plaintiff, as it was not, to make such a new case, he had not established it in fact, and then to have proceeded finally to enquire whether the suit was not barred.

Our judgment has, however, been invited on all the facts by reason of the charges of crime and fraud involved and I have therefore thought it my duty towards the parties, and in particular towards the Defendants, who are affected by these charges, to express my opinion thereon. As the case has been allowed to proceed beyond its proper limits, it must necessarily be the case that my judgment which must follow it is a more lengthy one than would have been otherwise necessary. Whilst therefore I propose to examine all the evidence I do not assent to its being all relevant. Indeed, the bulk of it on a proper construction of the pleading is in my opinion not relevant. At the same time my own opinion as to such relevancy does not in any way affect the conclusions at which I have arrived, as I have taken into consideration all the evidence laid before us and other evidence I have myself read except the opinions of Judges, the alleged admissions of Counsel and evidence in other cases on which the learned Judge has in some instances relied, but which it is conceded before us are inadmissible.

The charges made are of the gravest possible character and such that if they be established, then not one of the Defendants is fit for further public employment. The peculiarity of this case is that they are not, as is usual, directed against the Police only (who in this case happen to be officers of long service and good record, the Maulvi also as Deputy Superintendent occupying an exceptionally high position) but also against the District Magistrate Mr. Weston. It is alleged that he, who as such Magistrate was at the head of, and responsible for, the proper and just administration of the district, was himself a party to a very malignant criminal conspiracy (the other members of which were his subordinates, the two police-officers) to falsely implicate persons whom he knew to be innocent, and that for the purpose of such conspiracy he and they stooped to such base acts as the introduction of bombs into other people's houses, concocted false informer's reports, or acted on reports they knew to be false, arrested and imprisoned and ill-treated pe sons they knew full well to be innocent, suborned false evidence and were themselves guilty of forgery and perjury. In the course of this suit in which the gravest charges have been launched broadcast with a ligh. hand the Plaintiff or his witnesses have further charged a number of other gentlemen not parties to it with misconduct in connection with this case.

Mr. Macpherson, Commisioner of Burdwan, Captain Weinman, I. M. S, Mr. Brett, Assistant Superintendent of Police, Mr. Nelson, Joint-Magistrate, Colonel Buchanan, Inspector-General of Prisons, Babu Surendra Nath Chakravarti, Deputy Magistrate, Mr. P. K. Bose, Counsel of the English Bar practising at Midnapore, Mr. Hadrill, formerly a member of the English Bar and now a Solicitor instruc - ing the defence, have all been charged with varying degrees of misconduct, some of the grossest character, not merely dishonest but criminal. As these gentlemen are not alleged to be conspirators against the peace of the loyal and law-abiding inhabitants of Midnapore, we are asked to hold that they have all of them deserted in different ways and degrees the character to which they presumably owe their respective positions in order to unjustly and maliciously pursue the Plaintiff and his son Santosh Das with whom they have no personal concern.

Having regard to the extraordinary character of all these charges, the responsible position and primâ facie respectable character of the persons against whom they were made, and the unsatisfactory manner in which they had been put forward, I was at pains to endeavour to elicit from Mr. Dutt what his case (shift as it did throughout the trial) precisely was, how he supported it and met the numerous objections which the Appellants on a careful analysis of the judgment and survey of the facts had made against it. Were the Court in the hearing of suits to consult merely its own personal comfort in disregard of public time and money and at the risk of doing injustice through failure to understand a litigant's case, it might let advocates argue at large and then dismiss their case if that argument dib not seem to be sensible. But as the Court has a duty in this matter to examine, understand, and test the case, particularly where charges of fraud and the honesty of the litigants are in issue, so advocates for the party preferring such charges have a duty both to the Court which is asked to adjudge on them and to the Defendants against whom they are made. And here Mr. Dunne has anticipated some remarks I had intended myself to make. It has been said before now that fraud which by its very nature is secret in its movements is in a large number of cases not capable of establishment by positive and express proof. Whilst circumstances of mere suspicion are no proof of fraud, resort must probably in the generality of cases be had to circumstantial evidence and the inferences derivable therefrom. No one therefore would complain of a Plaintiff having to depend on theory in regard to a case of fraud, for in a large measure its establishment must depend on theories and inferences from the facts proved. But what is required of a Plaintiff is that he should at least know and formulate precisely what the fraud is which he alleges and against whom he charges it, and he should be able also to definitely formulate in an intelligible way what his theory and scheme is and how it fits in with the facts. This Mr. Dutt was unable and as it appeared to me unwilling to do. At length when questioned he stated that he preferred to take his case in his own way. I pointed out that there was the risk in so doing that learned Counsel and the Court, particularly in a case of this magnitude, might overlook the particular point. Mr. Dutt, however, appears to have been willing to accept this risk, for though he on occasions returned to his subject, he did not return to the point. This is not the way a case should be presented to the Court. I need not say, however, any more on this aspect of it beyond this, that the failure to meet and indeed the evasion of the objections taken by the Appellants have convinced me as much as the arguments of the latter that in respect of the graver charges and the main issues of the suit the Plaintiff has no answer to them. I only here wish to add that the remarks I have made do not apply to the junior Counsel Mr. Bose, who, though obviously oppressed at times by the difficulties of his case, was always studious to afford in a straightforward manner such explanation of them as he could.

The other aspect is, however, to my mind a more serious one. Duty to the opponent in a case of this kind means the possession of a sense of ordinary fairness. Charges should be formulated and not merely hinted at. A charge may be met, but not a suspicion. The charge, if there is anything in it, should be put forth in a precise form and then pressed in that form, and not in some changed form, by all honest means. But if Counsel thinks that he cannot reasonably formulate or support it on the evidence it should be withdrawn. I observe, however, from the record that Mr. Dutt claimed (unless specially directed by the Court) the right either to state or not state his case to the Defendants as he chose, just as he claimed to regulate the civility which he should extend to their witnesses. I need hardly say that charges of fraud cannot be kept up the sleeve and then sprung on the opponent when it is thought that he is least likely to be able to meet them. Further, the charges have not only lacked definition, so that it is not possible even now to exactly say on some points what the Plaintiff's case is, but they have shifted throughout the whole length of the trial and appeal. The case was in fact on one or another material particular differently presented to the Court in the plaint, in the opening of Counsel, at the trial, and in the appeal. And the learned Judge in conclusion has in my opinion found a different case from that made in the pleadings and in some respects from that suggested in the opening of Counsel or at the trial.

It is a well known and fundamental rule not of technicality but of substance that when fraud is charged the plaint must set forth the particulars. Then evidence must be confined to the allegations. The charge must be substantially proved as laid, and when one kind of fraud is charged another kind cannot on failure of proof be substituted for it. The necessity of these rules is obvious, being founded not on any technicality of law but on grounds of essential fairness. If you make a charge you must tell your opponent fully what it is, so that he may be able to meet it. You cannot shift it during the trial for the same reason. And what the party cannot do the Judge cannot. The Court must decide according to the allegations which the party is permitted to make. It decides a case and does not make one. If the case as framed does not commend itself to its judgment it should dismiss it. It cannot decide it on some other ground because it thinks that that ground is more credible than the Plaintiff's allegations, or because it thinks that the Plaintiff might have made a case in another way and on which if he had, he would have been entitled to succeed. What Mr. Justice Fletcher has in effect done is this: he has either rejected or held not proven the grosser charges which the Plaintiff has made and on the proof of which in fact depends his whole case as made in the plaint. The principal charge, the alleged introduction of the bomb on which all the rest depend, the learned Judge has, however, treated as though it were an almost negligible incident in the case instead of being, as it is in fact, its keystone. He has then substituted for the case as made in the plaint another which stands independent of the proof of the charges (which he has found to have failed) and which is of a different character from that stated in the plaint and which the Defendants were not summoned to meet.

I will now proceed to examine this matter in detail so as to discover what the issues are which have been tried or should have been tried. I cannot, however, without unduly lengthening this judgment on a preliminary point, deal with all the shifts and changes in the Plaintiff's case. I take only such of the chief items as are sufficient to justify the observations I have made.

I start with the notice of suit given on the 31st August 1909, not because such notice was in fact necessary but because it indicates the root of the developments which followed it. That notice charged that all three Defendants acting in concert maliciously arrested the Plaintiff with the object of extorting a false confession from his son Santosh. Nothing is said of malicious trespass, search or prosecution.

This was followed by the plaint filed on the 15th November 1909. The suit is there described as one for wrongful confinement and malicious prosecution for which damages are claimed. It implicates all the Defendants in equal degree as joint tortfeasors.

The torts which they are alleged to have conspired to commit are,—firstly, malicious search and trespass: and, secondly, malicious arrest, imprisonment and prosecution of the Plaintiff; their object in so doing is alleged to be a desire to injure him personally in his good name, fame, reputation and loyalty as also to extort a false confession from his son. The meaning of these two sets of charges are as subsequently explained in the opening of Counsel and the evidence as follows:—the meaning of the charges of malicious search and trespass is that the

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

Defendants are said to have searched the Plaintiff's house on the strength of the reports of a real informer, one Rakhal Chunder Laha. The reports were false. One of such reports falsely stated that the Plaintiff's son Santosh had carried a bomb into his father's house. The Defendants knew this and the other reports to be false. Nevertheless what they did was this. Dr. Bankim Chunder Ghose, now in charge of the Victoria Hospital, Hatwa, prepared an experimental bomb for the Maulvi who is said to be his friend. For this service the Doctor was, on the recommendation of the Defendants (as stated originally) or the Maulvi (as now stated), honoured by Government with a title. Then apparently the necessary knowledge having been gained, the Defendants conspired to put a bomb in the Plaintiff's house in accordance with the false report on which they intended to act, in order to implicate the Plaintiff's son. Before doing so and in order to facilitate their designs they had his brother Ashutosh Das suddenly transferred from Midnapore. The Maulvi had previously through the agency of a constable, called Kartick Singh, interviewed a boy, called Bonomali, who was an inmate of the Plaintiff's house. He promised to take the boy into his service and told him to come again. The boy did so on 7th July, and the Maulvi then gave him a bomb with instructions to put it in the Plaintiff's house, in pursuance of the conspiracy in which all the Defendants were concerned and of the acts done in the course of which conspiracy they presumably had knowledge, as they also had liability therefor. This the boy did on the 7th July. Immediately after the bomb had been so placed a search-warrant was taken out. On the following day a pretended search took place at which of course the bomb was discovered which the Defendants had conspired to put there. Santosh Das was then arrested on a false charge and taken to prison.

The meaning of the next set of charges as so explained is as follows:—The Defendants then attempted, by persuasion and threats to get a false confession from Santosh that he had placed the bomb in the house which the Defendants knew had come there through their own criminal conspiracy. They, however, failed. In order then to put further pressure on him to falsely confess they arrested his father, the owner of the house, who they necessarily knew to be wholly guiltless in the matter, for they themselves had put the bomb there. Even this had no effect until it was represented to Santosh that if he confessed his father would be released. The arrest of the Plaintiff was of course under such circumstances necessarily not merely illegal but criminal.

Before I pass to the opening of learned Counsel for the Plaintiff, I here pause to point out the exact intendment of the plaint. It is a well constructed pleading and hangs together in all its parts. The base of all its allegations is the charge that the Defendants in pursuance of a conspiracy between themselves put the bomb in the Plaintiff's house. Let us assume that fact. What follows? In the first place there was a malicious search and trespass, for the Defendants were not entitled to go into the Plaintiff's house on the pretence of search for a bomb they had put there themselves. Nextly, there was for the same reason a false arrest of the Plaintiff's son Santosh. For the same reason there was a false arrest, imprisonment, and prosecution of his father, the Plaintiff. They also arrested him to extort a confession which they knew to be false. They knew this fact directly for the same reason, viz., that they had put the bomb there. Every charge therefore follows on proof of the first which is the basis of the Plaintiff's case. So vital is it that notwithstanding Bonomali's story has not been accepted by three Courts before it was put to us yet the Respondent insisted, and from his point of view rightly, in again pressing the story for our acceptance notwithstanding these adverse decisions.

Now let us assume that that basis is not proved or disproved which in legal result is the same. Then the Defendants did not put the bomb in the house. As the discovery of the bomb corroborated the report on which the search took place, there was ground on the facts proved for belief that both the Plaintiff as owner of the house, in a public room of which the bomb was found, and his son Santosh as the person reported against, were accountable. Both were liable to arrest. The plaint alleged that the Plaintiff had been arrested, though the Defendant knew him to be innocent. They were charged to be aware of his innocence in a particular manner, viz., because they had themselves put the bomb in the house. With disproof of the latter fact follows disproof of the former allegation. Again they were charged with having arrested the Plaintiff (who on the ground stated they knew to be innocent) with an object. That object was to extort a confession from Santosh which was, and which they knew to be, false. But how did they know it to be false? Again because they had themselves put the bomb in the house, the responsibility for which they were pressing him to admit. If they did not put the bomb in the house they could not know his confession to be false in the manner as alleged in the plaint. In short, the whole scheme of the plaint is an introduction by the Defendants of the bomb and illegal action taken thereon and thereafter with a direct (and not inferential) knowledge that neither Plaintiff nor his son were responsible in respect of the bomb—a case in fact of direct and positive fraud. With therefore the failure to prove the basal fact on which the rest of the allegations of the plaint rests the other allegations also are not proved. I have analysed this matter in close detail because it is necessary that this point should be fully grasped in order to understand how much the case shifted and how far removed is the case found by the learned Judge from that which is made in the plaint.

I now pass to the opening of Mr. Dutt on the 17th August 1910. Here the first step is made towards the enlargement of the conspiracy, the principal object of which was then alleged to be not to injure the Plaintiff and not even primarily to implicate his son but to implicate in an alleged "Bomb conspiracy" "the respectable and wealthy men of Midnapore and other parts of India" from whom to continue to use Mr. Dutt's words, "the investigating officers" hoped to levy blackmail. The Defendants' object was not merely to implicate Santosh but as many of such other persons as possible through the instrumentality of false witnesses, fabricated evidence, and false confessions not only of Santosh but of others.

I pass to the issues. There is nothing about a general conspiracy to cause damage in the plaint, which as I have said describes the suit as one for malicious imprisonment and prosecution. The learned Judge, however, notwithstanding objection, considered that the Plaintiff was not bound by the description which he had himself given of his own pleading and framed two issues which extended the suit which was one against joint tort-feasors in respect of certain specified torts to one on a general conspiracy to cause damage to the Plaintiff of which the tortious transactions alleged as, and which were, his real cause of action were made merely the overt acts.

Evidence was then gone into. After the conclusion of the examination of the boy Bonomali on the 26th of August it must have become apparent to the Plaintiff's Counsel that reliance could not be expected for this evidence alone. The story had gone unless something else could be brought in to show that it was a probable incident in a wider scheme. Therefore in the months of September to November 1910 (the earliest objections that I note are at pages 2694 and 2873 of the paper-book), a case of still more extended conspiracy was put forth. It was then suggested not merely that the Defendants had conspired to implicate "the wealthy and respectable inhabitants of Midnapore and other parts of India" in an alleged "Bomb conspiracy," but that in a district free, or practically free, of sedition, the Defendants has conspired together to invent the "Bomb conspiracy" itself in which these wealthy and other persons were to be implicated. The conspiracy itself in short was the outcome of their own very wicked imagination. The charge then assumed a colossal form. There was first what Mr. Dutt calls a primary conspiracy. That which was alleged in the plaint became only a secondary conspiracy. The former was alleged to be the motive and cause, the latter the actual cause of action. The primary conspiracy by the Defendants was to invent another imaginary bomb conspiracy at Midnapore and then to implicate the wealthy and other persons there and elsewhere in it. The secondary conspiracy was merely instrumental to the first. The plaint alleged a conspiracy to injure the Plaintiff. But it was then said he was not really aimed at. It was not the predominant intention of the Defendants to injure the Plaintiff whatever in fact the results of the Defendants' act might in fact be. Indeed, there was no grudge, personal spite, or other personal motive against him at all. Nor except as a means to an end was his son Santosh aimed at. What the Defendants were, it was said, really aiming at was to injure the wealthy and other inhabitants of Midnapore and other parts of India and to "net" as many as they could in a spurious and invented conspiracy. The Plaintiff and the rest of his family, persons of somewhat humble condition and modest means, were to be the mere instruments of this wider purpose. They were to be such instruments in this way that through their extorted and false confessions the wealthy and respectable citizens might be falsely implicated. This extension of the general conspiracy involved also extensions of other charges. On the previous case only the report of the 7th July and those directly connected with it could be said to be relevant because they alone implicated Santosh. Now the Defendants were called upon to defend themselves in respect of all the reports and all the charges made against all other persons in those reports, the Raja of Narajole, Jamini Mullick, and numerous others of whom some thirty have been called as witnesses. The previous case as to the reports was that they were the work, though false, of a true

informer. Though this was kept up through the trial, an alternative and inconsistent suggestion was also then put forward, viz., that the reports were the inventions of the Defendants or some one or other of them. These theories again involved three different cases as to the Defendants' alleged knowledge of the falsity of the reports and the Plaintiff and his son's innocence. From the resulting entanglement the Defendants were invited by the Plaintiff to extricate themselves as best they could. First there was the original case that the Defendants directly knew that the Plaintiff was innocent and that the report concerning Santosh was false because they had put themselves or caused to be put the bomb in the Plaintiff's house in respect of which they accused the Plaintiff and his son. Then there was the case that the Defendants knew that all the reports were false not only as regards the Plaintiff and his son but every one else implicated by them for they had invented these reports themselves. Thirdly, there was the case on which Mr. Dutt says the learned Judge also went that though it might not be proved that the Defendants put the bomb in the house and therefore had direct knowledge of the falsity of their case against the Plaintiff and his son, and though the reports might not be of the Defendants' making, yet they were so false and so incredible on their face that the Defendants as honest and intelligent men should not have believed them as regards any of the persons implicated thereby, and if they did they were liable. We then get another extraordinary variation. The case opened was that Bonomali put the bomb in the Plaintiff's house before the search. A second case was then made, destructive of the first, that not Bonomali but a constable called Asadullah put the bomb in the house, and that he did this not on the day before the search but during the course of it having come into the building without having been previously searched himself. This novel suggestion, which has not been without its effect on the judgment, was made as late as the 2nd June 1911, after the close of the Plaintiff's case and after 42 witnesses had been examined for the Defendants to no one of which was the point put. Then to the case that Santosh was arrested to extort a confession of his own guilt was added the suggestion that the primary object was to get him to implicate wealthy and other third parties. To the case that the Plaintiff was kept in prison in order to extort a false confession from his son was added the charge that he was also kept there to extort another false confession from his other son Ashutosh and from a stranger Surendro Mukherjee. Then it was argued that even if it were not proved that the Defendants had conspired to put, and had put, the bomb in the house, and that the Defendants had arrested the Plaintiff to extort a false confession as alleged, still the Plaintiff was entitled without proof of these fraudulent acts to a decree. Finally, as Mr. Dutt admits, when the Defendants' case and argument was closed and Mr. Dutt was in his reply, he argued that the arrest having been as he contended under sec. 6 of the Explosives Act, the Defendants were not in any event authorised to arrest the Plaintiff as they claimed to have done as owner of the house under sec. 5. The previous assumption on which the trial had proceeded and in which Mr. Dutt had expressly concurred was that the arrest was effected under sec. 5, and that the statement in the plaint that it was under sec. 6 was incorrect, as it in fact was, for we have the warrant itself which shows that secs. 4 and 5 were the sections actually invoked. If, said Mr. Dutt at the opening of the case, Mr. Weston had arrested the Plaintiff on the 8th July, then no question could have been raised. At the conclusion of the case the argument of Mr. Dutt was that Mr. Weston could not have arrested the Plaintiff on the 8th July or at any other time.

Finally in appeal, the previous case having apparently been (to use the words of Santosh Das, who in this represents the tenor of the evidence of the rest of his family), that there was a conspiracy in which Mr. Weston was implicated "from start to finish," we were told that neither Mr. Weston nor Babu Lal Mohun Guha, though fully in the conspiracy at the end of May had any knowledge of the introduction of the bomb on the 7th July, but that they came to know it afterwards (when is not clear, nor how; or through whom is not stated) for, Counsel added, these conspirators must at least have had reason to believe (the grounds not being stated) that the Maulvi had in pursuance of the common conspiracy put it there. Then as regards the reports we were first told that Counsel's case was that the Defendants or some one or other of them concocted these reports. Later we were told that they were not concocted but the genuine though false reports of Rakhal Laha. And then upon my brother Coxe asking whether this answer applied to the report of the 7th July, Mr. Dutt said he would except that particular report which he alleged to be concocted, though no such exception had ever been taken nor suggestion made before, all the reports having been dealt with in previous stages of the case on the same footing.

I find at pages 8167-68 of the paper-book that Mr. Dutt put a question to Mr. Weston, upon which the Court observed "you are putting your case very high," and then stated what it understood the Plaintiff's case to be. Mr. Dutt then assented "yes, that is my case." Learned Counsel then put another question to the witness, on which the Court again interposed stating a case to which learned Counsel said "that is certainly a part of my case." Learned Counsel then put another question. The Court again interposed with an observation as to what its understanding of the case was, and then Mr. Justice Fletcher, who was naturally puzzled by these acceptances and departures from his statements of what he understood the case to be, was at length constrained to observe "that the case has moved a little." The case has in fact moved throughout its entire length as regards all its items, including the conspiracy alleged, the reports, the alleged knowledge and belief of the Defendants, the alleged introduction of the bomb and the Plaintiff's arrest. These constant shifts which have been gravely prejudicial to the Defendants also indicate that in respect of the matters so shifted the Plaintiff has no definite case founded on fact. It has been variously stated from time to time not because of any reason founded on fact but either in the hope that the charge in some form or other might be got home or because the exigencies of a defeated argument demanded it.

Mr. Dutt's only explanation of his departure from the rules which govern a case based on fraud is the surprising one that the Defendants have not been prejudiced and that their case at any rate has been found to be false by the learned Judge. The Defendants have in fact been gravely prejudiced and have been defeated precisely because of the breach of the rules to which I have referred, and because of the learned Judge's views on the facts put forward as the result of such breach. I need not enlarge on what is so obvious, the difficulty in meeting undefined and shifting charges, the cost and trouble to which the Defendants have been put in having to sit out a trial of eleventh months whilst they have been made, and the prejudicial effect they are likely to have both on the mind of the Court and the possibility, which in this case has ripened into fact, that in this volume of irrelevant matter the real issues might be lost sight of. As to the first matter I observe that the learned Judge discredits a statement of the Defendants' witness Asadullah made with reference to the search for the bomb because Mr. Wilson, a witness who preceded him, had not been questioned as to its subject-matter. The learned Judge, however, overlooked the fact that Mr. Wilson could not have been asked about the matter, as when he was examined the Plaintiff's novel charge that it was Asadullah who had put the bomb in the Plaintiff's house had not then been raised. The Defendants could not be expected to foresee in this case of shifts and surprises when and in what direction the next step was going to be. This incident illustrates the dangers of the latitude allowed the Plaintiff. It is also not the least disadvantageous result of this excessively lengthy and unduly complicated case that the learned Judge has not in this and other important matters to which I later refer been able to correctly recall the evidence given and the facts which occurred at the trial.

I will now refer to the judgment. In doing so it will be convenient to distinguish between its state as it was originally delivered and as it now is after the addition which was subsequently made and which appears at p. 9128. I may here say that no one does or can question the propriety of this addition. It was open to the learned Judge to revise and add to his judgment as is commonly done. And in this case he was the more entitled so to do as copies of his judgment were only granted during his absence subject to his revision. What is, however, contended for is that the addition made does not represent and is inconsistent with the considered judgment which was delivered in Court.

I will consider therefore this latter judgment first. Neither in this nor in the revised judgment does the learned Judge come to any finding as to whether there was, or was not, any malicious search and trespass or prosecution. There is also an absence of findings on matters incidental to these and the other issues. I may mention some of the more important, viz, as to whether there was such a primary and secondary conspiracy as alleged and whether the reports were those of a real informer or not. There are passages which seem to imply the affirmative. Elsewhere, however, the learned Judge speaks of the "alleged" reports and expresses the opinion that it is not probable that a drunkard, such as Laha is said to be, evolved the reports, and states that in the absence of the latter it is impossible to say who wrote the reports on which so much is made to turn in this case by learned Counsel for the Plaintiff. Nor does the learned Judge find whether Santosh's confession that he put the bomb in the house, is true or false. It would certainly have been more satisfactory if the learned Judge had given his judgment on these issues and important points. But as he has not, it must be assumed that according to his judgment and having regard to what he does find (to which I next come) there was no malicious search or trespass, no such primary or secondary conspiracy as alleged and real reports. As to the latter if, as is the case, the learned Judge was unable to determine who was the author of the reports, we must assume that they were the work of Laha which they purport, and which the Defendants' evidence discloses them to be. If it is alleged by the Plaintiff that the reports were invented by some one else, the Plaintiff has to prove it. Similarly, as regards the confession, as the learned Judge according to his original judgment did not find it to be false, we must assume that this was because he found himself unable to do so.

What the learned Judge does find is this. He finds, firstly, that the Plaintiff has not proved that which is the basis of his suit, viz., his allegation that the Defendants were responsible for the presence of the bomb in his house. He next finds that the reports are false and that there is no truth in the evidence of the Defendants' witnesses which corroborate certain incidents in them. He then makes a distinction between Mr. Weston and the Police. The former he says, misled by the Police, believed these false reports grossly improbable as he finds them to be. Mr. Weston is also found to have believed that Santosh's confession was true. It is found that the Police, though it is not suggested that they had other information which Mr. Weston had not, did not believe either. The reasons which the learned Judge assigns for this distinction are, as regards Mr. Weston, that he had his house guarded by armed constables. The learned Judge does not say in connection with this passage whether Mr. Weston did so under a reasonable apprehension of danger. During, however, the course of the case, he made the following remark to which our attention has been called: "Two policemen played upon Mr Weston's fears and Mr. Weston fell into the trap." From this observation it would appear that the precautions which Mr. Weston took for his own safety were due to lack of courage, and that there was no real ground for them. As, however, the remark was made during the progress of the suit and before the Defendants' case was concluded, we cannot treat it as having been intended by the learned Judge to be a finding in the case. In fact his subsequent judgment when he had considered the evidence does not seem to support this reflexion on Mr. Weston's courage. The observation suggests that there was no conspiracy except what was got up by the Police and Mr. Weston was put into groundless fright by the trap they set for him. The judgment does not find any such concoction of a conspiracy by the Police, but on the contrary that there was a real criminal conspiracy at Midnapore which was in a highly seditious state, and which conspiracy as the learned Judge finds included Satyendra and Khudiram, both of whom were subsequently hanged. The evidence further proves that Mr. Weston's life was threatened. In my opinion there is no ground for the conclusions involved in the learned Judge's observation, if it was not, as I think it may have been, merely a passing remark recalled in effect though not in words by the judgment. The proved state of the district and the actual attempts made on the life of officials in other parts of India, such as that upon the life of Mr. Kingsford at Mozufferpur, resulting in the deplorable death of two unfortunate ladies and Mr. Allen at Goalundo and other similar attempts, fully justified Mr. Weston in taking the precautions which he did. The learned Judge also finds that Mr. Weston did take some steps to satisfy himself that the reports were true. Mr. Justice Fletcher next finds that the Police did not believe the reports. This he infers from what he finds to be "the procuring and attempting to procure false evidence, the tutoring of confessing prisoners and others by these two Defendants." He then proceeds to deal with the issue of false arrest and finds that there was a conspiracy to arrest the Plaintiff by all the Defendants who did not believe that the Plaintiff was accountable in respect of the discovery of the bomb, but did so to put pressure on the Plaintiff's son to confess and not to extort a false confession as alleged in the plaint. It is clear on the judgment that the learned Judge thought that Mr. Weston's object was to obtain a confession of facts which he believed to be true. Though the learned Judge finds that the Police did not believe the reports he apparently excludes that portion of the reports which refers to Santosh. For he finds that they also conspired to put pressure to obtain not a false confession but a confession: and if they had disbelieved the reports which implicated Santosh, then their object must have been to extort a false confession which is not found. On this ground of malicious arrest the learned Judge decided the suit.

To this judgment the learned Judge subsequently added the sentence after his conclusion that the Plaintiff had not proved that the Defendants were responsible for the presence of the bomb in the house: "I am unable to say who placed the bomb in the house, but in my opinion Santosh did not." As I have pointed out in the original judgment the learned Judge omitted to find whether Santosh's confession was true or false. If it was true, there was an end at once of the charge against the Defendants in respect of the alleged placing of the bomb. The learned Judge did discuss this confession; but from the point of view of certain alleged irregularities in the taking of it, which were immaterial if the confession was itself false. It is argued, and I think with reason, that the general tenor of the original judgment shows that when it was delivered the learned Judge was unable to come to the conclusion that Santosh did not put the bomb in the house and therefore abstained from a finding on the question of the truth of his confession though a finding one way or another was necessary. We must, however, take it that even though there is now no formal finding on the point the added remark necessarily implies that the confession was false. But for this added conclusion no reasons are given.

These findings have been attacked by both Appellants and Respondent on three grounds. Both parties agree on the first two grounds. The Appellants alone take the third ground.

In the first place both parties claim that they were entitled to a decision on all the issues raised and on the points incidental to those issues. As I have said in the absence of any finding on a particular point we must assume that on such points the learned Judge was not satisfied that the Plaintiff, on whom the general onus lay, had made out his case.

In the second place both parties take exception to the judgment on the ground that its findings are, as is I think the case, inconsistent. Mr. Dunne on the one hand has pointed out, and Mr. Dutt on the other admits, that if the allegation that the Defendants put the bomb in the house be negatived, as Mr. Justice Fletcher has done, then the search was not as alleged a pretended search, but the bomb was truly discovered as a result of it. And if it was so discovered, then such discovery (and I may here add of the other bomb subsequently found in the house of the Dutt's) pro tanto went to prove the truth of the reports and (of Santosh's confession) which cannot be wholly false, unless possibly we adopt (as we are not entitled to do) a third case which is not that of either party, viz., that it was not Santosh who put it there as the Defendants suggest, or the Defendants who put it there, as the Plaintiff suggests, but some third unknown party. A case, however, cannot be decided on an hypothesis which is not that of the parties but inconsistent with it. In other words the learned Judge's findings that the bomb was not placed in the house by the Defendants and the finding that the reports in consequence of which it was found were wholly false cannot stand together. Nor again can the first finding stand with the third that the Police did not believe in the reports or, in other words, knew them to be false. For they could not know that to be false which, for the reasons I have stated, was not false but shown to be true by the discovery of the bomb. And it is not, and could not be alleged, that the Police knew that some third party had introduced the bomb. The Plaintiff's case is that they put the bomb there themselves and on that case the suit must be decided. Mr. Dutt again has a grievance on the same ground of inconsistency, looking at the matter from another point of view. He points out, firstly, that the learned Judge finds that the reports, including that of the 7th July on which the search proceeded, are wholly false, and that there is no truth in the evidence of the Defendants' witnesses who speak to them What then is the result? Santosh did not put the bomb in the house; the story of the existence of the bomb, of the meeting at which it was shown, of the way it was obtained, of the manner in which it came into Santosh's confession are a pure myth. But Mr. Dutt further points out that not only does the learned Judge find that to be so, but he finds that the Police who made the search knew the reports to be false and knew that the story about Santosh and the bomb and so forth was a myth. If that be so there could not have been a bonâ fide search in consequence of reports which were false and known to be so. And Mr. Dutt contends that the conclusion should have been that there had been a malicious trespass and search against these men who are found in effect to have invaded his house under colour of supposed information, which, if they did not actually invent, was wholly false and known by them to be false? But the answer in my opinion to Mr. Dutt's argument is this. We are not losing ourselves in words but we are dealing with facts. And the palpable fact is that in the early hours of the 8th July 1908, an article described to be like a hockey ball weighing 5 chittaks and subsequently analysed to contain explosive powder and shot was found in the Plaintiff's house. That is an admitted fact and not a myth. Had of course the Court found that the Defendants put it there, then the allegation that Santosh did so would have been found to be such a myth and the Plaintiff would have succeeded along the whole line of his case without further discussion. But the Court has not so found but has negatived that case. A bomb was therefore truly discovered; such discovery was a fact which showed that the reports were not wholly false and the Defendants could not know that to be false which such discovery showed to be true. In other words the findings are not consistent. There are others to which the same criticism applies, but I need not deal further with the matter here beyond observing that whatever be the decision which should be arrived at in this suit, it cannot in my opinion rest on the grounds on which the learned Judge has put it.

The third objection is taken by the Appellants only and is also sound. They contend that the learned Judge should, after he had negatived the main issue, have dismissed the suit, but that on the contrary he has decided it against them on a ground not raised in the pleadings which must be taken to formulate the only case they are called upon to meet. This criticism that the learned Judge's decision is not in conformity with the case of the party applies to a number of other matters besides the main issue with which I now deal, such as the general distinction he makes between Mr. Weston and the Police, his finding as regards the recording of Santosh's confession, and as regards the alleged attempt to suppress his petition of retractation on the 31st August. On this main issue to which I return I have already pointed out what the case of the plaint was, how all was made to turn on its allegation as to the introduction of the bomb by the Defendants, how the alleged belief of the Defendants in the Plaintiff's innocence depended on it, as did the motive of the alleged malicious arrest, viz., the extortion of a false confession; and I therefore do not desire to repeat myself here. I will only now point out how the Appellants' criticism is justified.

Now it is a well known rule of law that an act which is not in itself actionable does not become so because the motive is malicious or bad. A man may prosecute another for reasons of personal spite, but if he, in fact, had reasonable and probable cause for so doing, there is as regards the prosecution no ground to proceed against him. Similarly, though I do not say it was the case here, if for the sake of argument we assume that Mr. Weston did arrest the Plaintiff in order to induce his son Santosh to make a confession, that would have no legal consequence provided that Mr. Weston in arresting the Plaintiff had a bonâ fide belief in his right to do so and was in fact justified in law in doing so. Therefore it is not the motive in itself which is of importance but the belief with which the act was done. If on the other hand, as the learned Judge finds, the Defendants when arresting the Plaintiff had in law no authority to do so and did not believe in the existence of such authority, or that the Plaintiff was accountable in respect of the bomb found in his house either as owner or otherwise, then of course the arrest of the Plaintiff merely to procure a confession, whether true or false, from his son would be a fraud on-the statute under which it purported to take place, for it was an act not done in furtherance of the ends of that statute but for another and indirect purpose.

The point then is, were the Defendants acting in the honest belief that they were entitled to arrest the Plaintiff, for I will deal in its own place with the question whether the statute in fact authorised the arrest. Now the original case made by the plaint was that the Defendants had no such honest belief. And why had they no such belief? Because they directly knew the Plaintiff to be innocent. And how again did they know this? Because they had themselves placed the bomb in the house in respect of which they were charging him. And what was their motive? To extort a false confession from his son Santosh, a confession which they knew to be false for the same reason that they knew the Plaintiff to be innocent. The learned Judge has found all these allegations which were those the Plaintiff made in his plaint to be not proved. He has, however, in effect said this: "It is true that you have not proved the ground of your suit, or the allegations which are based thereon in the way alleged in the plaint, but I hold it has been proved in another way."

I state the finding as it has been presented to us in argument. Now the plaint not only alleged that in arresting the Plaintiff the Defendants did not believe in his guilt but it also told us why they did not. And that is because the Defendants had put the bomb in the house themselves. But when this fact is negatived, the alleged ground of the Defendants' disbelief has gone. The judgment substitutes no other ground for it, and does not explain how it was that the District Magistrate believed that the Plaintiff was innocent. The discovery of the bomb was a fact which primâ facie justified the Magistrate's belief in the Plaintiff's guilt as also the Plaintiff's arrest. But what the learned Judge does say in effect is this: "Notwithstanding such primâ facie right to arrest, and that the alleged ground for the Defendants' disbelief has gone, I find as a fact that the Defendants did not believe in this right to arrest." Then the learned Judge makes a distinction between Mr. Weston and the Police which is the case of neither party. Mr. Dutt claims, and if his case were founded in fact rightly so, that all the Defendants in respect of the main issue stand on the same footing. The Appellants say the same and that Mr. Weston does not shirk any liability by casting it on subordinates who worked under his orders. But the learned Judge does draw such a distinction. And the reasons why he says Mr. Weston did not believe in his right to arrest the Plaintiff are these. In the first place it is said that the informer's reports did not inculpate him. That is admitted and the fact only shows this and nothing more that the Defendants cannot (as they do not claim to do) directly rely on the reports as their ground for arresting the Plaintiff. But the learned Judge goes further. He says in effect that the reports exculpated the Plaintiff. This is however not so. The reports deal with the state of things before the bomb got in the Plaintiff's house—a state with which the Plaintiff was admittedly not concerned. They do not and could not speak as to the state of things after the bomb was in the house whether the Plaintiff knew of its existence there or connived at its keeping and so forth. Secondly, it is alleged that Mr. Weston knew of the search before it took place, and if it was his case and belief that 'the Plaintiff was as the owner of the house liable to arrest, then it is said he would have arrested him then and there. But as the Plaintiff was admittedly not then arrested, Mr. Weston had, it is concluded, no such belief.' Mr. Weston's answer is that he did not know of the search before it was made, and that had he known of it he would have arrested the Plaintiff on the 8th July; that when he found that the Police had not done so, he blamed them; that on their asking whether they should go back and arrest the Plaintiff, he said that as they had not arrested the Plaintiff at first they had better wait until it had been ascertained whether the article found (which was alleged to be a play-ball by Santosh Das) was really a bomb, and, if so, whether it was of a dangerous character; and that he in fact waited till the receipt of the Chemical Examiner's report which showed that it was a dangerous bomb, and then arrested the Plaintiff on the first day of hearing of the case following the receipt of such report. The learned Judge has, however, found that Mr. Weston's explanation is untrue, and that in support of one particular the Maulvi has committed a forgery. Thirdly, though, as I have said, the finding of the bomb was primâ facie ground for the arrest, and though the learned Judge finds that Mr. Weston believed in the existence of a bomb conspiracy, in Santosh's guilt and the truth of his confession, he did not, he finds, on the other hand believe in the complicity of his father, for he is found to have expressly told the latter on many occasions that he was well aware of his innocence, that he need not be nervous, and to have expressly told him that the reason why he would arrest him was the eventuality of his not getting a confession from his son, which the Plaintiff alleges Mr. Weston, who made this alleged threat, knew to be false. This story that Mr. Weston admitted to the Plaintiff his guilty intentions as regards him sees the light of day for the first time in the evidence in this suit. If it were true it would have been put forward before and made the basis of his pleading in which case all the other allegations of fraud were wholly supererogatory. If you can believe the proof offered there is no better evidence of a man's state of mind than what he himself states it to be; and it was not necessary if Mr. Weston in fact made such an admission to allege that he put a bomb in the house or did any other of the criminal acts alleged. As I am now only outlining the facts, I do not here give the reasons for my finding that this story also has been proved to be false.

It will be observed from what I have said that the effect of the judgment is to substitute for the case of direct knowledge by the Defendants of the Plaintiff's innocence due to their direct knowledge of the truth of the facts owing to their having placed the bomb in the house themselves, a case of knowledge based on grounds of inference from alleged acts, circumstances and conversations, including direct admissions. What Mr. Dutt relied on in his opening was not such an admission, but the alleged fact that Bonomali had put the bomb in the house. Mr. Dutt must probably have had in the proofs of the Plaintiff, his first witness, some such statement of the conversations he is said to have had with Mr. Weston, as he (the Plaintiff) has deposed to in Court. It is a noteworthy fact, however that in the opening (I quote from the transcript he has given us) he does not beyond a vague allusion to "threats" mention these admissions. It is possible he did so, and has not been reported. But if so, this can only have been because the reference was of a cursory character. Mr. Dutt, to whom these conversations are alleged to have been reported, possibly was able to estimate this evidence at its true value and therefore rested his case in conformity with the pleading on the story of the introduction of the bomb in the house. If this were not so, one would have expected him to put these alleged admissions prominently forward. His argument would have been "there is no doubt about Mr. Weston's belief in the innocence of my client for he repeatedly told him so. There is no doubt what his motive was in effecting my client's arrest, for he expressly told him that the cause of the arrest which followed his threat was his failure to get his son to confess." If this story were true, one would expect it to be put in the forefront of the case, especially if Mr. Dutt had, as the Plaintiff alleges, been told about all these conversations immediately after they are said to have occurred. That Mr. Dutt did not so put it shows two things: that he considered his real case to rest on the story which his witness Bonomali was going to tell about the introduction of the bomb, and he estimated, as I have said, the story about the alleged admissions of Mr. Weston at their true value by saying nothing about them. It was only after Bonomali's story failed that an attempt which has proved successful was made to rest the case on them.

To pass to the case of the Police. The learned Judge has found as I have stated that the Police did not believe the reports and therefore presumably did not believe the conspiracy. Presumably also on this finding they should not have believed in Santosh's guilt or the truth of his confession. I cannot say, however, that the learned Judge has found this, for he has found that they arrested the Plaintiff not to extort a false confession from him, but to put pressure on him to make a confession. The grounds for their alleged disbelief in the reports as alleged in the plaint have been negatived, but it is found as a fact that they did not believe in them because they tutored witnesses, and so forth. As I have already pointed out, it cannot, on the learned Judge's previous finding as to the bomb, be held that they disbelieved reports which spoke of a bomb and were verified by its discovery. So the only remaining ground for their liability is their alleged conspiracy with Mr. Weston, for whose acts done in pursuance of the common object of it they are charged to be liable. But the uncontradicted evidence, and the learned Judge has not said that he disbelieves it, is that the Maulvi acted only under the orders of Mr. Weston, who alone was responsible for the arrest both as initiating and directing it; and Lal Mohun Guha was a subordinate acting under both. And it is conceded that if that be so, though Mr. Weston's orders, if not authorised by law, would not exempt them from liability for the arrest, there would on such state of facts be no evidence of any conspiracy in this regard. Finally as regards the motive of the arrest, the learned Judge substitutes in lieu of the case in the plaint that it was to extort a false confession, the case that it was done to put pressure on the Plaintiff to obtain a confession from his son which was believed to be true.

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

It is clear that the case thus found which is made to stand independent of the causal fraud alleged in the plaint has no resemblance to the case there made, and if it were necessary to do so, I would have, after affirming the finding that that fraud had not been proved, held that the suit should be dismissed on these grounds. It is, however, not necessary to rest my judgment on such grounds as an examination of the evidence, irrelevant as it was, has led me clearly to the same conclusion.

Though Mr. Dutt has himself taken exception to the findings of the learned Judge, he has urged nevertheless that we should at any rate consider ourselves bound by his appreciation of the witnesses he saw, an advantage which we as an Appellate Court have not had. I have during the course of this judgment given fully my reasons for appreciating the evidence differently from the manner in which the learned Judge has done. In answer, however, to learned Counsel's submission it is incumbent on me to make some further observations of a more general character on this matter. In the first place what I have said of the issues and the mode in which they have been determined touches this question of appreciation of evidence. We cannot be affected by the learned Judge's appreciation of evidence on matters on which he does not decide. Nextly, the weight of such appreciation where there is a decision is diminished by the following facts. In some cases witnesses have been discredited on matters of which there is no evidence; in others the learned Judge has relied on matters which are inadmissible. Next he has discredited evidence given on behalf of the Defendants owing to an erroneous reading, or misrecollection, of what that and other evidence was. I deal with these matters in their places in the judgment, but in illustration only of my remarks I may here point to the discrediting of Rahman's story as to the circulation of the "Message to the Punjabis" on the ground that the document produced is a proof of which there is no evidence and which is not the fact. There is in respect of the witness Kartic Singh the reliance on the deposition in the Sessions Court of Kishoripati Roy, who has not, however, given any evidence in this case. There is the reliance which the learned Judge places on Upendra Nath Maity, whom he regards as one of the principal and most reliable of the Plaintiff's witnesses, and to which conclusion he is influenced by the opinions of the learned Judges in the criminal case which he cites but which are not evidence. On the other hand, Lal Mohun is suspected because of the learned Judge's findings on the Narainghur case. On the other hand, also, we have the discrediting of the evidence as to the search at the Dutt's house on a supposed admission of Mr. Gregory in the criminal case which is denied, and is in any case no evidence. On the same matter the learned Judge is under the erroneous impression that Mr. Cornish said that he suspected such search which he did not. I have referred to the case of Asadullah and Mr. Wilson. The latter is also discredited because the learned Judge thinks that the story he tells about the guarding of the Plaintiff's house was a new story, whereas in fact the record shows that it was put forward at the first opportunity. Mr. Weston's statement on the important questions whether he knew of the search before it was made is discredited on an erroneous reading of the Maulvi's evidence, on an omission to recollect what the learned

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

Judge had ruled about Mr. Weston's pleading, and on the mistaken supposition that Mr. Cornish made a particular statement when he in fact said the contrary. Other similar errors I deal with in their places. As regards these matters I may observe that it may doubtless not have been easy in the case of this enormously lengthy record to be always accurate as to what had been said or done, the more particularly that the learned Judge was not favoured as we have been with printed books, proper indices and the abstracts which have been supplied us. But that circumstance, while it may help to explain these and other mistakes, does not dispense, much less prevent us, from examining for ourselves evidence, the appreciation of which has been affected by them, particularly having regard to the gravity of the charges in support, or defence, of which it has been given. Further, the earned Judge has criticised the evidence for the Defendants. But beyond the statement that some of the Plaintiff's witnesses are not loyal and law-abiding, the learned Judge has omitted to deal with the question whether their evidence was open to criticism by reason of their having said that which was untrue. In so dealing with the case the learned Judge has overlooked the fact that the general onus was on the Plaintiff. Though, the learned Judge holds that Bonomali's story is not established, he omits to observe that his evidence is (as it undoubtedly has been proved to be) false. As I shall have occasion to point out in this judgment there is no doubt whatever on the depositions of the Plaintiff and some of the most important of his witnesses, it clearly appears that they have given false, and in some cases admittedly false, testimony. To arrive at this conclusion it is not necessary to have seen these witnesses. It is patent on the depositions themselves. As regards the appreciation of the Defendants' witnesses it is not only affected by the mistakes to which I have referred and others, but in some cases adverse criticism is passed upon them for which in my opinion no sufficient grounds are given. As regards the Maulvi's evidence, I will deal in detail later. Further in the appreciation of testimony, it is necessary to observe whether it has been met by other available evidence. But though the learned Judge has adverted to the non-calling of evidence by the Defendants, he has omitted to observe that the Plaintiff's evidence is gravely open to attack on that very ground. In fact the only reference which he makes to this matter is that relating to the objection that inferences adverse to the Plaintiff should be drawn from the absence from the witness-box of Mr. K. B. Dutt, who is said to have knowledge, either personal or reported, on every one of the main incidents in the case, and against whom, in connection with it, personal charges have been made. I deal at the conclusion of this judgment with the question whether Mr. Dutt was as Counsel precluded from giving evidence, and whether even were that so, the fact of the Plaintiff having briefed him deprives the Defendants of the comment that he should not have been briefed but should have been called. It is sufficient for me to say here that the fact that he was not called is in my opinion one of the invalidating arguments against the truth of the Plaintiff's case.

Before proceeding to deal with the facts, I wish here to clear the ground of other matter dealt with in the judgment though according to its terms, they are not material. The learned Judge has discussed in detail various provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 172, 364, 344, 167 (read with the Bengal Police Code), 352, 154, dealing with case diaries, recording of confessions, remands, provisions as to open Court, and first information; matters which no doubt would not have been out of place were we dealing, as we are not, with an appeal from a conviction of the accused in the criminal case. It is true that on the case which Mr. Dutt asks us to accept some of these matters might not be without relevancy. For that case is that every act which Mr. Weston and Mr. Nelson, the Joint-Magistrate, who is alleged to be his "tool," did from the beginning to the end of these proceedings was fraudulent. As Mr. Dutt puts it, these matters discussed are not merely irregularities. They were deliberate and perverse breaches of the law committed for the purposes of the conspiracy alleged. But that is not what the learned Judge finds. He discusses them merely as irregularities, and no ground has been shown us why they were more than that. I must not be understood to assent to all the legal propositions which the learned Judge lays down, and in particular I do not assent to the observations made relative to the first information and the argument which underlies it that it should have been laid by the Police spy. Let it, however, be assumed for argument that the Defendants, Mr. Nelson, Mr. Plowden and others, may have been in error in construing these provisions or may not rightly have followed them. That is not material. The question in this case is not whether Mr. Weston or the Police acted in all matters with all wisdom and discretion, or whether they [illegible] rigorously or mistakenly or with legal irregularity. That is not the issue, nor could it be. The question is whether in whatever they may have done they acted in honesty and good faith or fraudulently, and whether the Defendants maliciously as alleged abused the powers with which the law vested them to commit the dishonest and grossly criminal acts with which the Plaintiff and his witnesses have charged them. The issue in short is one of fraud and nothing else. In some matters such as the interpretation of the provisions of the Code relating to the first information the observations made would appear to have no bearing even on the assumption of a case such as Mr. Dutt seeks to make. It is true that before Mr. Justice Fletcher it was charged that the first information which had been drawn up by Messrs. Morshead, Denham, Plowden and several others, including Mr. Withall, the attorney, was, to use learned Counsel's words, "a clumsy forgery;" but in this Court learned Counsel appeared to be rather embarrassed by the absurdity of the suggestion, and whilst Mr. Dutt explained that his words, which on their face covered the whole typed document, were really directed to some obvious additions by pen and ink of some further names by the Maulvi, Mr. Bose, his junior, told us that the suggestion though made in the Original Court (apparently in that light and haphazard way in which the gravest charges have been launched in this case), was afterwards there withdrawn. After this incident we heard nothing further as to a charge which is without a pretence of substance. I wish to add one word to the criticism which the learned Judge has passed on the Police for their not having, for a part of the period, kept case diaries. These no doubt should have been commenced to be kept earlier and before the 3rd August. The circumstances, however, were peculiar. There were a large number of cases which were later apparently amalgamated. Besides the case of the 7th July, No. 3750, there was the case against Surendro Mukerjee, No. 4224 of the 30th July, the Dutt's case, No. 3751 of the same date, and on the 26th August there was case No. 4225 against some other 20 accused. Owing to the complexity of the case and number of charges involved the first information was not filed till September. Mr. Dutt, however, sees in this omission a deliberate attempt to forward the alleged conspiracy. It is difficult to understand how this could be. For if we assume, as we are asked to do, that a false case has been made as to events during the period from the 8th July to the 3rd August, when the diaries were started, are we also to assume that the sense of truth of persons dishonest and fraudulent as the Police Defendants are alleged to be was so great that they would have stated in these diaries such a real statement of fact as would have discovered their alleged fraud. The learned Judge has not found that the omission to keep the case diaries spelt this case of fraud. But there is another and conclusive answer in a circumstance to which the learned Judge omitted to refer; and that is that Mr. Cornish, the Superintendent of Police, takes upon himself all blame in the matter and responsibility for this omission, and Mr. Cornish is one of the extremely few persons amongst the defence witnesses whose desire to tell the truth is not impugned. If, therefore, there were any such fraudulent object as Mr. Dutt alleges, Mr. Cornish must have been in the alleged conspiracy which, however, is a case he does not make.

As regards the provisions of the Jail Code, the learned Judge, notwithstanding that he held that the alleged breach of them was irrelevant, has observed that the treatment of many of the prisoners was not according to its provisions. The matter was of doubtful relevancy or value even as regards the Plaintiff and his son, and we are not concerned in this suit with what may, or may not, have been done as regards third parties. Even as regards the Plaintiff and his son and Surendro Mukerjee it has been found that the evidence does not connect any of the Defendants with such alleged ill-treatment, if it existed, which is denied. It seems to have been erroneously supposed that Mr. Weston was responsible for the jail, and it was found necessary to prove that the Inspector-General of Jails is in control of them. Some of the charges in respect of this matter have been of a trivial character, such as the Plaintiff's alleged difficulty in getting a light for the cigars which the jail supplied him; others are in respect of annoyances commonly suffered in this country such as the presence of ants and mosquitos; others refer to the discomforts incidental to jail life; and there are some which have the appearance of greater substance but which are denied. The complaints, as a reference to the Medini Bandhab newspaper to which Santosh Das contributed his "Prison story" shows, are very indefinite and resolve themselves mainly into a charge that each undertrial was kept in a cell by himself. It is in evidence, however, that the general undertrial ward, where ordinary undertrial prisoners were confined, was extremely overcrowded, the number of undertrials being always 70 and often more, while the capacity of the ward was 35 or 45. It would have been impossible therefore to meet the wishes of the persons accused to be confined in the general ward with the ordinary class of low and common criminals, had such a desire been ever expressed. Mr. Dutt suggests as a grievance that his client was deprived of such criminal company. I have but little doubt myself that had his client instead of being given a separate cell been herded with criminals of a low and common type this in itself would have been made the subject of grievance. No complaints were made at the time either to the Superintendent of the Jail or to the Commissioner, Mr. Maddox, when he visited the jail, and the charges, which in my opinion are unsubstantial, have been introduced to give a colour of hardship and prejudice to the proceedings taken against the Plaintiff. In my opinion the Plaintiff's real hardship, if he had one, was not that he was given a separate cell, but that he was kept in prison at all. Though something may be said from the point of view of the condition of affairs at the time, I think an old man such as he was and a resident of Midnapore, who was not likely to, and could not have, run away, might well have been released on bail. This is not, however, a matter which touches the issue. As regards the actual conduct of the jail by Captain Weinman (whose experience of central jail management began only a week before Santosh's arrest), the opinion of the Inspector-General of Jails, based as it is on years of practical experience and on actual knowledge of what courses were open to the Superintendent as regards the disposal of the prisoners, must necessarily be far more valuable than any which the Court is in a position to frame. And his opinion was a very favourable one as to the manner in which the Superintendent, Captain Weinman, conducted what the Inspector-General considered to be his difficult duty at the time. It was also alleged that Captain Weinman kicked Ashutosh Das when in jail, and evidence was gone into a matter which, as the learned Judge observes, was even, if true, "a long way off from Mr. Weston" as is indeed other evidence in this case. Ashutosh Das is not, as I shall have later to show, a reliable or truthful witness, and Captain Weinman denies this incident, explaining that what he in fact did was to push the witness along when he found him to be apparently deliberately loitering behind the file. With the alleged ill-treatment of the witness Surendro Mukerjee I deal later.

Before passing to the evidence I will deal with the question of the standard of proof required of the Plaintiff in a case such as this to which both the judgment and the argument have referred. The learned Judge has cited in support of his views in this matter a case [In the goods of Gopessur Dutt: Jarat Kumari v. Bissessur (1)] which was heard by the Chief Justice and myself. I wish to point out that the observations to which Mr. Justice Fletcher refers are to be found in the judgment of the Chief Justice, and that the separate judgment which I then delivered contains the grounds on which I disposed of that appeal.

In my opinion there is but one rule of evidence which in India applies to both civil and criminal trials, and that is contained in the definition of the terms "Proved" and "Disproved" in sec. 3 of the Evidence Act. This Act, to use the language of the Chief Justice in the case cited, "in conformity with the general tendency of the day, adopted the requirements of the prudent man as an appropriate concrete standard by which to measure proof." The test in each case is, would a prudent man after considering the matters before it (which vary with each case) deem the fact in issue to be proved or disproved? In a matter of this kind the conscience of the Court can never be bound by any rule, but that which coming from itself dictates a conscientious and prudent exercise of its judgment. And speaking for myself where, whatever be the form of the proceeding, charges of a fraudulent or criminal character are made against a party thereto, it is right to insist that such charges be proved clearly and beyond reasonable doubt though the nature and extent of such proof must necessarily vary according to the circumstances of each case. There is a presumption against crime and misconduct, and the more heinous and improbable a crime is the greater of necessity is the force of the evidence required to overcome such presumption. I cannot myself imagine a Court saying to a party, who as in this case may be a person holding high and responsible position with a previous unblemished record, "It is true that I have reasonable doubts whether you did the grossly criminal acts with which you are charged, but I find that you did so all the same." And this exclusion of reasonable doubt is all that the so-called "criminal proof" requires. What I understand the Chief Justice to have held, and with this part of his judgment I agree, is that the English rule in these matters (whatever it be, for authorities are not at one) does not as such apply to India. He proceeded, however, to say that presumption against misconduct is not (as have also said) without its due weight, though (he adds) the standard of proof to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt required in a criminal case may not be applicable. That is not that it is not applicable, but it possibly may not be. For this two English cases are cited: Apart from the fact that the English authorities are not uniform on the subject, in my opinion the reasons which exclude the application of the English rule (whatever it may be) in this country also exclude as authorities the cases which are said to embody and interpret it. Whatever however be the standard of proof applicable, and assuming it to be as the learned Judge puts it the Plaintiff has in my opinion, for the reasons which I give in my review of the facts to which I now proceed, failed to satisfy it.

I will, in dealing with these facts, first take up the subject of the political condition of Midnapore before, and at the time of, the events the subject of this suit, giving also a short history of those events up to the institution of this suit (pages 72-104). A short account of the Plaintiff's case as to the Defendants' alleged conspiracy follows (pages 105-113). I will then deal with the reports of the informers who were appointed by the authorities in their endeavour to cope with the seditious state of the district at the time. This subject will include the questions whether there were real informers, whether their reports were true or false, or partly both and the question which the learned Judge discusses, namely, whether the Defendants believed in them (pages 114-192). This will bring us to the action as regards the Plaintiff and his son Santosh taken on those reports; the first of such proceedings being the search of the Plaintiff's house on the 8th July when a bomb was admittedly discovered (pages 193-210).

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

Now, as I have said, the Plaintiff alleges that the Defendants conspired to put it there. Before, however, he gets to the proof of that fact he has to deal with another, viz., that his son Santosh confessed that he had put the bomb there himself. If he did so, of course the Defendants did not. I will therefore deal with the question whether Santosh Das' confession was true or not—a very lengthy matter as it embraces all the events which took place between the 8th July, when he was arrested, and the 7th September, when he retracted that confession (pages 211-403). Now if the Plaintiff cannot explain away the fact of this confession, he cannot gain credit for his witness Santosh Das when he says he had nothing to do with the bomb. But assuming for the sake of argument that he does succeed on this issue, he has got to go a step further. For while it is true that if Santosh put the bomb in that house the Police did not, it is obvious that the converse does not follow that if Santosh did not put the bomb in the house the Defendants did. The Plaintiff therefore has to, and does in fact, lead evidence to show that the Defendants conspired to have the bomb placed in the house and did in fact put it there on the 7th July, the day before the search, through the agency of the boy Bonomali. This introduces us to his story and the defence case with reference thereto (pages 404-437). As I have already said, if this issue is not established, as the learned Judge has found it is not, the case on the pleadings ought to end there. But as I have also pointed out the learned Judge has in my opinion allowed the case to go beyond the pleadings, and the Plaintiff on such permission contends that even if he has failed on that issue, he is entitled to show on other grounds than those alleged in the plaint and which I have already mentioned that he was maliciously arrested on the 23rd July. In the order of events, this matter has also been noted under that part of the judgment which deals with the events leading up to the confession; but as it constitutes an issue and one of the most important in the case, it is dealt with after the story of the introduction of the bomb (pages 438-511). It must also logically take that place because we must know before we deal with the question of the alleged illegal arrest whether the Defendants are responsible for the presence of the bomb there. If they were, then there was such an illegal arrest and there is nothing further to be said. If there was not, then though I do not consider that it was open to the Plaintiff to make the alternative case he did, I shall proceed to examine the facts in detail to see whether it is in any event established.

I will then deal with the various miscellaneous charges which have been made against the Defendants, and in particular the allegations against the Police of tutoring of witnesses, subornation of evidence, bribery and so forth (pages 512-570). These are conveniently dealt with separately as they otherwise disturb the orderly statement of the case with which they are but indirectly connected, the story for instance on which so much evidence and argument has been expended as to whether on the 11th August the witness Surendro Mukerjee received a kick or rather three kicks from the Defendant Lal Mohun.

Following this I deal with the question which I have already reserved whether Mr. K. B. Dutt, the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff in this case, should have been called as a witness, whether his position as Counsel prevented him, as the learned Judge has held, from giving evidence, and whether, assuming that to be so, the Defendants are deprived by that circumstance of the comment that Mr. Dutt should not have accepted a retainer but should have been called as a witness, and that the fact that he has not been called raises the usual presumption that his evidence would not have supported the Plaintiff. I have already, in order to explain the views I express throughout the judgment, given my opinion that the Defendants are entitled to make such adverse comment, and in this portion of my judgment I will give my reasons (pages 571-590). I will then sum up the case on the facts and give my decision on the issues of fact (pages 591-617), and finally proceed to discuss the questions of law raised, the most important of which is whether this suit is not barred by limitation, and should, on the cause of action on which it has been decreed, have been dismissed (pages 618-623).

There is no doubt, and it has been so found by the learned Judge that in and prior to 1908 Midnapore was in a very seditious state. There was also, as he finds, a conspiracy in which I think Satyendro, Hemchandra, Khudiram, Jogjiban and others, chiefly younger men of the Extremist party, were engaged. Rahman's reports and deposition and other evidence in the case establish this. The conspiracy was fomented by older heads whose writings and outside support induced and upheld it. Amongst many of the educated and wealthier class there was a sympathy with extreme doctrine, and possibly in some cases an outside and covert encouragement by support of those who were prepared to carry it into action. The latter were chiefly younger or irresponsible men of the type of Satyendro, who is alleged to have been for some time the Secretary of the Zamindars' Samiti, of which the Raja of Narajole, Jamini Mullick, Abinash Mitter, Upendra Maity and others were members. With Satyendro and Khudiram, Nirmal, Sarat and other younger men, the Plaintiff's sons, Santosh and Ashutosh associated. There can be no question that, whatever the two latter actually did, their sympathies were with the extreme party. Their father had in fact to warn them in this matter as he thought that by such association their own future was imperilled. Rahman's reports largely dealt with men of this class. Then Laha became the informer. Socially and intellectually he appears to have been the superior of Rahman and to have mixed in a society which the latter, who was merely an instructor of lathi and sword-play, could not. What Rahman chiefly learnt was from his pupils. Laha had access to the older and more influential men with some of whom apparently he used to drink. Laha is alleged to have been in straitened circumstances, a ne'er do-weel and drunkard, and the events which attended his resiling from the information which he had previously given show that he was a worthless character. There is no doubt whatever that some of these persons of whom his reports speak, such as Deb Das Karan and Jamini Mullick, the Raja of Narajole and others, were not loyal or law-abiding. There were also some who may not have gone as far as they did or even disagreed with their views, but who yet associated with them. Laha reported the doings of the younger men Santosh, Ashutosh, Jogjiban, Surendro, Satyendro and others who were carrying on, and possibly sometimes playing with, the same sedition which Rahman had noted against them. But in addition to this he brought into his reports persons from three other classes, namely,—men who, like the Raja of Narajole, Jamini Mullick and Deb Das Karan, were without a doubt fomenters of the agitation which produced the overt sedition; and others like Peary Lal Ghose, a relative of Satyendro who was (as amongst other things his letter to the Medini Bandhab shows and as the learned Judge holds) deeply implicated in the swadeshi boycott and kindred movements; an implication which in his case I have no doubt was coloured by the disloyal views he held, even though he may not perhaps openly have gone the same length that the others I have mentioned did, and, lastly, there were others like Mr. Dutt and Upendra Maity who, though belonging to the Moderate party, possibly associated with some at least of the men who were its opponents. Laha, from the doings of the younger men, the conversations he had with the older men of the first class and bazar gossip, his own inventions possibly due to drink, malice or the simple desire to earn informer's pay, made up a series of reports which, I think, probably contain false matter, but which were not on the evidence wholly false. On the evidence I hold that whilst the Plaintiff has not established that the reports are wholly false and the Defendants have not shown as against any other than Santosh, Baroda Dutt and Surendro Mukerji that they are, or are likely to be true, the Defendants have shown that they were true or that, in any case, there is ground for supposing that they were not (?) true as regards both (?) Santosh Dass, Surendro Mukerji and Baroda Dutt and his family by reason (1) firstly, of the evidence which shows that Santosh was in association with persons who were undoubtedly seditious and members of a conspiracy found by the learned Judge to exist, (2) his confession which the Plaintiff has failed to show was false, and (3) of the evidence, which the Plaintiff has not displaced, that a bomb spoken of in Rakhal's reports as having been taken by Santosh to the Plaintiff's house was actually found there; the evidence that another bomb was found in the house of Baroda Dutt's and his family; and Surendro's confession which his unreliable evidence does not displace.

On these reports which were not incredible and which, whether true or not, the Defendants believed, a search of the Plaintiff's house took place, of which Mr. Weston was not aware until after it had been made. A bomb was found. The Plaintiff's attempt to explain its presence by the allegation that the Defendants put it there as part of the alleged conspiracy has been found to be false. The bomb having been discovered in the Plaintiff's house, the Defendants were, on the reports that they received of Santosh's implication in the matter, entitled to search his father's house and arrest him as they did. Though they did not then arrest the Plaintiff as the owner of the house, they were, as Mr. Weston pointed out when the search was reported to him, entitled to do so and might have properly done so. As, however, the Police had not at first arrested the Plaintiff, Mr. Weston determined to wait before taking further steps until a chemical examination had shown whether the bomb, which was a country-made one, was of a dangerous character. After Santosh's arrest the Police doubtless put before him the information they had, questioned him and probably pressed him to make a disclosure. That in so doing they made use of the Plaintiff and his family as alleged and resorted to the various tricks, devices, persuasions and threats alleged, I am unable to hold. For the evidence by which this is sought to be established is (for the reasons I have fully given) itself of a most unreliable character. Santosh refused, however, to confess up to the date of his father's arrest. The latter was arrested on the 23rd July after and in consequence of the Chemical Examiner's report which revealed the dangerous character of the bomb, for the ascertainment of which the arrest of the Plaintiff had been deferred. It is not in my opinion true that he was then arrested either to extort a false or to obtain a true confession from his son. The arrest of the Plaintiff was the sole act of Mr. Weston in which the Police, except as subordinates carrying out his orders, were not concerned. It was in my opinion ordered by Mr. Weston in the honest belief that he was entitled in law and fact to do so (as in my opinion he was), and not for the indirect motive alleged. The arrest, however, of his father probably did influence Santosh to confess and possibly with a view to exculpate his father and obtain the latter's release he confessed his own guilt a week or so later. That his confession was false and induced by promises or tutored has not been proved, for, as I have said, I cannot accept Santosh's evidence or that brought to corroborate it. On the contrary the story told by Santosh of the manner in which his confession was recorded by Mr. Nelson and the charges which he makes against the latter and Mr. Weston are manifestly and on their face so mendacious, that Counsel for the Plaintiff has not been able to ask us to accept them. This confession of Santosh implicated not only himself but a large number of others including wealthy and influential persons, such as the Raja of Narajole and Jamini Mullick. Maity was also mentioned in connection with swadeshi. Surendro Nath Mukerjee, the companion of Santosh, was also implicated. After this confession and until the 15th August Santosh made no sign that he wished to retract, notwithstanding that according to his allegations the confession was made on a promise that his father should be released and the alleged promise was not kept. If there is a case in which retraction might be expected, it would be in such an one as this where the confessing party alleges that he had been trapped by false promises into confessing that which was not true. Meanwhile other events had been taking place. On the 31st July a bomb had been discovered in the house of the Dutt's, and several persons were arrested. Surendro Mukerjee who had been arrested also confessed on the 15th August. He also makes charges against the Deputy Magistrate, Babu S. N. Chakravarti, which are so false that they have not been attempted to be supported before us here. His story as to Police tutoring, threats, kicks and so forth I have held, for the reasons given, to be not proved. The man who makes these charges has himself admittedly given false evidence. Surendro's confession also implicated a large number of people at Midnapore, including the persons I have named, Saroda and Baroda Dutt, Deb Das Karan and others. He also implicated Santosh, but says it was himself who actually carried the bomb to the latter's house. As I have said up to the 15th August, Santosh had made no sign that he wished to retract. His confessions had not been publicly known. It had not been put on the record. On the 15th August an application being made for bail on behalf of the persons arrested, both Santosh's confession and that of Surendro became for the first time publicly known. The matter then created a great stir. Up to this time Ashutosh Das, the other son of the Plaintiff, and who was probably as much, if not more, implicated than his brother had, he says, been working with the Police under the Maulvi whom he regarded, he says, as his patron. On the 15th August, however, his help was secured by the pleader applying for bail through Nilkanto Bose, Ashutosh's brother-in-law. The latter took him off to the Midnapore Library, at which time he says "the spell of the Police was broken." He told the pleaders there assembled what he professed to know and, according to the evidence for the Plaintiff, made allegations of misconduct against the Police. These revelations would necessarily perturb three classes of persons, viz., those who may be falsely implicated by the reports and the confessions which corroborated them; those who may not have said and done that which the informer's reports represent them as saying and doing, but who holding in fact seditious views, or having given effect to them, feared a disclosure of what they had said or done; and, lastly, those who may have been rightly implicated. It is not improbable that Jamini Mullick and others with whom Laha associated may have said and done things which they desired should not be known. All these persons would, however, be at one in the determination to take steps against a proceeding which threatened them with a common, if in some cases undeserved, ruin. Accordingly Mr. Bradley-Birt was immediately approached, and then on a requisition which included the names of several persons implicated, a telegram was on the 16th August despatched to Government complaining of the action of the Police. Instead of sending details at once as the Government requested, time was taken up to the 27th August in preparing some statements by Ashutosh Das, his nephew Jotindra and the brother of Surendro Mukerjee who had confessed. The complete spontaneity of these statements is doubtful. Note-books were also started at the instance of Mr. Dutt for the making of memoranda of complaints against the Police. The next step was to see whether Santosh and Surendro would adhere to their confessions. We find then that Santosh who, until his confession with its implication of others had become known, had not retracted, did so after that event. The circumstances attending such retractation are suspicious. A petition was prepared for Santosh and Surendro Mukerjee. They were produced in Court on the 31st August. Though the petition is by a man who is represented as craving for the opportunity to retract, though it asks for such an opportunity, and though such opportunity in fact then presented itself, it was not availed of. It is obvious that it must have been a matter of indifference to Santosh himself when or where he made his retractation. If his confession were untrue and he wished to withdraw it, he might do so at any moment without preparation by telling the simple truth. The telling of such truth does not require legal manœuvres or aid. The matter would not, however, present itself in the same way to those others who were interested on their own behalf in obtaining such retractation. It was never intended by them that this opportunity should be availed of. But why not, unless it be that it was contrived that the retrac-tation when made should be suitable and effective for the purposes desired and not in conflict with the case already made in the documents previously sent to Government. Accordingly the retractation was delayed. I have no doubt that the persuasion of these others was an inducing cause of the retractation of the confessions of both Santosh Dass and Surendro Mukerjee subsequently made on the 7th September. The next step was to make the informer innocuous and the circumstances indicate to me beyond all doubt that this was achieved by getting him to have written and subsequently to produce for the defence Ex. G as the record of the information he had given to the Police. We know from the evidence that an attempt was also made to dissuade the other informer Rahman from giving his testimony. The evidence also fully establishes that persuasion, threat and boycott were employed to dissuade or punish any person who might or did give evidence for the Crown. If it be the fact as it possibly is that the prosecution might in any case have failed against some by reason of the falsity of the accusations against them, it is also none the less the case that if there were others who were truly implicated, the manœuvres employed to prevent the production of evidence raise an inference which both supports the truth of such implication and that such means contributed to the failure to establish it against them. In the end proceedings had to be abandoned against all the accused except three; the two who had confessed, Santosh and Surendro and Jogjibon, against whom there was the evidence also of Abdur Rahman, the other informer who did not fail the prosecution. Then shortly before these proceedings the boy Bonomali was set up to tell a false story against the Maulvi about the introduction of the bomb. An attempt is made to persuade the constable Kartic who is supposed to have taken the boy to the Maulvi to tell such story for the benefit of 'the country' by the pleader Kishoripati Roy who has not been put into the box to deny this charge. Santosh probably dissatisfied with the result of a retractation which had then not personally benefited him, for the proceedings continued, asked Mr. Brett whether he would better himself if he went back on it. This is proved of a man who is alleged to have been entirely innocent and to have been all along desirous to declare it. The three accused were at first convicted and then acquitted by this Court. The notoriety of a departmental enquiry and a press campaign preceded the institution of this suit with its serious initial charges which have been added to and shifted throughout the hearing.

It is of course natural to assume that there must be some basis for an action in which, as appears from the record, so much feeling has been displayed. It is well at the same time to remember that everywhere in all countries, but particularly in this, the smoke is always disproportionate to the fire. On this matter we can only look to the record. It may be, though I do not desire to express a positive opinion on the point, that Mr. Weston, as an executive officer perhaps, possessed in excess the qualities which are supposed to be requisite for such a service. He acted conscientiously, with great vigour and perhaps rigour in his general dealings with the disaffection in his district. These remarks are not made as a criticism, for it must be remembered that as the learned Judge points out, Mr. Weston's position was a peculiarly difficult one. As a result, however, of his uncompromising attitude Mr. Weston got himself very much disliked by those whose views and actions he opposed; and that, as also the disaffected state of many minds, produced many a threat against his life which, I believe, not to have been idle but prevented from execution by the measures for his safety which Mr. Weston rightly took. In the matter also of the particular conspiracy dealt with in these proceedings there has been in one case excessive rigour and in some others irregularity; I think in particular that the Plaintiff, an old man of about 70, was treated with unnecessary harshness in being kept in jail pending the investigation of the charge against him. He might, and I think should, have been let out on bail and thereby much ill-feeling spared. I think also that Mr. Weston acted with indiscretion in seeing or communicating with the Plaintiff at all during the pendency of the proceedings against the latter's son, even though, as I find, such interviews were brought about at the instance of the Plaintiff and not of himself. The circumstance was one likely to afford a handle to the charge actually made and may have in others' minds given rise to suspicion. Though I am fully satisfied with the explanation he has given, his action in arresting the Plaintiff when he did was also open to misconstruction. I refer to the Plaintiff's exemption from arrest when the bomb was found and his subsequent arrest about a fortnight later. It cannot necessarily be imputed to the Plaintiff that he knew what was the cause of this. Probably he did not, seeing that he doubtless believed himself innocent of the offence and was subsequently discharged in respect of it. He and others may have connected the arrest with an intention to secure that confession from his son which in fact followed his arrest and was, I think, probably induced by it. This is indeed the only matter against Mr. Weston which has, primâ facie and in the absence of explanation, a show of substance. I refer to the matter, the subject of Mr. Justice Fletcher's finding and not that the subject of the plaint. To it have been added in the interest, I believe, of others than the Plaintiff a number of wholly unfounded and false charges.

As regards the Police (I am now speaking generally and not of the Defendants) one must always admit and consider the possibility of misconduct, for experience unfortunately demands this; and looking at the case from the point of view of such mere possibility and independent of the evidence, it may be that the Police Defendants did more than they admit to procure the confession and acted otherwise irregularly or wrongly. At the same time the matter is one of proof. As I point out later there are certain acts which I hold that they did not do, and there are other acts which I hold that it has not been proven that they did do. The evidence satisfies me of the necessity of peculiar caution in this case in seeing that the charges are made out. This is not the common case of an individual alleged to be oppressed by the Police. It is one in which there is an organised and powerful combination against these two Defendants. Whilst it is possible that such combination was brought about by what they did, it is also possible that it was in the nature of a reprisal against them for having made and failed to prove charges which under more favourable circumstances they might have established; for I am fully satisfied that this combination has been itself doing some of the things it charges against the Police; getting at their informer and witnesses or attempting to do so in the case of the latter and putting up false charges such as that of Bonomali against the Maulvi, Mohesh Rout against Inspector. Kedareswar, and other cases. It appears further that the charges against the Defendants were again most mendacioulу exaggerated in the 'Prison story' of the Plaintiff's son in Deb Das Karan's paper, the Medini Bandhab. This, I believe, was done to prejudice the Defendants' case before it was tried and indicates how readily admittedly false charges were preferred against the Police. The exaggeration which there describes the Police as fiends (rakshasas) showing their 'fierce rows of teeth,' lords of ghosts (bhuta) and so forth affects every incident with which they are there charged and others which, if Santosh is to be believed, are the pure invention of the Editor. But these very falsities, if they are proved embarrassing by their absurdity to the Plaintiff and his family in giving their evidence in this case, were probably on account of this very exaggeration and appeal to prejudice, the more suitable for the purpose for which they were put forth.

It was under such circumstances that this suit with its many charges was filed, and we have next so see what has become of them on Mr. Justice Fletcher's judgment.

I take first the case against Mr. Weston. The following are Mr. Justice Fletcher's conclusions, either directly expressed or to be implied, from his judgment. He has found that the story of the primary conspiracy to falsely implicate the people of Midnapore and other parts of India s untrue, as also is the alleged secondary conspiracy for the same purpose. He has said that he disbelieves altogether the suggestions of a corrupt motive which he finds were made against Mr. Weston. He holds on the contrary that his district was in a very seditious state and that there was in fact a conspiracy in it. He finds that on the information then in his possession he was bound to be very watchful over the district of which he had had charge. He holds that he did not concoct or have any hand in the concoction of false reports nor in the passing of reports known to be false. On the contrary he is of opinion that Mr. Weston honestly believed in the truth of the reports and that if he had not he would not have acted on them. He finds that he took steps to test the truth of the reports, and that if such testing was, as the learned Judge thinks, insufficient, it was due to no dishonesty on his part, as the Plaintiff alleges, but to the want of opportunity of which the administration of an excessively heavy district deprived him, and to his inexperience. Whilst the learned Judge is of opinion that the alleged introduction of the bomb in the Plaintiff's house and in the house of the Dutt's is not proved, he also finds that Mr. Weston who believed the truth of the reports in no case had any hand or part in such alleged crime.' He finds that there was no such malicious search or trespass as is alleged. He is of opinion that Mr. Weston believed that Santosh Dass was guilty and that he was entitled to arrest him as he did. As regards the proceedings which followed Santosh's arrest the learned Judge, touching Santosh's confession, says that he altogether disbelieves the suggestion that Mr. Weston and Mr. Nelson or either of of them put to Santosh questions which they knew to be untrue, and he does not find, and therefore pronounces against the other allegations of misconduct which Santosh Dass makes against these two officers. He holds also that the allegation that Mr. Nelson and Mr. Weston attempted to suppress the petitions of retractation of the 31st August is not true and that the incident arose out of a misunderstanding. Lastly he finds that Mr. Weston did not, as alleged, arrest the Plaintiff with the knowledge (as alleged in the plaint) that he was innocent or because he had conspired to put the bomb in his house and that his motive in arresting the Plaintiff was not (as also alleged in the plaint) to extort a false confession from his son. Every one of these charges goes by the board on Mr. Justice Fletcher's judgment. All of them are not only in my opinion false, but very malicious and wicked charges for which there is no foundation, of which fact the Plaintiff or others who are responsible for them must have been well aware. The motive for such charges is obvious. There was, as I have pointed out, an ill-feeling against Mr. Weston which matured into actual threats against his life. The reasons for this I have given. But it is not only by such acts of violence that injury either to an individual or a class may be done. Not the least dangerous or malicious to either is that which clothes itself in the legal form of a false accusation. The suit on these findings should have been dismissed outright. What, however, the learned Judge has done is this :—He has, as I have pointed out, put aside as false the charges on which the suit is based and pronounced against Mr. Weston on another and different charge, viz., an illegal arrest of the Plaintiff without authority in fact or belief in his right to do so, and as a means of obtaining a true disclosure from his son Santosh of a conspiracy which, he, Mr. Weston, honestly believed to exist. As incidental to this finding his view must necessarily be that Mr. Weston has perjured himself. Had the plaint been framed on these grounds it might have, as already pointed out, been instituted without such malice as I find in the case of the other charges, though such a suit would, for the reasons I have given, have equally failed. I have found, however, that an explanation on this matter has been given which entirely satisfies me as to Mr. Weston's bonâ fides. Apart from the fact of the conflict of testimony not a single instance has been proved which convicts this Defendant of an untruth. Indeed had one single instance of deliberate untruth been established against him (his position being what it is) I should not have accepted any portion of his testimony without good and reliable corroboration. On the other hand the Plaintiff has put forward numerous charges against Mr. Weston, all of which have been found both by the learned Judge and myself to be untrue. It has been to me a matter of surprise that the learned Judge has not, either in the case of Mr. Weston or the Police, considered this circumstance in judging of the relative value of their testimony and that put forward on behalf of the Plaintiff. It is in my opinion impossible to hold that a man who has himself and through the witnesses he has put forward made so many clearly false and malicious charges is entitled to the same credit as if he had never made them. On the contrary they discredit his case. In my opinion further the evidence of the Plaintiff himself with its prevarications and untruths cannot be accepted. In particular his account of the alleged conversations which he had with Mr. Weston, when the latter is charged with persuading and threatening him and then owning to his (Mr. Weston's) alleged guilty intentions towards him, is, for the reasons I have given, been conclusively proved to be untrue. Though therefore the charge on which Mr. Weston has been convicted ought not in my opinion to have been tried in this suit, it has also in my opinion been shown to be, as the others against this Defendant have been found by Mr. Justice Fletcher and myself to be, untrue.

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

I pass now to the case against the Police. The learned Judge has not found against them either the alleged primary or secondary conspiracy or that they concocted their reports or that they put bombs in the house of the Plaintiff or of the Dutts. In my opinion all these charges have been shown to be untrue. He has found that they conspired with Mr. Weston to effect the illegal arrest above stated. In my opinion, Mr. Weston was alone responsible for that arrest and the Police Defendants acted only as his subordinates. Mr. Weston is not liable, nor are they. I further find that the unrebutted evidence supported by that of Mr. Cornish establishes that the third Defendant, Lal Mohun, acted merely as the subordinate of the Maulvi, who did not take him as such subordinate into his full confidence. It is not now alleged that Lal Mohun had directly anything to do with the alleged introduction of the bomb into the Plaintiff's house, and the evidence establishes that he did not at the time know who the informer actually was or what was the information on which the search was made. This disposes of the charges dealing with the main issues in the suit.

The learned Judge's other conclusions against these Defendants are upon a matter which only indirectly and sometimes remotely, if at all, affects the main issues which have been tried. He has found that the Police Defendants did not believe the reports of the informer; that is, they did not believe that there was a conspiracy as there alleged, and therefore did not believe in the guilt of Santosh or his father and misconducted themselves in a pretended investigation of a false case by procuring and attempting to procure false evidence, by tutoring confessing prisoners and witnesses and so forth. In short, it is charged that not believing in the truth of the case they were investigating but on the contrary knowing the charge to be false, they attempted to get false evidence to support it. I need not here again point out how the learned Judge's finding that they knew the case to be false is inconsistent with his other findings that they did not put the bomb in the houses of the Plaintiff and the Dutts as alleged. There are, however, further reasons why I cannot agree with the learned Judge's conclusions against these Defendants.

Whilst we must consider the possibility of misconduct to which I have referred, we must also be satisfied that such possibility is proved to be a fact by relevant and credible evidence. The law does not presume against a policeman as such, but deals with him as it would with any other against whom charges of fraud and crime are made. He is entitled to the benefit of the same procedure and to have his conduct judged by the same tests and in the same manner and free from considerations which proceed from other than relevant evidence in the suit as are others. If the considerations of the possibility to which I have referred be productive of suspicion this must yield in the face of the repeatedly unproven charges supported by false evidence, and the proven facts. Some of the learned Judge's suspicions have been removed during the conduct of the appeal. Thus, Laha's account of the alleged concoction of the reports by the Police, given as his excuse for resiling therefrom, is so false that learned Counsel for the Plaintiff will not adopt it. There is no evidence that the Police did concoct the reports, and the learned Judge finds that there is no such evidence. His judgment nevertheless expresses a suspicion. Before us, however, that suspicion has been removed by the practical withdrawal by learned Counsel of that charge for which in my opinion no grounds whatever exist. The learned Judge expresses his doubt whether the document produced as a copy of a statement which Ashutosh Dass made to the Police is in fact a genuine copy, and comments in this connection on the facts that other original documents are missing. Before us Mr. Dutt has admitted that the document is in fact a genuine copy; and not a single argument has been addressed to us to show that any document which is said to be missing was not in fact so but withheld. The learned Judge finds that Ex. 57 is a forgery, though as I have said, the brother-in law of the man who wrote it is called for the Plaintiff and does not deny the writing. Mr. Bose has expressed his willingness to argue that it is a genuine document but given for a purpose other than that which the witness Rahman alleges. In other cases the learned Judge's general suspicions of the Police testimony have outweighed the evidence Thus the learned Judge comes to the conclusion that the alleged bribery of the Police by the Raja of Narajole is not proved, and that there are grounds (and indeed as I have shown strong grounds) for supposing that the money was extorted by a trick of the Raja's own uncle. He is however not prepared to say that the story of the Raja that the Police asked for the money is not true. The evidence similarly offered to prove the alleged attempted extortion of a bribe from Jamini Mullick is such that the charge cannot be said to be at all made out. In my opinion the evidence does not sup port the learned Judge's inclination to think that it may be true. Though there is nothing which in my opinion warrants the suggestion that the Police put the bomb in the Dutt's house, all the evidence being one way and available rebutting evidence not being produced, the learned Judge has, whilst finding the charge not proved, held the circumstances attending the search to be suspicious. Similarly, though the story of Bonomali is shown to be false, the learned Judge holds that there are matters of suspicion on the evidence The Police Defendants have thus in the opinion of the learned Judge been unsuccessful in meeting the charges made against them

In my opinion, however, in determining whether these charges are true or not we must first eliminate all considerations derived from extraneous sources, the Narainghur, Alipore and Midnapore criminal cases, the statements alleged but denied of Counsel in other cases, even though, as the learned Judge in one instance says, such statements may have been made in the presence of the Maulvi. We must then correct the misapprehensions and errors, unfortunate for these Defendants, into which the learned Judge has fallen, and which in part doubtless account for the suspicions he has expressed. I refer, in connection with the charge relative to the introduction of the bomb in the Plaintiff's house, to the learned Judge's comments as regards Asadullah and Mr. Nelson and Kishoripati Roy; and, in connection with the charge that the Police put the bomb in the Dutt's house, the reference to Mr. Gregory's alleged but not admitted statements in the criminal appeal and the erroneous supposition of the learned Judge that he had the support of Mr. Cornish's evidence for his suspicions when he had not. The evidence of the Police Defendants has also in my opinion in several instances been wrongly construed to their discredit. Inferences have also been erroneously drawn against these Defendants in respect of matters which are the subject of privilege. We must also (I refer to ourselves) put aside the mass of rumour and hearsay which the depositions contain. Nor must our minds be affected by the fact that the charges are numerous unless they have been also proved. As the burden of proof rests on the Plaintiff, we must then see whether the witnesses by whom he seeks to prove these charges are credible or not. As regards one set of charges they depend on the Plaintiff and members of his family. In my opinion none of this evidence is reliable, and some of it, as that of others, is as mendacious as any in my experience. Then as regards the evidence of third parties that the Police attempted to suborn them or take bribes from them, I have on an examination of the evidence come to the conclusion, for the reasons I have fully given, that there is no one of these serious charges upon which one can lay one's finger and say that it is proved.

In conclusion I may say that if there be any truth in these numerous charges which have been preferred against the Police they have not been made out by credible evidence in this case.

I decide accordingly the first and second issues of fact in the negative The sixth issue of fact as to damages is dealt with later in the judgment upon the issues of law (Nos. 3, 4 and 5), to the consideration of which I next pass.

* * * * * * * *

[On the questions of law raised in the issues his Lordship's judgment was as follows :—]

It is not necessary to discuss the third issue as it is not contended that the Defendants were entitled to notice under sec. 80. It is therefore also unnecessary to say anything about the fourth issue. The fifth issue, however, raises the question of limitation. The Advocate-General contended, and in my opinion rightly, so far as regards the causes of action for malicious arrest and prosecution, that the suit was barred. Upon these causes of action the suit should have been dismissed in limine. The learned Judge, however, stated that he would subsequently hear the argument about limitation and would meanwhile hear the evidence. The plaint is not, as the learned Judge has stated, a "mofussil pleading," concerning which according to Privy Council rulings of about the middle of last century and later (when such pleadings were often very imperfect) should not be read too strictly. It was no doubt filed in a Mofussil Court, but is in the English form of pleading and I should say had been settled by Counsel as one would also naturally expect in a case of this importance. Now the suit is described in the plaint as "valued at Rs. 10,000 on account of damages for wrongful confinement and malicious prosecution." Though the plaint also alleges trespass, it seems that the suit was really based on the two other torts, as it is in respect of these that damage is alleged to be suffered and the cause of action is said to have arisen on the 31st August 1908 when the Plaintiff was set at liberty,

I will, however, assume that with malicious arrest and prosecution was included trespass. All these acts are well known torts, and the only peculiarity about the suit is that the Plaintiff alleges that these torts were committed by three men acting in conspiracy instead of by one. In one sense this allegation of conspiracy is immaterial to the action, for the acts alleged are such that if proved against any one Defendant, he is entitled as against that Defendant to a decree. The reason, however, why conspiracy is alleged is obvious. According to the Plaintiff it was the Maulvi who was directly responsible for the bomb; so in order to implicate Mr. Weston and the other Defendants in the charge it had to be alleged that there was a conspiracy between him and them to do this act. Similarly, it was Mr. Weston who ordered the arrest which is alleged to be done in conspiracy with the other Defendants to bring them into the charge. But the suit remains what it is—a suit against joint tortfeasors. If it was a suit against one person, it would be admittedly barred as regards the arrest and prosecution. I may leave out of account the alleged trespass if that was part of the cause of action, as the result of Mr. Justice Fletcher's judgment is that there was no trespass in fact and that also is what I have held. If the suit is barred as against one person, the period of limitation is not extended because it happens to be against three. This is admitted. But then it is said, and Mr. Justice Fletcher has held, that there is another cause of action which the Plaintiff has himself nowhere stated. It is said that besides the cause of action on the torts there is a cause of action to recover special damage by reason of a conspiracy to cause damage. The learned Judge accordingly framed an issue which does not arise on the pleadings alleging a general conspiracy to cause damage of which the trespass, arrest and malicious prosecution were merely the overt acts. I have asked learned Counsel to produce to the Court authority for the proposition on which the learned Judge has proceeded, viz., that the same set of facts may constitute two causes of action, viz., for a tort and for a conspiracy to cause damage. And none has been produced. The reason of this is that the two exclude one another. If a joint tort is committed there is no necessity to have recourse to any law of conspiracy. And on an action to recover damage resulting from a conspiracy as distinct from an action on a joint tort, the conspiracy is one to do an act which, if done by an individual, would not constitute a tort, but is actionable by reason of special damage having been caused thereby. The two in fact are mutually exclusive. There is a conspiracy to commit a crime; a conspiracy to commit a tort; and a conspiracy for an unlawful purpose in respect of an act which if done by an individual would neither be a crime nor a tort. All these may be the subject of criminal prosecution. In respect of the civil remedy where there is a joint tort the action is on the tort against the joint tortfeasors. In any other case where in carrying into effect the conspiracy the conspirators inflict damage on an individual he may sue for the particular damage he has thus separately suffered. In the former case the cause of action is on the tort, and in the latter on the special damage. There is a further difference in that in actions on tort general damage is, except in special cases, sufficient, whereas in such a conspiracy there must be special damage. The class of cases to which the learned Judge refers establishes that there are instances in which two or more persons can render themselves liable to civil proceedings by combining to injure the Plaintiff, although if one of them did the same act by himself and without any pre-concert with others he would escape liability both civil and criminal. I agree with the learned Judge in thinking that an action on such a conspiracy would lie in this country, but the point here is different, viz, what is the Plaintiff's cause of action, and what is the limitation applicable. It appears to me to be quite clear that the suit is on joint torts, and that the arrest, imprisonment and prosecution are governed by the one-year rule under Arts. 19 and 23 of the Limitation Act. Mr. Justice Fletcher is of opinion that though the suit is described as a suit for malicious prosecution, it is in fact not one. Whilst the learned Judge assigns no grounds for this view, it also appears to be inconsistent with a previous statement made by him that the Plaintiff had two causes of action—one for damage and one for malicious prosecution. As the learned Judge's finding as regards trespass and search was a dismissal on the facts, it is not necessary to enquire whether Art. 36 or 39 or both would apply so far as the suit alleges wrongful search and trespass. In my opinion, the suit is barred on the other causes of action, and should not have been entertained on that cause of action on which it has been decreed. On the sixth and last issue I am of opinion that if it was necessary, as according to the learned Judge's view of the case it was, to prove special damage, such damage has not been proved. Portion (but what is not stated) of the Rs. 1,000 which the learned Judge has given the Plaintiff was, it appears, spent to obtain the release of his son, which is not damage to the Plaintiff in this suit, and no evidence strictly so-called has been called to prove the expenditure of the residue. These findings dispose of all the issues, both of fact and law, before us.

I would accordingly decree this Appeal and dismiss the suit, the Plaintiff-Respondent paying all including reserved costs in both Courts.

[In the course of his judgment, when dealing with the issues of fact, his Lordship discussed several points of law and practice. Portions of the judgment bearing on these points are set out below :]

"I pause here to consider a matter which should have been excluded in the determination of this case At page 2345 of the paper-book it is noted that Mr. Norton tendered the judgments of the Sessions Court and of this Court in the criminal case to show that the present case had been modified to meet the points raised in the Appeal Court judgment. These judgments have been cited by the learned Judge in support of his conclusion. Now respect must be and is had for any other judgment which is passed by this Court, and for this reason amongst others I have not entered into a discussion of the Naraingarh criminal judgment. Nor have I dealt with the observations said to have been made in the Alipore Conspiracy Trial. The judgment rendered by this Court in the criminal case must be taken to be correct and conclusive, but it is so only for the limited purpose for which it was rendered. It decided that the accused had not been proved to be guilty by the Crown of the offences with which they have been charged and nothing more. Not only are such opinions and conclusions not binding on us, but they are, according to a well known rule, not admissible in evidence at all in this case, and the reason is that neither the parties, the issues, the burden of proof or the evidence are the same. In particular, as regards the evidence, the Court did not and could not, it being a criminal trial, have before it the evidence of the accused. It is still one of the advantages which doubtfully innocent persons possess in this country that they are not called upon and indeed are not permitted to give evidence; and whatever may be the truth which might be elicited by a procedure in which the party most concerned and most instructed in the true facts is called upon or permitted to give his explanation on oath and cross-examination, if the Crown on whom the onus lies fails to establish such facts beyond (as appearing to the Judges constituting the Court) reasonable doubt, the charge must be dismissed. Here the case is entirely different. It is for the Plaintiff, who puts forward criminal charges against the Defendants, to prove them. And it is he and not the defence who has to satisfy the Court before he can get the relief he claims that the confession which his son made (and the other confession of Surendro Mukerjee if also it stands in his way) was false. He undertakes to do this by evidence, the principal portion of which is the deposition of his son. And we have therefore ourselves to see independently of and uninfluenced by the opinions of any other Court and the alleged statements of Counsel to that other Court (on which the learned Judge has also relied) whether the Plaintiff's case, including the incidental issue to which I have referred, is proved."

* * * * *

"After the decision of this Court in the criminal appeal the Government deputed the Commissioner of Burdwan, Mr. D. J. Macpherson, to inquire and report into the charges made against the Police in respect of the alleged conspiracy. This was done on the 10th June 1909 and following days. Mr. Macpherson, who has been called in this case, took the evidence of witnesses in the presence of Mr. K. B. Dutt, who was implicated by the informer's reports and who is said to have been the chief complainant and spokesman for the others. Some of the statements of the witnesses in that enquiry have been put in and used, and the witnesses for the Plaintiff have been considerably cross-examined as to important discrepancies between these two statements then and now made. Learned Counsel for the Respondent has rightly objected to the admission of any statement which is not relevant to evidence actually given at the trial. The depositions at the enquiry are only admissible either to corroborate or contradict evidence given here. Mr. Macpherson then made a report, and a question arose about its production. I cannot see myself how a finding on a departmental inquiry or Mr. Macpherson's opinion in the matter could under any circumstances be evidence before us. But in any case the Government claim, as it was entitled to do, privilege. We have been told that in the House of Commons the Secretary of State declared that it was not advisable that the report should be published during the pendency of these proceedings. A similar privilege was claimed for a confidential diary of the Maulvi. Mr. Justice Fletcher allowed both claims of privilege. A suggestion was, however, made in cross-examination on behalf of the Plaintiff that the Government claimed this privilege because it knew that the documents would, if produced, falsify the defence and that it did not, to use Counsel's word, "dare" therefore to produce them. The question in which this unfounded suggestion that Government was assisting a case known by it to be false was made was a scandalous one and was very rightly disallowed by Mr. Justice Fletcher. The supposition is not to be tolerated that the Government of this country, one of whose functions is to administer justice through the very Court in which this accusation was made, was itself party to a conspiracy to defeat the just claims of the Plaintiff by wrongfully withholding that which, if produced, would establish the falsity of a defence of its officers which they had further aided by public money. The suggestion serves, however, as a leading sample of the reckless and unfounded charges which have been made throughout this case.

"On this point of privilege another matter must be noted; when a document is in fact privileged no adverse inference can be drawn from its non-production, for to allow this would be in fact to destroy the privilege. This rule applies as regards the party claiming privilege. A fortiori, where, as here, privilege is claimed by a third person no adverse inference can be drawn against any party to the suit in consequence of such claim and allowance of privilege. The learned Judge, however, when dealing with the evidence, notes that the confidential diary was not produced with the apparent object of drawing an adverse inference therefrom. If further the suggestion was that the confidential diary had been kept back the Appellants have rightly contended that such an inference was prejudicial to them. The Defendants do not represent the Government, though being its officers the costs of their defence are, I understand, borne by it. They are sued personally, for their own alleged personal wrongs. Had they been the parties claiming and allowed privilege, no adverse inference could be drawn against them. But they are not. They in fact complain that the decision of the Government not to produce these documents has hampered them in their defence. In particular it is claimed that the production of the Maulvi's confidential diary would have helped to establish, as I think it might, the authenticity of the informer's reports which have been challenged. The learned Judge further allowed the claim of privilege for which the Evidence Act, sec. 125, provides, but has yet in several instances drawn inferences adverse to the Police Defendants by reason of the non-disclosure by them of the source of their information, the subject of the privilege. The learned Judge's comments were, in my opinion, not open to him. It must be of course first determined whether there is a privilege or not. But it is obvious that after the Court has once held that a document or subject-matter of enquiry is privileged, with the result that the other party cannot compel production or answer, the comment is not then open to the Court that the party to whom privilege has been allowed has not done or said that which the law and the Court have said he cannot be compelled to do or to say. I will only add as regards sec. 125 of the Evidence Act that though the section does not in express terms prohibit the witness if he be willing from saying whence he got his information, both the English authorities from which the rule is taken and a consideration of the foundation of the rule show that the protection should not be made to depend upon a claim of privilege being put forward, but that it is a duty of the Judge apart from objection taken to exclude the evidence. A fortiori if objection is taken it cannot, since the law allows it, be made the ground of adverse inferences against the witness."

* * * * *

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

"The first question which arises is whether Mr. Weston was in law justified in effecting that arrest. Sec. 5 of the Indian Explosives Act (VI of 1908) enacts that a person who knowingly has in his possession or control an explosive substance under such circumstances as to give rise to a reasonable suspicion that he does not have it in his possession or under his control for a lawful object is punishable unless he shows that he had it in his possession or control for a lawful object Therefore once it is established that a person has under such circumstances in his possession or under his control an explosive substance, the statute casts the onus on him of proving that he had it in his possession or control for an innocent purpose. Sec. 6 of the same Act deals with abettors. Any person who by money, provision of premises, supply of materials or in any other manner abets or is accessory to the commission of any offence under the Act is punishable in the same way as if he had committed the offence itself.

"The first question then is whether the bomb must be taken to have been in the Plaintiff's possession or control. The bomb was not found in any place in the separate and exclusive possession of any other person than the Plaintiff. It was found in the boitakhana, a common room in possession of the family, by whom it was used and to which they all had access. As pointed out in Queen-Empress v. Sangam Lall (2), where articles are found in a house in such a place or places as several persons living in the house may have access to, there is no presumption as to possession and control that those articles are in the possession or control of any other person than the karta or house master (in this case the Plaintiff). This case was followed in the criminal appeal of Santosh against his conviction to this Court There the Chief Justice said: "Had the bomb been found in Santosh's room when the search was made there, this might have been fair ground for imputing to him possession or control within the meaning of the Act But the discovery in the boitakhana, a place equally open to others, taken by itself, points no more to possession or control in Santosh than in the others who had equal access with him to this place" The judgment under appeal also holds that in such a case the karta or managing head of the family is primâ facie responsible. But in this case the learned Judge holds that he was not, and as the Appeal Court held that the discovery of the bomb in the boitakhana did not indicate an exclusive possession by Santosh, it follows according to the judgment that the bomb must be deemed to have been in the possession of nobody and nobody was liable to account for it. But if the bomb was there, it was obvious that someone was accountable for it. The grounds for this conclusion are that the Police having acted on information showing that the article was in the exclusive possession of Santosh, they were not entitled to arrest the Plaintiff merely on the ground that the bomb was in fact found in a public room in the house, of which he was the owner. The answer, however, in the first place is that this does not correctly represent the information which the Police had. The reports it is true do not mention the Plaintiff and show that it was Santosh who took the bomb to the house. The reports do not state that the Plaintiff had no responsibility nor do they nor could they state that after the bomb was taken by Santosh to the house it remained in his exclusive possession. They deal with the movement of the bomb only during the period antecedent to that act.

(2) I. L. R. 15 All 129 (1893).

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

What they say is that the bomb was taken by Santosh to the boitakhana, a room which is a public room where it was found And for a finding in such room the owner of the house was responsible. It is quite possible that information may show that an explosive substance is taken to a house by a particular person, and that when it gets there another person may also become liable for its possession. The bomb having been found in what is by law the Plaintiff's possession, the latter was called upon to account for such possession though information showed that before it came into his possession it was in the possession of some-one else, namely, his son who was also the means by which it came there. It may well be that a person may take a bomb to the house of another and ask the latter to keep it for him and the latter may do so or permit it to be kept in a place which the law deems to be his custody. In short the finding of the bomb in the possession or control of another justifies his arrest.

"The learned Judge, however, nexts holds that the arrest was not justified, as the pleadings show that the Defendants did not arrest the Plaintiff as the owner of the house under sec. 5 but as an accessory under sec. 6. He is of opinion that a different defence has been set up to that raised in the pleadings. Had this been so, I should have been ill-disposed to shut the Defendants out on a merely technical plea seeing it in no way affected the evidence which the Plaintiff had given or might give and that the Plaintiff has shifted his own case from that stated in the plaint throughout the whole trial. In my opinion, however, the learned Judge's finding is not justified.

"In the first place it is in my opinion immaterial in this case under what section of the Act the arrest was made if in fact the circumstances were such that the Act justified arrest. If a person were arrested say on a charge of theft, but it turned out that he should have been arrested for criminal misappropriation, it seems to me, apart from any question of surprise and the necessity for calling any particular evidence, to be hardly possible nor sensible that he could bring a suit for malicious arrest claiming Rs. 10,000 or other damages saying "it is quite true you could have arrested me for criminal misappropriation, but as you did not and pursued me for theft I want my damages, because though liable in fact to arrest, the warrant was issued under the wrong section." Such a conclusion would, it appears to me, stultify the law I may cite in this connection the observations of Mr Justice Harington in Clarke v Brojendro Kishore Roy Chowdhury (3), the appeal in which has recently been decreed by the Privy Council. "In the course of the argument there was some discussion as to which of these Acts the Defendant purported to act under; that to my mind is of very little importance; the Defendant is entitled to call in aid any statute which justified his action quite irrespective of whether it was present or not to his mind when he made the search." The present case is not even one of different Acts, but of different sections under the same Act.

"It is, however, unnecessary to decide this question in the present suit, for the learned Judge is in error in supposing that the warrant was under sec. 6 and not under sec. 5. The case against Santosh appears to have been under secs. 4 and 6, but in the case of the Plaintiff the application dated 23rd July under the recommendation of Mr. Brett for the warrant was under secs. 4 and 5. This appears plainly on the face of the record (Ex. R in I, page

(3) 13 C. W. N. 458 : s. c. I. L R. 36 Cal. 433 (1909).

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

764), and in Mr. Nelson's order-sheet it is stated 'The Police apply for a warrant against the father of Santosh, the owner of the house in which the bomb was found. Issue warrant without bail.' Again the warrant itself plainly states 'whereas complaint, etc.,' for offence under secs. 4 and 5 of Act VI of 1908, etc.,' (Ex. XCVII in I, page 4387). Again the remand order was under the same sections. Again the Plaintiff himself stated on the 7th August in a petition for bail that he was arrested under secs. 4 and 5, 'the Police stating me to be the proprietor of the house in which the Police allege that they found a bomb in connection with the case instituted against Santosh Dass' (Ex. Ia, page 3641). He was himself thus quite conscious of the grounds of his prosecution. Lastly, Mr. Dutt, his Counsel, was aware of the fact. The following questions were put by him to Mr. Weston (page 7947):—

Q.—You know the section under which Peary was arrested, sec. 5, which says 'any person who makes . . . . punishable.' Did you have any information on the 8th of July which gave rise to a reasonable suspicion that Peary knowingly either made the bomb or kept it in his possession for an unlawful object?

A.—I had the fact that the bomb was found in his house and my interpretation of the law is that I was justified in arresting him and the onus of explaining the presence of the bomb in his house lay upon him—whether my view of the law is correct or not, it is for His Lordship to decide.

Q.—And it is for that reason and that reason alone that you had Peary arrested on the 23rd? Is that your evidence?

A.—That is.

Q.—Why did you not order his arrest between the 8th and the 23rd?

A.—Because until about the 21st I had no knowledge that the bomb was a dangerous one.

Q.—You swear to that, that you had up to the 21st or 22nd no knowledge about the dangerous character of the bomb?

A.—I do.

Q.—I put it to you that you had Peary arrested with a view to extort a confession from his son?

A.—That is utterly and absolutely false.

"Mr. Dutt now explains that this question was put 'with another object' which he does not state. But whatever his object was, it is plain that during the trial he assumed that the arrest was under sec. 5, notwithstanding that the plaint incorrectly mentioned sec. 6. I say 'incorrectly' because not only is there no evidence that the proceedings were taken under sec. 6, but the evidence is directly the other way. Then he admits that at the very close of the case during his (Mr. Dutt's) reply, when the argument for the defence had been closed, he argued that the Defendants' pleading was under sec. 6 and that (notwithstanding the facts) they should not be allowed to rely on sec. 5. In other words though the warrant was in fact under secs. 4 and 5 they were not to be allowed to say so. Their mouth was thus to be shut whilst a charge of crime and fraud was sought to be fixed upon them. This is another but very marked case of the constant and unfair shifting of ground by the Plaintiff at the trial. The learned Judge, however, gave effect to this belated argument and has held that notwithstanding the application for arrest, warrant and proceedings were under secs. 4 and 5, that the Plaintiff himself stated and understood that he was being proceeded against under secs. 4 and 5, and that his Counsel at the trial proceeded on the same basis—the Defendants were not entitled to say that they acted under secs. 4 and 5, because they are held to have pleaded (apparently in ignorance of the plain facts), that the Plaintiff was arrested as an accessory under sec 6. There is no mention of that section in the written statement, but the learned Judge reads the reference to accessory as implying action under the section. The word accessory is, however, there used not with reference to the warrant but to the information which the Police had received prior to the application for a warrant. It was thought that that information coupled with the circumstances of the case including the fact of the bomb being in the house of which the Plaintiff was owner, raised a reasonable suspicion against the Plaintiff that he was fully aware of what was being done. The application for the warrant was actually under secs. 4 and 5 and against the Plaintiff as owner of the house. If the proceeding had been under sec 6 presumably the written statement would have so said. It could not have done so, however, unless the gentleman who drew it have never seen the application, warrant and proceedings in the case including the Plaintiff's own petition. However this be, it is plain that an erroneous statement in the pleadings (assuming that for the sake of argument though not holding that there was one) cannot overcome the actual fact apparent on the face of the record and admitted by the Plaintiff himself and his Counsel. The latter should not (after having dealt with the case as one under sec. 5) have been permitted to shift his ground in the last stages of the case in reply. I hold that it is established beyond all doubt that action was taken under secs. 4 and 5 and not sec. 6 and that the Defendants are not precluded by anything in their pleadings from avowing that which is plainly the fact. If, as I have found, the Defendants were not responsible for the bomb, then sec. 5 justified the arrest of the Plaintiff on its discovery in his house. In fact Mr. Dutt is recorded as having said in the first Court that "if the Plaintiff had been arrested on the 8th July nothing could have been said;" and this for the reason that the Plaintiff was the owner of the house. His case then and until he shifted it in reply was, that his client should (if the Defendants' case be true) have been arrested on the 8th July, but the fact that he was not, but later on on the 23rd, showed that Mr. Weston had no boná fide belief in his right to proceed against him as the owner of the house."

"Then Mr. Dutt put forward a charge of conspiracy to produce false evidence and to forge a document, Ex. 61, against both Mr. Weston and Mr. Hadrill, formerly a member of his own profession and now the solicitor instructing Counsel for the defence

"A witness of the name of Akshoy Kumar Pal says that he was asked not to give evidence for the Crown "against the country" by a man named Paramananda Shaha, who himself makes charges of bribery against the Police. The latter is alleged to have asked the witness to say that the Police had coerced and tutored him. He also showed a note which is said to be in Mr. Dutt's writing, stating that Mr. Dutt would arrange that Abinash Mitter and the Raja of Narajole would, between them, pay Rs. 6,000. The witness also swore that Paramananda took him to Mr. Dutt's house, where he saw Mr. Dutt. He asked the latter whether he had said what Paramananda had stated and whether he had sent the letter, to which Mr. Dutt said 'yes' and that the witness would get the money through Paramananda. He also said that

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

Mr. Dutt 'bribed almost all the witnesses and got them over; tried to do the same thing with me; played the same trick; but could not succeed. Since the last two and a half years all sorts of oppressions are being perpetrated on me.' There has been some difficulty in reading the letter which my brother Chatterjee says contains some mistakes which are not likely to have been made by Mr. Dutt. On the other hand, the Appellants draw attention to certain words which they claim to be similar mistakes in a sample writing made by Mr. Dutt before Mr. Macpherson. The witness read the document as 'we are also prepared to give or pay, please make all arrangements for it.' The witness Akshoy swears that he knows Mr. Dutt's writing; that the note is in his writing, and that Mr. Dutt admitted that he had sent the letter. This letter is alleged to be a forgery. It is true that Mr. Dutt has not been called, but I am not prepared to say that the document has been proved. I am not, in the first place, satisfied with the evidence of Akshoy Pal. If he was in fact approached and was an honest man, he would have rejected Paramananda's offer then and there. Why did he, as he says, go to Mr. Dutt? If this evidence is true, it would tend to show that, instead of rejecting the offer, the witness was seeing what might come of it. He also admits that though he was a witness for the Crown, he did not say 'all, but what little I said I did so with great reserve.' Nextly, the witness in his evidence is not competent to depose to Mr. Dutt's writing, and as Mr. Justice Fletcher points out this and other documents were taken out of Court for expert examination, but no expert was called to speak to it. It is possible that the document is a forgery, and that Paramananda wrongly took Mr. Dutt's name, but if so, the evidence of the witness that Mr. Dutt admitted that he sent the letter must be untrue. However, the matter I now desire to discuss is not the charge against Mr. Dutt which this witness introduces, but Mr. Dutt's counter charge against Mr. Weston and Mr. Hadrill and the Maulvi in respect of it. Mr. Dutt who personally cross-examined the witness who was making charges against him, suggested to him that Mr. Weston, in concert and conspiracy with the Maulvi and Mr. Hadrill, put up this witness to tell a false story, and either forged or put forward this document knowing it to be forged, which suggestion the witness denied. This suggestion was supported by another that Mr. Hadrill and the Counsel then appearing for the Crown, were putting up with Mr. Weston and that the witness Akshoy Pal was there also. As in other cases, an attempt has been made before us to show that what was suggested was not that which the question put obviously meant, and that there was no charge against the Defendants of fabricating this document, or using it, knowing it to be fabricated. This explanation I do not accept.

"And the learned Judge in his judgment, while holding the document to be a forgery, added 'But while saying this I am satisfied on the evidence that there is not the slightest ground for suspecting that either Mr. Weston or Mr. Hadrill had anything to do with it nor did they in any way suspect that it was not a genuine document.' An application was made to Mr. J. C. Dutt, Attorney for the Plaintiff, to state the grounds on which this question was put, but Mr. J. C. Dutt replied that he was advised not to answer. An application to the Court by Mr. Hadrill for an enquiry was refused, the matter being pendente lite. Before us the matter has been put in this form, namely, that the document was put forward at the instance of Mr. Weston though Mr. Bose says whether Mr. Weston had knowledge that the document was forged he 'cannot say,' nor can he say that the document was made at the instance of Mr. Hadrill. In my opinion, this is not a creditable manner of dealing with the question. In the first place no attempt should have been made to deny that the charge made was that which appears on the face of the question; which was understood and stated without objection by Counsel for the defence; which was put to Mr. Weston without objection; which was repeated in express terms by Mr. Dutt in his reply; and which was so understood by the learned Judge who rejected it. Secondly, the learned Judge having found as the fact is that there was not the slightest grounds for the charge, learned Counsel should frankly have withdrawn it and then stated to the Court the grounds, if any really existed, on which Mr. Dutt considered himself justified in putting it.

"Such grounds as have been put forward by Mr. Bose (for Mr. Dutt has not himself attempted to justify his charge) are no grounds whatever for the charge, which should never have been made. Mr. Garth has, in consequence, asked us to refer Mr. Dutt's conduct in preferring this unfounded charge to the Court, for consideration whether action should be taken against Counsel in respect of it. I do not, however, propose to do so; notwithstanding the number and reckless character of other unfounded charges exceeding any in my experience, which have been made in this suit because I think that with this expression of opinion this case, which has already occupied enough of the public time, should in all its aspects now come to a close. I wish, however, to add some observations to what I have said. After this charge had been made the Advocate-General requested the Court to ask Mr. Dutt whether he made the charge on instructions, and, if so, on whose. Mr. Justice Fletcher appears to have considered that he was not entitled to do that. In my opinion the Court is so entitled and that were this not so, it would be powerless to prevent that abuse of cross-examination which the law directs. Instructions to Counsel further are only privileged in the sense of being protected from disclosure to the opponent. There is no privilege as against the Court. If the latter calls for written instructions it cannot obviously use them as evidence in the cause which is tried, and for the purpose of such trial would have to treat them as confidential. They could, however, in my opinion, be called for then and there and be used after the trial on the determination of the question whether disciplinary action should be taken against Counsel by the Full Court to which the matter would then have to be referred. If the Court were shorn of this power it might not be able to take such action in a class of cases which most justified it. The learned Judge also appeared to think (see interlocutory judgment not printed, dated 2nd February 1911) that he was prevented from acting by reason of the fact that the question reflected not on the witness but on a third party, and that sec. 150 of the Evidence Act must be referred back to sec. 146 which, in the opinion of the learned Judge, had no application. I am myself not prepared to hold that, even if sec. 146 did not apply, the Court could not do that which is necessary for the effective exercise of its disciplinary powers over advocates; but I may further point out that even on a strict reading of these sections, sec. 146 did apply, for the question, though it did reflect on third parties, also reflected on the witness. I wish further to add that in my opinion it is not sufficient even to plead instructions. Counsel have a responsibility in the matter, and are not justified in making serious charges of fraud and crime unless they are personally satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for putting them forward.

"In connection with this question of cross-examination, which appears to have been often conducted both in form, manner and tone in an insulting and provocative way, I notice that Mr. Dutt claimed to be entitled to regulate the civility which he should extend to a witness On an objection by Mr. Gregory to the offensive tone of Mr. Dutt's examination of Captain Weinman, he is recorded as saying 'I have been more civil than he deserves.' I see no ground for this observation in the evidence, and provocative remarks of this kind to witnesses should be disallowed. On another similar objection in the case of another witness, the Court is reported to have remarked that it must allow some latitude to Counsel. In my opinion, no latitude should be allowed in such matters at all. The cross-examination also contains a large number of unfair and misleading questions. When, moreover, Counsel puts it to the witness that he may take a statement from him, or otherwise states the case, care should be taken to see that the witness may not have ground for thinking that his confidence has been misplaced."

* * * * *

"I now pass to the charges made in respect of Surendro Nath Mukerjee, a co-accused of the Plaintiff's son. It is charged that, on the 11th August 1908, (though Mr. Dutt opened the 13th) this man received three kicks in the stomach from Lal Mohun, which are said to have been of so serious a nature as nearly to kill him and to have caused him to involuntarily pass a stool and urine. The second charge is that the Police produced a false and tutored confession from him on the 15th August. Learned Counsel for the Defendants objected, and I think rightly, on the ground of irrelevancy, at having to go into these charges which occupied so considerable a portion of the record, but were overruled. Had the "primary" conspiracy of which Mr. Dutt speaks been relevant, possibly (though it is not necessary to decide it) that portion of the evidence which relates to the procurement of the confession might have been relevant, though even then it would be doubtful whether the evidence as to the alleged kick would be material, seeing that it is not alleged to have been the inducing factor of the confession, and if it were, it would, I presume, have been put forward, which it was not, in the criminal trial. As matters, however, now stand, it is obvious that the fact that a third party was kicked (if the story be true) on the 11th August, has no bearing on the issue whether the Defendants put a bomb in the Plaintiff's house prior to the 8th of the preceding July, or arrested without cause the Plaintiff on the 23rd of that month, however reprehensible in itself such savagery would be. Objection was also taken to the reference which the learned Judge says he made after the trial was over to some medical works not stated. The objection is well-founded, for whatever a Court relies on should be made known at the trial to the parties, so that they may have an opportunity of adducing evidence or argument on the point, Durga Prasad v. Ram Doyal (4). The matter is not, however, in the view I take of the facts, of importance, for the question with which the learned Judge deals only arises if and when it is proved that the kicks were given the alleged results of which the learned Judge discusses."

"I now deal with the question whether Mr. K. B. Dutt should have accepted a retainer in this case; whether he should have been called as a witness; and what is the effect of his not having in fact been called. Though these matters raise questions of professional conduct, I am not dealing with them simply on this ground but because they have a most important bearing on the decision of this case. Objection was taken before Mr. Justice Fletcher to Mr. Dutt's appearance as Counsel in this case on the following main grounds:—that he had a personal interest in and had in fact 'engineered' the case; that he had a personal knowledge of the facts of the case; that he was a proper and material and, indeed, necessary witness to facts in the case; that having been concerned in preferring charges he should support them by his testimony; and that both witnesses and Counsel would be embarrassed by his appearance, the more particularly so as serious charges, such as bribery, were personally made against him. The learned Judge overruled these objections in the following passage:—'It was made a matter of deliberate and unrestrained attack on Mr. Dutt that he had not gone into the witness-box Mr. Dutt has himself explained the reason of his abstention, and that reason appears to me to be satisfactory. His client, in whose favour his testimony would have been given, with full knowledge of this saw fit to retain him as his Counsel, and it cannot be suggested that there was anything improper in Mr. Dutt's accepting the retainer.'

"I will deal first with the question whether Mr. Dutt should have appeared as Counsel in this case. Mr. Justice Fletcher is of opinion that it cannot be suggested that there was anything improper in his doing so. I should have myself, in the absence of any other authority, thought that under the circumstances of this case to which I shall refer, it was not proper. I am, however, fortified in this view by the answers which were given by the Bar Council to certain questions put to them on this very matter, and in respect of this very case. We have referred to the Bar Council's report with the consent of Counsel on both sides. It will be found set out in 16 C. W. N. xlvi. Their decision is of course not binding on us as Judges. But the Bar Council are the recognised authority on all matters of professional conduct and etiquette affecting Counsel, and their opinion therefore is of the greatest weight and value. Their reply to the questions put to them was this: (1) If Counsel knows or has reason to believe that he will be an important witness in a case he ought not to accept a retainer therein (2) If he accepts a retainer not knowing or having reason to believe that he will be such a witness, but at the opening or at any subsequent stage before evidence is concluded it becomes apparent that he is a witness on a material question of fact he ought not to continue to appear in the case unless he cannot retire without jeopardising the interests of his client. (3) If Counsel knows or has reason to believe that his own professional conduct on matters out of which the action arises is likely to be impugned in the case he ought not to accept a retainer. (4) If he accepts a retainer not knowing or having reason to believe that his own professional conduct in such matters is likely to be impugned but finds in the course of the case that it is so impugned he ought to adopt the same course of conduct as is mentioned in clause (2) ante. (5) In either of the cases mentioned in cls (2) and (4), there is no rule of professional ethics which debars a Counsel if he continues to act as Counsel in the case from going into the witness-box and being cross-examined.

"I agree with this opinion. The question then is wheth r Mr. Dutt does not come within rule (1), and of this on the facts there is, in my opinion, no question Mr Dutt is, I believe, one of the leading citizens of Midnapore and an old resident there, where he is or was the Chairman of its Municipality. He is also engaged in politics, was Chairman of the Midnapore Conference and the chief of what is called the 'Moderate' section of Nationalist politicians. His position is set out in the statement which he made under sec. 161 of the Criminal Procedure Code to the Defendant Lal Mohun Guha. Mr. Dutt took some part in what are called swadeshi cases. He must be, from his position, of course well aware of the political condition of Midnapore, and the ins and outs of Nationalist politicians, whether Moderate or Extreme, in the district. He was himself implicated in the informer Laha's reports as being a member of the so-called "bomb conspiracy." It is in evidence that from the 9th July to the 23rd July the Plaintiff consulted him almost daily, and reported to him what was being done as regards his son in prison, the alleged misdoings of the Police as also the Plaintiff's own alleged conversations with Mr. Weston in particular; and this is extremely important: he was, according to the Plaintiff, told that Mr. Weston had declared to the Plaintiff that he knew him to be innocent, that he need not be nervous, but had notwithstanding told the Plaintiff that he would arrest him if he did not get his son to make a confession which the Plaintiff understood Mr. Weston to know to be a false one. Mr. Dutt was one of the spokesmen of the alleged grievances of Midnapore at the visit of Mr. Maddox on the 4th August 1908. If we are to believe Maity he can also speak to the fact that Mr. Weston sent more than one chit to the Plaintiff and the contents of them. He was present at the Pleaders' Library on the 15th August when Ashutosh made his alleged revelations about the Police. On the 16th August he telegraphed and thereafter communicated with Government on the subject of the alleged misconduct of the Police. He appears to have been concerned in the preparation of the statements of witnesses sent to Government against the Police on the 27th August. He is said to have directed that note-books should be kept recording complaints against the Police. He was present as Counsel on the 31st August, when it is alleged that the Court was of set purpose kept by him in ignorance of the fact that his clients were filing petitions of retractation of confession. He is concerned in the subsequent proceedings. He was present as spokesman and gave evidence at Mr Macpherson's enquiry He is said to have had information of a large number, if not all, of the principal incidents in this case, such, for instance, as the alleged kicking of Surendro, and to have had personal knowledge as to others He is charged with having written a letter offering a bribe to the witness, Akshoy Pal, and is alleged to have bribed a large number of other witnesses in the case. In addition to his own personal interest, a number of the actors and witnesses in this case are Mr. Dutt's relations or connections, such as Madhu Sudan Dutt in charge of the room where the bomb at Saroda Dutt's house was found, Rash Behary Bose, who Mr. Justice Fletcher thinks sent the "stabbing portrait" to Mr. Weston threatening his life, Sreenarain Pal, implicated by the reports, Jogjiban, an accused in the Arms Act case and the Midnapore Bomb conspiracy case, Santosh Dass, the latter's mother-in law, and Nibaran Chunder Mitter. The circumstances point to his having an interest in and having taken an active, and I think leading, part in the institution and prosecution of this suit which represents in effect his own claims and grievances and those of others. It is not necessary therefore to go into every detail. It is sufficient to say that Mr. Dutt's name crops up in every part of the evidence either as the person directly concerned or as having personal knowledge of the facts or as being in a position to corroborate them.

"It is obvious that, under these circumstances, Mr. Dutt must have known that he was an important witness in the case and it was therefore not proper of him to have accepted a retainer in the action. I wish to add a reference to a decision of this Court. One of the results of Mr. Dutt's appearance was this—that he had to examine and cross-examine as to matters on which he had personal knowledge, such as alleged conversa tions between him and the witness. And he actually cross examined a witness, who made charges of personal corruption against himself, a most unseemly spectacle. In the decision to which I refer, which is unreported (In the matter of certain Counsel, 4th August 1908) the Full Bench observed as to the unprofessional and objectionable character of Counsel cross examining a witness as to facts within his personal knowledge. Sir Francis Maclean, C. J, then said, delivering the judgment of the Court: 'I agree with what has fallen from the Advocate-General that the effect upon the minds of a Jury of a cross examination conducted in this method might prove injurious to the administration of justice' The Chief Justice here refers to its effect on the Jury, but as I will later show the fact that Mr. Dutt has conducted this case has had a prejudicial effect on the mind of the learned Judge. The Chief Justice continued: 'Suppose for a moment that a leading Advocate were in cross-examination to put to the witness in the box a question of this sort, why did you not tell me so and so and so and so.' The possible effect upon the mind of the Jury might be that they might regard the suggestion of Counsel as being pitted against the statement of the witness, an entirely fallacious view, with the result that, in consequence, they might disbelieve the latter. The Chief Justice then considered the effect which might be produced upon the mind of the witness himself; how such an examination might be very embarrassing and conducive to his giving answers he might not otherwise have given. To these I add the obvious embrrassment of Counsel on the other side in examining or cross-examining to personal charges against their opponent. The objection I may lastly add was not removed by Mr. Dutt saying instead of 'did I not do so,' 'did I not say so,' "did not Mr. K. B. Dutt do or say so?'

"I nextly deal with the question of whether, having accepted such a retainer, Mr. Dutt should nevertheless have gone into the witness-box. Mr. Justice Fletcher then says 'Having done this (that is accepted the brief) it was in strict accordance with the rule of professional ethics of almost universal application that having taken up the position of an advocate he should refrain from testifying at a trial which was being conducted by him.' The learned Judge places the matter too high, as amongst other matters, a reference to cl 5 of the Bar Council's report show. There is nothing necessarily unprofessional in Counsel giving evidence in a case in which he appears as such. There have been several cases both in England and this country, in which this course has been taken without objection.

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

Two unreported instances are noted in Sethna v. Mirza Mahomed Shirazi (5). It is true that in that case Mr. Justice Beaman held absolutely that the Court would not allow Counsel conducting cases to give evidence on behalf of their clients in respect of matters with which they were acquainted before they were retained, but that they might do so as regards matters occurring after their retainer. But such decision is in my opinion erroneous. It omits to notice that Stones v. Byron (6) and Dlane v. Packwood (7) were not followed in Cobbett v. Hudson (8). It is opposed to Mr. Inverarity's case, which the learned Judge cites. Considered as a rule of absolute exclusion as opposed to an expression of opinion of what is desirable, the decision is in direct conflict with the Evidence Act, and both with the Privy Council decision to which I next refer and the opinion of the Bar Council regulating questions of professional conduct above cited. The learned Judge who decided that case failed to distinguish between competency and the opinion that as a general rule it is desirable that the same person should not be both advocate and witness. In the Privy Council decision, Victor Corea v. Peiris (9), a gentleman named Schroder was examined as witness, though counsel in the case. The Judicial Committee did not disapprove of this as contrary to the professional ethics of which Mr. Justice Fletcher speaks, but on the contrary there stated that Counsel had been properly examined.

"The true rule in such matters is, in my opinion, as follows. Counsel though they may be engaged in the case are in law competent to testify whether the facts in respect of which they gave their evidence occurred before or after their retainer [see sec. 118 of the Evidence Act, Cobbett v. Hudson (8)]. The Court has no authority to exclude such evidence if tendered. It is not in all cases a breach of professional ethics for a Counsel retained in the case to give his evidence in it. There are cases in which he properly may and, indeed, should do so. At the same time it is recognised by both the Court and the profession that, as a general practice, it is undesirable, when the matter to which Counsel deposes is other than formal, that they should testify either for or against the party whose case they are conducting. In judging the matter from the point of view of what is desirable as opposed to what is legal much must depend on the circumstances of each case. In the present case, having regard to Mr. Dutt's interest in the proceedings, the fact that he has taken part in the events referred to in them and has both personal and reported knowledge of a very large number of the facts testified to in the evidence, it was in a high degree undesirable that he should have been both Counsel and witness. The real objection in Mr. Dutt's case is that he was Counsel in the case and not, therefore, as he would properly otherwise have been, a witness. I may add that Curry v. Walter (10) to which Mr. Bose referred, has no bearing. There Counsel was subpœnaed to prove what had been stated by him on motion in Court. The Court was of opinion that on such a matter Counsel should not be called, but that the party should prove it by other means or witnesses who are present; but it should be at the option of the Counsel whether he would give his testimony or not. The Court therefore decided that it was not obligatory on Counsel in such a matter to give evidence, though he might do so if he liked. It did not decide that he could not give evidence. It is further of no authority in this country where a Counsel must obey a subpœna to give evidence as any one else must do.

"The next point (which is the material one here) is whether the Appellants were entitled to ask the learned Judge to draw inferences adverse to the Plaintiff from the fact that Mr. Dutt had not been called. This they were clearly entitled to do. If it be a fact that under the circumstances of this case Mr. Dutt could not properly have been both Counsel and witness, those circumstances also show that it was improper of him to have been Counsel at all. And if he were not Counsel there can be no possible question but that he was a material and necessary witness. It was not open to Mr. Dutt to act in breach of a professional rule, and then to plead the fact of such breach both as a reason why he could not be a witness and also why adverse comment should not be made upon the fact that he was not a witness. If it be that as Counsel he ought not, under the circumstances of this case or otherwise, to have been a witness, then it was the act of his client which made Mr. Dutt Counsel and he cannot plead his own act against such comment. If Mr. Justice Fletcher's view were correct, then if a litigant is aware that a particular Counsel has knowledge of a fact which he does not wish disclosed or that such Counsel's evidence if given would contradict him, he has only to retain him and then say to the Court: 'You must not draw inferences against me, because I do not call the man who can speak to the facts which I ask the Court to believe, for I have made him my Counsel.'

"The next question is what is the nature of the inference which should be drawn from the fact that the Plaintiff has put forward Mr. Dutt as his Counsel and not as his witness. The learned Judge says: 'Mr. Dutt has himself explained the reason of his abstention (from the witness-box) and that reason appears to me to be satisfactory.' What those reasons were are not stated, and the learned Judge has therefore not placed us in a position to appreciate them. But if those reasons were that Mr. Dutt had not in fact personal knowledge of the facts, or were a statement of the extent to which he was concerned in those facts, or as to the nature of those facts, such a statement, being in the nature of evidence should have come from him in the stand and not from his place at the Bar. The learned Judge next says 'His client, in whose favour his testimony would have been given, with full knowledge of this fact saw fit to retain him as his Counsel.' How and on what grounds could the learned Judge assume, as he here does, that had Mr. Dutt been a witness, which he was not, his testimony would have been given in favour of his client? This observation indicates the danger to which Sir Francis Maclean, C. J., in the case cited referred, namely, that inferences unsupported by the evidence of Counsel himself may be drawn from his mere appearance in support of a cause of the facts of which he is alleged to have personal knowledge. So far from the inference being what the learned Judge states, it is precisely the other way. The learned Judge has himself correctly stated the rule when dealing with the Defendants' case, viz, that evidence which could be and is not produced would, if produced, be unfavourable to the person who withholds it.' The same rule applies to Mr. Dutt, for whether he could or could not as Counsel have given evidence in this case he should not have been Counsel and could and should have given evidence for the reasons I have given.

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

"On this matter it only remains to indicate on what points such presumption should in this case work. It works as regards every one of the facts to the chief of which I have alluded in which Mr. Dutt was himself an actor, or had alleged personal or reported knowledge. I need not repeat them here. They are also mentioned in detail in the evidence. I only say here that in my opinion the most important points affected by this presumption are the alleged reports made to Mr. Dutt between the 8th and 23rd July as to the alleged conduct of Mr. Weston and the Police, subsequent information on the same points received by him, the circumstances leading to the institution of this suit; and matters in the suit itself, such as the incident of the 31st August which Mr. Dutt who was then Counsel makes the basis of a charge of dishonesty against the Defendants and the presiding Magistrate Mr. Nelson. So far from presuming, as the learned Judge does, that Mr. Dutt's testimony on these and other points would have been in favour of his client, I presume the other way and the learned Judge might have himself so found if Mr. Dutt had gone into the stand. One of the chief grounds on which this suit has been decreed against Mr. Weston are the alleged conversations he had with the Plaintiff when he is supposed to have repeatedly told the latter that he was innocent, that there were therefore no grounds for proceeding against him and that he need not be nervous and yet that he expressly avowed his alleged illegalities in telling the Plaintiff that he would arrest him nevertheless if he did not get a confession from his son. These conversations are said to have been reported to Mr. Dutt at the time. Is it to be conceived that if Mr. Dutt had been told about these at the time it would not have been of the first importance that this should be proved? Would not Mr. Dutt have been called to give that presumptively independent evidence which the suit now lacks. I assume that Mr. Dutt was not called because he could not corroborate the Plaintiff or his case on this or other points. Had he done so, it would have been necessary for him to explain how he did not mention the subject of the alleged reported conversations to Mr. Maddox on the 4th August, but had on the contrary no complaint to make against Mr. Weston; how he did not mention it in his letter to Government of the 27th August; how it finds no place in the subsequent proceedings and does not see the light of day until this suit, and then, after Bonomali's charge had failed it is put forward as the basis of the new case on which the suit has been decreed.

"In this connection I desire in justice to Counsel for the Appellants in the first Court to deal with another matter. Mr. Justice Fletcher who has, in my opinion, erroneously approved of Mr. Dutt's conduct, has on the other hand in my opinion passed an undeserved judgment on the conduct of Counsel for the defence. After having observed that Mr. Dutt had followed the rule of profesional ethics, he continues: 'I may observe that this rule of professional conduct was not, I regret to say, observed by Mr. Dutt's opponents.' This observation is based on the fact that Mr. Norton called Mr. Gregory (a junior Counsel in the the case) as his witness, and the latter gave his evidence. Mr. Gregory was called to repel a suggestion of Mr. Dutt, who in his numerous charges has not spared members of his own profession, that Mr. Gregory had not in respect of a particular matter, viz., that arising out of exhibit 61, properly and fairly conducted the case before the Sessions Judge and had attempted to keep back the document from the Court. Mr Gregory from his place at the Bar gave his explanation. Though not so bound, it was properly open to Mr. Dutt to accept a statement made in such a matter and in such circumstances from a fellow member of his own profession. He refused and objected to the statement being made. Thereupon Mr. Norton put Mr. Gregory in the witness-box when he was cross examined at length by Mr. Dutt who amongst other matters thrice made to him the misleading suggestion that the Counsel Mr. Morrison was not present in Court on the 23rd when A. K. Pal who speaks to this document was examined, though it is clear from the record that he was in fact present I have already stated what in my opinion the general rules are as regards the calling of Counsel as witness. In my opinion Mr. Norton was fully justified in calling Mr. Gregory both in protection of the latter's professional reputation which had been in fact groundlessly assailed and of his own client's interest.

"In this connection I may cite an observation of Sir Francis Maclean, C. J., in the case of Nundo Lal Bose v. Nistarini Dasi (11): 'I can scarcely suppose that any Counsel if he understood that the other side were not prepared to accept his statement made upon his word of honour would not himself ask that he might not be allowed to give his evidence in the usual way.'

"Mr. Norton has also invited our opinion on another matter on which the learned Judge has censured him. During the examination of the witness Mr. Wilson, the latter produced at the request of Mr. H. D. Bose, who was cross-examining him, a private pocket book. An irrelevant cross-examination on it followed. The book being a private one, Mr. Norton marked the pages to which Counsel might refer in respect of the subject of his cross-examination, the other pages referring to other matters. Mr. Bose, however, looked at pages which had not been so marked. On the face of it this was highly improper on the part of Mr. Bose, and Mr. Norton appears to have naturally expressed his opinion strongly to this effect. The learned Judge is, however, stated not to have then and there, as I think should have been done, determined who was in fault. Mr. Bose brought in next day a written explanation of his conduct which the learned Judge is said to have refused to have gone into, and then the matter ended until the judgment when the learned Judge observed as follows:—'I may further add that I viewed at the time and still view with complete disapproval Mr. Norton's unfounded and abusive attack on Mr. Dutt's junior, Mr. H. D. Bose.' I do not know what the explanation was which Mr. Bose offered and on which the learned Judge refused to adjudicate, and I am not therefore in a position to say whether Mr. Bose was to blame. Primâ facie and in the absence of proper explanation Mr. Norton was justified in taking strong exception to Mr. Bose's conduct. The matter might have been decided then and there, but as it was not, I cannot say that Mr. Norton was open to censure. I may further observe that the judgment states no grounds on which it is based, though the admitted fact that Mr. Bose from one cause or another looked at the unmarked pages in my opinion called for them."

COXE, J.—I entirely concur with the judgment of Mr. Justice Woodroffe both as to the order and as to the grounds therefor.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—This Appeal arises out of a suit described as one for damages for wrongful confinement and malicious prosecution. The Defendants pleaded limitation before the Court below, but were overruled. The question of limitation has been pressed before us and I shall deal with it first.

The Plaintiff was arrested on the 23rd of July and discharged on the 31st of August 1908. The suit was filed on the 15th of November 1909, i.e, more than one year after the discharge, and would therefore be barred in so far as it was one for wrongful confinement or false imprisonment and malicious prosecution under Arts. 19 and 23, Schedule I, Limitation Act. The Plaintiff's legal advisers evidently saw this, and it was stated in the 14th paragraph of the plaint that the period of the notices served under sec. 80 of the Criminal Procedure Code being excluded, no part of the Plaintiff's case was barred. The Court below has held, however, that no such notice was necessary, and no exception has been taken to that view of the law before us, and no reliance has been placed upon any such notice as an answer to the plea of limitation. It has been contended, however, that the suit was based on a conspiracy between the several Defendants, and as conspiracy is a distinct cause of action by itself, the suit must fall either under Art. 36 or Art. 120, and is therefore not barred; it has been further contended that the illegal search of the Plaintiff's house is a cause of action which at least is not barred, as it would fall either under Art. 36 or Art. 39 or Art. 120. The first contention as regards conspiracy has found favour with Mr. Justice Fletcher, and I shall deal with it first. The learned Judge has relied on the case of Quinn v. Leathem (12), and Mr. Dutt has also relied on the same in support of his argument. The learned Judge says: "The truth of the matter is that in a case like the present the Plaintiff has two causes of action—one to recover the damage that has been occasioned to him as the result of the conspiracy, and the other to recover damages for malicious prosecution against the Defendants as joint tort-feasors. This is well illustrated by the case of Quinn v. Leathem (12)." With great deference I think that case itself contains an answer to the argument. Lord Halsbury, in delivering the first judgment in that case, says: "There are two observations of a general character which I wish to make—one is, that every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved, or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions, which may be found there, are not intended to be expositions of the whole law, but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. The other is that a case is only an authority for what it actually decides. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it." Now what are the facts in Quinn v. Leathem (12), and what does the case decide? The Defendants were the office-bearers of a trade union; they threatened the Plaintiff with injury if he employed men who were not members of the union; the Plaintiff was willing to have his men enrolled as members, but Defendants insisted on his dismissing them and taking members of the union in their place; the Plaintiff refused, and they then threatened a large customer of the Plaintiff with injury if he dealt with the Plaintiff and thus compelled him to cease to deal with the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff brought a suit for damages. The Plaintiff had every right to carry on his trade in the way most profitable to him, provided he did not infringe on the rights of other people, and so had the customer of the Plaintiff every right to deal with whomsoever he pleased under similar restrictions, and the Defendants had maliciously invaded this right of the Plaintiff and injured him by unlawful means and Defendants were therefore held liable. It was found that there was conspiracy and threats carried into execution by the Defendants to the injury of the Plaintiff, the object being not to serve any trade interests of their own, but to injure the Plaintiff, because he would not comply with their requisition to dismiss his innocent servants. It is true that the concerted action of a number of men has an element of aggravation, and is more irresistible than the unaided act of a single individual, and some of the cases support the view that a combination of several persons to do an unlawful act may be actionable when a similar act by an individual is not, but I do not think there is any authority for holding that a tort when committed by several persons acting in concert is different from the same tort committed by a single individual. A trespass is a trespass, whether it is committed by one person or by more, and so is a malicious prosecution or false imprisonment. The combination in such cases may be an element of aggravation in the assessment of damages, but does not to my mind suffice to make it a different tort. In the very case of Quinn v. Leathem (12), Lord Lindley said: "It was contended at the bar that if what was done in this case had been done by one person only, his conduct would not have been actionable, and that the fact that what was done was effected by many acting in concert makes no difference. My Lords, one man without others behind him who would obey his orders could not have done what these Defendants did. One man exercising the same control over others as these Defendants had could have acted as they did, and if he had done so, I conceive that he would have committed a wrong towards the Plaintiff for which the Plaintiff could have maintained an action."

In a similar case, Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers Union (13), Lord Justice Romer said: "I should be sorry to leave this case without observing that in my opinion it was not essential, in order for the Plaintiff to succeed, that he should establish a combination of two or more persons to do the acts complained of;" and Lord Justice Stirling said: "I am far from satisfied that they are not such as to be illegal even if done by a single individual." Read by the light of the facts, the case decides no more than this, that a number of persons who without justification intimidate a third person by threats of doing him harm and thereby coerce that third person into causing harm to the Plaintiff are guilty of an actionable wrong. Giblan's case (13) shows that conspiracy or wrongful combination is not a material element in the constitution of the wrong. In this country the Legislature has made a general provision that suits for damages for false imprisonment or malicious prosecution must be brought within a certain period, and no distinction is made in respect of the number of persons by whom the wrong may have been perpetrated. If it were not so, the greatest uncertainty would be introduced into the law of limitation applicable to a particular case, for a Plaintiff might easily take his case out of the statute by charging more than one person with a wrong, and a Defendant would not know when he is secure against a charge. But supposing that conspiracy to perpetrate a wrong was a separate cause of action by itself, it would not be actionable unless it caused special damage by itself. In the present case, however, the whole damage caused is by reason of the imprisonment and prosecution. The Plaintiff deposes that the imprisonment cost him Rs. 1,000 in law charges, and that is the only damage proved and decreed. The present case, therefore, considered as a suit for damages for wrongful confinement and malicious prosecution is barred by limitation under Arts. 19 and 23 of the first Schedule to the Limitation Act.

The next contention on this head is that the unlawful search of the Plaintiff's house on the 8th July 1908 was pleaded as a separate cause of action and that at least is not barred by limitation. I am not quite sure that this was a part of the original case of the Plaintiff. It was not mentioned as one of the causes of action in the notice under sec. 80, Civil Procedure Code, and the main contention in the argument was that this was one of the overt acts in the conspiracy. Reading the plaint and the issues framed together, however, the contention is, I think, permissible, and if it is found that the search was unlawful or in any case amounted to a trespass, the Plaintiff may be entitled to some damages for the same. The issue framed in this connection was: (2) Did the Defendants, or any two of them in furtherance of such conspiracy, maliciously, wrongfully or illegally—

(a) search or cause a search to be made in Plaintiff's house on the 8th of July;

(b) trespass or cause a trespass to be made upon the premises of the Plaintiff.

The learned Judge has come to no finding on this part of issue No. 2, and I must find whether the Plaintiff has made out his case on this point. The gist of the case on this point is that the Defendants acting in concert and conspiracy with each other wrongfully and illegally caused a search to be made in the Plaintiff's house and Defendants 2 and 3 trespassed into the Plaintiff's house and conducted such pretended search. This is the statement in the plaint. In the evidence it was attempted to be made out that the Maulvi, Defendant No. 2, caused the bomb found in the Plaintiff's house to be prepared and induced Bonomali, a servant of the Plaintiff, to introduce the same into the house of the Plaintiff and knowing that the bomb had been so put in secured a search-warrant and made a search for a thing which he had himself caused to be introduced and for which there was no need for a search. If this were proved, it would certainly make out a good case against the Maulvi, and the other Defendants would also be liable if their complicity in the nefarious deed of the Maulvi were proved.

I shall first consider whether the Bonomali incident is true. Bonomali's evidence is that he was taken to the Maulvi by a constable named Kartic and on a subsequent date on the 7th July the Maulvi gave him the bomb for being placed in the house of Santosh and he did so place it in the boitakhana: that on the same day, the 8th of July, after the bomb had been found he was taken by a constable by train to Santragachi and left there to shift for himself. From there he went to Podra, where he served one Kali Babu for some time, and then returned to Mid-napore in October. He met Ashu and was at once taken to a pleader and his statement taken. The evidence of this witness has been disbelieved, and I think rightly disbelieved, by the lower Court. Bonomali places his introduction to the Maulvi about three weeks before the 8th of July. That would be in the middle of June at a time when Kartic is shown to have been at Ramjibanpore. It is not made out that there was another Kartic who was transferred, and the Kartic examined as a witness and identified by Bonomali is not shown to have been at Midnapore about the time in question. The books produced from the Ramjibanpore thana and proved by police-officers from that place make it quite clear that Kartic was not absent from Ramjibanpore at or about the time when he is said to have conducted Bonomali to the Maulvi. His present evidence is that he was taken to Santragachi by the 1-30 P.M. train on the 8th of July by a constable, who left him with an up-country man with whom he slept for the night. Before the Sessions Judge he could not name the station, whilst before Mr. N. K. Ghose, Deputy Magistrate, he said he was set adrift at Howrah, where he slept in the night and went to Santragachi in the morning, following the railway line. Both these stories are specific, and one of them must be false. It is quite clear from his cross examination in this Court that he has made various contradictory statements at various stages in the history of this litigation, and no reliance can be placed upon him.

Besides, important witnesses who could have corroborated him have not been examined. Rakhal Laha is said to have called him to the Maulvi on the 7th of July. Rakhal is not examined in this Court. The pleader to whom he was taken by Ashu and to whom he made a statement immediately on his arrival back at Midnapore is not examined. Kishoripati Roy, the pleader to whom Kartic constable is said to have made a disclosure of this part of the story, is not examined in this Court. The mother of Bonomali is not examined. Jotindro or Jitendro, the nephew of Kali Babu who took him from Santragachi, is not examined. These witnesses could have thrown some light on this part of the case. Then, if the Police were bent upon keeping him away from Midnapore, they could have done so much more effectually than by setting him adrift at Howrah or Santragachi, whence he could easily find his way back to Midnapore. I am of opinion therefore that the Bonomali incident is not only not proved but false. The Plaintiff having made a specific case and given positive evidence to prove the same, I do not think the Plaintiff can ask us to make a different case for him. As the Plaintiff has failed to prove that the Police put the bomb in his house in the manner stated by his witness, he is not entitled to impeach the search as a pretended one. The search was made under a warrant from the Magistrate and conducted with all legal formalities, and resulted in the finding of the bomb which is not shown to have been introduced by the Police in the manner alleged. The case of illegal search and trespass therefore fails. I may add that Mr. Weston is not shown to have been aware of the search until after it had been made, and the approval admitted in the written statement must be read by the light of his evidence and understood as approval subsequent.

This I think is sufficient for the disposal of the case. My learned colleagues have, however, gone into and considered the other facts in the case, and it is but fair that I should express my opinion on some of the more important matters.

The bomb found in the house of Peary Mohan is the central fact in this case. The history of this instrument of death will be found in the reports of the informer Rakhal Laha. Mr. Dutt has admitted before us that the reports are genuine, except that of the 7th of July which he says was written out subsequently. We must take it that these reports were made by Rakhal when they purport to have been made. Rakhal was appointed on or about the 20th of May 1908. His reports for the month of May were made directly to the Maulvi, who took them down in his confidential diary. That diary is not before us, as Government claimed a privilege in respect of the same. There is, however, exhibit SS, Rakhal's statement entered in the Crown brief for Rakhal's examination: there is also exhibit G prepared by head constable Asadullah from three or four note-books of Rakhal to serve as a connected narrative for helping Rakhal to give his evidence.

There was a search of Plaintiff's house on the 3rd of May at the instance of the Calcutta Criminal Investigation Department, and nothing incriminating was found. The informer gives an explanation that Santosh had written from Ranchi to pre warn his family, and all arms and weapons had been removed by a window into Jogendro Mullick's house. There is no evidence to show that Santosh could have had any intimation of the intended search which was to have been simultaneous with the Murari-pukur search in Calcutta and actually took place the next day by a mere mischance. The explanation is evidently false.

On the 23rd May the informer went at noon to the first floor of Jamini's house and saw some strips of jute, sulphur and shots scattered there. Surendro said he would prepare a bomb and kill Lal Mohun, Maulvi and Mr. Weston as they had arrested Satyendro, Jogjiban and Sarat Dey for nothing, and that very evening Kisen Saha, Jotindronath Sen and Sachindra Mohan Sen would return from Calcutta after learning the art of manufacturing bombs. This was at noon. In the evening he went to the Plaintiff's house where he saw Kisen Saha, Jotin and Sachin. Suren came in with one seer of something like sulphur, two pounds of large shot and some strips of jute. I may note here that this part of the history of the bomb is not to be found in exhibit g. On the 26th May he goes to the house of Kisen Saha and Kisen tells him that he had learnt to make bombs and had got jute and sulphur but no place as yet. On the 27th of May he again goes to Jamini Mullick, who shows him a letter from his nephew Kisto Prosad Dey about bombs: he takes the letter clandestinely to the Maulvi, who keeps a copy, and the letter is replaced by the informer. This copy of a letter dated the 28th May is to be found in exht. 56 under report dated the 1st June, and speaks of 25 bombs as the surplus stock in hand, asks what those who had learnt bomb-making in Calcutta were doing, and promises to wait 2—3 days for a letter or man from Midnapore and then go away with them in any line. This was a very important piece of evidence; and supposing that the discrepancy in the date is due to some mistake somewhere, one would expect that the letter should be kept back, for it had been only stolen by the informer, and Jamini would not have known that Rakhal had purloined it; in any case one would expect an officer of the Criminal Investigation Department of the Maulvi's experience to keep a more reliable proof of its identity by keeping a photograph. Besides, the letter, if correctly copied, contains inconsistent language. The addressee, who is the uncle and saluted, is told "করিবে" instead of "করিবেন" We do not see any search made for Kisto Prosad Dey and his 25 bombs or his factory; nor do we see any prosecution of Kisto Prosad. It is true he has not been examined in this case; but even if he had been, he could not be examined with reference to any original letter of his, for the original is not in, and was, I think, never in existence unless one purporting to be an original had been forged by the informer and passed off as a genuine one before the Maulvi. If Jamini's house had been searched at once, this important piece of evidence could have been spotted at once with the aid of the informer and gone a great way to prove a bomb conspiracy at Midnapore.

On the 1st of June there was a meeting at the Rasmanch of the Mullicks, at which Babu Motilal Mukerjee made a stirring speech, and proposed to raise a subscription of Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 1,200 for preparing bombs. On the 2nd of June he goes to Jamini's, and Satkaripati Roy, Sub Deputy Collector, is shown the letter of Kisto Prosad Dey and subscribes Rs 25 to the fund for making bombs. On the 3rd of June Jamini tells him he had gone to Mr. K. B Dutt, who said Rs. 1,000 or Rs. 1,200 would not do, but Rs. 2,000 or Rs. 3,000 must be raised, and he would speak to the Raja of Narajole for a place. On the 4th June he goes to Jamini Mullick's. Jamini proposed to bring bombs from Kisto Prosad, but Purnanand Chatterjee said that if they could get a house they would prepare 1,500 to 2,000 bombs. Jamini also told the informer that he had been to Mr. K. B. Dutt, and Mr. Dutt told him he had written to the Raja for a place.

On the 5th June Jamini sends him to inspect the Raja's house at Gope, and he found it suitable. Jamini told him he would find one-fourth of the Rs. 3,000 to be raised for bombs and he had sent for brass pipes for making bombs. On the 7th June one Satish Bhuttacharji comes from Calcutta and complains of want of money in Calcutta. Jamini tells him either bombs would be prepared at Midnapore or Rs. 2,000 to Rs. 3,000 will be sent. On the 8th June a bridal party comes from Calcutta, and one of the party advises Ashu to prepare bombs with cocoanut shells. The informer then gives a subscription list for making bombs, and Mr. K. B. Dutt, the Bar Library, and several pleaders and others are shown as subscribers. On the 9th June another meeting in the house of Gopal Banerji, pleader, about bombs: on the 11th June another meeting at the house of the Raja of Mohisadal, in which speeches are made about bombs and a subscription list is prepared. Surendro Mukherji, Kissen Saha, Amulya Bose, Bibhu Dutt agree to prepare bombs. Baroda Dutt agrees to prepare picric acid. On the 14th he says Jamini had written to his nephew Kisto for electric wire. On the 16th June Debdas Karan admits his receipt of a sample bomb from Calcutta, after which bombs would have to be prepared at Midnapore. On the 17th June Surendro appears with a bomb in the house of Rajabala prostitute, places it upon two pillows and makes a speech. Then there is a meeting at the house of Kamini prostitute and speeches are made and witnesses are tutored by Moti Babu pleader. On the 18th Suren Mukherji and Jotin go about with the bomb for killing Lal Mohun; on the 30th June at the house of Saroda Dutt, Rash Bihari comes with photos of bombs and dynamite, and Santosh and Suren come with the bomb. Suren gives it to Santosh. On the 3rd of July there is a meeting at Upendra Maity's and Santosh and Suren appear with the jute wrapped article and Suren explains why he had kept it with Santosh. On the 7th of July the Raja of Narajole appears in a coach and pair to see the bomb and it is fetched and shewn to him and then taken back to the house of Santosh to be found on the search on the next day.

I agree with Mr. Justice Fletcher in thinking that the whole of this story about the genesis and the peregrinations of the bomb is a pure invention and entirely false.

Several subscription lists are spoken of; none of them has been found; photos of bombs and dynamite are spoken of: none has been traced: brass pipes, electric wire and picric acid are spoken of; not a vestige of any of these things has been detected anywhere in Midnapore. The Raja of Narajole is said to have paid large subscriptions for the preparation of bombs; his account books have been searched and nothing about bombs found. The Bar Library is said to have subscribed Rs. 400; the accounts of the Bar Library ought to have shown the disbursement, if any. The informer and his associates must have expected to find a connection between the Muraripukur band and some of the Midnapore people; picric acid, brass pipes, electric wire were therefore spoken of at random from the knowledge derived from the disclosures in the Alipore case. No such connection, however, could be established, and sulphur and jute are the ingredients resorted to and a bomb is produced which anybody could prepare with materials available in many villages for making throw-down bombs. The training of experts in Calcutta comes to no use.

The informer is an avowed drunkard; he is without any means and is more or less dependent on his uncle. Such a man is sought out for ruling the destinies of the most respectable gentlemen of the town of Midnapore. Abdur Rahman says he was appointed for giving information about swadeshi and bombs, and if Rakhal had been examined he would most probably have said the same thing. That being the work for which he would have his Rs. 25 per mensem, he must find materials for a report, and as some swadeshi meetings did undoubtedly take place he wove into the story of some swadeshi meetings the story of a bomb. Although I have held that the Bonomali incident is false for reasons I have given, I cannot hold that the bomb came to be in the Plaintiff's house in the manner stated by the informer. Were the people of Midnapore mad? Otherwise why should a conspiracy to kill the officials or to overthrow the British Government be talked about at public meetings in all sorts of places at a time when the Military Police were parading the streets of the town and when some of the townsmen had been actually arrested for political offences Drunkards are notorious for their inability to keep secrets; would drunkards be made partizans to conspiracies of such a heinous nature so that they might bruit it about in their drunken brawls? Are the houses of prostitutes the proper places for the consideration of ways and means? If the bomb was made by Suren it was made by him for a secret crime. Why should he produce it in a prostitute's house and publish it to a set of drunkards like Rakhal and Nikunja and to the prostitutes themselves? Could he be going about with the bomb in his hand at a time when the whole town was under a panic and the Police were going about and making searches and arrests? Are the pleaders, doctors and zemindars of Midnapore so depraved and so devoid of the sense of propriety that they would hold a meeting of this sort in a prostitute's house? Are there no private houses of any of them suitable for such a meeting? But why are these meetings located in these places? These are places where Rakhal may easily be believed to have been; these places may be some of his familiar haunts. Then as regards the personnel of these meetings—men of education and position in society, men of light and leading in the Bar may well have joined swadeshi meetings and tried to support indigenous manufactures by all legal and legitimate means, and some of them may even have encouraged picketting in some form or other, but I cannot believe that they joined in a conspiracy to commit wholesale murders with bombs. Many of them are University men and are supposed to have some knowledge of history and some intelligence at least. I cannot believe that such men could under any circumstances believe that they could cope with the British Government with a few bazar bombs. To my mind these men have great stakes in the stability of the British Government. The earnings of the pleaders are the outcome of the British Courts; the earnings of the doctors are the outcome of the British system of medicine; the income of the zemindars is the outcome of the British Permanent Settlement. Their savings are mostly secured by Government Promissory notes. They must know that the moment the British Government is gone and the protection of the law is withdrawn, all their belongings will be gone; why should they of all men join in such a conspiracy? As regards the Raja of Narajole, he was no doubt a staunch supporter of the swadeshi cause, and some of his charities may have been misplaced and in fact abused by the recipients as in the case of Hem Chandra Das, to whom he made a grant of Rs. 200 through the Industrial Education Society, but there is nothing reliable on the record upon which I can find that he was either disloyal or lawless and capable of doing what the informer says he did. The part of the story which implicates him seems to be simply puerile. One single bazar bomb of a larger size than usual has been prepared with the object of killing some officer and he comes in his coach and pair to the house of Jamini Mullick impatient for having a look at the strange production. To my mind it is simply absurd, and I have no reason to disbelieve his evidence.

Mr. K. B. Dutta, the leading Barrister of Midnapore, the Chairman of the Midnapore Municipality, the leading man in the town, must also be the leading spirit in this conspiracy. The fracas in the Midnapore Conference showed him out as a Moderate in politics, and even if he were an Extremist, I cannot believe that he would lend himself to such a silly and puerile venture in a heinous crime. It is a pity he has considered himself debarred by some supposed rule of professional etiquette from going into the witness-box to give the lie to the serious insinuations and charges that have been made against him, but I cannot believe that there is any truth in the allegations of the informer about him. It may not be out of place to mention that one of the defence witnesses named Aukhoy Pal has deposed to a document (exhibit 61) as a slip written by Mr. Dutt to one Permanand Saha for subscribing to a fund for bribing the said witness. Not satisfied with the assertion of Permanand that this was a chit from Mr. Dutt, the witness says he went over to Mr. Dutt's place and Mr. Dutt admitted to him that the chit was genuine. I have carefully compared this document with Ex. LXXXVIII, which is admittedly in the handwriting of Mr. Dutt, and I can find no resemblance either in the style of the handwriting or the formation of the letters, and I have no hesitation in holding that exhibit 61 is a forgery and Aukhoy Pal is a witness of falsehood.

If the reports concerning the bomb are false, then the confessions of Santosh and Suren are necessarily false, and if they are, how did they come into existence?

It seems quite clear from the evidence that both the Police Defendants had almost unlimited access into the jail for questioning the accused Santosh as well as Suren, and I have no doubt that they used both threats and inducements for the procurement of the confessions, but did not succeed until immediately after the arrest and imprisonment of the old and suffering father of Santosh. This to my mind was the last turn of the screw and the poor son could not hold out any longer. It is true the confessions do not tally exactly with the reports in their details, but the main story—the story of of the bomb—is identical, and that was all that was wanted. The evidence, however, about the manner in which these confessions were recorded is evidently exaggerated and embellished with falsehoods. For instance I do not believe that Mr. Weston put from the informer's reports questions in the leading form to which the deponents had to say yes: it is admitted that he suggested some questions and to some suggested questions answers were given before the recording Magistrate re-put the questions, and this was exaggerated into the evidence that we have that every question was put by Mr. Weston as stated above in a leading form.

I have also no doubt that the arrest and imprisonment of the Plaintiff had a decisive effect upon Santosh, and the implication of Suren by Santosh had a decisive effect upon Surendro. The next question that I shall deal with is whether Peary Mohan was arrested and imprisoned not bonâ fide but with the indirect object of inducing Santosh to make a confession.

I agree with Mr. Justice Fletcher that Mr. Weston believed in the story of the informer. This story contained no charge of complicity against Peary, and it does not appear that there was at first any intention on the part of the authorities to proceed against Peary. It is quite clear that Peary had several interviews with Santosh in jail and also several interviews with Mr. Weston. The point in issue with regard to these interviews with Mr. Weston is whether Mr. Weston threatened Peary with arrest and imprisonment unless he could induce his son to make a confession. It is admitted that Mr. Weston told him that if his son was guilty the best thing for him would be to make a clean breast of the whole affair. If Mr. Weston believed the case against Santosh to be true, as I think he did, he would be quite within his rights in giving such an advice, although it would have been better if he had not given any. I cannot believe that Mr. Weston would threaten Peary with arrest unless he succeeded in getting a false confession from his innocent son, and I do not believe that he did threaten Peary with arrest unless he succeeded in getting a true confession from his guilty son. Mr. Weston as a Civilian of experience must be expected to have known that any threat or any inducement used for extracting a confession would nullify the confession. As a respectable gentleman of position also he would not demean himself by acting in the manner suggested. I think Peary misunderstood Mr. Weston and has exaggerated the circumstances of the interviews and the conversations held therein. One of the most important factors in the Plaintiff's case is the delay in the arrest of Peary. Mr. Dutt said that he would have had nothing to say if Peary had been arrested on the 8th July, i.e., as soon as the bomb was found in his house. The explanation of Mr. Weston is that he found fault with the Police at once, but awaited the report of the Chemical Examiner, of which the demi-official intimation was received on the 20th July, and as the 23rd July was the date fixed for the case against Santosh he waited till the 23rd. Against this it is said that the contents of the bomb were known to be dangerous on the 9th of July from the opinion of Major Weinman, and the police-officers throughout insisted on the dangerous character of the thing. Even on the 11th of July the Maulvi in his application to the Magistrate for an interview with Santosh says "it has been found to contain explosives and shots." On the same day, the 11th of July, the Chemical Examiner sends his demi-official report to Mr. Plowden, and on the 17th July Mr. Denham says "Copy forwarded to Mr. Cornish," and this document is endorsed as received by the Maulvi on the 20th July at 6-30 P.M. On the 16th of July Mr. Cornish sends a reminder to the Criminal Investigation Department office and Mr. Denham signs it on the 17th with a remark "Sent." It is not quite clear when it was posted: there is no evidence as to that, and for all that we know the actual posting may have been delayed. There is not sufficient reason therefore for holding that Maulvi's entry of "received" on the 20th is a false entry. Mr. Cornish says he sent information at once and Mr. Weston may have received this late in the evening on the 20th. There is a chit of Mr. Weston, Ex H., dated the 20th July asking Peary to come and see him on Wednesday (the 22nd July) and not on Tuesday "as arranged." Mr. Weston says he wrote this before he received the Chemical Examiner's demi-official. This is very likely the case; as Mr. Weston could not have received it until after evening. Then the question remains whether there was an interview on the 22nd of July. Mr. Weston admits that the visit of the 21st was fixed at 7 P.M., an unusual hour for enabling Peary to see his son before that time. Peary admits that he did not see Mr. Weston at 9 P.M. on the 22nd, as he had failed to induce Santosh to confess, but he says he saw Mr. Weston in the evening. The history ticket of Santosh shows that Peary had interviews with him both on the 21st and the 22nd. Now 22nd was a Wednesday on which Peary had a general order to see his son: the interview of the 21st must therefore have been under a special order. I have no doubt that his interview of the 21st was to ascertain whether Santosh was going to make a statement. Then the question is, did Peary see Mr. Weston on the 22nd as he says he did? Mr. Weston denies that this interview took place and he is positive that he did not grant any interview to Peary after he received the demi-official of the Chemical Examiner. I am not quite sure as to whether there is not some mistake in respect of this interview. Even, however, if he did grant an interview on the 22nd for ascertaining whether Santosh was going to make a true confession, that would not defeat his case that the arrest of Peary was bonâ fide, for according to his case the arrest had been determined upon to take place on the date fixed. It may be that so long as there was any reasonable chance of getting a confession from Santosh Mr. Weston was not inclined to prosecute Peary for having the bomb in his house. The evidence against Santosh was extremely frail, and there was then hardly any chance of a conviction; but there was a primâ facie case against Peary; the bomb had been found in his house and he was bound to explain how it came to be there. This at least in the view that the authorities took of the law which had been only recently passed. There is evidence that Mr. Plowden had found fault with Lal Mohun for not arresting Peary, and so had Mr. Weston on the 8th of July after the arrest of Santosh. Although the confession of Santosh followed very soon after the arrest of his father and must have been to a very great extent induced by the same, it does not necessarily follow that the arrest of the father was purposely made for inducing that result and not for vindicating the law. In any case it is I think a sound principle of law that in the absence of proof to the contrary credit should be given to public officers who have acted primâ facie within the limits of their authority for having done so with honesty and discretion, and I do not think there is in this case any proof to the contrary. The coincidence of the confession following close upon the arrest may no doubt raise a suspicion, but suspicion is not proof. I think therefore that on the whole no case has been made out against Mr. Weston, who acted under circumstances of great difficulty. At a time when a political party with revolutionary ideas was believed to exist in the town; at a time when his very life and the lives of his subordinates were threatened, at least according to reports which he believed; at a time when outrages had been attempted or committed in several other places upon public officials by members of the anarchist party, some of them young men from Midnapore, he cannot be blamed for believing his subordinates, the police officers, and the reports procured by them and acting upon them.

The case for the Plaintiff in the Court below was that the reports were invented and concocted by the Police in support of a false case they contemplated making against the gentry of Midnapore and was sign d by Rakhal in one day. Mr. Dutt has abandoned that theory, and his case before us is that the reports were genuine except that of the 7th July which was subsequently put down. I am not sa isfied that the report of the 7th July was not in existence on the 7th July. The search warrant was obtained upon some information of the kind and on the 11th July the Police Defendants are said to have tutored Santosh from the reports. If the reports are genuine, i.e., were made by the informers appoin ed by the Police but were false repor s, the Defendants are not responsible for them. But did they believe the reports? The lower Court has found that they did not, principally on two grounds, first, that the reports were primâ facie incredible and no man of intelligence and experience could have believed them; and, secondly, that the Defendants adduced false evidence in support of the reports. As regards the first point, I have myself held that the reports were incredible and false as to the main incidents, but I have looked upon the facts from a distance of time and space under circumstances quite different from those in which the Defendants acted. It was a time of great commotion; there

Chief Justice's bereavement.

We have to convey our sincere condolence to his Lordship the Chief Justice in his sad bereavement owing to the death of his elder brother. We have all along expressed the sincere desire of the people of this Presidency that his Lordship should continue to preside over the High Court for many years to come. We do hope that his private affairs will not interfere with this general desire and that he will, even if it be at considerable personal inconvenience, arrange matters at home so that he may stay on for some years to come. Now that the reorganisation of the Calcutta High Court and the splitting up of its territorial jurisdiction are engaging the attention of the Government of India it is a matter of supreme importance to the Presidency of Bengal that Sir Lawrence Jenkins should be at the helm of affairs of the Calcutta High Court. Any temporary incumbent to his office during this period of changes and transition would find himself in a most embarrassing position. Even if it be too much to ask of his Lordship, yet we know that it is the general desire that his Lordship should not within the next three years leave India even on a temporary leave. It is well nigh going to be ten years since changes have been following upon changes in the Presidency of Bengal and we seem to be still on the move. We are longing for the day when equilibrium will be restored to us so that once for all we may feel ourselves to be in a stable position. During this transitional period it is of the utmost importance that the administration of the Province in all its spheres should be in the hands of persons who may command public confidence.

Pay and prospects of Original Side clerks.

Although it was only in 1911 that the scheme for strengthening the ministerial staff on the Original Side of the High Court and improving their pay and prospects was sanctioned, we regret to say that it is not all that could be desired with regard to the pay and prospects of the clerks on that side. A number of limited posts in the Rs. 50 and Rs. 60 grades have been blocking the way to promotion to a number of hard working officers in the lower grades. With regard to this it may no doubt be said that the time for revision has not yet arrived as the scheme only received sanction in 1911 and a sufficient time has not yet elapsed to judge of its weak points. But there can be no doubt that the defect to which we have drawn attention is both real and palpable and it will cause no appreciable drain on the public purse to remove the grievances of hard-working clerks especially when the prices of the necessaries of life have gone up certainly 25 per cent. higher since the scheme referred to came first to be formulated.

Assistant Taxing Officer.

The scheme sanctioned in 1911 omitted also to take into consideration the inadequacy of the pay of the Assistant Taxing Master. He is practically the head of a department and his duties are of a highly responsible nature often involving questions of a quasi judicial character. He has to safeguard the interests of every suitor on the Original Side and protect him against all improper charges either at the instance of his own lawyers or his legal adversaries. Besides exercising his discrimination and judgment constantly, he has also to guide his department so that there may not be any undue delay in the assessment of costs. It may be mentioned in this connection that the staff of the Taxing Office have to take a lot of work home to prevent a congestion in the department through the accumulation of arrears.

It is quite anomalous therefore that the Assistant Taxing officer should receive the same pay (i.e., Rs. 300) as he used to in the days of the Supreme Court. The Registrar's duties have increased immensely since then and he has been provided with several Assistant Registrars to enable him to cope with the work of his department. The scale of pay for some of the more responsible Assistant Registrars has now been fixed on a scale rising from Rs 400 to Rs. 600. The duties of the Assistant Taxing Officer is by no means less onerous and responsible than theirs and we consider it but just and fair that his salary should also be on the same scale. The Assistant Taxing Officer in the Bombay High Court, we understand, gets Rs. 700 a month. The claims of this officer in Calcutta should therefore receive the sympathetic consideration of the Government of India.

Limited Hindu woman's estate if may be created by contract.

The case of Meda Burgamma v. Mitta Chelimayga, I. L. R. 36 Mad 484, which lays down that a woman's estate can be obtained by a Hindu female not only by inheritance but also by contract of parties is based on the decisions of the Privy Council in Radha Prosad Mullik v. Ranimoni Dasi, L. R. 35 I. A. 118, and Karimuddin v. Govind Krishna Narain, L R. 36 I. A. 138. The facts were that on the death of one of two undivided brothers the surviving brother entered into an agreement with the widow of the deceased, who left behind him besides her a daughter by another wife, that he would give her in adoption one of his sons, if sons were born to him, and in default of his so doing he finally agreed to give her a half share in the property. After his death without any issue the widows of the two brothers divided the property in equal shares between themselves. On a suit by the daughter of the first brother the question arose, "in what capacity did the widow of the brother who died first take a half share in the property?" On a construction of the agreement their Lordships held that it was the intention of the parties that she was to have the half share as the representative of her deceased husband. On behalf of the widow it was contended that what she took was a gift from her brother-in-law to whom the property had passed by survivorship, that a woman's estate could be obtained by a Hindu female only by inheritance and such an estate could not be created by contract of parties or by grant, that in any case even if she was intended to be given a life interest her right could not be taken to be a widow's estate descendible to the reversionary heirs of her husband. The Court overruled this contention and held that a widow's estate was created by the agreement and the Plaintiff was, as the next reversioner, entitled to succeed. It appears that the words in the agreement were "I shall give you a half share, after division of the property." In the absence of anything further tending to show that the idea of the widow taking the property in her absolute right was present in the mind of the promisor it seems that the view taken by their Lordships is in conformity with the general principles of Hindu Law regarding acquisition of property by females.

Civil Procedure Code, s. 92.

In Muhammad Abdul Majid Khan v. Ahmed Said Khan, I. L. R 35 All. 459, their Lordships interpreted the scope of sec. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Plaintiff brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a declaration that he was entitled to the office of Mutwali of a certain Wakf property and for possession of the same by the ejectment of the Defendant. The defence raised was that the suit as brought came within the scope of sec. 92, C. P. C., and should have been brought in the "principal Civil Court of Original Jurisdiction" and the Court of Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain it. Their Lordships on a consideration of reported cases under the corresponding section (539) of the old Code held that the scope and application of sec. 92 was very limited in character and the Plaintiff not asking for any of the reliefs specified in the section and not suing on behalf of the public or of any section of the public but merely as an individual to enforce his own alleged individual rights, the suit was not one within the purview of sec. 92 and so within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

APPEAL FROM BOMBAY.

LORD SHAW.
LORD MOULTON.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1913,
10, December.

SORABJI HORMUSJI BATLIWALLA
v.
JAMSHEDJI MERWANJI WADIA.

Friend's liability to a friend for injuries caused by negligent motor driving at an excessive speed near a railway crossing.

This was a petition for special leave to appeal from a judgment of the Bombay High Court, dated 1st September 1913, affirming the judgment of the said High Court in its original civil jurisdiction. The Plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 69,000 damages for injuries received by him by reason of the Petitioner's (Defendant's) negligence. The facts were as follows:—

In September 1910, the Plaintiff and the Defendant with their friends were staying in two adjoining bungalows:—The Defendant had a motor car. One day the Defendant took out the Plaintiff in his car along with other persons, and the Defendant was driving the car. Near a Railway crossing an accident took place with the result that a girl was killed and the Plaintiff was seriously injured. The Plaintiff alleged that the Defendant was negligent, first, in driving the motor when he was incompetent to do so; second, in driving the car when overloaded; and, third, in driving at an excessive speed. Macleod, J., found against the Plaintiff on the first two allegations, but found that the Defendant was guilty of negligence because he was driving at an excessive speed. He held that the accident was due to the Defendant approaching the crossing at an excessive speed in order to get over the crossing before the gates were shut for the approaching train and awarded Rs. 38,000 to the Plaintiff. On appeal Sir Basil Scott, C. J., and Batchelor, J., affirmed the judgment of Macleod, J., but reduced the amount to Rs. 36,000. In the course of their judgment they observed as follows:—

"It is unnecessary here either to attempt to fix the precise difference between negligence and gross negligence, or to define the exact degree of the Defendant's liability. For, in our view of the facts of this case, the Defendant's negligence and carelessness were such that, putting the law as to his responsibility most favourably to him, it is impossible to acquit him of liability; assuming that gross negligence amounting to culpable default is required, then we think we have it here.

It appears to us however that the determination of this point of law will be facilitated if we consider not so much the degree of negligence which would expose the Defendant to liability as the nature of the positive duty, which in the circumstances of this case was cast upon him. Upon this aspect of the matter we have the guidance of the Earl of Halsbury's "Laws of England" (title 'Negligence,' Art: 641). Mr. Setalvad admits that the driving of a motor car is a business or occupation requiring skill, and undoubtedly the Defendant had that skill; that being so, and he being a volunteer the article cited lays down that he was bound to act to the best of his skill, which must be such as a person skilled in such matters may reasonably be expected to possess . . . . . . In the present case the Defendant was admittedly a person of competent skill in driving a motor car though the evidence suggests that he was a nervous driver. Moreover he places himself in a situation which implied the possession of competent skill. If this is a correct statement of the law, the only question which remains is whether the Defendant at the critical point of the drive exercised such skill as a person skilled in driving motor cars may reasonably be expected to possess. We entirely agree with Macleod, J., that this question must be answered in the negative. In our opinion the evidence establishes that the sole cause of the disaster was the excessive and reckless speed at which the Defendant was driving."

Hence this petition.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C. (with him Mr. Arthur Page) submitted that the appeal involved an important question of law. He contended that the Defendant was not liable to the Plaintiff, who was a bare licensee, except upon proof of gross negligence, or for "setting a trap." Mere excessive speed was not enough to make the Defendant guilty of an actionable breach of duty. Reliance was placed on the following authorities: Indermaur v. Dawes (L. R. 1 C. P. 274 at p. 286). Moffatt v. Bateman (L. R. 3 P. C., p. 121). Shiells v. Thorne. (H. Blackstone's Reports, Vol. 1, p. 159).

Their Lordships rejected the petition.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM THE SUPREME COURT OF CANADA.]

LORD ATKINSON.
LORD MOULTON.
LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.

1912,

THE EASTERN CONSTRUCTION Co., LD.,
v.
THE NATIONAL TRUST Co., LD., and others.

Rights and liabilities of bailors and bailees—What constitutes agency by ratification.

The Respondent Company brought jointly with John Shilton and William Hollaway Wallbridge, an action against the Appellant Company, William Miller and William Dimmie Dikson, to recover damages for trespassing on their land, cutting down and carrying away certain pine and tamarack trees growing thereon, and injuring the land. The Respondents, Therese Schmidt and John Shilton, brought a similar action against the same Defendants to recover damages for similar trespasses and wrongful acts alleged to have been committed on their lands, claiming similar relief. A third party action was instituted by notice by Miller and Dickson against the Construction Company, claiming to be indemnified. Before the trial a notice was served by the Plaintiffs in both of the two main actions to the effect that an application would be made at the trial to the presiding Judge to amend the statements of claim by alleging that the Defendants after felling this timber manufactured it into ties or railway sleepers, and wrongfully converted those ties to their own use.

The actions were tried together before Mr. Justice Clute without a jury and resulted in judgment being recovered in the first action against the Defendants.

The Defendants appealed in both cases to the Court of Appeal of Ontario. That Court, by its judgment and order dated the 1st of April 1911, reversed, with some modifications, the judgments and orders made by the trial Judge in both cases. On appeal by the Plaintiffs in both suits to the Supreme Court of Canada, that Court, by its orders of the 21st of March 1912, reversed the decision of the Court of Appeal of Ontario, and held that the two sets of Defendants, the Construction Company and Miller and Dickson, were equally liable to the respective Plaintiffs for the sums awarded against them by the trial Judge in each case for damages, not, however, on the statement of claim as it originally stood, nor yet as it was proposed to be amended, but in detinue in respect of certain pine and tamarack timber cut and removed by Miller and Dickson from the mining locations of the respective Plaintiffs. Hence these appeals.

Their Lordships' judgment allowing the appeals was delivered by LORD ATKINSON:—

"It appears to their Lordships that according to the only construction of which these instruments are reasonably susceptible, the property in the pine trees growing on these locations remained in the Crown. Indeed, this point was scarcely contested by Mr. Ewart. He did contend, however, that the proprietary right of the Crown was limited in two directions, first, by the provisions of sec. 2 of the Crown Timber Act (R. S. O, 1897, c. 32), passed in the same session of Parliament as the Mines Act; and, secondly, by the provisions of the latter Act itself conferring as they do on the patentee and lessee respectively the right to cut timber for mines, &c., and amounting when coupled with the finding of the trial Judge as to the bare sufficiency of the supply for these last-named purposes, to a prohibition against the giving by the Crown of any licence or authority to cut for other purposes any of the pine trees growing on these locations. As to the first point, this section of the Timber Act plainly applies only to licences about to be granted to cut timber on land which are not at that time the subject of a grant to anyone, but which are in the possession of the Crown. As to the second, it may well be that, having regard to the finding of the learned trial Judge, if licences were granted by the Crown to cut this timber, the patentee or lessee, as the case might be, might have a right to recover by petition of right from the Cown damages in respect of the injury thus done to their respective mining locations. It is not necessary in this case to decide that point. But even if the effect on the rights and powers of the Crown were such as it is contended for, it is a wholly different proposition that the propety in the pine trees when felled even by a trespasser would not belong to the Crown. In the opinion of their Lordships it is perfectly clear that the pine trees when felled were, in this case, the property of the Crown. It may well be doubted if in truth and fact the timber felled ever passed out of the possession of the servants of Miller and Dickson into that of the Plaintiffs. "Taking the view, however, of the facts most favourable to the Plaintiffs, namely, that it did so pass, the Plaintiffs could only have had possession of it as the bailees of the Crown. No doubt in that position of things, if nothing more had occurred, they would have been entitled to have recovered from Miller and Dickson, and possibly from the Construction Company, the full value of the timber felled, as well as any special damage they might themselves have sustained by reason of being deprived of the possession of the felled trees, not because they had in truth and fact any proprietary right in, or title to the property in the trees or in the ties into which they were manufactured, but because to use the words of Lord Campbell in Jeffries v. Great Western Railway Company, 5 E. & B. 802, p. 806, as "against a wrong-doer possession is title." That is no new doctrine. It was decided in 1796 in Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Strange 505. "That the finder of jewel though he does not by such finding acquire an absolute property or ownership yet he has such a property as will enable him to keep it against all but the rightful owner, and consequently may maintain trover." That principle was affirmed as applicable to a bailee by the case of The Winkfield, 1902, P., p. 42. Both this case and the case of Jeffries v. Great Western Railway Company were approved of by Lord Davey in giving the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Glenwood Lumber v. Philips (1904), A. C. 405—410, and it must be now taken as conclusively established. But it would be against all notions of justice that the bailee who recovers the full value of the goods wrongfully taken out of his possession, should be able to retain it for himself. The goods were not his, they belonged to the bailor. The money recovered under the judgment represents, and is substituted for the goods themselves. To allow the bailee to keep it for himself would be to compensate him in damages for a loss he has never suffered; and accordingly it was decided in Turner v. Hardcastle (11 C. B. (N. S.) 683), and approved of in the judgment in the Winkfield case, that the bailee who in such circumstances recovers the full value of the goods must account to the bailor for the sum recovered. In Nicholls v Bastard (2 C. M. and R, at p. 660), Parke, B, said no doubt the bailor may recover as well as the bailee, "and whichever first obtains damages is a full satisfaction." These being the rights and obligation of the bailee it is obvious that if, before action brought by him against the wrong-doer, the bailor has clothed that wrong-doer with the ownership of the goods, the bailee cannot recover from the wrong doer, thus converted into the true owner, the full value of the goods, no more than he could recover their full value from the bailor himself. In such an action the Defendant would not be setting up a jus tertii, but, as donee or assignee of the tertius, a jus sui. Lord Collins, the Master of the Rolls as he then was, was careful to point out this qualification of the bailee's rights in his judgment in the Winkfield case.

Then there remains the question as to the adoption by the Construction Company of the action of Miller and Dickson in trespassing on the Plaintiffs' location. There are many answers to the Plaintiffs' contention on this point. In the first place Miller and Dickson were not the servants or agents of the Construction Company. They were independent contractors. That point was relied upon in the letter of the Construction Company to the solicitors of the Plaintiffs, dated the 11th June 1909, and it is quite clear from the terms of the agreement in writing entered into between the Construction Company and these gentlemen, that this was the true relation between them. Next it is essential to constitute an agency by ratification, that the agent in doing the act to be ratified shall not be acting for himself, but should intend to bind a principal actually named or ascertainable, Keighley, Maxted & Co. v. Durant (1901), A. C. 240. In Wilson v. Barker and Mitchell, 4 B. and Ad., 614, it was held by Littledale, Parke and Patterson, JJ., in effect, that if A wrongfully seizes a chattel for his own use B cannot ratify the act. No doubt, ultimately, the severed timber, when manufactured and delivered by Miller and Dickson for the use of the Construction Company, would come to the Company as a consequence of the tortious acts of the former, but they would be entitled to hold it, not by virtue of those tortious acts, but by virtue of the assignment or donation of the Crown. The doing of the acts furnished no doubt the occasion for the exercise by the Crown of its bounty, but in the absence of evidence to the contrary it is not to be presumed that in using this timber as their own, the Company were taking advantage of these tortious acts rather than taking advantage of the bounty of the Crown, or, in other words, that they had elected to rely on a wrongful rather than a rightful title. Again, ratification must be evidenced by clear adoptive acts, which must be accompanied by full knowledge of all the essential facts It is quite clear from the correspondence, that down to the 11th of June 1909 the Construction Company had not full knowledge of the precise place where these logs were cut, or of the details of the alleged trespasses. And upon that date, as already pointed out, they informed the Plaintiffs that Miller and Dickson were sub-contractors for whose actions they were in no way responsible. Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that there was no evidence before the trial Judge upon which it could be reasonably or justly held that the Construction Company had adopted the trespasses which Miller and Dickson are alleged to have committed, or were in any way responsible for them."

[APPEAL FROM AUSTRALIA.]

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.
LORD SHAW.
LORD MOULTON.
LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.
1913.
25, July.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA
v.
THE ADELAIDE STEAMSHIP CO., LD., and others.

Contract in restraint of trade—Monopoly—Freedom of trade—Freedom of contract.

This is an appeal from an Order of the High Court of Australia in its appellate jurisdiction reversing a judgment of Mr. Justice Isaacs, dated the 22nd December 19[illegible], and made in an action instituted by the Attorney General of the Commonwealth under the provisions of the Australian Industries Preservation Act, 1906, and two amending Acts, No. 5 of 1908 and No. 29 of 1909. Their Lordships dismissed the appeal. In the course of their judgment delivered by Lord Parker the history of the law relating to monopolies and contracts in restraint of trade was discussed. They said :—

At common law every member of the community is entitled to carry on any trade or business he chooses and in such manner as he thinks most desirable in his own interests, and inasmuch as every right connotes an obligation no one can lawfully interfere with another in the free exercise of his trade or business unless there exist some just cause or excuse for such interference. Just cause or excuse for interference with another's trade or business may sometimes be found in the fact that the acts complained of as an interference have all been done in the bonâ fide exercise of the doer's own trade or business and with a single view to his own interests (The Mogul case, 23 Q. B. D., 598, and 1892, Ap. C. 25). But it may also be found in the existence of some additional or substantive right conferred by letters patent from the Crown or by contract between individuals. In the case of letters patent from the Crown this additional or substantive right is generally described as a monopoly. In the latter case the contract on which the additional or substantive right is founded is generally described as a contract in restraint of trade. Monopolies and contracts in restraint of trade have this in common, that they both, if enforced, involve a derogation from the common law right in virtue of which any member of the community may exercise any trade or business he pleases and in such manner as he thinks best in his own interests.

The right of the Crown to grant monopolies is now regulated by the Statute of Monopolies, but it was always strictly limited at common law. A monopoly being a derogation from the common right of freedom of trade could not be granted without consideration moving to the public, just as a toll being a derogation from the public right of passage could not be granted without the like consideration. In the case of new inventions the consideration was found either in the interest of the public to encourage inventive ingenuity or more probably in the disclosure made to the public of a new and useful article or process. In the case of sole rights of trading with foreign parts it might be found in the interest of the public in new countries being opened to trade. But for the validity of every monopoly some consideration moving to the public was necessary. Many of the monopolies purported to be granted by the Tudor or Stuart Sovereigns were bad for want of such consideration, and it was the vexatious interference with trade under cover of these invalid grants which led to the passing of the Statute of Monopolies. Further, monopolies were in the eyes of the lawyers of that time attended with the following evils:—first, increase in the price of the wares, and secondly, deterioration of the wares themselves, both evils being due to the want of healthy competition (11 Coke, 86 b.).

Contracts in restraint of trade were subject to somewhat different considerations. There is little doubt that the common law in the earlier stages of its growth treated all such contracts as contracts of imperfect obligation, if not void for all purposes; they were said to be against public policy in the sense that it was deemed impolitic to enforce them and not because every such contract must necessarily operate to the public injury. The old common law rule against enforcing such contracts has, however, been relaxed in more recent times. Though, speaking generally, it is the interest of every individual member of the community that he should be free to earn his livelihood in any lawful manner, and the interest of the community that every individual should have this freedom, yet under certain circumstances it may be to the interest of the individual to contract in restraint of this freedom, and the community if interested to maintain freedom of trade is equally interested in maintaining freedom of contract within reasonable limits. The existing law on the point is laid down in the case of Nordenfelt v. Maxim Nordenfelt Co, 1894, Ap. C. 535. For a contract in restraint of trade to be enforceable in a Court of law or equity, the restraint, whether it be a partial or general restraint, must (to use the language of Lord Macnaghten, evidently adapted from that of Tindal, C. J., in Horner v. Graves, 7 Bingham, 735) be reasonable both in reference to the interests of the contracting parties and in reference to the interests of the public, so framed and so guarded as to afford adequate protection to the party in whose favour it is imposed, while at the same time it is in no way injurious to the public. Their Lordships are not aware of any case in which a restraint though reasonable in the interests of the parties has been held unenforceable because it involved some injury to the public. Lindley and Bowen, L.J.J., had suggested in the Court below that though a restraint might be reasonable as between the parties to the contract it might be unenforceable because of the "law which forbids monopolies," or because it was calculated to create "a pernicious monopoly," and there is a similar suggestion by Lindley, L. J., in Underwood v. Barber, 1899, 1 Ch. 300. The term "monopoly" cannot be here used in its proper legal signification of a right granted by the Crown, nor can the expression "the law which forbids monopolies" refer to any common law or statutory rule limiting the Crown's prerogative in this respect. The learned Lords Justices are contemplating a state of circumstances in which some trade or industry has passed or is likely to pass into the hands or under the control of a single individual or group of individuals, and are indicating that if a restraint on trade is likely to produce this result, it may on grounds of public policy be unenforceable however reasonable in the interests of the parties to the contract. Such a state of circumstances may, by eliminating competition, entail the evils thought to be incident to monopoly rights granted by the Crown, and may therefore in a popular sense be called a monopoly. It is so called by Lord Justice Farwell in the case of The North Western Salt Company v. The Electrolytic Alkali Company, Limited, 107 L. T. n.s. 439, now under appeal to the House of Lords.

The chief evil thought to be entailed by a monopoly, whether in its strict or popular sense, was the rise in prices which such monopoly might entail. The idea that the public are injuriously affected by high prices has played no inconsiderable part in our legal history. It led no doubt to the enactment of most, if not all, of the penal statutes repealed by 12 Geo. III. c 71. It also lay at the root of the common law offence of engrossing, which, according to Hawkins Pleas of the Crown, Vol. I., book 2, ch. 29, s. 9, consisted in buying up large quantities of wares with intent to re sell at unreasonable prices. It influenced the courts in their attitude towards contracts in restraint of trade. Although, therefore, the whole subject may some day have to be reconsidered, there is at present ground for assuming that a contract in restraint of trade though reasonable in the interests of the parties may be unreasonable in the interests of the public if calculated to produce that state of things which is referred to by Lindley and Bowen, L J.J., as a pernicious monopoly, that is to say, a monopoly calculated to enhance prices to an unreasonable extent. In this connection it should be noticed that the Act of 7 & 8 Vict., c. 24, which abolished the common law offence of engrossing, does not apply to the States of the Commonwealth, and the monopolies in the popular sense of the word are more likely to arise, and if they do arise, are more likely to lead to prices being unreasonably enhanced in countries where a protective tariff prevails than in countries where there is no such tariff. It is, however, in their Lordships' opinion clear that the onus of showing that any contract is calculated to produce a monopoly or enhance prices to an unreasonable extent will lie on the party alleging it, and that if once the Court is satisfied that the restraint is reasonable as between the parties this onus will be no light one. Further, it must be remembered that the question whether a restraint of trade is reasonable either in the interest of the parties or in the interest of the public is a question for the Court, to be determined after construing the contract and considering the circumstances existing when it was made. It is really a question of public policy and not a question of fact upon which evidence of the actual or probable consequences, if the contract be carried into effect, is admissible.

It is only necessary to add that no contract was ever an offence at common law merely because it was in restraint of trade. The parties to such a contract, even if unenforceable, were always at liberty to act on it in the manner agreed. Similarly, combinations, not amounting to contracts, in restraint of trade were never unlawful at common law. To make any such contract or combination unlawful it must amount to a criminal conspiracy, and the essence of a criminal conspiracy is a contract or combination to do something unlawful, or something lawful by unlawful means. The right of the individual to carry on his trade or business in the manner he considers best in his own interests involves the right of combining with others in a common course of action, provided such common course of action is undertaken with a single view to the interests of the combining parties and not with a view to injure others (The Mogul case, ubi supra).

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before FLETCHER AND N. R. CHATTERJEA, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 2603 OF 1912. KEDAR NATH DAS AND ANOTHER, Appellants v. HEMANTA KUMARI DASI, Respondent. 17th December 1913.

Suit to set aside decree—Previous suit not known to Plaintiff—Previous suit false—Jurisdiction.

The suit was brought to set aside an ex parte decree which had been obtained against a woman of the town for goods sold and delivered to her. That ex parte decree was executed and the money was obtained; and, subsequently, the Defendant in the first suit brought the present suit against the original Plaintiff to set aside the ex parte decree. It was found that the fact of the previous suit was not known to the present Plaintiff and that the said suit was in fact, a false suit.

Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to set aside the previous decree.

If the case which was placed before the Court was a false one, the Court had jurisdiction in a subsequent suit to set aside the decree which was obtained by fraud practised on the Court.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before N. R. CHATTERJEA AND TEUNON, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 2391 OF 1912. SYAMA CHURN PAHARY, Appellant v. RAM PROSAD DAS AND OTHERS, Respondents. 4th December 1913.

Adverse possession—Landlord and tenant—Rent, payment of, by tenant to some other person.

The Plaintiff Respondent brought this suit for a declaration of his title to the land in dispute after correction of the record-of-rights in which the Defendant No. 1 had been recorded as the landlord and the Defendant No. 2 as the tenant of the land. The Plaintiff claimed title to the land through one Akhoy Acharji while the Defendant No. 1 said that the land belonged to one Brahmani from whom he and his brother obtained it by inheritance and under a Will in equal shares and that subsequently his brother conveyed his half share to him, that Annapurna and Nilmoni were the successive tenants under Brahmani, that the Defendant No. 2 had acquired the interest of Nilmoni and that the Plaintiff had no title to the land. The Court of first instance found that neither the Plaintiff nor his predecessor-in title had ever realised rent from the tenants in actual possession and that the Defendant No. 1 and his predecessor-in title had been in possession of the land by receipt of rent from the tenants. On these findings the Court of first instance dismissed the suit. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court reversed that decree on the ground that the mere fact that no rent was realised by the landlord from the tenant for more than 12 years would not necessarily show that the possession of the Defendant No. 1 was adverse to the landlord unless it was shown that such realisation of rent by the Defendant No. 1 and his predecessor-in title was in assertion of an hostile title to the knowledge of the Plaintiff and his predecessor and that that not being shown, the Plaintiff was entitled to succeed and it accordingly gave a decree to the Plaintiff.

Held, that the mere fact that the tenant paid rent to some other person would not necessarily show that the possession was adverse to the landlord unless it was shown that such possession was in denial of title of the real owner to his knowledge.

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

was the Naraingarh outrage in December 1907: there was the political fracas in the Midnapore Conference about the same time: there was the Mozufferpur outrage in April 1908 by a Midnapore man, and immediately afterwards the Muraripukur Bomb Factory was unearthed, and a gang of anarchists, some of whom were intimately connected with Midnapore, were arrested: there was the Midnapore local paper preaching sedition of the worst kind: there were anonymous letters threatening Mr. Weston with assassination: there were undoubted cases of picketting and rioting in support of the swadeshi propaganda: Midnapore figured conspicuous as a most suspected spot: these circumstances naturally alarmed the executive authorities and extraordinary precautions were taken. Military Police paraded the streets of the town, and the Maulvi was sent by the Criminal Investigation Department as a special officer for investigating the situation. He sought for informers and obtained two—Abdur Rahman and Rakhal. These naturally were found amongst men of a low standard of morality, and they made their best to deserve their Rs. 25 a month from the secret service fund. The Maulvi wanted them to report about swadeshi and bombs and they supplied such reports. Did he believe all these reports? It is difficult to say that he did at the outset at least; for although he went on making his confidential reports to his superiors he did not take any action until the 7th of July, when he was assured that a real bomb was to be found in the house of the Plaintiff. A search was made and a bomb was found. Accepting as I must the case of Mr. Dutt before us that the reports were genuine and not concocted to suit a case in the process of fabrication, the Maulvi cannot be blamed for taking the reports thenceforward as a basis to work upon. There were no doubt circumstances in the reports which could be verified at once as the reports were made, but the inaction may have been due to uncertainty. In working out the case, however, he acted in a manner which has exposed him and his subordinate Inspector Lal Mohun to severe criticism. I have held that they induced Santosh and Suren to make the confessions which they afterwards retracted, and I have no doubt upon the evidence that they used all means of persuasion and threat for attaining their end. It is clear also that some of the documents were altered for making out a consistent case. For instance, Ex. 56 was altered to suit the confession of Suren and exhibit SS to suit Ex. 56. Ex. 61, an alleged chit from Mr. Dutt produced by Aukhoy Pal was supported by the evidence of Aukhoy Pal, and I have held Ex. 61 to be a forgery and Aukhoy Pal a false witness. The other witnesses examined in support of the reports are more or less insignificant and unreliable. I generally agree with Mr. Justice Fletcher as to the credit to be allowed to these witnesses. The letter from Krishna Prosad Dey said to have been copied into Ex. 56 by the Maulvi also I have held to be a copy of a false document. The bomb formula, Ex. IX, could not have been obtained in the manner stated by Abdur Rahman: in the first place, the formula had already appeared in the Jugantar paper, which used to be sold in Midnapore, and in the second place, the technical terms used in the document could not have been written from dictation by a man of Abdur Rahman's education in letters. These circumstances no doubt throw discredit on the Police Defendant who are responsible for the same, but it does not necessarily follow that they did these things because they wanted to prove a false case to be true. We know of false evidence being given to support a true case when missing links have to be supplied. I cannot therefore positively find that they knew the reports to be false.

The arrest of the Plaintiff was, however, under the orders of Mr. Weston, which they were bound to obey. As the order for arrest was upon the findings within the jurisdiction and authority of Mr. Weston, the case against them also fails.

There is a side issue as to whether Mr. Dutt ought to have appeared as a witness in the case and not as Counsel. I think he ought to have appeared as a witness. He could have thrown light on many parts of the case in which we have had to grope in the dark. I think the case of the Plaintiff on the facts has suffered materially by reason of his absence from the witness-box, whilst he himself has been made the subject of repeated attacks without any means of adequately answering them. I think he has been sadly misadvised in this matter. There was a reference to the English Bar Council by the legal advisers of the Appellants and an opinion obtained which will be found in page xlvi, 16 Calcutta Weekly Notes. This, I have no doubt, is no authority for the Court and was allowed to be read only with the consent of Mr. Dutt. The opinion of the Council is against Mr. Dutt. The opinion of the Privy Council in the case of Victor Corea v. Peiris (9), also seems to support the same view. There the Respondent tendered his own Counsel as a witness and the District Judge refused to admit his evidence. The Supreme Court of Ceylon on appeal had him examined and the Privy Council say as to this: "He was tendered as a witness for the Respondent at the trial, but the District Judge ruled, on some quite unsustainable ground, that being the Respondent's advocate his evidence was inadmissible. The Supreme Court most properly, in their Lordships' opinion, permitted him to be examined." It is a pity therefore, I repeat, that he considered himself debarred by any rule of professional ethics from giving his evidence in the case.

Complaint has also been made that some of his questions in cross-examination were without justification. It may be that his own personal knowledge of the facts supplemented his instructions in these matters, but that is the more a reason why he should have given his evidence under the sanction of an oath and subject to the test of cross-examination. The suggestions made, however, have been abandoned.

I have had the advantage of going through the elaborate judgment of Mr. Justice Woodroffe, and I regret that some of my conclusions are at variance with his, but after a most anxious consideration of the case I could not persuade myself to come to any other conclusion. In arriving at these conclusions I have not overlooked the discrepancies in the evidence, but given prominence to the general tenor of the same. I have also borne in mind that mofussil witnesses were examined and cross-examined under extraordinary surroundings in this august tribunal in its Original Side. I respectfully differ from Mr. Justice Woodroffe in my appreciation of the evidence of the pleader witnesses, especiallly Babu Upendra Nath Maity, the leader of the Midnapore Bar. They are pleaders of position, and it is not probable that they would deliberately give false evidence. They may have made mistakes from lapse of memory, but I cannot hold that they have told deliberate falsehoods. Maity has made an evident error in respect of a date, and Peary has made some confusion about the circumstances relating to the petition of the 31st of August. But that does not mark them out as false witnesses. It is a pity, I repeat again, that Mr. Dutt did not come to the box, as he was the only man who could have thrown any definite light on the point. But we have not also got the Court Inspector, the custodian of the records. The records disclose several petitions on which stamps were not punched or orders passed on the dates they were filed, and I am not prepared to hold that this petition was smuggled into the record A petition was admittedly made for bail, and this is the only petition for Santosh which asks for bail. Mr. P. K. Bose says that Mr. Dutt said he wanted to make some important petitions and therefore wanted the prisoners to sign the petition : a mere bail petition is not such an important petition : it is usually done by the pleader or mukhtear signing for the prisoner. I agree with Mr. Justice Fletcher that there was some misunderstanding about this petition.

(9) 14 C. W. N. 86 (1909).

DONALD WESTON v. PEARY MOHAN DASS.

The result is that although upon the findings I have arrived at the Plaintiff was innocent of the bomb and has suffered in various ways, his suit must be dismissed and the Appeal is allowed with costs.

In a suit for khas possession of certain mouzahs comprised in a putni taluk purchased by the Plaintiffs at an auction sale under a decree for rent obtained by the zemindar, the Defendants, who with one N claimed to be durputnidars of the mouzahs in suit, having objected that N had not been joined as a party, the suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge inter alia on the ground of non joinder of N, but on the Plaintiffs' application to the High Court at the hearing of their appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, N was ordered to be made a party Defendant to the suit which was remanded to the lower Court. N did not appeal against the decision of the High Court :

Held—That N was not at any time a necessary party to the suit so far as the other Defendants were concerned and they were not prejudiced by the fact that N was added as a Defendant when the suit was in appeal and the omission to make N an original Defendant did not make the suit bad for non joinder as against the other Defendants who were the Appellants before the Privy Council.

That the Plaintiffs having proved that the notices of annulment of incumbrances were served on the Defendants in the manner prescribed for service of summons in the Civil Procedure Code, the notices were duly served in accordance with Government Rules made in that behalf.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the Calcutta High Court delivered by Rampini and Sharfuddin, JJ.

The Plaintiffs instituted two suits, Nos. 239 and 240, which were tried together as analogous suits by consent of the parties. They related to a putni in Mahal Dihi Panchpota comprising of mouzahs held by the putnidars under the zemindar, the Maharaja of Krishnagar. The Plaintiffs' case was that the putni being sold for its own arrears, free from all incumbrances under sec. 165 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, was purchased by the Plaintiffs with powers to annul all incumbrances, that notices under sec. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, were served upon the Defendants for the annulment of the incumbrances held by them under the putni, that the incumbrances held by the Defendants therefore came to an end and the Defendants were consequently no longer entitled to occupy the land. The Plaintiffs accordingly sued for khas possession and mesne profits and damages.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the Plaintiffs' suits holding that they were defective for non joinder and mis-joinder of parties and that the Plaintiffs failed to prove the service of the notices issued under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

On the question of non-joinder the Sub-Judge found as follows:—"In Suit No. 240 the Defendants prove that Brojendro Kumar Gossain (who had a durputni right of two annas and eight pies share in the mouzahs in suit) died long ago, before the issue of the Plaintiffs' notice and the institution of the rent suit by the Maharaja against the putnidars. Brojendro left two sons, Sarat Chandra and Ramani Mohan, of whom the latter died unmarried leaving behind him his mother Nitharmoni as his only heir. In the plaint only Sarat Chandra has been made a party and Nitharmoni, the other heir, who along with Sarat Chandra represents Brojendro's share has been excluded."

As to the service of notices under sec. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, the Subordinate Judge found—"The evidence adduced by the Plaintiffs fails to show that there has been a strict compliance with the rules laid down by Government for the service of notices under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Those rules lay down that in case of the notice being addressed only to one individual the service shall be effected in the manner prescribed for the service of summons upon a Defendant under the Civil Procedure Code and that when notices are addressed to more than one person the service shall be caused either in the above manner or by proclamation and beat of drum by posting it in the presence of not less than two persons on some conspicuous place in the village and also by fixing it up in the village office, if any, where the rent is collected.

The Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court which directed that Nitharmoni be made a party to the suit which was remanded to the lower Court for decision of the issues other than those of misjoinder and non-joinder and service of notice, so far as she and the other Defendants were concerned. The concluding portion of the judgment of the High Court was as follows:—

"The notices in Suit No. 240 were addressed to several persons. Hence service could be effected by proclamation and beat of drum, by affixing them to conspicuous places in the villages and by fixing them up at the village offices, if any, where the rent is usually paid. There cannot be the shadow of a doubt as to the proclamation and beat of drum. There is also good evidence that the notices were affixed to trees in the village. The witnesses who went to serve the notices say they were told there were no village offices and that the rent was usually collected at the Sadar Kachari. Two witnesses for the opposite party say that there are village offices in three of the villages. We are not satisfied that this is true. In any case the Defendants are durputnidars. The village offices referred to in the rule must, we think, be the offices in which the rent of persons whose tenure is to be annulled is paid. We are satisfied that there were no such offices in any of the four villages which are included in the durputni. Hence we consider that the notices in Suit No. 240 were duly served. . . . .

"In Suit No. 240 the only defect alleged is that a lady named Nitharmoni has not been made a party. The Appellants pray that she may be made a party now. We direct that this be done and the Suit No. 240 be remanded to the Subordinate Judge for decision of the other issues so far as she and the other Defendants are concerned. Costs will abide the result. The Respondents' pleader requests us to note that the Subordinate Judge has not decided the second part of the third issue; viz., whether the notices issued and served under sec. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, were valid. The Subordinate Judge should consider and decide this question as well as the remaining issues in the suits."

Mr. G. E. A. Ross, K. C., and Mr. G. C. O'Gorman for the Appellants submittted that the service of the notices on the Defendants was not proved, and if proved, it was not effected in accordance with the terms of sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Subordinate Judge's view of the evidence was right.

Mr. Loundes for the Respondents submitted that the returns of the serving peons together with the orders recorded by the Deputy Collector shewed that the notices were duly served. The Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and not the Bengal Tenancy Act, applied. Under sec. 80 of the former it was a good service and the decision of the High Court was quite right.

Mr. Ross replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an Appeal from a decree of the High Coart of Judicature at Calcutta, dated the 28th of August 1907, which set aside a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Nadia, dated the 31st of July 1905, and by which the suit was remanded to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for trial of issues which had not been disposed of by him.

The suit was brought to obtain khas possession of mouzahs which were comprised in a putni taluk which had been purchased by the Plaintiffs at an auction sale under a decree for rent which had been obtained by the Maharaja of Nadia. The Plaintiffs also claimed mesne profits and other reliefs. The Defendants raised various defences, to two of which only is it necessary to refer for the purposes of this Appeal. One of these defences was that certain notices which should have been served under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, Act VIII of 1885, had not been served. The other of these defences was that the suit could not be maintained by reason of the non-joinder of one Nitharmoni Debi as a Defendant.

The Subordinate Judge of Nadia found that service of the notices under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, had not been proved, and further, that the suit was bad by reason of the non-joinder as a Defendant of Nitharmoni Debi, and dismissed the suit with costs. From the decree of the Subordinate Judge the Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

On the Appeal, the High Court not being satisfied that there was in any of the villages in question an office where the rent was usually paid, and finding that the notices had been served by proclamation and beat of drum, and by posting them on trees in the villages, held that the notices required by sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, had been duly served in one of the manners prescribed for service of such notices by the Government Rules then in force.

In the Court of the Subordinate Judge it had apparently been contended that the notices had been served in the manner prescribed for the service of a summons on a Defendant under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and also by proclamation and beat of drum and by posting them, in the presence of not less than two persons, on some conspicuous place in the village. Under the circumstances of this case either manner of service would have been sufficient. In the view of the evidence which their Lordships take, it is not necessary to express an opinion as to whether there had or had not been effective service by proclamation and beat of drum, and by posting the notices as required by the Government Rules relating to the service of such notices. Their Lordships find on the evidence which was brought to their attention that the notices were served in the manner prescribed for the service of a summons on a Defendant under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, which was the Code of Civil Procedere which was in force at the time when the notices were served.

On the Appeal to the High Court the only defect in the framing of the suit which was alleged by the Defendants, who were Respondents to that Appeal, was that Nitharmoni Debi had not been made a Defendant. On the application of the Plaintiffs, who were Appellants in the High Court, the High Court ordered that Nitharmoni Debi should then be made a Defendant, and she was accordingly added as a Defendant. She has not appealed against the decree of the High Court, and it is not necessary for their Lordships to express any opinion as to her position in this litigation. It was not seriously contended before this Board, indeed it could not have been argued successfully, that the omission to make Nitharmoni Debi an original Defendant made the suit bad for non-joinder as against the other Defendants who are the Appellants here. Nor could it have been successfully argued that the order of remand was bad in law, so far as these Defendants are concerned, by reason of the fact that Nitharmoni Debi was added as a Defendant by the High Court when the suit was in appeal before the High Court. Nitharmoni Debi was not at any time a necessary party to the suit so far as these Defendants-Appellants are concerned, nor have they been prejudiced by the fact that she was added as a Defendant when the suit was in Appeal.

This Appeal fails and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the Appeal should be dismissed. The Appellants must pay the costs of the Appeal.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.

No. 58 OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J.
WOODROFFE, J.
1912,
17, February.

RAMJI and others, Defendants, Appellants,
v.
JANKI DAS and another, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 230—Contract of sale—Person purporting to contract for undisclosed principal where no such principal exists, if entitled to enforce performance.

A person who purports to contract for an undisclosed principal where no such principal exists is not entitled to enforce the performance of it.

This was an action brought by sellers against buyers for damages for breach of a contract for the sale of gunny bags. Under the contract deliveries were to be made by the Plaintiff to the buyers at the rate of 20,000 bags a month from December 1907 to April 1908. The December instalment was not taken but the loss due on it was settled under a settlement contract between the Plaintiff and the Defendant and the money due to the Plaintiff was paid. A similar course was taken with regard to the January instalment and the present action was with reference to the February instalment.

Mr. Justice Harington decreed the suit whereupon the Defendant preferred the present appeal.

The chief issue at the original trial and on which this appeal was argued was:—

"Did the Plaintiff contract as agent for an undisclosed principal or was the Plaintiff the real principal," and if so, was he entitled to enforce the performance of the contract?

Mr. Sarkar for the Defendants-Appellants.—The fact that the Plaintiffs as brokers were the agents of the Defendants is conclusively proved, and also that the alleged principal was not a bonâ fide principal at all but was a mere name for the Plaintiffs. The brokers were interested in the result of the contract and were not entitled to sue thereon, such contracts being against public policy. If the Plaintiffs wanted to deliver their own goods (if any at all) they were precluded from suing by reason of sec. 230 of the Indian Contract Act.

Mr. Pugh (with him Mr. A. N. Chaudhuri) for the Plaintiffs-Respondents.—The Plaintiffs were ready and willing to deliver these bags to Defendants and offered them delivery which Defendants failed to take. The Plaintiffs content themselves with merely proving the contract. There is no evidence that there was a person behind the Plaintiffs who was in fact a principal whose name they did not disclose. But whether there was a real principal behind or not, does not affect the case because the relationship of principal and agent did not exist between the Plaintiff and the Defendants. The rights of the Defendants are not affected in any way and it has not been shown that the Plaintiffs acted as agents for the Defendants.

RAMJI v. JANKI DAS.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—This Appeal arises out of a suit brought on a contract No. 3525 of the 6th of November 1907, for the sale to the Defendants of a lac of gunny bags of the sort described in the sold-note. The terms of the contract are set out in the sold-note, and it there appears among other things, that the price was Rs. 30 4 as. per 100 bags free alongside, and that delivery of the goods was to be given and taken, 20,000 monthly, from December 1907 to April 1908. That contract is signed by the Plaintiffs as brokers and it purports to be addressed to principals. The instalments of December and January were settled, and no question arises regarding them, except as to brokerage, as to which nothing has been said before us. The February instalment was not delivered; and according to the plaint, damage to the extent of Rs. 972-14-3 p. was thereby sustained by the Plaintiffs and became due to them. The total sum claimed in this suit is thus Rs. 1,031-9 as. The case was instituted in the Presidency Small Cause Court, but was transferred to the High Court, and came on for hearing before Mr. Justice Harington who has passed a decree in the Plaintiffs' favour. From his judgment the present Appeal is preferred.

It is not denied that the Defendants entered into a contract in the terms of the sold-note: but it has throughout been denied that the Defendants entered into such a contract as is alleged, that is to say, a contract as is set forth in the plaint, which represents the Plaintiffs as vendors to the purchasers. When the case came before Mr. Justice Harington, the following issues were raised: (1) Did the Defendants enter into the contract stated in the plaint?; (2) Did the Plaintiff contract for undisclosed principal or for himself?; and (3) were the Plaintiffs ready and willing to deliver?

Objection was taken to the third issue, but not to either of the other two—no objection could be taken to either of them, because they embodied and amplified that which was set forth in the written statement from the very commencement.

The Plaintiffs Respondents have been represented before us by Mr. Pugh who very properly accepted the position that this case must turn upon whether or not the Plaintiffs are able to establish that they had an undisclosed principal behind them. The Plaintiffs, as I have already said, purported to sign as brokers. If the contract was with the Plaintiffs, it was entered into with them in their character of agents, and as no principal was disclosed, then the position must be that there was an undisclosed principal or that there was no principal at all. The Plaintiffs' contention is that there was an undisclosed principal, one Bhai Kubiram, and that the existence of this undisclosed principal entitles them to sue, under the provisions of cl. 2 of sec. 230 of the Contract Act: so that what we have now to see is whether in truth Kubiram was the undisclosed principal or whether he is an afterthought. The plaint as drawn is opposed wholly to the idea that there was an undisclosed principal. It treats the Plaintiffs as themselves the vendors. In the same way the settlements of December and January appear to me to point, if anything, not to Kubiram being the undisclosed principal but to the Plaintiffs themselves claiming to be the principals. There is no brokerage charged to Kubiram. As far as we can see there is no contract with Kubiram, and for some reason, which I am wholly unable to understand if the case is a true one, Kubiram was not put into the box: No book of his was produced, and we are told, and the statement has not been contradicted before us, Kubiram's name never came to light until the opening of the Plaintiffs' case. I am not satisfied that Kubiram was an undisclosed principal of the Plaintiffs. If Mr. Justice Harington had held otherwise, I should have hesitated to differ from him on a question of fact like that but as I read the judgment of the learned Judge he is careful to avoid that conclusion. All he says is that "there is evidence that in this case there was a person behind the Plaintiffs who, they said, was in fact a principal whose name they did not disclose." The learned Judge does not say that he believed that evidence. He does not discuss the various elements in the case which tell against the view that Kubiram was really and truly the undisclosed principal, but he goes on to say that in his view it is immaterial whether there was the relationship of principal and agent between Kubiram and the Plaintiffs. But if Kubiram was not the undisclosed principal then sec. 236 of the Contract Act applies. In order to appreciate the true scope of that section, one must bear in mind the general scheme of Ch. X of the Contract Act which deals with the subject of agency. The sections of that chapter are divided into a series of groups, and of those I only need refer to two: There is the group comprising secs. 211 to 221 which deal with the agent's duty to the principal: Then there is the group which includes secs. 226 to 238 which deal with the effect of agency on contracts with third persons. Mr. Justice Harington in accepting the view that it was immaterial whether there was an undisclosed principal or not was influenced by the consideration that the relationship of principal and agent did not exist between the Plaintiffs and the Defendants. At the outset it is difficult to see how it could be said that there was not that relationship; and the Defendants certainly did not accept that view. But it is unnecessary to discuss the case from that point of view. Sec. 236 is clear and distinct: It provides that "a person with whom a contract has been entered into in the character of agent, is not entitled to require the performance of it, if he was in reality acting not as agent, but on his own account." Having negatived the theory of Bhai Kubiram being an undisclosed principal we have a position to which sec. 236 of the Contract Act applies with precision. It is to no purpose to consider what the line of cases is which that section seeks to embody or whether it is in accord with the English rule of law: Enough to say that the section as it stands is the final exposition of law in India, and, in my opinion, Kubiram disappearing, sec. 236 governs the case. The Plaintiffs therefore are the persons with whom a contract has been entered into in the character of agents and so they are not entitled to require the performance of it inasmuch as in reality they were acting not as agents but on their own account.

For these reasons I think the judgment of Mr. Justice Harington cannot be upheld and we must reverse his decree and dismiss the suit with costs throughout to be paid by the Plaintiff.

APPEALS FROM ORDERS

Nos. 239, 281 TO 284 OF 1911.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. WALMSLEY, J. 1913, Heard, 28, July and 15, August. Judgment, 29, August.	MOHAMAYA PROSAD SINGH and others, Decree-holders, Appellants, v. ABDUL HAMID and others, Judgment-debtors, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), sec. 184, Sch. III, Art. 6—Decree incapable of execution—Amendment of decree—Limitation—Time if runs from date of amendment.

A decree which does not specify the reliefs granted is incapable of execution and cannot be considered as time barred and legally dead even though three years have elapsed from the date of the decree.

An application for execution of a decree for rent which was originally incapable of execution is not barred by limitation although presented more than three years after the date of decree but within three years from the date of amendment of the decree making it capable of execution.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 23rd of May 1911 against the order of A. Mellor, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Darbhanga, dated the 24th of February 1911, affirming the order of Babu Jaya Prasad Panday, Munsif of that place, dated the 5th of March 1910.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Shoroshi Charan Mitra fot the Appellants.

Moulvi Mahomed Mustafa Khan and Moulvi Abdul Ashan for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

No. 239—

This Appeal arises out of an application for execution of a decree for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act not exceeding Rs. 500, and the question is whether the application for execution is barred by limitation having regard to the provisions of sec. 184 and Art. 6, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It appears that in the rent suit, the Court of Appeal by its judgment, dated the 23rd December 1902, held that the Plaintiff was entitled to rent at the rate claimed by him and allowed the plea of part-payment set up by the Defendant. The decree, however, which was prepared, did not mention the amount claimed, the annual rent, or the amount of rent and costs decreed. The Defendant's appeal to the High Court was dismissed on the 28th April 1905 and the decree of the lower Appellate Court was accordingly confirmed. The decree-holder applied for execution of decree in December 1907, but the Court rejected the application on the ground that the decree could not be executed. Thereupon the decree-holder applied to the High Court for amendment of the decree by inserting in it the annual rent, the amount claimed and the amounts decreed as rent and costs.

This Court thereupon made the following order on the 6th July 1908: "The decrees passed by the lower Appellate Court in these cases do not state what reliefs are granted to the successful parties before it. The decrees should specify the reliefs granted. We accordingly direct that the decrees be modified and the reliefs granted be specified from a perusal of the plaints and judgments of the lower Appellate Court." This order appears to have been made in the absence of the judgment-debtor who subsequently made an application stating that he did not get notice of the decree-holder's application in time for instructing pleader to oppose the said application and prayed for setting aside the said order. And the following order was made on the 16th July 1898 :—" The order made by us on the 6th July last on the application of the Respondents for amending the decrees of the lower Appellate Court will stand, but that order should contain a further direction that the present Petitioner, namely, the Appellant in this Court, will be entitled to raise any question as to limitation in the execution proceedings and our order for amendment of the decree will not affect any such plea of limitation. We do not express any opinion on the question of limitation." The deceee was accordingly amended on the 23rd June 1909.

The present application for execution of the decree was presented on the 2nd October 1909, and the judgment-debtor opposed it on the ground that it was barred by limitation. Both the Courts below have given effect to the objection, and the decree-holders have appealed to this Court. We are of opinion that the application for execution of the decree is not barred by limitation. Art. 6 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act no doubt provides a three years' limitation for an application for execution of a rent decree passed under that Act not exceeding Rs. 500 and the time is to run from the date of the decree. But that limitation can apply only where there is a decree which can be executed at the date it is passed. The decree in the present case as originally passed was one wholly incapable of execution and until it was amended under the order of the High Court in 1909 there was no decree which was capable of being executed. We think that if Art. 6 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act were to apply to such a decree, the decree-holder may be deprived of the fruits of a judgment in his favour through the fault or delay of the Court or of its officer in drawing up a decree which can be executed. It is not a case where the decree could be executed although the decree-holder could not obtain the full benefit of the judgment owing to the decree not being in accordance with and not fully expressing the result of the judgment. A similar view was taken in the case of Muhamad Suleman Khan v. Muhamad Yar Khan (1). In that case the decree as originally framed was found by the High Court to be incapable of execution and was not finally amended by that Court so as to become capable of execution, until nearly twelve years after it was passed, and it was held that an application to execute such decree which was made within three years from the date of the amendment of the decree was within time.

The learned Judges in that case were of opinion that Art. 178 of the Limitation Act was applicable to such a decree, but it seems to us that so long as no decree capable of execution is in existence, no question of limitation arises with respect to it.

We do not express any opinion upon the questions whether the decree holder can get a fresh start from the date of amendment of a decree which is capable of execution though such decree may not be in entire accordance with the judgment, and whether a case of amendment of decree comes within the words 'review of judgment' in Art. 6, cl. (3) of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the provisions of which are similar to those which were contained in cl. 3 of Art. 179 of Act XV of 1877 (before cl. 4 was introduced by the present Limitation Act IX of 1908) as to the construction of which there is some difference of judicial opinion. The facts of the present case are peculiar. The decree did not at all specify the relief granted, and the judgment-debtor succeeded in getting the application for execution made in 1907 rejected on the ground that the decree was incapable of execution. Under these circumstances we do not think that it is now open to them to say that the decree was capable of execution before it was amended.

(1) I. L. R. 17 All. 89 (1894).

MOHAMAYA PROSAD SINGH v. ABDUL HAMID.

The learned District Judge has held that the decree was "time-barred and therefore legally dead" at the time when the application for amendment was made, three years having passed from the date of the original decree. But we think the decree stands practically in the same position as it would have stood, had it not been signed by the Judge all this time. In either case it would not be capable of execution, and we do not see how a decree which cannot be executed could be 'dead' or time-barred. We are fully alive to the fact that the object of the Legislature in prescribing a three years' period of limitation for execution of rent decrees under the Bengal Tenancy Act, is that such decrees should not be kept pending for a long time like ordinary decrees, but we think the decree for which a limitation is prescribed by Art. 6 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is one which is capable of execution. We are accordingly of opinion that the application for execution is not barred by limitation. In this view it is unnecessary to consider whether the present application for execution can be said to be a continuation of the previous application made in 1907. The orders of the Courts below are set aside, and the case is sent back to the Court of first instance so that it may proceed with the application for execution according to law.

The Appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court. We assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur. Each party will bear his own costs in the Courts below.

This judgment will govern the other Appeals, Nos. 281 to 284 of 1911.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1798 OF 1913.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.

UPENDRA NATH GHOSH, Petitioner, Appellant,
v.
JAMINI MOHAN PAL and ors., Opposite Party, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 105—Record-of-rights, correctness of, if can be impugned by landlord under sec. 105—Unrecorded landlord, if can apply.

The correctness of the record-of-rights can be impugned by the landlord in an application made under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Issues mentioned in sec. 105A can be tried in a proceeding for settlement of rent under sec. 105.

Where an applicant under sec. 105 purchased a tenure in an estate of which he himself was the proprietor, UPENDRA NATH GHOSH v. JAMINI MOHAN PAL.

Held, that the mere fact that his name did not appear in the khatian as owner of the tenure was no ground for holding that he was not entitled to apply under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 14th of June 1913 against a decree of G. Mumford, Esq, Special Judge of Faridpur, dated the 21st of May 1913, affirming a decree of Mr. B. C. Prance, Settlement Officer of that District, dated the 21st of March 1913.

The Appellant in this case made an application before the Settlement Officer of Faridpur which purported to be made under secs. 105 and 105 (A) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In that application he asked to have a fair and equitable rent settled in respect of the land held by the alleged tenants. He further asked to have his name brought into the settlement record as landlord, on the ground that he had purchased the right, title and interest of the recorded landlord at an auction sale, and he also asked to have the record amended so as to shew the tenants as raiyats whose rents will be liable to enhancement instead of as tenure-holders paying a fixed rate of rent. The Settlement Officer rejected the application holding that an application for settling rent under sec. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, could not be filed which at the same time impugned the accuracy of the record-of-rights. The Special Judge, on appeal, confirmed the decision of the Settlement Officer. The Petitioner then preferred this Second Appeal.

Mr. B. C. Mitter and Babu Susil Madhub Mullick for the Appellant.

No one for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal arises out of an application under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Appellant, who was the applicant before the Settlement Officer, is the proprietor of an estate and it appears that he purchased within that estate a tenure within which the holding of the opposite parties is situated. The application was rejected by the Settlement Officer and that order has been confirmed on appeal by the Special Judge. The Petitioner has appealed to this Court.

The first ground upon which the learned Judge proceeded was that as the Appellant was not the recorded landlord he could not maintain the application. It does not appear that any objection was raised by the opposite parties that the applicant had not acquired the interest of the recorded landlord. As we have already stated, the applicant had purchased a tenure (in execution of a decree for arrears of rent) in an estate of which he himself is the proprietor and the mere fact that his name does not appear in the khatian as owner of the tenure is no ground for holding that he is not entitled to apply under sec. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act. We are accordingly of opinion that the first ground upon which the learned Judge proceeded has no substance in it.

The second ground was that an application under sec. 105 could not be maintained where any question impugning the correctness of the record of rights was raised and that, at any rate, such an application could not be maintained by the landlord. We are of opinion that the learned Judge was wrong in the view he took of the provisions of sec. 105 and sec. 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Sec. 105 provides :—" When either the landlord or the tenant applies within two months from the date of the certificate of the final publication of the record-of-rights under sec. 103A, sub-sec. (2), for a settlement of rent, the Revenue Officer shall settle a fair and equitable rent in respect of the land held by the tenant." The application under sec. 106 must, therefore, be made within two months of the final publication of the record-of-rights. A party dissatisfied with any entry in the record-of-rights may proceed under the provisions of sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act within three months of the final publication: but if he adopts the procedure prescribed in sec. 106, it is practically impossible for him to avail himself of the provisions of sec. 105 for the settlement of fair rent, because the application under this latter section must be made within two months of the final publication of the record-of-rights and a suit under sec. 106 is not likely to be disposed of within two months. Most of the matters which can be gone into under sec. 106 are dealt with in cls. (a) to (f) of sec. 105A and it seems to us that the obvious intention of enacting sec. 105A was that, where a party without resorting to the provisions of sec. 106 applies for the settlement of fair rent under sec. 105 and the issues mentioned in sec. 105A are raised, they shall be tried and decided by the Revenue Officer and rent under sec. 105 will be settled accordingly. It is, we think, sufficient to refer to the provisos to secs. 105A and 106 to show that the issues mentioned in sec. 105A can be tried in a proceeding for settlement of rent under sec. 105. The proviso to sec. 105A runs thus:—"Provided that the Revenue Officer shall not try any issue under this section which has been or is already directly and substantially in issue between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim and has been tried and decided or is already being tried by a Revenue Officer in a suit instituted before him under sec. 106." Similarly the proviso to sec. 106 lays down that the Revenue Officer in a suit under that section shall not try any issue which has been tried and decided or is being tried under sec. 105A. It is obvious therefore that any of the issues mentioned in sec. 105A can be tried in a proceeding under sec. 105 provided such an issue has not been tried and decided or is not being tried in a suit under sec. 106.

Then, we do not see any reason for holding that an issue under sec. 105A can be raised only by the tenant. For instance, cl. (b) says "whether the land although entered in the record-of-rights as being held rent-free is liable to the payment of rent." Now, an entry in the record-of-rights that the land is held rent-free is an entry in favour of the tenant, and therefore it is the landlord who would challenge the correctness of such entry. Some of the issues mentioned in the other clauses may be raised by the landlord, others by the tenants, and some again by either of them.

We are accordingly of opinion that the issues mentioned in sec. 105A can be tried in a proceeding under sec. 105. The judgment and decree of the Courts below must be set aside and the case sent back to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits. We make no order as to costs.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 14th of July 1911 against a decree of H. Allanson, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Santhal Pergunnahs, dated the 16th of March 1911, affirming a decree of S. S. Day, Esq., Subordinate Judge of Rajmahal, dated the 22nd of December 1910.

The material facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal by the Plaintiffs in a suit for rent. The case for the Plaintiffs is that the Defendants are liable to pay rent on the basis of a putni as also a dar-mokurari. The Courts below have decreed the claim based on the putni, but dismissed the claim founded on the dar-mokurari, on the ground that no such claim can be put forward in view of sec. 25 of Reg. III of 1872. The Plaintiffs are zemindars to the extent of ten annas and they also claim to be mokuraridars of sixteen annas in respect of some lands included in the zemindari. Their case is that the Defendants hold under them as putnidars and also as dar mokuraridars ; the hypothesis is that the dar-mokurari lands are distinct from and not included in the putni lands. In the record-of-rights prepared under Reg. III of 1872, the Defendants are, however, described as putnidars; and there is no mention that they are dar-mokuraridars in respect of any land included in the villages now in dispute. The Courts below have accordingly held that the Defendants are liable to pay rent, only in their character as putnidars, and that it is not open to the Plaintiffs to establish in a suit in the Civil Court that the putni does not extend over all the lands of the village and that the Defendants are dar-mokuraridars of lands not included in the putni.

(2) I. L. R. 15 Cal. 735 (1888).
(3) I. L. R. 27 Cal. 11 (1899).
(4) I. L. R. 30 Cal. 369 (1902).

It appears to have been argued on behalf of the Plaintiffs in the Courts below that notwithstanding the absence of an entry in the record-of-rights to the effect that the Defendants are dar-mokuraridars, they are at liberty to establish by evidence in this suit that the Defendants are as a matter of fact dar-mokuraridars of some lands. This contention has been, in our opinion, very properly overruled. The fact that the Defendants have been recorded as putnidars of all the lands in the village implies a decision that they have no dar-mokurari right in respect of any of the lands included in that village. This decision operates as a decree of Court under sec. 11 of Reg. III of 1872. Sec. 9 provides that the Lieutenant-Governor may declare that a settlement shall be made of the whole or any part of the Santhal Pergunnahs for the purpose of ascertaining and recording the various interests and rights in the land. Sec. 10 lays down that the Lieutenant-Governor may appoint officers by whom the settlement is to be made and may invest any officer or officers with the control over them by way of appeal and revision and may make rules for the procedure of such officers in investigating into rights in the land, and the hearing of suits and generally for the guidance of such officers. Sec. 11 then provides that except as provided in sec. 25A, no suit shall lie in any Civil Court regarding any matter decided by any Settlement Court under these rules, and the decisions and orders of the Settlement Court made under these rules regarding the interests and rights mentioned above shall have the force of a decree of Court. It has been argued on behalf of the Plaintiffs that as there is no express decision by the Settlement Court upon the question of the dar-mokurari status of the Defendants, the matter is open for investigation in a Civil suit. In our opinion, this contention is obviously fallacious. If this view were accepted, the object which the Legislature had plainly in view in framing sec. 11, might be completely defeated by the omission of a party, it may be a deliberate omission, to raise a question before the settlement authorities. In the present case, as we have already explained, there is a decision, though a decision by implication, that the Defendants are not dar-mokuraridars in respect of any land included in the disputed villages the whole of which is held by them in putni right. That decision has the force of a decree of Court. The question consequently arises whether it is open to the Plaintiffs to avoid in any manner the effect of this decree.

One of the methods by which a decree of this character may be avoided is mentioned in sec. 25A, namely, where only the rights of zemindars and other proprietors as between themselves are concerned, a suit may, unless it is barred under sec. 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, be brought in a Civil Court to contest the finding or record of the Settlement Officer within three years from the date of the publication of the record-of-rights or of the final order of the Revenue Court. But no such suit shall be brought in any Civil Court after the expiration of three years from such date. Another method is provided in sub sec. (1) of sec. 25 which provides that after the expiration of six months from the date of the publication of the record-of-rights in any village, such record shall be conclusive proof of the rights and customs therein recorded other than the rights mentioned in sec. 25A, except so far as concerns entries in such record regarding which objection by parties interested may still be pending in Original or Appellate Courts or may still be open to appeal. Notwithstanding anything contained in sub sec. (1), the Settlement Officer may, at any time, before the settlement is declared by a notification in the Calcutta Gazette to have been completed, enquire into and correct any material error in such record and revise any order or decision passed by himself or by an Assistant Settlement Officer. The Plaintiffs have not adopted either of these methods.

But it has been explained on their behalf that they have not done so, because till the settlement records were produced at the trial of the suit and used against them, they were not aware that an entry had been made therein to their detriment. It has further been argued that they were kept out of the knowledge of their right to challenge the record-of-rights, by reason of the fraudulent conduct of the Defendants who concealed from them the fact that the record had been made in their favour. In support of this allegation, it has been stated that, even after the record had been made, the Defendants confessed judgment in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent of the dar-mokurari and that they have thereafter amicably paid rent on the same basis. Under these circumstances, it has been argued on behalf of the Plaintiffs-Appellants that they should be allowed even now an opportunity to controvert the record-of-rights, specially as the record-of-rights was not specially pleaded as a bar in the written statement, although a vague reference was made thereto. In support of this contention, reliance has been placed upon the decisions in Ram Narain Singh v. Ram Runjan Chuckerbutty (1) and Nadiar Chand Singh v. Chundra Sikhor Sadhu (2). In our opinion, there is considerable force in the contention of the Appellants. In the case last mentioned, it was pointed out that an entry in the settlement record had, under sec. 11 of Reg. III of 1872, the force of a decree of Court, consequently when a Defendant pleads the record-of-rights as a bar to the suit, he raises in essence a plea of res judicata, and it is therefore obligatory upon him to establish the circumstances under which the decree was made and to prove conclusively that the decree does operate as res judicata. Here it is worthy of notice that under sec. 24, after the Settlement Officer has made the record-of-rights for any village, he shall notify the publication of such record to the persons interested by posting it conspicuously in the village and otherwise in such manner as may be convenient. The object of this procedure is obviously to enable persons interested to bring forward, in the Settlement Court, within the prescribed period, any objection they may desire to make to any part of such record : and under sec. 25, it is only after the record-of-rights has been published as provided in sec. 24, that it becomes conclusive proof of the customs and rights therein recorded. Consequently, if the Defendants rely upon the record-of-rights as conclusive under sec. 25 and urge that the entry therein operates as a decree under sec. 11, they must prove that the requirements of the statute have been fulfilled. As soon as this has been accomplished, it becomes open to the Plaintiffs to urge under sec. 44 of the Indian Evidence Act that the entry which operates as a decree was obtained by fraud. It is not necessary that the Plaintiffs should institute a separate suit to set aside the record-of-rights on the ground of fraud: the same result may be attained if they are allowed to take the plea of fraud under sec. 44 of the Indian Evidence Act. [Rajib v. Lakhan (3), Nistarini v. Nundalal (4)]. In view of the circumstances of this litigation, we are of opinion that there should be a full enquiry into this matter.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below set aside, and the case remanded to the Court of first instance for the determination of three points: namely, first, was the record-of-rights published in accordance with the statutory provisions on the subject and does it operate as a decree between the parties under sec. 11, and conclusive under sec. 25 of Reg. III of 1872? secondly, if the record was published in strict conformity with the statute, was the entry therein obtained by fraud as the Plaintiffs allege; and, thirdly, are the lands alleged to be comprised in the dar-mokurari distinct from and independent of the lands included in the putni? If the first question is decided against the Defendants, the second question need not be investigated: but if the first is determined against the Plaintiffs, the second must be examined. If the second question is determined in favour of the Defendants, the record is conclusive and the claim for dar-mokurari rent must stand dismissed. If the second question is decided against the Defendants, the third need not be investigated.

As the ground on which the Appeal succeeds was not taken in the Courts below, the Appellants must pay the Respondents their costs both in this Court and in the Court of Appeal below: the costs in the Court of first instance will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

REV. No. 1698 OF 1913.

IMAM, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1913,

WAZED ALI KHAN PANEE and anr., Petitioners,
v.
THE KING EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 526, cl. 8, if applies to proceedings under sec. 107—Adjournment pending application for transfer—Proceeding under sec. 107, if a criminal case.

A proceeding under sec. 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is a criminal case and the provision in cl. 8 of sec. 526 of the Code is applicable thereto and an applicant is entitled to an adjournment of the proceeding to enable him to move for a transfer as is contemplated in that clause.

This was a Rule granted on the 24th of October 1913 against an order of Mr. C. Gurner, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tangail, dated the 18th of August 1913.

The facts material for this report will appear sufficiently from the judgment.

WAZED ALI KHAN PANEE v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Messrs. Norton and A. B. Guha and Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterjee for the Petitioners.

Babu Srish Chandra Chowdhury for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioners in this case have been ordered to execute bonds with sureties under sec. 107, Cr. P. C., to keep the peace. At the trial of the case they applied to the Magistrate, before the examination of witnesses had commenced, for an adjournment under cl. 8 of sec. 526, Cr. P. C., to enable them to move this Court for a transfer. The application was refused for the reason that proceedings under sec. 107 were not governed by cl. 8 of sec. 526 and the Magistrate proceeded to try the case. The prosecution examined 11 witnesses but the Petitioners declined to cross-examine them, the claim being that the Petitioners were entitled to an adjournment under the law. When called upon to enter on their defence, for the same reason they declined to examine their witnesses. The Magistrate then made an order binding them to keep the peace. Against that order they moved this Court and obtained this Rule on the ground that the Magistrate had erred in law in holding that cl. 8 of sec. 526 had no application to cases under sec. 107.

On behalf of the Crown it has been contended that a proceeding under sec. 107 is not a "criminal case" and inasmuch as cl. 8 of sec. 526 refers to "criminal case or appeal" it cannot be said to apply to a proceeding under sec. 107. We cannot accede to this argument. It is true that every case that is governed by the Code need not necessarily be a "criminal case" but it does not from that follow that only such cases are "criminal" as relate to offences already committed or said to have been committed. Under sec 107 a Magistrate is empowered in his discretion to detain a person, who is the subject of the proceeding, in custody until the completion of the enquiry. The Code further provides that if a person ordered to keep the peace does not give the necessary security he shall suffer simple imprisonment for the period laid down in the order. Such being the provisions of the Code we cannot, in the absence of a legislative definition of the phrase "criminal case," hold that a proceeding under sec. 107 is not a "criminal case." In our view cases under sec. 107 are subject to the application of cl. 8 of sec. 526 and the Magistrate erred in refusing the adjournment sought.

This Rule, therefore, is made absolute and the order binding the Petitioners to keep the peace is set aside. We, however, desire to remark that if in the opinion of the Magistrate there is still apprehension of a breach of the peace between the parties it is open to him to adopt such preventive measures for the preservation of peace as he thinks proper under the law.

Rule made absolute.

REV. No. 1506 OF 1912.

SHARFUDDIN, J. COXE, J. 1912, Heard, 6 & 9, December. Judgment, 17, December.	CHANDULLA SHEIKH and ors., Petitioners, v. THE KING EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 99, 147—Right of private defence—Rioting—Trespass—Wrongful possession for 14 hours—Repelling trespass by force if any offence.

CHANDULLA SHEIKH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Where the Opposite Party erected some huts stealthily at night on a plot of land of which the Petitioners were in peaceful possession and it was alleged that the Opposite Party were in possession of the land for about 14 hours and the Petitioners at break of day on coming to know of this took the earliest opportunity to exercise their own right of private defence and came to the spot armed to turn out the Opposite Party who were found by them still engaged in erecting more huts and there was a free fight between the parties and the Petitioners did not inflict more hurt than was necessary for defending themselves:

Held—That the Petitioners were not guilty of rioting and that in the circumstances of the case the Petitioners had no time to have recourse to the public authorities and they were entitled to their right of private defence.

This was a Rule granted on the 20th of October 1912 against an order of G. W. Davies, Esq, Sub Divisional Magistrate of Serajgunge, dated the 30th of August 1912, convicting the Petitioners under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sentencing each to undergo 9 months' rigorous imprisonment, an appeal from which order was dismissed by S. N. Huda, Esq, Sessions Judge of Pabna, on the 30th of September 1912.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri with Babu Mokundo Nath Roy for the Petitioners.—The Opposite Party were trespassers on the land in question which was in the possession of the Petitioners. On hearing that huts were being erected on their land stealthily the Petitioners were entitled to go and remove them. They had no time to have recourse to the public authorities. They did not inflict more injury than was necessary. Moreover several persons on the Petitioners' side received injuries necessitating their detention in hospital for a number of days. The Petitioners availed themselves of their right of private defence of property at the earliest possible opportunity and they were protected by law in doing what they did.

Mr. Norton with Babus Atulya Charan Bose and Bepin Chandra Bose for the Crown referred to Moher Sheikh v. Queen-Empress (1), Kabiruddin v. Emperor (2).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SHARFUDDIN, J.—This is a Rule on the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed on the Petitioners should not be set aside on the grounds stated in the petition.

The Petitioners have been convicted of rioting under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sentenced to nine months' rigorous imprisonment.

The common object of the unlawful assembly as stated in the charge was "to obtain possession of some property on Chur Chachalia or to enforce a right to some property on that Chur."

The Petitioners are tenants of what is known as the five annas share, while the Opposite Party are said to be the tenants of the bara five annas share. It appears however from the findings of the lower Courts that the tenants of the maliks of the different shares had disputes with regard to some lands situated to the north of a certain line of demarcation fixed by Mr. Lloyd, the former Sub-Divisional Officer, in settling that dispute. This line it seems was fixed in accordance with the thak map.

(1) I. L. R. 21 Cal. 392 (1893).
(2) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 368 (1908).

CHANDULLA SHEIKH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

It has been found by the lower Appellate Court that since the settlement of the above dispute, the six annas tenants retained possession of the lands and huts to the south of this line and the five annas tenants, among whom are the present Petitioners, retained possession of lands to the north of this line.

It has been found that the tenants of the five annas share have all along been in peaceful occupation and enjoyment of the lands to the north of the line of demarcation; but it has been contended on behalf of the Opposite Party that they were in actual and physical possession of the land on which the occurrence took place and that as they had been in possession for over twelve hours the Petitioners were not justified in disturbing that possession.

It is admited by both sides that a riot took place with regard to the possession of some land to the north of the line of demarcation.

On the findings it is clear that the bara five annas maliks and the six annas maliks were not satisfied with the settlement made by Mr. Lloyd. We find that the maliks of these two shares instituted a suit with regard to some lands to the north of the demarcating line. They obtained a decree but the decree did not include the land with regard to which the present occurrence took place.

The above being clear findings by the lower Appellate Court, the question for decision is whether the Petitioners who were in peaceful occupation of the land in question were justified in coming to the place, prepared to drive away the trespassers. This brings us to the incidents that took place during the few hours during which the Opposite Party allege possession of the land.

The findings by the lower Appellate Court with regard to this part of the case are:—

(i) That the Opposite Party began to erect some huts on the land in question stealthily in the darkness of the night before the present occurrence.

(ii) At break of day the present Petitioners with some others who had been in peaceful occupation of the land on coming to know what was happening came to the place fully armed in order to drive off the trepassers. The result was that there was a free fight between the parties. In this occurrence both sides were wounded and both sides have been convicted and sentenced.

It appears that a large number of the Appellants received injuries and had to be detained in the hospital for a number of days. There can be no doubt on the findings that the Opposite Party were trespassers on the land in question. The whole question resolves itself into this—had the Petitioners, who were in possession of the land in question, when the Opposite Party had stealthily erected some huts under the cover of night, any right to come to the spot prepared to turn out the Opposite Party who were at dawn found by them still engagad in erecting more huts.

In the present case a charge was framed only under sec. 147, I. P. C., and not under any of the sections of the Code that define various kinds of hurt.

The law relating to the right of private defence is in secs. 96 to 106 of the Indian Penal Code. Sec. 99 provides that there is no right of private defence in cases in which there is time to have recourse to the protection of the public authorities. Sec. 104 of the Indian Penal Code provides that if the offence, the committing of which or the attempt to commit which, occasions the exercise of the right of private defence, be theft, mischief, or criminal trespass, not of any of the descriptions enumerated in the preceding section, that right does not extend to the voluntary causing of death but does extend, subject to the restrictions mentioned in sec. 99, to the voluntary causing to the wrong-doer of any harm other than death.

The whole question therefore really narrows itself into this, whether the Petitioners had time to have recourse to the public authorities. We are of opinion that they had not. The construction of huts began at night and stealthily; the Petitioners along with others having come to know what was happening on the land of which they were in peaceful possession, go out prepared to turn out the trespassers from the land. If they had allowed, without any reasonable cause, a few days to elapse and then opposed the trespassers by force they would not have been justified in doing so as there would in that case have been ample time to have recourse to the public authorities. The authorities placed before us, where the accused had been sleeping over their rights and had allowed the Opposite Party to remain in possession without any attempt on their part to oust them, would not avail the Opposite Party of the present case, inasmuch as the present Petitioners availed themselves of the right given to them by law at the very earliest opportunity. We have been referred to the case of Moher Sheikh v. Queen-Empress (1). In this reported case the Appellants had acquiesced in their dispossession for five days before they went armed to oust the trespasser and it was, we think rightly, held that they had lost the right of private defence. We have however a recent authority of this Court, namely, the case of Kabiruddin v. Emperor (2), where it was held that "there is no right of private defence where two parties arm themselves for a fight to enforce their right or supposed right, and deliberately engage in large numbers in a fight. In such a case if it is not shown that the accused were acting within the legal limits of the right of private defence, it does not matter which party was the first to attack." It has been contended on behalf of the Opposite Party that they had been in possession for about 14 hours and hence they had the right to remain there and the Petitioners had no right forcibly to turn them out. The right of private defence would become a farce if it depended on a race between two factions to see who should arrive first. In this reported case it was found that there was ample opportunity to seek the protection of the authorities as there was no pressing necessity for repairing the embankment. In a case under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act it has been held that if a party has been in peaceful and uninterrupted occupation which has extended over a sufficient length of time, the inference may properly be drawn that he was in possession. This was so held in the case of Raj Krishna Parui v. Muktaram Das (3). If the party dispossessed shows by his conduct that he has acquiesced in his dispossession, he loses the right of private defence. In the case of Browne v. Dawson (4), the learned Chief Justice observed "that a mere trespasser could not by the very act of trespass, immediately and without acquiescence, give himself what the law understood by possession against the person whom he ejected and drive him to produce his title." The above cases are no doubt civil cases but the principle involved is identical.

For the above reasons we are of opinion that taking into consideration that the Petitioners were in actual physical possession of the property in question, that they took the earliest opportunity to exercise the right of private defence, that they had no time to have recourse to the public authorities and that the injuries inflicted by them were within the limits allowed to the right of private defence, they are not guilty of rioting. We therefore make the Rule absolute and acquit the accused who are Petitioners in this case.

COXE, J.—I agree. I have stated the view that I take of the right of private defence in cases of this nature in Appeal No. 573 of 1909 decided on the 12th August 1909. In my opinion the accused in this case on hearing that the huts were being erected on their lands were entitled to go and remove them. If they thought that they would be attacked in so doing they were entitled to go prepared to defend themselves. If they did not intend to cause more hurt than was necessary for defending themselves they were not an unlawful assembly. The circumstances of the case, particularly the amount of harm done to the other side, indicate that they did not intend to exceed the right of private defence. In these circumstances they have not, in my opinion, committed any offence.

Rule made absolute.

Judgment, 8, August.

THE DEPUTY SUPERINTENDENT AND REMEMBRANCER OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL, Appellant,
v.
GAYA PROSAD, Accused, Respondent.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 4 (t), 492, 417—Appeal by Local Government against acquittal—Legal Remembrancer of Bengal if Public Prosecutor for Behar and Orissa—Competency of appeal presented by him for the Government of Behar and Orissa—Request to present an appeal if constitutes appointment as Public Prosecutor.

An appeal was preferred to the High Court on behalf of the Government of Behar and Orissa against an order of acquittal passed by a Deputy Magistrate in a case under sec. 193, I. P. C. This appeal was presented by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer of Bengal acting on behalf of the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal. It appeared that the Judicial Secretary to the Government of Behar and Orissa in a letter requested the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal to present an appeal on behalf of the Government of Behar and Orissa in the case in question. Beyond this there was nothing to show that the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal was appointed the Public Prosecutor for Behar and Orissa :

Held—That under sec. 417, Cr. P. C., the direction of the Local Government to present an appeal against an order of acquittal must be given to a Public Prosecutor. This direction may be given in a letter whereby the Public Prosecutor is appointed as such but it does not follow that the mere fact that a person has been appointed to present an appeal to the High Court from an order of acquittal involves his appointment as Public Prosecutor for the purpose of the case.

That in a case of this description where the liberty of the subject is involved and an appeal is sought to be preferred against an order of acquittal the Statute must be strictly construed and full compliance with its provisions required.

In the present case the High Court held that the appeal was incompetent and dismissed it on that ground.

This was an Appeal preferred under sec. 417, Cr. P. C., against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Gaya, dated the 17 h of November 1912, acquitting the Respondent, Gaya Prosad, of the charge under sec. 193, I. P. Code.

The facts will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Mr. B. C. Mitra (Standing Counsel) and Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra for the Appellant.

Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an Appeal by the Government of Behar and Orissa under sec. 417, Cr. P. C. The accused was tried by a Magistrate for an offence under sec 193, I. P. C., and was acquitted by him under sec. 258, Cr. P. C., on the 17th November last. On the 2nd May 1913, this Appeal was presented by Mr. J. Orr, the Deputy Legal Remembrancer of Bengal. A preliminary objection has been taken to the competency of the Appeal so presented.

Sec. 417 provides that the Local Government may direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court from an Original or Appellate order of acquittal passed by any Court other than a High Court. The term "Public Prosecutor" is defined in cl. (t) of sec. 4, Cr. P. C, which lays down that 'Public Prosecutor' means any person appointed under sec. 492 and includes any person acting under the directions of a Public Prosecutor and any person conducting a prosecution on behalf of Her Majesty in any High Court in the exercise of its Original Criminal Jurisdiction. Sec. 492, to which reference is made in the definition, provides in sub-sec. (1) that the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government may appoint, generally, or in any case or for any specified class of cases, in any local area, one or more officer to be called Public Prosecutor. In the matter of the appeal now before us, Mr. Orr professes to act on behalf of the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal. It has not been suggested that Mr. Orr was appointed a Public Prosecutor either generally, or for this special case by the Government of Behar and Orissa; nor has it been suggested that Mr. Orr was directed as a Public Prosecutor to present this Appeal to the High Court. Consequently the authority of Mr. Orr, if any, must be taken to be derivative; in other words, he can act as Public Prosecutor only under the direction of a person who has been appointed Public Prosecutor within the meaning of cl. ( ) of sec. 4. It has been pointed out to us on behalf of the Crown that on the 24th June 1886, a notification was published in the Calcutta Gazette to the effect that the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal was to be ex officio Public Prosecutor in all cases before the High Court on its Appellate Side except in a case coming from a Presidency or other Magistrate in Calcutta. If this notification is read subject to the notification published in the Behar and Orissa Gazette on the 1st April 1912, the view may well be maintained

Obituary.

We are grieved to record the death of Babu Taraprasanna Mukerjee of the Burdwan Bar. He was a Vakil of the Calcutta High Court and enjoyed a most extensive practice in the Burdwan Division although mostly in the mofussil. He was engaged in conducting a coal mine case at Purulia for some months past and died all of a sudden of heart failure. He was a lawyer of great ability and was one of the few fortunate members of his branch of the profession who made a fortune at the Bar. Though advanced in years, still his death will be felt as a great loss to the strength of the Vakil Bar.

Royal Commission and the Long Vacation and Saturday sittings.

The final Report of the Royal Commission appointed to enquire into the causes of delay in the King's Bench Division was issued in the middle of December last. Having regard to the fact that the Royal Warrant appointing the Commission was issued on the 31st December 1912, it is very creditable indeed that the Commission finished their enquiry and recorded their deliberations well within a year. Many of the recommendations of the Commission would not be applicable to the High Courts in this country. For instance, with regard to the recommendations for the curtailment of the Long Vacation to two months one has to take into consideration the fact that there is no Whitsuntide Vacation in this country and the Christmas and Easter Vacations are also much shorter. The Annual Vacation in the Calcutta High Court extends ordinarily from the first week of September to the middle of November, i.e., to about two months and 10 days. Regard must be had to the fact that in this Presidency all business is practically suspended on account of the Poojah festivities from October till the middle of November and the High Court is closed only a fortnight before the Civil Courts close. In the High Court, however, many of the minor holidays allowed to the Civil Courts are not observed. Besides the Annual Vacation, the only minor holidays observed by the High Court would not in all exceed three weeks including the Easter and Christmas Holidays and all the Hindu and Mahomedan holidays put together. While the Calcutta High Court works for full 9 months in the year, the High Court in England works only for 7½ months. As for Saturday sittings up to 1-30 P.M. as recommended by the Commission, we have to take into consideration the fact that the Judges on the King's Bench Division sit ordinarily from 11 A.M. to 4 P.M. whereas here Judges sit up to 4·30 P.M. The professional opinion in England is in favour of extending the sitting up to 4-30 P.M. rather than to have a Saturday sitting. A short sitting up to 1·30 P.M. will add to the cost of the parties.

Royal Commission Report on Judges' Pension.

The Royal Commission has made a very practical suggestion regarding the disposal of ordinary business when particularly heavy cases are likely to block the business in some Courts. The Commissioners recommend a more liberal grant of pension to the Judges. They are, as at present, to be entitled to an annual pension of £3,500 after fifteen years' service but they must retire at the age of 72 years unless a special committee recommend an extension of any particular Judge's service after he has attained the age of 72. They further recommend that it would be permissible to Judges to retire after 10 years' service on an annual pension of £2,500. In the case of ill-health or on the attainment of the age limit they may retire after service of 5 years or less on a pension of £1,500. But after 5 years for every year that they may serve on the Bench, they would be entitled to an addition of £200 to their pension. But Judges other than these who have retired on account of ill-health or old age are to be regarded as supernumerary Judges and it would be obligatory on them to serve on the Bench when their services are requisitioned by the Lord Chancellor. But during the period of such active service they are to receive renumeration on a scale which together with their pension would entitle them to £5,000 per annum. Besides this, they are to receive £400 for a clerk. The difficulty of adopting the above recommendation to any extent in India would be that most of the Judges leave the country on retirement. But the accumulation of arrears in the Calcutta High Court has chiefly been due to some extraordinarily heavy cases blocking some Courts for some months at a time. If some arrangements similar to that recommended by the commission could be adopted in this country to meet such contingencies, that would be a relief to the Court and the litigants alike. It is also worthy of note how illiberally the Judges in this country are treated with regard to their pension. Surely the pension rules regarding the Judges of the High Court require revision.

Bar Council Report—Seats for the Bar and Students.

In the Annual Statement of the Bar Council for 1913, there are only two matters which are likely to prove of some interest to the members of the Bar here. A representation was made by junior members of the Bar to the Council for getting adequate accommodation for them in the Courts. The Council after careful consideration recorded the following resolution a copy of which was forwarded to the Lord Chief Justice:—

(1) That in the opinion of the Council it is undesirable that Lay Reporters should ever be given seating accommodation in immediate proximity to Counsel engaged in the case.

(2) That it is desirable that reasonable accommodation should in all Courts, and in all circumstances, be provided for Barristers not engaged in the case (whether robed or not), and also for Students, in accordance with what the Council believe to be ancient custom.

Whenever practicable the same arrangement should be made in our Courts as well. In the Appeal Court presided ever by His Lordship the Chief Justice, Mr. Norton had once suggested that the barrier should be put back so as to accommodate another row of chairs or preferably a row of benches for increased accommodation, as that would obviate the practice of scraping the chairs and disturbing the hearing at times when the Court happens to be crowded. His Lordship approved of the idea and we hope it will be given effect to at no very distant date. It may at the same time be considered whether the accommodation in the Sessions Court and the Court of Criminal Revision and Appeals may not be similarly improved.

Fee Rules.

The practice which has for some time past been recognised in England that a Junior counsel is entitled to two-thirds fee of his leader has now been recognised by our new taxing rules. The rule as formulated by and followed at the English Bar is as follows:—

"That by long-established and well-settled custom a Junior is entitled to a fee of from three-fifths to two-thirds of his Leader's fee, and that, although there is no rigid rule of professional etiquette which prevents him from accepting a brief marked with a fee bearing a less proportion to his Leader's fee, it is in accordance with the practice of the profession that he should refuse to do so in the absence of special circumstances affecting the particular case, and that he should be supported by his Leader in such action."

The Incorporated Law Society of England while recognising the above rule represented to the Bar Council that with regard to the above rule it should not be applicable to cases where leading counsel demanded "fancy" or "excessive" fees, and that it is not right that Junior counsel should receive the recognised proportion of $\frac{3}{5}$ or $\frac{2}{3}$ but only such fees as they would otherwise have been satisfied with, had a leader been briefed who did not demand such "fancy" or "excessive" fees. The Bar Council with a view to discourage such "fancy fees" has resolved that when such 'fancy fees' are paid by solicitors or clients to a leader the Junior will be entitled to charge $\frac{3}{5}$ or $\frac{2}{3}$ of the fees of his leader. This is what the Bar Council says with regard to the question referred to them.

As it is entirely at the option of the Solicitor and his client to employ a Leader who requires a so-called "fancy" or "excessive" fee, the cost of paying a proportionate fee to the Junior, so far as its increase over his ordinary fee is concerned, is and ought to be regarded as a necessary incident in the cost of briefing such exceptional Leader; and the Council think that the client should be informed of this fact (as no doubt he is) when the increased cost of employing such a Leader is being considered by him. It is obvious that if the present two-thirds rule were abrogated, there would in the result be a strong tendency to increase still further the fee of the Leader at the expense of the fee of the Junior—a change which would be of no benefit to the public.

But the Bar Council draws a distinction between "fancy fees" and Special fees. Counsel in England charge such fees when they have to go to Courts to which they are not "attached" or are briefed in Circuits other than the one where they ordinarily practice. But the fees charged in such cases are 'fixed and uniform' and in such cases the Junior is not entitled to $\frac{3}{5}$ or $\frac{2}{3}$ of such special fees but only to the proportionate share of the ordinary fees which would be charged by leaders in such cases. The Bar Council regard it to be contrary to professional etiquette to charge 'fancy' Special fees. The following extract from the Report of the Council will make the matter clear.

Questions relating to the payment of Special Fees have been before the Council on several occasions, and have from time to time received their careful consideration. All rules laid down by the Council with regard to these Special Fees have had as one of their main objects the prevention of the infringement of the established practice with regard to the proportion of Counsel's fees; for it will be readily understood that if Solicitors and Leaders could vary the amount of the Special Fee as and when they pleased and in what cases they pleased, the established practice as to two-thirds or three-fifths would soon become a dead letter. It is for this reason that it has been laid down by various resolutions of the Council that it is against professional etiquette for a Barrister to fix either a fancy Special Fee on a particular brief, or a fancy Special Fee for going into a particular Court; but a Barrister may charge a uniform Special Fee for going into a particular class of Court, or a uniform Special Fee for going into Court at all.

[APPEAL FROM MADRAS]

LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE.
LORD MOULTON.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1913,
19, December.

NAYANI VENKA RANGA RAU
v.
RAJA KEESARA RAMAKRISHNIAH and others.

Leave to appeal in interlocutory matters.

This was a petition for special leave to appeal from an interlocutary proceeding of the Madras High Court.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with him Mr. O'Gorman) appeared for the Petitioners, and Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents.

Before hearing Counsel for the Petitioner

LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE said.—This is an intorlocutory proceeding in the Court below. We quite see that there may be some prejudice unless you take this step to petition, but their Lordships would be very slow to give leave to appeal to bring up a case at an interlocutory stage. On the other hand, they are very anxious that neither party should be prejudiced by the fact that leave to appeal has been refused. They are of opinion that the case should be allowed to proceed according to the judgment of the Court below, and should be determined on its merits; that will leave a final judgment to come up at the proper time here. That is the view their Lordships take, subject to what Counsel might wish to say, their view being distinct that neither party is prejudiced by the fact that leave to appeal is refused at this stage. Furthermore, their Lordships think that the costs of these proceedings ought to be costs in the cause to be determined in the Court below.

Mr. DeGruyther.—May I make one observation upon what your Lordship has been good enough to tell me. The position really is this: the reason why the application for leave to appeal has been made is that if the appeal were successful, it would entirely dispose of a litigation which has been pending since the year 1903.

LORD MOULTON.—If they were unsuccessful.

Mr. DeGruyther.—We cannot suggest that the Order which has been made disposes of the case in any event.

LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE.—We were really anxious to make it clear that while we take this course this morning, it should be distinctly understood by both parties that neither party should be prejudiced.

Mr. DeGruyther.—I am obliged to your Lordship, because, having regard to the Code of Civil Procedure and the construction placed upon it in India, there is an express provision which says if we do not appeal from this Order, the result would be that we are bound by it.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Opposite Party.—I do not suggest that applies here.

LORD MOULTON.—That is why we suggested the costs should be costs in the cause, because your petition was necessary.

LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE.—Anyhow, we really determine nothing on the merits, we want to keep both of you free on the merits, so that you can have your full points arguable, and we want to make it so complete as this, that the costs, even of these proceedings, should be costs in the cause in the Court below.

Mr. DeGruyther.—After what has fallen from your Lordships I do not think any argument I could advance would lead to your Lordships making a different order.

LORD MOULTON.—I think you are very well protected.

LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE.—The petition is not dismissed.

Mr. DeGruyther.—I understand that, my Lord.

LORD MOULTON.—It really stands over till the hearing.

LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE.—Until the proceedings get to the merits.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown.—I am quite satisfied with what your Lordships have said, except as regards the costs.

LORD MOULTON.—It was quite necessary that the Petitioner should come here.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown.—I do not think it was, under the section. However, I will not trouble your Lordships further.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE AND BEACHCROFT, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 164 OF 1910. RAM CHANDER NEOGI, Petitioner, Appellant v. SHYAMA CHARAN BOSE, Objector and on his death his heirs and legal representatives PUNNALAL BOSE, CHUNI LAL BOSE and minor PROBODH CHUNDRA BOSE of his guardian ad litem BASANTA KUMARI DASI, Respondents. 22nd August 1913.

Insolvency, adjudication of—Proper order—Salary of property of the insolvent—Sec. 60, Civil Procedure Code—Provincial Insolvency Act, sec. 16 (2).

The Petitioner having been arrested in execution of a decree applied to be adjudicated an insolvent. The adjudication was made and he was directed, pending the realization by sale of his assets, to pay Rs. 25 a month into Court until the sum realized from him should equal one-third of the amount of a decree obtained against him by a creditor. Subsequently the Judge ordered that the amount deposited by the insolvent should remain in deposit in Court and that the insolvent should show cause why the adjudication should not be annulled on the ground that the proper order would have been an order for composition under sec. 27 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. At the same time he expressed doubt as to whether the Court had power to order payment of instalments from the insolvent's pay after an order for adjudication had been made. Later on the Judge ordered that as the insolvent had failed to abide by the condition that he should pay one-fourth of his salary to the receiver the order of adjudication must be annulled.

Held, that the Petitioner having applied to be declared an insolvent on being arrested in execution of a decree he was rightly adjudged an insolvent and that the subsequent order annulling the insolvency on his failure to pay one fourth of his salary into Court is bad and must therefore be set aside.

That it is open to the High Court not only to reverse the order of annulment of insolvency but also to consider what direction should be given when this order had been vacated at the instance of the insolvent.

Held, further, that the proper course for the Judge would have been to direct the receiver to arrange for payment to him of one half of the salary earned by the insolvent. The salary of the Petitioner insolvent being Rs 100 a month one-half of it vested in the receiver appointed by the Court. (Sec. 16 (2) (a), Provincial Insolvency Act, read with sec. 60 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act).

Held, further, that salary is "property of the insolvent" within the meaning of sec. 16 (2) (a) of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Appeal allowed.

that from that date the Legal Remembrancer of Behar and Orissa became ex officio Public Prosecutor for that Province. This proposition, however, is of no assistance to the Crown; because the present appeal has not been preferred by the Legal Remembrancer of Behar and Orissa. As already stated, the appeal has been presented under the direction of the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal. The question consequently arises whether the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal has been constituted Public Prosecutor for Behar and Orissa, either generally or especially for the purpose of the case before us. As there is no suggestion that the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal has been appointed Public Prosecutor generally for Behar and Orissa, the question narrows down to this: Has the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal been constituted Public Prosecutor by the Government of Behar and Orissa for the case now before us? On behalf of the Crown it has been contended that he has been so appointed and in support of this position reference has been made to the letter addressed by the Secretary to the Government of Behar and Orissa in the Judicial Department to the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs of Bengal on the 23rd April 1913. The passage in the letter upon which reliance is placed is in these terms. "I am directed to request you to be so good as to file an appeal in the High Court on behalf of this Government under sec. 417, Cr. P. C., against the order of Moulvi Saiyed Abdul Hayat, Deputy Magistrate, improperly acquitting the accused in the marginally noted case on a charge of perjury." This passage in the letter no doubt authorises the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal to institute this appeal. But it does not appoint him Public Prosecutor within the meaning of sec. 492, Cr. P. C. On behalf of the Crown it has been urged that this sentence by implication appoints the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal as Public Prosecutor for the purposes of the case mentioned. In our opinion, the construction suggested cannot be reasonably put upon the passage. Sec. 417, Cr. P. C., lays down that the Local Government may direct the Public Prosecutor to present an appeal to the High Court from an original or appellate order of acquittal passed by any Court other than a High Court. The direction must be given to a Public Prosecutor. Be it conceded that the direction may be given in a letter whereby the Public Prosecuter is appointed as such, yet it does no follow that the mere fact that a person has been directed to present an appeal to the High Court from an order of acquittal involves his appointment as Public Prosecutor for the purposes of the case. Indeed, in view of the fact that the Province of Behar and Orissa has a Legal Remembrancer, it is extremely improbable that the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal could ever have been intended to be appointed Public Prosecutor in a case from that Province. In a case of this description, where the liberty of the subject is involved and an appeal is sought to be preferred against an order of acquittal, the statute must be strictly construed and full compliance with its provisions required. The learned Standing Counsel has urged us to put upon the passage in the letter what he calls a reasonable and common sense construction; but it is plain that the construction which he has pressed us to adopt was never present to the mind of the framer of the letter and that he has been constrained to have recourse to this argument because there is no escape from the preliminary objection. We hold accordingly that the Appeal is incompetent and dismiss it on that ground.

Appeal dismissed.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM OUDH.]

LORD SHAW.
LORD MOULTON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1913,
Heard, 29 and 30, October.
Judgment, 27, November.

KALI BAKHSH SINGH and others, Appellants,
v.
RAM GOPAL SINGH and others, Respondents.

Purdahnashin lady, deed of gift executed by—Independent advice, if absolutely necessary—Legal protection as distinguished from legal disability—Outside advice and outside control distinguished—Proof of intelligent and free execution—Burden of proof—Facts showing executant a capable woman of business, and disposition not unnatural, effect of—Explanation of deed to the grantor—Gift to son of mukhtar and paramour—Undue influence, when to be presumed—Evidence of betrayal or abuse of trust needed.

The protection which the law throws around a purdahnashin lady in respect of deeds executed by her demands that the burden of proof shall rest not with those who attack but those who found upon the deed, and the proof must go so far as to show affirmatively and conclusively that the deed was not only executed by, but was explained to and was really understood by, the grantor. It must also be established that the deed was not signed under duress but arose from the free and independent will of the grantor.

Inability to prove that the lady had independent advice is not of itself fatal to the validity of the deed. The possession of independent advice, or the absence of it, is a fact to be taken into consideration and well weighed on a review of the whole circumstances relevant to the issue of whether the grantor thoroughly comprehended and deliberately and of her own free will carried out the transaction. If upon a review of the facts which include the nature of the thing done and the training and habit of mind of the grantor, as well as the proximate circumstances affecting the execution, the conclusion is reached that the obtaining of independent advice would not really have made any difference in the result, the deed ought to stand.

The legal protection which the law gives to a purdahnashin lady cannot be transmuted into a legal disability.

MAHOMED BUKHSH v. HOSSENI BIBI (3), SAJJAD HUSAIN v. WAZIR ALI KHAN (1) referred to.

Where it was found that a purdahnashin lady, who had executed a deed of gift in respect of about one-half of her properties in favour of a son of her paramour who was also her mukhtar, was a woman of strong will and business capacity, and it was not alleged that her outward style or mode of life had been thereby changed or that any impoverishment had occurred and the deed as granted did not appear, in the circumstances of her life, to be in any way an unnatural disposition of a part of her property :

Held—That these circumstances, taken with the evidence in the case which showed inter alia that the deed was duly executed and attested, and did not disclose any abuse or betrayal by the mukhtar of the trust she reposed in him, went far to establish that the deed was granted by her as the expression of her deliberate mind and apart from any undue influence exert- ed upon it; and that if independent outside advice (which is essentially different from independent outside control) had been obtained, the lady would have acted just as she did.

The evidence of undue influence in such a case would not require to have been very strong but there was no evidence at all of abuse or betrayal of trust, which would lead to the conclusion that undue influence had been exercised.

SMITH v. KAY (2) relied on.

When the undue influence alleged is not proved affirmatively but has to be inferred from circumstances, the inference must depend to a considerable extent upon the view which is taken as to the capacity of the grantor of the deed.

Where the Courts below differed in their finding as to whether the explanation of a document executed by a purdahnashin lady was thorough or perfunctory:

Held—That upon this matter much depended upon whether the grantor was a person accustomed to busines or to the management of affairs.

This was an Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. The Respondent, Bhola Singh, a reversioner, sued to set aside a gift made by Balraj Kuar deceased. The facts of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment and from the following extract from the judgment delivered by Mr. Chamier, Judicial Commissioner.

"The facts suggest that the deed of gift must have been procured by the influence of Defendant No.—1. Balraj Kuar was a young purdanashin woman in an advanced state of pregnancy cut off by her misconduct from the rest of her family. She was also ill but the evidence as to this is vague. Defendant No. 1 was not bound to her in any way, he might have deserted her at any time yet she made him a present of the best part of her property worth admittedly more than Rs. 25,000.

"It is needless to cite authorities to show that such a gift cannot stand unless it is proved that the lady had independent advice. Any intelligent and independent person would have told her at once that if she wished to benefit her paramour the proper thing to do was to make a will in his favour. There is no evidence whatever as to the origin of the deed of gift. The Registering Officer and the other witnesses who, it may be observed, are all friends or dependents of Defendant No. 1, say that the deed was read out to her and explained to her. One knows from experience of these cases what explanation of this kind means. A deed couched in language which is for the most part unintelligible to an uneducated woman is read over to her and she is asked whether she understands it. She replies 'yes' and the deed is registered. In the present case the deed contains Persian words which it is safe to say the lady did not understand. It is easy for witnesses to add that the executant said she is executing it of her own pleasure (khushi se) I doubt this part of the evidence but even if it is true it does not avail the Defendants. Defendant No. 1 was present at the time and what is wanted is evidence to rebut the presumption that the lady was acting under his influence. He did not come into the witness-box and there is no evidence whatever that the lady was a free agent and understood the effect of the deed on her interests. According to the witness Mahabir, the Registering Officer told the lady that after the execution of the deed she would have no right left in Asaipur and Baradih. If he did so, he was wrong for she had an one anna share left. The fact that the gift relates to a 9 annas 8 pies share in the two villages and not to the whole of her share is curious. It may be that she thought she was making a will as she did in 1892.

"In my opinion it has not been proved that Balraj Kuar had independent advice or understood the transaction and therefore the deed of gift cannot stand."

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé for the Appellants submitted that the deed of gift in question was perfectly good. It was duly executed by Balraj Kuar who was a literate woman capable of managing her property. The Judicial Commissioners found that she used to sign her own accounts and looked after her own affairs. The deed was witnessed by the Patwari and the family priest, and was openly registered. The Plaintiff's case was that she was not of sound disposing mind and that it was not her act at all. The Plaintiff's evidence has been found to be untrustworthy. Both the Courts below have found that the deed was read and explained to her and that she knew what she was doing. She knew the effect thereof upon her interests. The gift was natural inasmuch as she had a daughter by Kali Bakhsh Singh, and she would have been left unprovided for without the gift. The Court below held that the gift could not stand because the lady had no independent advice. This view was erroneous. What the law required was that the Court should be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that a purdahnashin lady fully understood the terms of the gift and the effect thereof upon her interests in short that it was her conscious act.

The law was settled. Referred to Sajjad Husain v. Wazir Ali Khan (1). No independent legal advice was essential. Mahomed Bukhsh v. Hosseini Bibi (3). She was familiar with deeds of gift having herself got the bulk of her property under deeds of gift. She needed no advice to tell her whether she ought to make the gift or not. That was for her to decide—Kali Bakhsh Singh was practically her husband and the fact that he was her mukhtar made no material difference. He held a dual relationship, and the gift ought to be referred to the affection she had for him and his children. In re Coomber (4). There was no proof of any undue influence or coercion.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. G. E. A. Ross, K. C., submitted that the onus of proving that it was a free and voluntary gift lay upon the donee and he had failed to discharge it. Balraj Kuar was a young purdahnashin lady, cut off from her relations, and was under the influence of her mukhtar Kali Bakhsh Singh. The gift was in reality made to him, and his son's name was a mere matter of form. The circumstances under which the deed was executed were such that there was a presumption of undue influence and the Appellants were bound to shew that no undue influence was exercised upon the lady. That could have been done by Kali Bakhsh Singh alone, but he did not give evidence. That circumstance ought to be weighed heavily against the Appellants' case. The law is summed up in Sir John Trevelyan's Hindu Law, (2nd Edn.) at p. 490, where it is said that a purdahnashin lady was not bound by her alienation unless it was distinctly proved that she was aware of all the circumstances and of the nature and effect of the transaction, that no advantage was taken of her position and that she had independent advice. Reference was also made to Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Evidence Act, pp 694, 697, Sajjad Husain v. Wazir Ali Khan (1), Kanai Lal v. Kamini Debi (5), In re Coomber (4) were distinguishable as there the gift was from a mother to her son at the express wish of her husband.

There was a presumption of undue influence against the donee, and he must shew that he took no advantage of her secluded position. That can best be done by proving that the lady had independent advice.

[LORD MOULTON.—It must be the act of a free will—that is not in captivity. Referred to Smith v. Kay (2). In the words of Lord Kingsdown the presumption of undue influence arises only where confidence is reposed and betrayed.]

Sir Erle Richards.—I submit that the principle of that case applies to the facts of this appeal. The onus lay on the donee, who was her trusted agent, to prove that the gift was voluntary. He was not called.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., replied. The law as summed up by Sir John Trevelyan is not warranted by any high authority. Referred to Ikramuddin v. Naiiban (6) which laid down that absence of independent advice did not raise a presumption of undue influence.

There was no betrayal of trust here. The property gifted was not more than a moiety and no fraud or coercion was ever suggested.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—This is an Appeal from a Judgment and Decree of date the 21st May 1908, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which reversed a Judgment and Decree of the Subordinate Judge of Rae Bareli, dated the 15th February 1907.

The Plaintiffs ask that a Decree for actual and proprietary possession of certain shares in villages in Pargana Salon be passed in their favour against the Defendants, and for an account of mesne profits.

It is unnecessary to enter upon many details of the case. The portion of it which was laid before the Board consists in a demand for cancellation of a Deed of Gift, dated the 24th September 1903, executed by one Balraj Kuar in favour of Ganga Bakhsh Singh, son of the Appellant, Kali Bakhsh Singh.

This deed has been upheld by the Subordinate Judge, and has been declared invalid by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

It is important to observe what were the grounds for the cancellation of this deed. They are gathered together in the issues framed by the Subordinate Judge, and are as follows :—

(1.) "Did the lady execute the Deed of Gift?";

(2.) "Was it written and completed without her knowledge? Was she able to understand the transaction?"

(3.) "Was she of unsound mind at the time of the writing of the said Deed?"

The relation of the parties to the Deed was, briefly stated, this:—Balraj Kuar, who died two months after the execution of the Deed of Gift, was a purdahnashin lady. She was possessed of a number of villages, or rather of shares therein, and she had become absolute owner thereof as the result of gifts made by one Bishunath Singh. At least six Deeds of Gift are produced, and there can be little doubt that the lady thoroughly understood this form of transaction. Her husband had died many years before, namely, in 1881, and her property was managed by Kali Bakhsh Singh, who was her mukhtar, and with whom she formed an intimacy, the result of which was the birth of two illegitimate daughters. One of these was alive at the date of the Deed.

Ganga Bakhsh Singh was the legitimate son of Kali Bakhsh Singh, and the suggestion seems to be warranted which points not only to the affection which Balraj Kuar had for Kali Bakhsh, but to the attachment which she had formed to the boy. The interests represented by the Plaintiffs are derived from remote relationship to Brij Mohan Singh, the deceased husband, and to Bishunath Singh, the father-in-law, of the lady.

Upon the issues as framed and the contentions of parties as pled, the Subordinate Judge, who manifestly conducted the case with great care, had no doubt. As to the Plaintiffs' evidence he holds that it "is absolutely unreliable and seems to me a pure concoction." Reasons are given for this opinion, and the judgment upon this part of the case does not seem to be controverted in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. In short, the attack upon the Deed by the evidence led by the Plaintiffs has failed.

As to the evidence tendered in support of it, the matter stands thus: Ex facie, it is duly signed and attested. It bears the signature of Balraj Kuar, of the Patwari, Lachman Pershad, and of three other witnesses, including the family priest. Above all, there is the certificate of Bunyad Hussain, the Sub-Registrar of Salon, as to what occurred when the Deed was produced by Balraj Kuar before him at her residence. It is duly registered. There seems no reason to doubt the value of his testimony, which is believed in its entirety by the Subordinate Judge. Apart from the circumstances to be now mentioned the Deed appears to be beyond suspicion, being attested by just those persons who would be naturally called in for such a purpose and being registered in the usual way by the proper officer.

Their Lordships incline to the opinion that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge would not have been reversed but for the controlling weight which was attached by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner to the fact that the lady in the transaction had not independent advice. The view, put briefly, adopted in that Court is this: The Deed was executed in favour of the son of a paramour, and therefore, to all intents and purposes, in favour of the paramour himself, he also being a person who was her mukhtar. Although there is no direct evidence that he ever influenced her to make a gift in favour of his son, still, in the circumstances, the Deed (so it is maintained) must fall, because the law makes an absolute demand that a person in such a situation should have independent advice. The absence of this element entitles a Court of law to set the Deed aside.

There are several circumstances which favour this conclusion. In the first place, the lady was a purdahnashin lady, and the law throws around her a special cloak of protection. It demands that the burden of proof shall in such a case rest, not with those who attack, but with those who found upon the Deed, and the proof must go so far as to show affirmatively and conclusively that the Deed was not only executed by, but was explained to, and was really understood by, the grantor. In such cases it must also, of course, be established that the Deed was not signed under duress, but arose from the free and independent will of the grantor. The law as just stated is too well settled to be doubted or upset. It was expressly reaffirmed by this Board in the case of Sajjad Husain v. Wazir Ali Khan (1), and nothing that is now said can, or is intended to, disturb it.

In the next place, a fact which has given rise in their Lordships' minds to considerable difficulty, has been that Kali Bakhsh, the father of the donee and the mukhtar of the donor, was not examined as a witness.

This brief review is given by way of indication that the judgment now to be announced has been arrived at after a full balancing of the considerations both in fact and in law which affect the question to be determined.

The property conveyed by the Deed of Gift amounted, as the Board were informed, to about one-half of the lady's estate. It was not contended that her outward style or mode of life had thereby been changed, or that any impoverishment had occurred, the case being thus distinguished from those of donations of practically the entire property of the donor, of which the case of Sajjad Husain v. Wazir Ali Khan (1) above referred to was an instance.

(1) L. R. 39 I. A. 156; s. c. 16 C. W. N. 889 (1912).

1. As to the execution of the Deed. The challenge of this has failed, and both the Courts below hold the execution to be properly and satisfactorily established.

2. As to the capacity of the grantor. Upon this subject the Courts below are also agreed in holding that competency is proved. In their Lordships' judgment, this is so, as after mentioned, in a special degree.

3. As to the Deed being read over and explained. Again both Courts are agreed. But while the Subordinate Judge thinks that the explanation was thorough, the Judicial Commissioners appear to incline to the view that it was perfunctory. Upon this matter much depends upon whether the grantor of the Deed was a person accustomed to business or to the management of affairs. It is upon this point that their Lordships find themselves in agreement with the Subordinate Judge. In doing so they found upon what is admitted, not only by him, but by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. It appears that the lady had been in the habit for a considerable period of years of managing her affairs, of entering up her accounts, and of attending to business. Upon another part of the case it rather appears from the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner, Mr. Chamier, that the lady had much strength of will, and that her father-in-law, Bishunath Singh, "used to obey Balraj Kuar more than the latter obeyed him"; while with reference to the issue now under discussion, the same Judicial Commissioner says, "It is proved by evidence adduced by the Plaintiffs that Balraj Kuar signed her own accounts and looked after her own affairs." Their Lordships, in short, do not entertain much doubt that this purdahnashin lady was a capable woman, fully alive to the direction of her own interests, and well aware of what she was doing.

4. As to undue influence. Nothing of this kind is proved affirmatively, and the inference upon the subject must depend to a considerable extent upon the view which is taken as to the capacity of the grantor of the deed. The suggestion that Kali Bakhsh prompted a gift in favour of his son does not seem to rest upon anything more than that he was mukhtar, or held a power-of-attorney in regard to the management of her property. It is regrettable that the matter was left thus in the region of conjecture. There is no evidence of any kind that the mukhtar either mismanaged or overmanaged anything committed to his charge, or that in any particular regarding her affairs he withstood the lady or controlled her purposes. It is accordingly necessary to consider whether the facts of this case fall under the general and useful category of the principle which, in the language of Lord Kingsdown in Smith v. Kay (2), "applies to every case where influence is acquired and abused, where confidence is reposed and betrayed." Their Lordships do not find themselves able to affirm that such abuse or betrayal occurred. It is no doubt true that the evidence in such a case would not require to have been very strong, but there is no evidence at all which would lead to the conclusion.

As stated, their Lordships incline to think that the Judgment of the Subordinate Judge would have been affirmed by the Judicial Commissioners but for the view thus expressed :—"It is needless to cite authorities to show that such a gift cannot stand unless it is proved that the lady had independent advice."

In their Lordships' opinion there is no rule of law of the absolute kind here indicated. The possession of independent advice, or the absence of it, is a fact to be taken into consideration and well weighed on a review of the whole circumstances relevant to the issue of whether the grantor thoroughly comprehended, and deliberately and of her own free will carried out, the transaction If she did, the issue is solved and the transaction is upheld ; but if upon a review of the facts—which include the nature of the thing done and the training and habit of mind of the grantor, as well as the proximate circumstances affecting the execution—if the conclusion is reached that the obtaining of independent advice would not really have made any difference in the result, then the Deed ought to stand. The present, in their Lordships' judgment, appears to be a case of that kind.

Their Lordships, as already mentioned, have fully in view the fact that the lady was a purdahnashin lady, but the evidence as to her strength of will and business capacity, and the fact that the Deed as granted is not in the circumstances of her life in any way an unnatural disposition of part of her property, go far, taken together with the evidence in this case, to convince them that the Deed was granted by her as the expression of her deliberate mind and apart from any undue influence exerted upon it. In short, their view is that if independent outside advice, which is an essentially different thing from independent outside control, had been obtained, the lady would have acted just as she did. Much as their Lordships support and approve of the protection given by law to a purdahnashin lady, they cannot transmute such a legal protection into a legal disability. She might, especially if the outside adviser had been a lawyer, have altered the shape or form of the transaction, but in substance and result she would have carried out the same purpose and will as are expressed by the Deed under challenge. They refer to the judgment of Lord Macnaghten in Mahomed Bukhsh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi (3).

(2) 7 H. L. Cas. 750 (1859).

KALI BAKHSH SINGH v. RAM GOPAL SINGH.

In these circumstances their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the Judgment and Decree appealed from should be reversed and that of the Subordinate Judge of date the 15th February 1907 should be restored. The Appellants will be entitled to the costs since the date of the last-mentioned Judgment and to the costs of this Appeal.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 594 OF 1913.

IMAM, J.
1913,
Heard, 1, October, 16 & 17, December.
Judgment, 22, December.

In the matter of a Receiver
P. RAY CHAUDHURI
v.
NOLINI PROKAS SEN and another.

Contempt of Court—Receiver appointed by the Court, interference with, while discharging his duty—Interference by one not a party to the suit, if contempt—Strangers to the suit, duty of, when affected by order appointing Receiver—Practice in contempt matter—Affidavit.

The right of a stranger in possession to continue in possession is not affected by the order appointing a. Receiver, but the fact of his possession does not give him the privilege to interfere with the Receiver directed to take possession of the property. His proper course is to apply to the Court for the redress of his grievance. If he interferes with the Receiver he does so at his peril. The Court will not permit a Receiver appointed by its authority to be interfered with or dispossessed of the property he is directed to receive, by any one, although the order appointing him may be perfectly erroneous. The Court requires and insists that application should be made to the Court for permission to take possession of any property of which the Receiver either has taken possession or is directed to take possession.

AMES v. THE TRUSTEES OF THE BIRKENHEAD DOCKS (1) followed.

In this suit, Arun Chandra Singha and others sued Kumud Behary Sen, who was alleged to be the Assistant Secretary to the Albert Institute and the surviving member of the governing body of the said Institute, for the framing of a scheme for the said Institute, for the appointment of trutees and for necessary inquiries and accounts. Mr. P. Ray Chaudhuri, an advocate of the Calcutta High Court, was appointed Receiver by the Court, by an order passed on the 18th July 1913, whereby amongst other things the said Receiver was directed to take possession of No. 15, College Square and realise the rents, issues and profits thereof. In pursuance of the said order the Receiver took possession of the said property on the 17th September 1913. When taking possession the Receiver was told by Nolini Prokas Sen and Asoke Prokas Sen, two brothers of the Defendant Kumud Behary Sen, that (1) the Defendant Kumud Behary Sen was entitled to an undivided one-sixth share in the said premises while they with their other brothers claimed the remaining five-sixth share and were in possession thereof. (2) That they had no objection to the Receiver taking possession of the share of the Defendant Kumud Behary Sen and realising his share of the rents. In the meantime the said two brothers having brought a suit, in the Calcutta Small Couse Court, for the five-sixth share of the rent against one of the tenants, the same was dismissed on the 20th September 1913. After this and on the 24th September, the Receiver sent a durwan, named Akbar Khan, to take care of the property on his behalf. Shortly after his arrival at the premises he came back to Mr. Ray Chaudhuri and stated that he had been obstructed and assaulted. Thereupon Mr. Ray Chaudhuri went over to the premises at about 1-30 P.M. and was assaulted by Nolini Prokas Sen, one of the brothers of the first Defendant, and was obstructed in discharge of his duty by his other brother Asoke Prokas The Receiver thereupon lodged a complaint at the Police station, and shortly thereafter, Mr. Rasul appeared on behalf of the Receiver and brought the matter to the notice of the Court, whereupon a petition was ordered to be filed reporting the facts which being done the Court of its own motion ordered the issue of warrants against Nolini Prokas Sen and Asoke Prokas Sen.

On the next day, i.e., 26th September 1913, a Rule was obtained on behalf of the Plaintiffs, against the alleged contemnors Nolini Prokas Sen and Asoke Prokas Sen calling upon them to show why they should not be committed to prison for having assaulted the Receiver.

Both the matters came on for hearing before Imam, J. On October 1st, when Mr. Rasul appeared for Mr. Ray Chaudhuri, on Mr. Rasul going to read the affidavits Mr. J. N. Roy who appeared with Mr. P. N. Chatterjee on behalf of the two Sen brothers, objected to the reading of the affidavits which were filed on September 26th on the ground that it was a motion for contempt and the procedure must be strictly followed. His Lordship overruled Mr. Roy's objection and allowed the affidavits to be read.

Mr. Roy then read the joint-affidavit filed by Nolini and Asoke in which they denied the allegations made against them by Mr. P. Ray Chaudhuri and said that there could not be any writ of attachment against his clients unless there was evidence that the order appointing the Receiver had been served on them, and that in this case there was no affidavit that the order the breach of which was complained of had been served upon them. His Lordship adjourned the further hearing of the case till November 19th and in the meantime directed Mr. Ray Chaudhuri to file affidavit in reply for which he had had no time.

On the 16th December the matter came up again for hearing and was heard by Imam, J.

Mr. B. Chakravarti, Mr. H. D. Bose and Mr. B. K. Lahiri appeared on behalf of Arun Chandra Singha and others, the Plaintiffs in the original suit.

Mr. A. Rasul and Mr. P. K. Sen for the Receiver.

Mr. K. P. Basu for B. L. Gupta, one of the trustee Defendants of the Albert Institute.

Mr. J. N. Roy and Mr. P. N. Chatterjee for the Contemnors.

Mr. Chatterjee first read the affidavits and argued that there was no order on his clients as they were no parties to the suit. According to his clients' affidavits Mr. Ray Chaudhuri had given them ample provocation. Any retaliation so provoked by Mr. Ray Chaudhuri should not be the subject-matter of attachment. As Lord Mansfield in his judgment in the case, Gregory v. Onslow (2), said "that where there appear faults on both sides it would be improper to proceed on an attachment." There was no express direction on them. The order only says "that the said Receiver do take possession of the said property No. 15, College Square and collect rents, profits, etc," and according to Belchambers' Practice, 1884, p. 245, "an attactment will not lie on a rule of Court unless for disturbance of some express direc ion." Reference was made to an unreported case, Kassinath Dass Khettry v. Subodra Dabi (3). Per Norris, J.—"In this case the party committed for disobedience denied that he had taken the idol. On appeal the order of committal was rescinded, the Court being of opinion that where there was conflict of evidence leaving it doubtful who has committed the act complained of, no order should be made." Then the case of Deo. d v. Earl of Cardigan (4). "Attactment will not lie on a rule of Court unless for disobedience of some express direc'ion." Nolini and Asoke were "strangers" to the action and were in actual possession of the Institute and so the appointment of the Receiver has no effect on them. Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 24, p. 379. Cited Evelyn v. Lewis (5), Johnes v. Claughton (6) and Angel v. South Metropolitan Brewing and Bottling Co. (7). He then argued that the order appointing the Receiver, for the breach of which his clients were alleged to be guilty, was not personally served on them, they being no party to the suit. See Annual Practice (1913), p. 748 : "The order to be enforced must have been personally served" and therefore it was submitted that on these grounds the Rule ought to be discharged. In conclusion, he submitted that "the Court is always jealous of the personal freedom of the subjects of the Crown, and where the liberty of the subject is in question, always requires the utmost strictness in procedure. Application affecting the liberty of the subject are matters strictissimus juris." Oswald on Contempt, p. 210.

Mr. J. N. Roy on the same side submitted that the practice of sending a person to jail for contempt of Court had become obsolete. The Court was generally satisfied with ordering payment of costs and expenses by a contemnor for his improper conduct. He was entitled to treat Mr. Ray Chaudhuri as a stranger—he was going to say a trespasser—in spite of the fact that he was appointed Receiver by the High Court. Having regard to the probabilities of the case there could not be any doubt—upon the admissions made by Mr. Ray Chaudhuri—that a certain amount of blame lay on Mr. Ray Chaudhuri from the manner in which he spoke, the language he used and things that he did. Therefore the contemnors were entitled to the benefit of doubt, and the Rule should be discharged.

Mr. Chakravarti on behalf of the Plaintiffs (1) referred to the various affidavits filed on both sides to show that the case made by Mr. Ray Chaudhuri and his men had been the same from the very beginning while the case made by the contemnors was a tissue of falsehoods. As a glaring instance of the latter he referred to the allegation that even at the time of occurence Nolini Prokas alleged that he did not know the name of the Receiver, which is falsified by a letter addressed to the Receiver by name on the 26th September: (2) that the Receiver had been clearly in possession from the 17th September 1913: (3) the respectability of the contemnors, he submitted, could on no account be a palliative: it was an aggravation of their misconduct. (4) While Mr. Ray Chaudhuri made a distinct and definite case forthwith—affidavits on the other side were filed some time afterwards and were contrary to facts. Mr. Ray Chaudhuri and his witnesses were offered for cross-examination but the offer was declined. (5) The authority of the Court should be maintained not because Mr. Ray Chaudhuri was concerned—but because individuals, however high placed they might be, however respectable their parentage might be, were not entitled to set at naught the authority of the High Court. Counsel cited Kerr on Receiver, 6th Edition, p. 192: "When the Court has appointed a Receiver and the Receiver is in possession, his possession is the possession of the Court and may not be disturbed without its leave. If any one, whoever he be, disturb the possession of the Receiver, the Court holds that person guilty of contempt of Court and liable to be imprisoned for contempt. . . . . . A man who thinks he has a right paramount to that of the Receiver, must, before he presumes to take any step of his own motion, apply to the Court for leave to assert his right against the Receiver" In a contempt matter the question of title cannot arise: See Beach on Receiver (1887), pp. 246-247. "The Court will not in such a proceeding, do more than pass upon the bare question of contempt. It will not, directly or indirectly, assume to consider or to decide to whom the property belongs, or to decide that the Receiver has or has not, the right of possession in and to it. . . . A dissatisfied party must seek his remedy by appeal and not by setting at defiance the authority of the Court; and strangers to the suit, who, nevertheless, have an interest in the subject-matter, may have their relief by a direct proceeding looking to the removal of the Receiver and the setting aside of the orders in reference to the receivership." Further, that the Receiver has been appointed by this Court to take possession of No. 15, College Square. He must do so no matter whoever may be in possession whether Nolini Prokas or Asoke. If we take that the Receiver went there to take possession of the one-fifth of the property, still Mr. Ray Chaudhuri has a right to every part of the building. They have no legal right to interfere with the Receiver who went there to discharge his duty. Counsel cited Ames v. The Trustees of the Birkenhead Docks (1), Russel v. East Anglian Ry. Co. (8).

"Where a Receiver was appointed and the Defendant assigned to him his property consisting in part of a vessel which he had previously leased and upon which there was at the time of assignment, some rent past due to the shipowner, it was held that the act of the owner in issuing a distress warrant for the rent, and the act of a constable in taking possession of the vessel, under the distress warrant, while it was in the possession of the Receiver, were, each of them, contempt of Court, for which both were liable for punishment. Noe v. Gibson (9). Service of the order appointing a Receiver is not necessary." Beach on Receiver, p. 238. "So, also if one, with knowledge of the appointment of the Receiver, interfere by attachment or otherwise, with property to which the Receiver is entitled under the order of his appointment, but of which he had not taken possession, he may be punished for contempt. Richard v. People (10)."

Cited also High on Receiver, 4th Ed., Art. 166, p. 197, where it is stated :—" It is also not necessary that he should be officially apprised of the Receiver's appointment or even that the formal order should have been actually drawn, provided he has actual notice of the receivership or of the order of Court directing the appointment. Any actual knowledge of the granting of the order is sufficient to fix Defendant's responsibility for its violation, the same principle being applicable to such cases as in case of the violation of an injunction." (10) As regards punishment, cited Price v. Hutchinson (11) ; so far as the question of punishment was concerned it was a matter entirely for his Lordship to determine. Regard must be had to the fact that when the matter came before the Court there was a reckless charge against the Receiver.

[IMAM, J.—Does this remark apply to both the contemnors ?]

Mr. Chakravarti.—Not in the same degree.

Mr. Rasul for the Receiver.—Mr. Ray Chaudhuri's work was done as soon as he came and reported the matter to the Court. On account of this assault Mr. Ray Chaudhuri had lost his honour, and Counsel hoped that he might not lose his character. As far as the punishment was concerned it lay entirely in his Lordship's hands.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

IMAM, J.—This matter of contempt has come up on a motion and upon a writ issued by this Court against Nolini Prokas Sen and Asoke Prokas Sen for their attachment and committal to prison for obstructing and assaulting a Receiver in the discharge of his duty. On the 18th July last, Mr. P. Ray Chaudhuri, Barrister-at-Law, was appointed by this Court a Receiver of certain properties, the subject of Suit No. 594 of 1913. The two Respondents are not parties to the suit, but their brother Kumud Behary Sen is. The properties in suit comprise among others the premises No. 15, College Square, in the town of Calcutta commonly known as the Albert Hall. On the 16th September last the two Respondents and their three other brothers through their Attorney addressed a letter to Mr. Ray Chaudhuri, informing him that the premises No. 15, College Square, were in their possession and enjoyment jointly with their brother Kumud Behary Sen and that the order appointing him Receiver could not be binding on them or affect their right to the property in question, they not being parties to the suit. The letter further stated that while there would be no objection to the Receiver taking possession of a sixth share of the rents and profits of the premises representing the share of Kumud Behary Sen, they would not allow him to either receive the entire rents or take possession of the entire premises. The Receiver in his affidavit states that on the 17th September he went to the premises, walked over and took formal possession of the same. The Receiver thereafter for the safety and protection of the premises and the properties contained therein appointed a durwan of the name of Akbar Khan. On the 24th September in the morning the Rec iver sent the durwan and a clerk of his, Tarkeshwar Ganguli, to remain in charge of the premises. Tarkeshwar Ganguli in his affidavit states that on entering the premises with Akbar Khan he was showing the rooms to the latter when Asoke Prokas Sen objected to the durwan remaining there and on his leaving the durwan there, he came away to report to his master Asoke Prokas Sen's objection. Akbar Khan states in his affidavit that after the clerk left, Nolini Prokas Sen collected some gundas and forcibly put the durwan out of the house and closed the gate. Being informed of this Mr. Ray Chaudhuri accompanied by the clerk and the durwan went to the premises and found Asoke Prokas alone there. Mr. Ray Chaudhuri says that he enquired of Asoke Prokas Sen the reason of the treatment given to his men but received no satisfactory reply. Mr. Ray Chaudhuri further says that referring to Asoke Prokas's conduct towards the clerk and the durwan, he remarked that he, Asoke, was an "unworthy son of his illustrious father." Two other witnesses, Profulla Kumar Bannerjee and Ahindra Nath Chatterjee, both of No. 15, College Square, whom the Receiver had taken with him when entering the premises, state that on meeting Asoke Prokas Sen in one of the rooms the Receiver took exception to the conduct of Asoke Prokas Sen and his brother in driving away and assaulting the durwan in the morning which caused an exchange of angry words between them, and while conversation was going on between them, Asoke Prokas sent for his elder brother Nolini Prokas Sen. Mr. Ray Chaudhuri states that at about 1 P.M. as he was about to leave the premises and had come near the gate, Nolini Prokas came from the street outside and immediately caught hold of him and wanted to turn him out, and on his protesting against such conduct assaulted and beat him with blows and fists causing him bruises on his body, specially on his right wrist. After this Mr. Ray Chaudhuri left the premises, and laid an information at the Police Station and then appeared before this Court and verbally reported the incident.

As against the version of the R ceiver and his witnesses the Respondents give their own account supported by statements of their witnesses. Their story is the following: On the 17th September Mr. Ray Chaudhuri came to the Albert Hall but did not take possession of the entire premises. He took possession of only a sixth share owing to the objection of the two Respondents. On the 24th September at about 11 A.M., a durwan accompanied by a person unknown to the Respondents walked into the premises and after some conversation among themselves the durwan's companion went away. The durwan then without any reference to the Respondents, proceeded to close and padlock the doors of some of the rooms in which some classes of the Albert Collegiate School, of which the Respondents claim to be part proprietors and superintendents, were being held. The Respondents protested against the durwan's action. The durwan said that he had been sent there by Mr. Ray Chaudhuri, the Receiver, and on being asked to bring a letter of authority from the Receiver he left. The Respondents deny having forcibly turned out the durwan and having called in budmashes. At about 1 P.M. Mr. Ray Chaudhuri walked into the room where Asoke Prokas was seated and in a rude and peremptory voice said "Why did you turn out my durwan and assault him?" Whereupon he was told that the durwan had not been turned out but had been prevented from locking up the school rooms. This offended Mr. Ray Chaudhuri who used abusive language to Asoke calling him "scoundrel," "not the true son of your father" etc. On this Asoke Prokas said that Mr. Ray Chaudhuri was not talking like a gentleman and that he, Asoke, "would not answer." This remark excited Mr. Ray Chaudhuri who struck Asoke a blow which the latter did not return. Again Mr. Ray Chaudhuri aimed another blow at Asoke but he lurched and Mr. Ray Chaudhuri's fist violently hit against the chair on which Asoke had been seated whereby he hurt himself. Then Mr. Ray Chaudhuri demanded of Asoke to give him his name and to hand over to him the bunch of keys of the school rooms which the latter refused to do. Thereafter Mr. Ray Chaudhuri threatened to hit Asoke so hard with his stick as to lay him flat on the ground and ordered Asoke to leave the room. He further tried to snatch away the bunch of keys but failed to accomplish his purpose. Asoke then said that he would not leave the room, whatever might happen. After this Mr. Ray Chaudhury left the room and meeting the Respondents' durwan, Shib Lall Tewari, asked him how he dared to turn out his durwan, Akbar Khan, and gave him a slap on the face. Then he walked into the Tewari's chowka (cooking place) and broke the earthen pots with his stick. Having done this he went to the gate and stationed some men there to stop the passage. At this time Nolini Prokas Sen arrived and after some altercation between him and Mr. Ray Chaudhuri in the course of which the former attempted to force his passage, the latter struck him a blow. As Mr. Ray Chaudhuri was about to hit him another blow Nolini Prokas Sen caught hold of Mr. Ray Chaudhuri's hand and a scuffle ensued, resulting in both of them falling on a wall. Then Nolini Prokas Sen went to the Police Station at 1-30 P.M., and made a complaint for assault and abusive language against Mr. Ray Chaudhuri whose name Nolini Prokas says was not known to him at the time.

The two versions are entirely contradictory of each other and I have to find which of the two is true. Mr. J. N. Roy appearing for the Respondents has not impeached Mr. Ray Chaudhuri's veracity, but has urged that he must have been excited when he went to the premises and has suggested that his statements are inaccurate, on account of a natural failure to observe events in a moment of excitement. Mr. Ray Chaudhuri's statements appear to me to be too definite and clear to admit of such an explanation, and if I am to accept them there is no escape from the conclusion that he was obstructed in the discharge of his duty, by both the Respondents and was assaulted by Nolini Prokas Sen. The story set up by them is so incredible in itself, that I have no doubt, it embodies a tissue of falsehoods invented to save them from the present charge. In his statement to the Police, Nolini Prokas Sen did not make any higher case than that of being pushed and it has to be noticed, that he did not even mention Mr. Ray Chaudhuri's name; then, to explain the omission Nolini Prokas now states, that he did not know Mr. Ray Chaudhuri's name at the time of the information to the Police. This, however, is contradicted by the statement in paragraph 11 of the joint affidavit of Nolini Prokas Sen and Asoke Prokas Sen from which it is clear, that both the brothers came to know Mr. Ray Chaudhuri by name and sight at least on the 17th September when he had gone to take possession of the premises. I believe Mr. Ray Chaudhuri's version of the incident of the afternoon of the 24th September. I also believe the version of the morning incident as related by Tarkeshwar Ganguli and Akbar Khan.

Mr. Roy has contended that his clients being in possession of five-sixths share in the premises, were not affected by the order appointing a Receiver as it was not binding on them. In support of this contention he has cited a passage from 24 Halsbury's Laws of England, at page 379, which runs thus: "as against a stranger to the action, who is in actual possession, the appointment of a Receiver is of no effect," and has referred to several cases enunciating the proposition. I do not understand the proposition to amount to more than this that the right of a stranger in possession, to continue in possession, is not affected by the order appointing a Receiver, but the fact of his possession does not, to my mind, give him the privilege to interfere with the Receiver directed to take possession of the property. His proper course is to apply to the Court for the redress of his grievance. If he interferes with the Receiver he does so at his peril. It is a settled rule that the Court will not permit a Receiver, appointed by its authority, to be interfered with or dispossessed of the property he is directed to receive, by any one, although the order appointing him may be perfectly erroneous; the Court requires and insists that application should be made to the Court for permission to take possession of any property of which the Receiver either has taken possession or is directed to take possession [Ames v. The Trustees of the Birkenhead Docks (1)]. Mr. Roy has contended that the cases relied upon by Mr. Chakravarti on behalf of the Plaintiffs do not apply to this case, as they all relate to interference with the Receiver by persons who were not in possession of the property. The principle nevertheless that the Court will not allow anyone to interfere with a Receiver while the order lasts, is there.

I hold that Nolini Prokas Sen has been guilty of a contempt of this Court's authority by obstructing and assaulting the Receiver in the discharge of his duty. I further hold that Asoke Prokas Sen has been guilty of a contempt of this Court's authority by obstructing the Receiver in the discharge of his duty. In the case of Nolini Prokas Sen his conduct has been so contemptuous and so grossly disrespectful to this Court, that a mere order for payment of costs will not vindicate the majesty of law. I therefore order the committal of Nolini Prokas Sen to prison for three weeks. The conduct of Asoke Prokas Sen has not been as heinous. I order him to be detained in custody till the rising of the Court and to pay the costs of the Plaintiffs and the Receiver.

[Then Mr. P. N. Chatterjee said that he was instructed to offer a most unqualified apology to the Court and asked the Court to remit the sentence. The Court ordered the matter to be mentioned and an application made at half-past two.

This being done, the Court ordered the discharge of Nolini Prokas Sen and directed him to pay the costs of hearing of the matter to the Plaintiffs as well as to the Receiver, the Receiver's costs as between attorney and client and the Plaintiffs' costs as between party and party. In the meantime he was ordered to give security for Rs. 5,000 to the satisfaction of the Registrar.]

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL

No. 2 OF 1909.

JENKINS, C. J.
HARINGTON, J.
MOOKERJEE, J.
1913,
Heard, 3, 4 & 5, February.
Judgment, 18, March.

BHAGWAT BAKSH RAY, Plaintiff, Appellant,

v.

SHEO PROSAD SAHU and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Ghatwali *service tenure—Suit for resumption of land by proprietor—*Jaigir, two kinds of—Not necessarily conditional and inalienable—Tenure created by document, evidence necessary to prove incidents of—Fact of descent of land from father to son for a long time, inference to be drawn from—Facts necessary to be proved even if grant originally made subject to performance of service—Limitation—Fact of service being incapable of being enforced, effect of, on service tenure.

The Plaintiff brought a suit for the possession of two mouzahs within his zemindari against the Defendants who were in possession, having acquired them by a series of purchases from the persons who previously held them under the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff's case was that the mouzahs in question were a jaigir conditional on the performance of Ghatwali services and as such were inalienable and the original holders having alienated them the Plaintiff was entitled to resume possession :

Held, on the evidence, that the Plaintiff had failed to prove that the land was held on a service tenure, whether Ghatwali or otherwise.

That a jaigir is not necessarily conditional; it may be unconditional and the mere fact that a tenure is described as a jaigir is by no means conclusive and its incidents must be determined from other circumstances.

That where the tenure in question was created by a document, the terms on which the land is held, its alienability and its liability to forfeiture must depend on the terms of the particular grant and not on the terms of grants that may have been made to others.

PER MOOKERJEE, J.—Assuming that the evidence of terms of grants to other persons was admissible, their probative force in this case was valueless.

If it is proved by long uninterrupted usage that the lands have passed from father to son for two or three generations without objection, the inference would be that the grant was a grant of inheritance because the fact of descent from father to son is the strongest possible evidence of hereditary character.

BHAGWAT BAKSH RAY v. SHEO PROSHAD SAHU.

Assuming it to be established that performance of service was annexed to the grant the Plaintiff would have to prove whether the grant was a mere grant in lieu of wages or was a grant subject to a burden of service; and if the grant was made as a reward for past service the Plaintiff would have to prove that merely because performance of service was annexed to the grant, non-performance thereof entitles him to treat the tenure as forfeited. Further, assuming that performance of service could be claimed and had been improperly refused, the Plaintiff would have to establish that the tenure which was held partly at least on condition of payment of rent in cash was liable to forfeiture for mere refusal of performance of service, although the cash rent was being paid.

That the Ghatwali service if ever rendered having terminated in 1886 and the suit having been brought in 1905 any possible claim of the Plaintiff to enforce performance of the service or to recover possession on the ground of forfeiture by reason of non-performance of service was barred by limitation.

That on principle it may well be maintained that where service can no longer be enforced and the tenure consequently ceases to be a service tenure, the land can be alienated.

This was an Appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent, filed on the 25th of May 1909 against a decree of the High Court, dated the 3rd May 1909, made in Appeal from Original Decree No. 345 of 1906.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—The Plaintiff is the proprietor of Tappa Taraia, and included in that Tappa are two villages, Kanda and Tali. These villages were granted by the Plaintiff's ancestors to the ancestors of Dookhbhanjan and Balimanjhi, but as the result of several successive sales, some private and some by Court, and dating from 1877 to 1899, the Defendants Nos. 1, 2, and 3 claim to be entitled to 16 annas of Kanda and 15 annas of Tali. Defendant No. 4 claims to be entitled to the remaining 1 anna of Tali, as a purchaser. According to Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 the price paid by them exceeds Rs. 17,000.

The Plaintiff alleges that the two villages were held by Dhookhbhanjan and Balimanjhi and by their ancestors before them on a service tenure on condition of paying Rs. 19 annually for rent, and that "the service consisted of Ghatwali service at Kanda Ghat, and afterwards when Government made separate arrangement for guarding the ghat by the appointment of police-officers, the same consisted of service as sepoy in Plaintiff's deori." It is the Plaintiff's case that the tenure as being a service tenure, was inalienable and was liable to resumption not only on failure of the grantees or their heirs to render service but also in the event of transfer.

The Plaintiff alleges that Balimanjhi died, and since 1898 Dookhbhanjan ceased to render service, and that on the 7th of September 1901 he became aware of the invalid sale to Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and later of the invalid purchase of Defendant No. 4. "The cause of action," according to the Plaintiff, "arose in 1898 when service was discontinued—and also on the 7th September 1901, date of the Deputy Commissioner's order and also on the 10th September 1904, date of the order of the Commissioner of Chota Nagpur Division and also when the Plaintiff became aware of the invalid transfer to Defendant No. 4." To these orders of the 7th September 1901 and the 10th December 1904, I will refer later.

It is in these circumstances that the Plaintiff has brought this suit whereby he prays as follows :—

"(a). That it be declared that the jaigir Mouzahs Kanda and Tali are resumable by the Plaintiff on the omission of the jaigirdars to render service for which the mouzahs had been granted.

(b). That it be declared that the jaigir mouzahs are non-transferable by the jaigirdars.

(c). That it be declared by the Court that the Defendants have got no valid title to Mouzahs Kanda and Tali on account of the invalid transfer and that the Plaintiff has become entitled to resume the Mouzahs Kanda and Tali.

(d). That the Defendants be dispossessed from the entire villages Kanda and Tali and that the Plaintiff be given khas possession over the said mouzahs."

It has been stated before us by the Plaintiff that though the word resume is used, the purpose of this suit is not the imposition of rent or revenue but recovery of actual possession of the land.

All the Defendants have contested the Plaintiff's claim and their defence succeeded before the Subordinate Judge of Palamau by whom the suit was dismissed. An appeal was preferred to the High Court and heard by Doss and Richardson, JJ. They were divided in opinion. The present appeal is under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Richardson, J., which was in favour of affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge and so prevailed.

The principal question is whether the two villages of Kanda and Tali were held on a service tenure and were inalienable and whether they are liable to be forfeited by reason of the non-performance of service and the transfer of the tenure. It is clearly established that there was a grant of these two villages. Unfortunately the grant cannot be produced as it has been lost. This is due to no fault of the Defendants or their predecessors, for it is proved that the document was filed in a case before the Adalat Dewani at Lohardaga, and, with all other records, was destroyed in the Mutiny.

But though the original has been lost, one would have expected the Plaintiff to have in his possession a copy of this document as he has of others. He however declares that the copies of the sanads of Mouzahs Kanda and Tali are not in his sherista.

The grant is one of considerable antiquity, and there has been long continued enjoyment under it. But there has been no lack of endeavour on the part of the Plaintiff and his father to regain possession of these two villages free from any tenure created by the grant.

As far back as 1867 Lachmi Baksh Rai, the Plaintiff's father, instituted a suit in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Lohardaga against Rittaran Manjhi for himself and as guardian for others, including Dookhbhanjan, then a minor. The purpose of the suit was to obtain possession of Kanda and Tali, and the case made by the Plaintiff was that the village had been granted to the ancestor of the Defendants not on service tenure but as ijara, i.e., ticca for life, and that the grantees had all died. The Defendants by their written statement in that suit alleged possession for more than 60 years, that the property in dispute was Khutkutti property reclaimed by Ghansham Manjhi, the common ancestor of the Defendants and of other shareholders "by clearing jungle and uprooting shrubs, and that a hereditary grant had been made." The Deputy Commissioner held that the Plaintiff had entirely failed to prove his case and he remarked that it was not necessary to allude further to the Defendants' title than to say that, regarded relatively, there was much more evidence before the Court to prove it than there was to prove the Plaintiff's claim.

The result was that the suit was dismissed.

An appeal was preferred to the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, but it was dismissed, and a special appeal to the High Court met with a similar fate. Delivering the judgment of the High Court, Markby, J, said that "the Defendants and Plaintiff agreed that some 40 years ago the land passed into the possession of the Defendants' ancestors, but the Plaintiff alleged that that was a grant to three specified persons the last of whom died in the year 1858, i.e., 9 years before the commencement of this suit. The Defendant alleged that it was a grant in the nature of jaigir given for certain services and it is admitted that they remained in possession up to the time that the suit was brought." Much has been made by Plaintiff of the words "given for certain services."

The next attempt to regain possession of the villages was in 1901 when the present Plaintiff applied under sec. 34 of Act I of 1879, B. C., to be put into possession on the ground that Dookbhanjan and Balimanjhi were dead, and that no heir had applied to be registered in their place. The application was opposed by Sheoprosad Sahu, Joygobind Sahu and Ramnarain Sahu who maintained that the tenure was not resumable but was granted as a Khutkutti several generations ago. They further alleged that they had acquired the property by purchase and that Dookhbhanjan was not dead. Their opposition prevailed and the application was rejected on the 7th of September 1901. This is treated by the Plaintiff as a cause of action.

An appeal was preferred first to the Commissioner and then to the Board of Revenue, but in each case with no success.

In 1904 the Defendants applied under sec. 36 of Act I of 1879 for an order requiring the Plaintiff to admit them as tenure-holders in the Registry of his sherista. The application was granted and an appeal from this order was dismissed on the 10th of December 1904. This too the Plaintiff describes as a cause of action.

It is worthy of note that in the earlier proceedings instituted by the present Plaintiff and his father neither of them alleges that the villages were held on a service tenure, and yet that would have been a natural allegation to make had there been any foundation for it.

In the judgment of the High Court there is the expression a "jaigir for certain services," and considerable reliance seems to have been placed on it by the Plaintiff. But it is obvious that the services to which Markby, J., referred were past and not future services. The actual words of the learned Judge are these, "the Defendants alleged that it was a grant in the nature of a jaigir given for certain services."

Now, the Defendants did not appear before the High Court so that the allegation must have been that made in the written statement. But the only services mentioned there is the reclamation by clearing jungle and uprooting shrubs, and that reclamation was a past, not a future service. The previous litigation then, so far from helping the Plaintiff's case is really against it, for while it goes to show that there had been a long possession of the property by the Manjhis, there is an absence of any suggestion by the Plaintiff or his father of a service tenure. In contrast with this we have the assertion by those opposing the Plaintiff and his father that the property was Khutkutti and this implies that the tenure was free from any obligation for service. What then is the evidence in this case by which the Plaintiff seeks to prove that the villages were held on service tenure?

First, the Plaintiffs make much of the fact that in a series of documents the villages are described as "my ancestral jaigirdari interest" or by some cognate phrase. This, according to the Plaintiff, supports his contention that the villages were held on jaigir tenure, and this he maintains, implies that it is a service tenure. But a jaigir is not necessarily conditional, it may be unconditional as where it is a grant for services already rendered, and this is apparent from Dosibai v. Ishwardas (1). Then witnesses have been called to prove that jaigirs in this district are liable to forfeiture on alienation, but the utmost that they go to show according to the learned Subordinate Judge is that the tenures in Palamau which are known as jaigir are as a general rule conditional on service, inalienable and liable to resumption on alienation or failure of service.

But this class of evidence is of little or no value, for the tenure now in question was created by a document. And where that is so, the terms on which the land is held, its alienability, and its liability to forfeiture must depend on the terms of the particular grant, and not on the terms of grants that may have been made to others.

I now pass to the evidence that has been adduced with a view to showing that service has actually been performed in respect of these two villages. The Plaintiff's version is that originally there was Ghatwali service at Kanda Ghat, but about the year 1886 the Government made arrangements for guarding the ghat by their own police-officers and that the service of the Ghatwals then terminated. The Plaintiff himself does not profess to have seen Ghatwali service on the ghat, and this I can well understand, for he did not take over the management of his Reyasat till 1893, and at that time the Ghatwali service could no longer have been in existence. All he is able to say as to this is that he heard from his uncle that all jaigirs were on the condition of service, that when Kanda Ghat was settled by Government the jaigirdars of Kanda and Tali served as durwans at his residence at Bisrampore. He deposes that when he began to manage his own affairs Dookhbhanjan was one of the durwans. The Plaintiff's witnesses go further than the Plaintiff: they profess to have seen Ghatwali service rendered by Dookhbhanjan and Balimanjhi at the ghats as well as durwan or sentry duty at Bisrampore. The Subordinate Judge did not credit the evidence as to service at the ghat and Richardson, J., has accepted his view. Doss, J., also agreed with the Subordinate Judge that it was extremely improbable that after the signal success which the Manjhis achieved in the litigation with the Plaintiff's father in the year 1867 they would render any service of a personal nature, but influenced by certain considerations to which he alludes, and the evidence of the Defendants' witness No. 2, Kharag Manjhi, he came to the conclusion that the Ghatwali service must have been discharged by the Manjhis.

But in two important respects the learned Judge was in error: first, he was mistaken in supposing that it had never been suggested by the Manjhis that these mouzahs had been granted to their ancestors as a reward for some past services rendered by them. In their written statement in the litigation of 1867 they distinctly averred that the property in dispute was Khutkutti reclaimed by their ancestor.

Next the learned Judge was mistaken as to the evidence of Kharag Manjhi. We have examined the record and also the Subordinate Judge's notes and I have no doubt that a "never" has dropped out, and that the testimony of the witness was the exact opposite of what the learned Judge supposed.

The Subordinate Judge while unconvinced as to service at the ghats, felt it difficult to believe that a person in the position of the Plaintiff would come to Court and swear that Dookhbhanjan had actually worked as a sepoy at the Gurh at Bisrampur, if there were no foundation for the statement.

Doss, J., thought the story of the Manjhis having served as sentries at the Plaintiff's residence at Bisrampore as devoid of foundation, and Richardson, J., evidently was of the same opinion.

But while the Subordinate Judge was not prepared to disregard the Plaintiff's evidence as to the performance by Dookhbhanjan of sentry duty at Bisrampore Ghur, he clearly did not connect that service with the tenure of Kanda and Tali. This I can well understand, for if, as I think there was not any service after the litigation of 1867—and it is not suggested that there is evidence of any prior to that —it is in a high degree improbable that Dookhbhanjan would have undertaken the performance of sentry service in respect of the villages after the abolition of the Ghatwali in 1886. To begin with, it must be borne in mind that the Manjhis had begun to part with their interest in the villages as far back as 1877, and Dookhbhanjan was party to a zurpeshgi mortgage in 1875 and a sale-deed in 1882. Then again we have no explanation as to how the sentry or durwan service at the palace could have been imposed in place of the service at the ghats and the mere fact that Dookhbhanjan may have worked as a durwan at the palace in 1893 falls very far short of proving that this service was an incident of the tenure on which the two villages were held.

The conclusion, then, to which I come is that no Ghatwali service is proved, and that if Dookhbhanjan worked as a sentry or durwan at the palace—a point which I am not prepared to affirm—it was not as an incident of the tenure on which the villages were held, and that the villages in fact were not held on service tenure. In arriving at this conclusion I have not overlooked the Plaintiff's argument that unless the grant was for service to be rendered there was no motive for the grant.

BHAGWAT BAKSH RAY v. SHEO PROSHAD SAHU.

But future services are not the sole motive for grants of land, and the Defendants' story is at least as probable as the Plaintiff's. But if the villages were not held on a service tenure then it is conceded they are not inalienable, and thus the basis of the Plaintiff's claim fails.

If the tenure in its origin had been conditional on service, then it would have been necessary to consider whether on the determination of the service either by the Government, or by reason of long failure to perform the same, the lands would not have become alienable [Radhabai v. Anantarav (2)].

But in view of my finding it is unnecessary for me to pursue this enquiry. Nor need I consider how far the payments made by the Defendants and the receipts held by them place an obstacle in the way of the Plaintiff's right to recover possession. It is enough for me to say that, for the reasons I have already indicated, in my opinion the Plaintiff's suit must fail, and this Appeal should be dismissed with costs.

HARINGTON, J.—This case comes before us in consequence of a difference of opinion between Doss and Richardson, JJ.

The suit was for possession of two Mouzahs Kanda and Tali which fall within Tappa Tarria of which the Plaintiff is the proprietor :—

The Defendants, who are in possession of Kanda and 15 annas of Mouzah Tali, acquired these estates by a series of purchases from the Manjhis who previously held them under the Plaintiffs.

The Plaintiffs say the mouzahs in question were a jaigir, conditional on the performance of Ghatwali services and that as such they were inalienable, and that the Manjhis having alienated them, the Plaintiffs are entitled to resume possession.

The Defendants on the other hand allege that the tenure in suit is a permanent, hereditary and transferable tenure and they are the transferees.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the Plaintiff's suit.

The case for the Plaintiff is that the Manjhis performed the service of guarding the passes as a condition of their tenure of the mouzahs in question, up to about 20 years ago when the Government took over that duty : that then the tenant of the mouzahs acted as a guard or sepoy for the Plaintiff as a condition of his tenure in lieu of the services which had been undertaken by the Government.

To show that the tenure of these mouzahs was conditional on the performance of services, evidence was called to prove that jaigirs in the District of Palamau are burthened with the performance of services and a large number of leases and deeds of sale were produced covering a period of from 1875 to 1899—in which the Defendants' predecessors had invariably described the mouzahs as forming their jagirdari interest. It was argued that it was well known in the district that the jaigirs were conditional service tenures and that by thus describing them the persons from whom the Defendants derived their title in effect admitted that the mouzahs were inalienable—and it was contended that the expression jaigir for services rendered, which was applied to the mouzahs in question in the judgment of the High Court in 1867, showed that they were held on condition of performing services. But the grant itself was not produc d. It was stated that the document under which the mouzahs were originally granted was destroyed with other papers filed in a suit by the Defendants at the time of the Mutiny and the Plaintiffs produced no record from their sherista to show the terms on which the grant was made. In the absence of direct evidence much reliance was placed on the use of the word jaigir both in the judgment of the High Court and in the documents. But this expression may quite as well refer to past at to future services, for a jaigir is not necessarily a grant conditional on the rendering of services by the grantee nor is it necessarily inalienable.

Wilson in describing a jaigir says "the assignment was either conditional or unconditional: in the former case some public service as the levy and maintenance of troops or other specified duty was engaged for, the latter was left at the entire disposal of the grantee."

I do not think that evidence that jaigirs in the district were conditional and inalienable would be sufficient to justify the inference that this particular jaigir was burthened with these conditions without either evidence to prove the terms of the grant or to establish by credible witnesses that the grantees or their successors had for a number of years performed the services and had not alienated the property. Here, though the Defendant gives a good reason for being unable to give direct evidence, as to the terms of the grant, the Plaintiff gives no explanation of the non-production of any copy or record of its conditions.

Then there is the record of other litigations which tells against the Plaintiff.

In 1867 his predecessors sued the predecessors-in-title of the Defendants for possession of the two mouzahs, which are the subject of the present suit and in the plaint in that suit it was alleged that the lands had been granted to the Defendants for life—on their paying Rs. 19 for rent and carrying out orders according to zemindari practice.

The Plaintiffs were unsuccessful, though they prosecuted their claim up to the High Court, the judgment, dismissing their suit, was affirmed.

It is very significant that in this case the Plaintiffs did not allege an inalienable Ghatwali tenure; the plaint refers to the Defendants "carrying out the orders according to the zemindari practice" and although this might be consistent with the case set up by the Plaintiff as to the state of things after the Government had taken over the duty of guarding the passes, it seems to me quite inconsistent with the Plaintiff's case as to the state of things when it was filed in 1867—viz., that at that time the service of guarding the passes was a condition of the tenure.

And the result of this litigation throws the very gravest doubt on the truth of the oral evidence, that services were actually performed since 1867—for, as the Judge points out, it is very unlikely that having been successful in this litigation, the tenants would burthen themselves with services which they were then held to be not compellable to render.

There is another point which weakens the argument of the Appellant that jaigir, in the District of Palamau, were necessarily inalienable and that in the various deeds of sale, which have been produced, the property is described as jaigir. I do not believe that persons would have been found to buy if on the face of the sale-deed they were buying what the vendor had no power to sell and were getting nothing by their purchase. It is of course possible that a speculator might buy under these conditions but he would give far less than the ordinary market price. I can find no suggestion that the prices given for the jaigirdari land were less than the usual prices of ordinary land in the district.

There were other legal proceedings which also tell against the Plaintiff—particularly, proceedings taken by the present Plaintiff under sec. 34, Act I of 1879 (B. C.) to obtain possession of Kanda and Tali on the ground that they had escheated to him through failure of the heirs of the grantee. The objectors while denying that the mouzahs were resumable, set up a title by purchase—and the objectors were successful in defeating the Plaintiff's claim.

In view of the position asserted by the Plaintiff in previous litigations the absence of direct evidence of the terms of the grant—of evidence, which can be believed, that any services had been performed within the 40 years, I do not think it can be said that the Plaintiff has proved his case. In my opinion therefore the suit should be dismissed.

MOOKERJEE, J.—I agree that the claim of the Plaintiff is entirely unfounded.

The Plaintiff seeks to recover possession of two villages Kanda and Tali on the ground that the tenure under which they were held by the predecessors of the Defendants has been forfeited. His allegation is that the tenure was granted to the ancestors of Dookhbhanjan and Balimanjhi on condition that the grantees and their heirs in succession would pay a sum of Rs. 19 as annual rent and also render service to the grantor and his representatives. It is alleged that the service was originally that of a Ghatwal at Kandaghat, and that subsequently when the system of Ghatwals was abolished by Government and police-officers were appointed to guard the mountain passes, the service rendered was that of sentry in the mansion of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff further asserts that as a service tenure it was liable to be forfeited upon failure to render service as also upon alienation of the lands comprised in the grant. The Plaintiff seeks to eject the Defendants on the ground that performance of service has been discontinued from 1898 and that the lands have also been improperly transferred.

To determine the rights of the parties it is essential to bear in mind that their common case is that the grant was made under a written instrument executed in the beginning of the 19th century. The original deed, however, is not forthcoming; it had been filed in Court in a suit in 1857 and was destroyed along with other records at the time of the Mutiny. The Plaintiff alleges that he cannot trace in his office a copy of the grant. Consequently, we must proceed on the assumption that so far as the precise terms of the original grant are concerned, neither primary nor secondary evidence is available. The Plaintiff has consequently been driven to make an attempt to establish the terms of the grant which he asserts was a jaigirdari grant by indirect evidence. A considerable body of evidence has been adduced to prove the terms of jaigirdari grants which are said to be common in that part of the country. The earliest of these grants dates back to the 18th November 1800 and is nearly contemporaneous with the last grant. It is fairly clear, however, that evidence of this class, even if it be assumed to be admissible, is necessarily of little value. It was ruled in

BHAGWAT BAKSH RAY v. SHEO PROSHAD SAHU.

Hollingham v. Head (3), that where the question is whether A made a contract with B subject to a certain qualification, evidence of the fact that he made contracts with other persons subject to the same qualification, is inadmissible. Mr. Justice Willes observed as follows:— "Does the fact of a person having once or many times in his life done a particular act in a particular way make it more probable that he has done the same thing in the same way upon another and different occasion? To admit such speculative evidence would I think be fraught with great danger." To the same effect are the decisions in Carter v. Pryke (4), Spencely v. Wilmot (5), Smith v. Wilkins (6), Borden v. Keverberge (7). The case of Woodward v. Buchanan (8) is clearly distinguishable and is not opposed to this view. But it has been said that the terms on which A let land to tenants other than B may be admissible to show the terms on which he let land to B, if all the lands are subject to the same custom. Doe v. Sisson (9). Even if it be assumed, therefore, that evidence of this description is not inadmissible, but that, as has been maintained on high authority (Wigmore on Evidence, sec. 377), the question in each instance is merely of the probative value of the particular facts offered in evidence, it is plain that the evidence adduced in the present case is entirely valueless. The element of a different personality is so important in affecting the making of the terms of a contract that the likelihood of making a similar contract with different persons is very much smaller, when a contract is sought to be evidenced by other contracts with different persons, than even in the case where a contract is sought to be evidenced by other contracts with the same person. I hold, therefore, that evidence of this description is of no assistance to the Plaintiff.

The Plaintiff then relies upon the fact that in numerous deeds of sale under which the properties in suit have been transferred in part from time to time, the transferors have, with singular uniformity, described the interest they had as their ancestral jaigirdari and he contends that the term jaigir implies an inalienable service tenure. This contention is clearly unfounded, though it is sought to be supported by a reference to Hunter's Statistical Account of Bengal, Vol. 16, pp. 392, 396. It is well known that the term jaigir does not necessarily imply a conditional grant, and it was pointed out by Harrington in his Analysis of the Bengal Regulations, Vol. III, page 405, on the high authority of the Minute by Sir John Shore, dated the 2nd April 1788, that jaigirs were of two kinds, conditional and unconditional. This is accepted as an accurate statement by Field in his Introduction to the Bengal Regulations, page 53. This view is also supported by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Dosibai v. Ishwardas (10), which confirmed the judgment of the Bombay High Court in Dosibai v. Ishwardas (1). (See also the elaborate note by Wilson in his Glossary, page 224). Consequently, we must take it that the mere fact that the tenure is described as a jaigir, is by no means conclusive, and that its incidents must be determined from other circumstances. One characteristic, however, is beyond the pale of controversy, namely, that the grant was heritable. As was pointed out by Sir Barnes Peacock in the case of Kooldip Narain Singh v. Mahadeo Singh (11), which was heard by a Full Bench of this Court and ultimately taken before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, Kooldip v. Government (12), if it is proved by long uninterrupted usage that the lands have passed from ancestor to heir, that is, from father to son, for two or three generations without objection, the inference would be that the grant was a grant of inheritance, because the fact of descent from father to son is the strongest possible evidence of its hereditary character. In the present case, the lands have descended from ancestor to heir from generation to generation. We have in addition the significant fact that on the 26th September 1867, the Plaintiff sued in ejectment on the allegation that the grant was for life; this was repudiated by the Defendant in that suit in his written statement, dated the 23rd December 1867, in which he asserted that the lands had been reclaimed by the grantee and that the tenure was a jaigir ba farzandan. The primary Court dismissed the suit on the 23rd August 1868, this decree was affirmed on appeal on the 18th March 1869 and ultimately by this Court on the 6th September 1869. The Plaintiff is consequently constrained to accept the position that the grantees hold under a hereditary tenure.

As already stated, the evidence of grants to other persons and the description of the property as jaigir are of no assistance to the Plaintiff. He has consequently endeavoured to prove that the grantees have always rendered service to him. The evidence must be examined in relation to three successive periods of time, namely, first, from the date of the origin of the grant to 1867, when the suit for ejectment of the representative of the grantee was commenced; secondly, from 1867 to 1886 when the Ghatwali service was discontinued, and, thirdly, from 1886 to 1898 when, according to the Plaintiff, service was discontinued completely. As regards the first of these periods, there is no evidence that service was rendered at any time prior to 1867. As regards the second period, the Subordinate Judge was not favourably impressed with the evidence of performance of Ghatwali service, and the criticisms advanced on behalf of the Appellants in this Court are not sufficient to show that the Subordinate Judge took an erroneous view of the matter. As regards the third period, the Subordinate Judge was inclined to believe that one of the representatives of the grantees did render service as sentry or gate-keeper in the mansion of the Plaintiff. This evidence, however, has not been accepted by Mr. Justice Doss and Mr. Justice Richardson as trustworthy. On the whole, therefore, the evidence of performance of service at any period is unsatisfactory and the difficulty in the way of the Plaintiff is enhanced by the fact that he must establish not only that service was rendered but also that it was rendered by the predecessor of the Defendants as holders of the jaigirdari tenure in question. This part of the case, however, is not free from doubt and the fact of payment of certain assessment to the Government may possibly tend to show that Ghatwali services were at one time annexed to the tenure; but it is clear that even if we hold that services were annexed to the tenure, the case for the Plaintiff is full of difficulties.

In the first place, assuming it to be established that performance of service was annexed to the grant, the Plaintiff has not proved whether the grant was a mere grant in lieu of wages or was a grant subject to a burden of service. This distinction, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Vencata v. Sobhanadri (13), where the view previously taken in Lilanand v. Munoranjan (14) and Forbes v. Meer Mahomed (15) was re-affirmed, is of a fundamental character, and if, as there is good reason to hold, the grant was made as a reward for past service, namely, reclamation of the land, the Plaintiff would have to prove that merely because performance of service was annexed to the grant, non-performance thereof entitles him to treat the tenure as forfeited. This he has not done. In the second place, assuming that the original service was Ghatwali, the Plaintiff would have to establish that when such service became unnecessary by reason of the action of the State, he was entitled in lieu thereof to claim the performance of another kind of service, namely, sentry duty at his mansion. This he has not established. In the third place, assuming that performance of service could be claimed and has been improperly refused, the Plaintiff has to establish that where a tenure is held on condition of payment of rent in cash, and the performance of some service, he is entitled to treat the tenure as forfeited because performance of service has been refused though the cash rent has been tendered. This the Plaintiff has not proved. In the fourth place, there is no pretence that the Plaintiff himself has paid the sum annually payable to the State which the grantee had to pay on his behalf: if such payment has been made from year to year by the grantee, the Plaintiff has to prove that notwithstanding such payment, the tenure has been forfeited. This position he has not even attempted to establish. In the fifth place, it is clear that assuming that Ghatwali service was rendered at any time, such service terminated in 1886, and there is no reliable evidence of the performance of service at any subsequent period by the representative of the grantee in his character as holder of the tenure. The surrounding circumstances make it very improbable that such service should have been performed. The holders of the tenure began to transfer the lands as early as the 29th of November 1875, and there were numerous successive transactions from that date to the 16th March 1899. It is extremely improbable, to say the least, that while the tenure-holders were repeatedly acting on the assumption that they held a transferable tenure, they continued to perform service on the theory that they held an inalienable service tenure. We must take it, therefore, that service, if ever rendered, terminated in 1886. If then, the tenure was forfeited on this ground, the forfeiture took place in 1886, while the present suit was not commenced till the 8th December 1905. At the date of institution of the suit, consequently, any possible claim of the Plaintiff to enforce performance of the service or to recover possession on the ground of forfeiture by reason of non-performance of service was barred by limitation. The question necessarily arises whether the Plaintiff is, notwithstanding this fact, entitled to eject the Defendants on the ground of forfeiture by transfer of an inalienable tenure. The decision of the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in Radhabai v. Anantarav (2) militates against the acceptance of the contention of the Plaintiff. On principle, it may well be maintained that when service can no longer be enforced and the tenure consequently ceases to be a service tenure, the land can be alienated : when an estate is freed from the burden of service, the reason for the preservation of the estate as inalienable disappears : alienation can be prohibited only with a view to prevent the permanent severance of the estate from the services annexed to it. [See also Vasanji v. Lallu (16) and Bai Devkore v. Amirtram (17), which are not opposed to this view]. The decision of the Judicial Committee in Pudapa v. Swami Rao (18), which reversed the decision in Swami Rao v. Padapa (19), is clearly distinguishable. The question there in controversy related to the status of a person who had acquired good title to a Vatan by adverse possession, and it was ruled that he would primâ facie be in the same position as the person lawfully entitled to the Vatan, though it was pointed out that if the adverse possessor were an independent trespasser and did not claim to be a Vatandar, other considerations might arise. In fact, the question before the Judicial Committee was similar to that raised before the Court of Appeal in England in Tichborne v. Weir (20) and in O'Connor v. Foley (21), where the question arose as to the liability of a trespasser who had acquired title as against the lessee by adverse possession, for the statutory period, it was ruled that the adverse possessor was not bound by all the terms of the lease. The position, however, is fundamentally different where, as between the grantor and the grantee, the grantee acquires by lapse of time a right to refuse service to the grantor. In a case of this description the view may well be maintained that as the tenure had lost its character of service tenure, the fetter of inalienability had been removed. From every possible point of view, therefore, the claim of the Plaintiff turns out to be unsustainable and must be held to have been rightly dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NO. 949 OF 1913.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1913,

KALI CHARAN MOOKERJEE, Petitioner,
v.
KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Bengal Excise Act (VII of 1878), secs. 2, cl. (12), 46, 52, 61—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 236, 237, 439—Bill of lading, possession of, if possession of articles covered by it—Constructive possession—Illicit importation of cocaine—Conviction of offence shown to have been committed though not charged—Evidence, consideration of, in revision.

ing apparel exported by a firm of London to one R, that this Bill of Lading with an endorsement by the exporters and another purporting to be by R were made over by the Petitioner to a firm of shipping agents in order that the goods might be cleared and passed through the Customs House, that these goods were found to contain a large quantity of cocaine, and that the Petitioner who professed to be acting on behalf of R could not produce R or give information about him ;

Held—That the Petitioner could not be held to be in possession of cocaine within the meaning of secs. 46, 52 of the Excise Act.

The doctrine of constructive possession must be very cautiously applied specially in the department of criminal jurisprudence.

Every person who might have possession of a Bill of Lading cannot be held to have been in possession of the exciseable article illicitly exported under cover of that Bill of Lading.

KASHI NATH BANIA v. EMPEROR (1) and ASHRUF ALI v. EMPEROR (2) distinguished.

The High Court in revision entered into the evidence, set aside the conviction and sentence under secs. 46, 52, and convicted the Petitioner under sec. 61 read with sec. 46, cl. (a) and sec. 2, cl. (12) of the Excise Act of attempting to import cocaine in contravention of the Bengal Excise Act, it being clear upon the evidence that he was aware of the character of the contents of the consignment.

This was a Rule granted on the 20th of June 1913 against an order of D. Swinhoe, Esq., Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 18th of June 1913, convicting the Petitioner under secs. 46 and 52 of the Excise Act and sentencing him to suffer rigorous imprisonment for three months under sec. 46 of the Act.

The facts will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Mr. Jackson, Babus Monmatha Nath Mukherjee and Jogesh Chandra Bose for the Petitioner.

Mr. Pugh and Babu Jotindra Mohan Ghose for the Crown.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioner, Kali Charan Mukherjee, was charged before the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta with the commission of offences under secs. 46 and 52 of the Bengal Excise Act, 1909. He was convicted under both these sections, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for three months under sec. 46.

The facts which have been indisputably established by the evidence may be briefly stated. On the 4th January 1913, the Petitioner made over a Bill of Lading and Invoice to a firm of shipping agents in this city known as Cox & Co. The Invoice, on the face of it, referred to goods described as six bales of old wearing apparel shipped by C. Porter & Co. of London to Mr. Rasu Prasad at Darjeeling in India ; the goods were described as nine hundred jackets worth £33·5s. The Bill of Lading, on the face of it, described the goods as six packages of old wearing apparel marked R. P. at Darjeeling viâ Calcutta. On the back of the Bill of Lading were endorsements which purported to be by C. Porter & Co. and Rasu Prasad. The Petitioner, when he made over the Invoice and Bill of Lading to Cox & Co., paid to the firm Rs. 30 on account of clearing charges. On the 23rd January, while the goods were under clearance from S. S

KALI CHARAN MOOKERJEE v. KING-EMPEROR.

Borneo, a Customs preventive officer, who was on board, noticed five packets of cocaine, each of which contained two phials, near or among the bales of old cloths. This aroused his suspicion, and he thereupon seized all the six bales, which, upon examination, were found to contain 731 packets of cocaine, weighing 491 ounces and worth, it is said, at least rupees ten thousand. On that very day, the Petitioner with a view to take delivery presented himself at the office of Cox & Co., who had meanwhile been apprised of what had happened; he attempted to make off and was thereupon taken by one of the assistants of the firm to the Customs House. There he protested that he was not aware of the contents of the bales and had arranged to have them cleared at the request and on behalf of Rasu Prasad. He promised to point out to the Customs Superintendent the man Rasu Prasad for whom he said he was acting. The Petitioner then took one of the Customs officers in a carriage from place to place for about two hours in the streets of Calcutta, but was not able to point out either Rasu Prasad or his place of residence. He was then made over to the Police and prosecuted with the result already stated. The Chief Presidency Magistrate has held that the story of Rasu Prasad is an invention; in support of this view, he has relied upon the circumstance that though the accused was given every opportunity by the Customs Officers and by the Court to produce Rasu Prasad, he had not done so, and that, on the other hand, he had not been able to furnish any clue to the whereabouts of Rasu Prasad or even to give any satisfactory evidence of the existence of such an individual either at Calcutta or at Darjeeling. Much reliance, however, has been placed in this Court on a telegram to the following effect discovered at a search of premises No. 97, Mechua Bazar Street, which is alleged to have been occupied by Rasu Prasad:

"Rasu Prasad, Jubilee Sanitarium, Darjeeling. Borneo shipment, Error. Reship. Porter."

This telegram appears to have been despatched from London on the 6th February 1913, and was received at Darjeeling on the day following. It has been argued, with some plausibility, on the strength of this telegram, that the goods had been shipped by mistake, and that as soon as the mistake was discovered by the exporters, they cabled to the importer to reship the goods. In our opinion, reliance cannot be placed on the genuineness of this telegram, and it is unquestionably within the bounds of possibility that, if the cocaine was sought to be imported into this country in contravention of law, as soon as the discovery had been made on the 23rd January, the importer, whoever he might be, might cable to the exporters in London, using pre-arranged code words, to send a message of this description; it is by no means difficult to adopt such a method deliberately with a view to create evidence. The whole of the evidence has been placed before us, and we have allowed the learned Counsel for the Petitioner to do so in a Revision case, because the matter, in our opinion, requires very careful scrutiny.

The facts unquestionably established may be thus summarised. The Petitioner was in possession of an Invoice and Bill of Lading, which purported to cover old wearing apparel exported by Porter & Co. of London to Rasu Prasad at Darjeeling. This Bill of Lading with endorsements by Porter & Co., and Rasu Prasad were made over by the accused to Cox &

KALI CHARAN MOOKERJEE v. KING-EMPEROR.

Co., in order that the goods might be cleared and passed through the Customs House. The goods were found to contain a large quantity of cocaine, which, there can be no room for reasonable doubt, was sought to be illicitly exported in contravention of the provisions of the Excise Act. The accused, when apprised of the discovery, professed to be acting on behalf of Rasu Prasad. He was given every opportunity to produce Rasu Prasad or to give information about him. He has completely failed to give any clue about Rasu Prasad, the alleged importer, although his case is that he had met Rasu Prasad at Darjeeling and had on previous occasions cleared consignments on his account. From these circumstances, the Magistrate had drawn the inference that Rasu Prasad is a myth, and has held that the accused was in possession of the cocaine within the meaning of cl. (a) of sec. 46 as also of sec. 52 of the Bengal Excise Act. We are not prepared to hold that the accused was in "possession" of the cocaine. On behalf of the Crown, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Kashi Nath Bania v. Emperor (1) and Ashruf Ali v. Emperor (2) in support of the view that the accused was in possession of the cocaine. The cases mentioned are, in our opinion, distinguishable. In the first of these cases, it was held that possession of a railway receipt, by the production of which the consignee might have obtained delivery and physical possession of the consignment, was possession within the meaning of sec. 9, cl. (c) of the Opium Act, 1878. It was pointed out by the learned Judges that by the possession of the railway receipt, the consignee had dominion or control over the parcel in the sense that he could have passed the right to take delivery thereof to any other person; in other words, that possession need not be actual or physical but might be potential. In the later case, this view was questioned, though reluctantly followed, and it was pointed out that the decision overlooked the distinction between possession and right to possession. It is not necessary for our present purpose to examine the decisions in the two cases mentioned, but we may observe that the doctrine of constructive possession must be very cautiously applied, specially in the department of criminal jurisprudence. In the case before us, it cannot be said that the accused had dominion or control over the goods, unless he was the real consignee, which he is not proved to have been. We cannot hold that every person who might have possession of the Bill of Lading was in possession of the cocaine within the meaning of the Bengal Excise Act, irrespective of all other circumstances. If this view were not maintained, Cox & Co., and all their assistants who had handled the Bill of Lading, might be deemed to be in possession of the cocaine. In this view, the conviction of the Petitioner under secs. 46 and 52 of the Bengal Excise Act cannot be supported. We are clearly of opinion, however, that this is a case to which the provisions of secs. 236 and 237 of the Criminal procedure Code are applicable; on the evidence, there is no doubt as to the facts, although it may be doubtful what precise offence the accused has committed on the facts alleged, he may consequently be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed although he was not charged with it. In this case, there is no room for controversy that an attempt has been made by the

NOTES.

The Pioneer's Scheme of an Imperial High Court.

The Pioneer in an editorial article announces that a Bill will shortly be introduced in Parliament for the consolidation of the statutes relating to the Government of India and it believes that the occasion may be taken for the revision of the Acts and the Letters Patents relating to the High Courts in India. It then proceeds to put forward a scheme for the abolition of the Provincial High Courts and setting up in its place an Imperial Court. The present High Courts are only to be Benches of the Imperial Court. Whether this fanciful scheme has any foundation in fact, is more than we know. But some newspapers in England have also of late given currency to a report that His Excellency the Viceroy has sent to the Secretary of State some recommendations which would require very careful consideration before they can be sanctioned. But we cannot persuade ourselves to believe that His Excellency in Council could have in contemplation any such drastic changes. It is also hardly conceivable that the Government of India would formulate any such scheme without consultation with the High Courts concerned and without consulting public opinion in India and in particular of the Presidencies and Provinces which are to be very materially affected by any such far-reaching changes affecting the jurisdiction and constitution of His Majesty's Courts. But so many changes have come upon us quite unawares in recent years that we cannot ignore and pass unchallenged even an extravagant scheme of the kind without pointing out its utter impracticability and innate absurdity, especially as it finds place in a journal which is sometimes availed of by Government in making official announcements.

If the Pioneer of Allahabad has put forward the scheme on its own responsibility for the raising of the Judicial Commissioner's Court at Lucknow and the Chief Court at Karachi to the rank of Benches of the Allahabad High Court and the Bombay High Court, we have no exception to take to its quite legitimate Provincial patriotism in seeking to raise the status of these Courts. But we do not see any reason why the Provinces cannot prosper or the Imperial Government grow except at the expense of Calcutta and the Bengal Presidency. The author of the scheme makes no secret that the condition precedent of its consummation is that the Calcutta High Court should be melted in this hotchpot. The Letters Patent of this Court along with those of the Madras and Bombay High Courts are to be repealed and the "general lines of power and procedure" are to be regulated by one uniform enactment.

The suggestion is evidently directed to the taking away from these Courts the Common Law jurisdiction that they have inherited from the Supreme Courts and their predecessors established by Royal Charter in the Presidency towns. Then again it is proposed that all these Courts are to be placed under an officer to be styled Lord Chief-Justice-General (no doubt a very high sounding title but savouring more of the military than the legal) whose duties, amongst others, will be to advise the Government of India with regard to these Courts. He will also be entitled to transfer any case he pleases from one Court to another (which are to become merely Benches of the Imperial Court) and, we presume, to transfer or move about the Judges and, in order to vary the monotony of his own existence, to preside over any Bench whenever he likes. In other words the Courts are to become so many departments of India Government. This would indeed be carrying the scheme of Provincial autonomy to excelsis.

Nor is this all. With the abrogation of the Letters Patent of the High Courts, it is boldly suggested that the "distribution of judgeships amongst various class of persons" provided for under the Letters Patent is also to be departed from. For example, the following illustrations are given. (1) In Benches of three judges one is to be a barrister, one a member of the Indian Civil Service and the third to be appointed at the pleasure of the Government. (2) In a Bench of 9 Judges, three are to be barristers, three members of the Indian Civil Service, one of the Provincial Civil Service, one vakeel, and the remaining one to be filled at the pleasure of Government. (3) In a Bench of fourteen judges (and here we believe the future of the Calcutta High Court is foretold) four are to be barristers, five to be members of the Indian Civil Service, two of the Provincial Civil Service, one vakeel and the remaining two to be filled at the pleasure of Government. (4) There is also to be a Chief Justice for each of the High Court Benches who will ordinarily but not necessarily be a barrister. No scheme can obviously be better calculated to goad the educated community of this country into a fresh fit of unrest and agitation. We have been repeatedly urging in these columns that the country is tired of uncalled for changes and what we are pre-eminently in need of at the present moment is peace and stability in our institutions and administration. But even if the articles in question be mere speculations they can only lead to mischief and can be fruitful of no practical good.

There is ample internal evidence in the articles that the scheme is chiefly directed against the Calcutta High Court. It is said that the "chief cause of weakness of this Court consists in its being an Original and also a Court of Appeal." The author of these articles seems to have some very peculiar ideas of his own which have the distinction of ignoring matters of common knowledge. We thought that the chief strength and not weakness of the Calcutta High Court consisted in its being a Court of Original Jurisdiction as well as a Court of Appeal. It is on the Original Side that the Judges have inherited the Common Law Jurisdiction from the Supreme Court and its predecessors. It is by virtue of this jurisdiction that every Judge of this Court, whether he sits on the Original or the Appellate Side of the Court, can exercise the powers of a Court of Record within the limits of the Presidency town. Further he can also exercise the powers of a Common Law Court with regard to British subjects anywhere within the Presidency.

The reckless statements made by the writer are not limited to such well known facts. He seems to be equally anxious to mislead his readers regarding the constitution and the jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature in England. He contrasts the constitution of the English Court of Appeal with that of the Appellate Side of the Calcutta High Court. But if he had only cared to look at it in the right way he would have discovered more analogy than contrast between the two Courts. It is true that in the English Court of Appeal, as at present constituted, the majority of the Judges are Lords Justices who are not Judges of Original Jurisdiction, but even in this Court the Lord Chief Justice and the President of the Probate Division who are Judges of Original Jurisdiction can sit and very often do sit as ex-officio members. The Lord Chancellor himself again is at once the President of the Highest Court of Appeal and of the Chancery Division of the High Court, which it is needless to say is a Court of Original Jurisdiction. Then the Judges of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of England who are all Judges of Original Jurisdiction hear appeals from the County Courts corresponding in some respect to our Mofussil Civil Courts and are also entitled to sit in the Court of Appeal when called upon by the Lord Chancellor to do so.

As for the appeals from the Mofussil, they are heard by Judges of the Calcutta High Court under a jurisdiction which is not inherited from His Majesty's Courts in England but from the Sadar Dewani and Nizamat Adwalats which, at their inception, in fact derived their authority not from the Crown in England but from the Moghul Emperors and their Viceroys in Bengal. It is too late in the day even for the Pioneer to call upon us to revert to the days of the Great Moghul rule. If the Common Law Jurisdiction is taken away from the Calcutta High Court and its Letters Patent abrogated, it will be reduced to the position of the Allahabad High Court and that may please the Pioneer but all communities in Calcutta and in fact the inhabitants throughout the length and breadth of this Presidency will oppose any such proposal with all their might. Let Allahabad prosper, but we see no sense in taking away from us all our chartered and cherished rights and institutions.

As a necessary adjunct to this drastic scheme it is also proposed to establish Chief Courts on the ashes of the Original Side. As a sop to us, it is suggested that Howrah might be included within the jurisdiction of the Chief Court that is to be. But no self-respecting professional man or citizen of Calcutta will barter away his birth right for this mess of pottage. We are sure that if the scheme is seriously placed before the public it will die of ridicule. The Lord Chief-Justice-General is to be of the rank and is to draw the salary of a Lieutenant-Governor. We presume that he will be a de facto Lieutenant-Governor under the Governor-General and his Province will as the so-called Imperial Court or the High Courts of Judicature (hereafter to be called Benches) in the different Presidencies and Provinces. He will be an Executive Judge and he is to "co-ordinate so far as practicable the work of the different Benches." We are told that the Lord Chief-Justice-General will also be Editor-General of all the Law Reports. We would sympathise with him in this task and also remind our contemporary that the task of editing Law Reports is by no means less arduous than the editing of a daily journal. What would our contemporary think of the Governor-General becoming hereafter the Editor-General to the newspaper press in India?

We are assured by the Pioneer that when the Law Reports of the future are issued under this Lord Chief-Justice-Editor-General "the High Courts of India will not be bound by the existing rulings arrived at without sufficient appreciation of the Hindu and Mahomedan texts." The Editor-General is, we presume, "to co-ordinate" the different schools of Hindu Law that have been evolved in the different Provinces and Presidencies by text-writers and commentators for ages in the past. Then again the Hindu and Mahomedan laws as they are administered are the products of the best brains on the English and Indian Benches that have been taxed for nearly a century to evolve order out of chaos. The rules of equity and justice so laboriously built up are also to be abrogated and the Lord Chief-Justice-Editor-General is to conjure up a new school of Hindu and Mahomedan Law from the original texts for the guidance of the Judges of this Imperial Court of the future. A scheme of this kind has not only the merit of being truly Imperial but we are prepared to assign to it a higher place as it may well claim to be Supernatural. To accomplish this task, we are afraid, that the Lord Chief-Justice Editor-General will have to reincarnate himself like Vishnu for many ages to come. We expect that the Land Laws in India will be in no less confusion if this new incarnation requisitioned by the Pioneer should be given birth to by the British Parliament for the salvation of the Hindus and Mahomedans of India.

Royal Commission and pension of Judges.

We referred in our last issue to the recommendations of the Royal Commission regarding the allowance of pensions on a more liberal scale to the Judges of the High Court of Judicature in England coupled with a scheme for requisitioning the services of those who may retire early to sit on the Bench on full pay when occasion required. The following is an extract from the Report of the Royal Commission.

Judges compelled to retire by ill-health or the age limit should receive pensions after five years' service or less of £1,500; with a further £200 for each completed year beyond five years, with a maximum of £3,500. Judges should be allowed to retire after ten-years' service on a pension of £2,500 with the same increments and maximum for longer service', on the condition that they would serve if called upon in London or on circuit during such a period as would make up fifteen years from the date of their appointment, receiving for this service such a sum as, with the pension, would be at the rate of £5,000 a year during the time of service with remuneration at the rate of £400 a year for a clerk, and the usual circuit allowance if they go on circuit. All retired judges should be supernumerary judges and eligible, on the request of the Lord Chancellor, to sit as such, but should not be obliged to if they have served as judges for fifteen years or had been obliged to retire on the ground of age or ill-health.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE AND BEACHCROFT, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 3949 OF 1910. MANMATHA NATH MONDAL, Plaintiff-Appellant v. KHIRODHAR GHOSH AND OTHERS, Defendants-Respondents. 15th January 1914.

Suit to set aside sale—Sale by mother as natural guardian during the minority of the Plaintiff—Art. 44 of the Limitation Act applicable.

The facts out of which this appeal arises are shortly as follows: The Plaintiff's mother jointly with his uncle sold the lands in dispute to the Defendants by a deed of sale on 30th November 1899, purporting to do so as his natural guardian. The Plaintiff brought this suit on 10th August 1909 to recover possession of the lands on the ground that she had no power to sell and that there was no legal necessity for the sale. The defence was that the suit was barred by limitation and that there was legal necessity for the sale. The first Court held that there was no legal necessity for the sale such as payment of debts or arrears of revenue but held that the minor was benefited by the sale as the sale was necessary for his maintenance and so decreed the Plaintiff's suit on terms that he should refund the purchase-money to the Defendants. On appeal to the primary Court of Appeal, it held that the suit was instituted more than three years after the attainment of majority by the Plaintiff and that it was consequently barred by limitation under Art. 64 of the Limitation Act. It further held that there was no legal necessity for the sale but it observed that as the minor was benefited by the sale, he should refund the purchase-money in case the sale be set aside.

The Plaintiff then filed this second appeal and it was contended that as the mother was not a guardian appointed by any Court, she had absolutely no right to sell the property. The sale was void and so Art. 44 was not applicable. The suit having been brought within 12 years from the date of sale was not barred by limitation.

Held—Art. 44 of the 1st Schedule to the Limitation Act applies to the facts of the case. The article is not restricted in its application to de jure guardians only. It applies also in case of a sale by a natural guardian.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before TEUNON, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 2008 OF 1910. GANPATI MALOI AND ANOTHER, Defendants Nos. 5 and 6, Appellants v. MOHI NATH GOSWAMI AND OTHERS, Respondents. Heard, 19th November 1913. Judgment, 5th January 1914.

Sufficient cause—Limitation—Appeal filed out of time.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought by the Plaintiff for recovery of possession on establishment of title to certain lands originally the property of one Kameswar Goswami.

Kameswar died some 15 years before suit, leavi[ng] a widow named Bishnu Priya who died in Dece[m]ber 1900. After her death Defendants Nos 8 an[d 9] who said they were Bishnu Priya's adopted so[ns] each propounded a Will in his own favour b[ut] finally agreed to divide the properties, Defenda[nt] No. 8 taking a 7 annas and Defendant No. 9 9 annas share. In 1901 Defendant No. 8 sold [to] Defendants Nos. 1 to 4, and 7, while Defenda[nt] No. 9 sold to Defendants Nos. 5 and 6. Plai[n]tiff's case was that he was the son of Ramesw[ari] and Defendant No. 10, the son of Dhaneswari, t[he] two daughters of Kameswar's uncle, Ram Dutt[a] that on the death of the widow they were t[he] heirs of Kameswar in equal shares, and that b[y] purchase he, Plaintiff, had acquired the share [of] Defendant No. 10. He had thus acquired title [to] the whole of the properties in suit.

Plaintiff having succeeded in the first Cour[t] Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 appealed. At the hearin[g] of their appeal on the 12th July 1909 the learne[d] District Judge held that Plaintiff was not the so[n] of Rameswari and therefore proceeding unde[r] Or. 41, r. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 190[8] dismissed the whole of the Plaintiff's suit. At th[e] hearing, the Plaintiff's title in so far as it wa[s] derived from Defendant No. 10 was not considere[d]. On the application of the Plaintiff the judgmen[t] was accordingly reviewed. At the second hearin[g] the District Judge held that Defendant No. 10 wa[s] not the grandson of Ram Dutta. The result o[f] these findings was that Plaintiff had no title t[o] the lands in suit but by his second judgment, date[d] 5th February 1910, instead of dismissing the Plain[tiff]'s suit in toto as he had done on the 12th July 1909, the learned District Judge dismissed the suit only in so far as the Appellants before him, that is, Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were concerned. Thereupon, on the 26th February 1910, Defendants Nos 5 and 6 appealed against the original Court's decree in so far as it affected them and their 9 anna share. Their appeal was dismissed as being filed out of time.

Held—The anomaly resulting from the fact that a decree reversed on an appeal by one set of judgment-debtors on a ground common to all yet remained good against a second set of judgment-debtors who had not previously chosen to appeal was not per se a sufficient cause for extending the period of limitation in the case of an appeal subsequently preferred by the second set.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD MOULTON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1913,
Heard,
10, November.
Judgment,
25, November.

RAJA THAKUR BARMHA, since deceased (now represented by Jai Barmha and ors.) & ors., Appellants,
v.
JIBAN RAM MARWARI and others, Respondents.

Sale-certificate, if may be amended by inserting property not included in the schedule of attached properties—Case, if one of misdescription and irregularity—Correct description in notification in Government Gazette but differing from that in schedule of attachment, effect of—Wrong property sold, proper remedy—Proof that other property intended to be sold, if relevant—Court's authority to sell, how limited.

That which is sold in a judicial sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree for money can be nothing but the property attached, and that property is conclusively described in and by the schedule to which the attachment refers.

Where an existing property is accurately described in the schedule, a certificate of sale cannot be issued in respect of a different property, treating the matter as a case of misdescription, and as such to be viewed as a mere irregularity.

If by mistake the wrong property was attached and an order made to sell it, the only course open to the decree-holders on, the discovery of the mistake, was to commence proceedings over again.

Documents in other judicial proceedings tending to show that a mistake had been made in drawing up the schedule and that some property other than that included in the schedule was intended to be inserted in it, were irrelevant.

Although an advertisement in the Calcutta Gazette purporting to be a description of the attached property and correctly describing the other property, was relevant, yet since it differed from the description in the schedule it could not be relied on to validate the sale of property which was not the property to which the attachment related.

This was an Appeal from a Judgment of the Calcutta High Court (Brett and Gupta, JJ.), dated the 26th June 1906, which set out the facts of the case fully and was as follows :—

"It appears that before his death, Raja Thakur Barmha was very heavily indebted and that he mortgaged 8 annas share in Mahal Tappa Patsanda, bearing towzi No. 462 of the Dumka Collectorate, to Anant Ram Marwari, and that on the 8th September 1902 Anant Ram brought a suit and obtained a mortgage-decree against him. On the 1st May 1903 the sale in execution of that decree was stayed on the condition that the debtor hypothecated an additional two annas share of the property as an additional security.

"Raja Thakur Barhma also borrowed various sums of money from one Gobardhan Das, who on the 24th February 1902 obtained decrees against him for two sums of Rs. 21,702 and 4,512, and in execution of those decrees he attached the 8 annas unencumbered share in Tappa Patsanda. In order to stay the sale the Raja mortgaged three annas out of that property to him on the 13th November 1902.

"Jiban Ram, the third creditor, obtained a money decree against Raja Thakur Barmha on the 23rd October 1903 for Rs. 42,946 and on the 31st October 1903 he applied for execution of that decree.

"The dispute which has given rise to the present case has arisen with regard to the property which he put up for sale in satisfaction of that decree. It is only necessary for the present to say that 6 annas out of the 16 annas of Mahal Tappa Patsanda was brought to sale and on the 27th July it was purchased by the son of Anant Ram Marwari for Rs. 1,12,000.

"On the 1st August 1904, 10 annas share of the same property was brought to sale in satisfaction of Anant Ram Marwari's decree and was purchased by him for Rs. 2,93,000.

"The sale in satisfaction of Jiban Ram Marwari's decree was held by the Subordinate Judge of the Sonthal Pergunnahs and the sale in satisfaction of Anant Ram Marwari's decree was held by the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur.

"On the 29th July 1904, the Deputy Commissioner of Sonthal Pergunnahs wrote to the Subordinate Judge to stay the sale in execution of Jiban Ram's decree, but the Subordinate Judge, on the 2nd August, wrote in reply that the sale had been already closed. On the 25th August 1904, the judgment-debtor applied under secs. 311 and 244, C. P. C., to have the sale set aside but on the 18th November 1904 he withdrew that application. On the 20th December 1904, the auction-purchaser at the sale in execution of Jiban Ram's decree applied for the issue of a sale-certificate in his name as purchaser of the six annas share of Mahal Tappa Patsanda which was not encumbered by the mortgage of Anant Ram, and on the same date an order was passed granting the application. That is the order against which the present appeal has been preferred.

"The main question which has been argued before us is whether the property which was sold in execution of Jiban Ram's decree was the 6 annas share of Tappa Patsanda unencumbered by the mortgage of Anant Ram Mar wari, or that share subject to the mortgage. The learned Counsel, who has appeared in support of the appeal and the Rule, has contended that the value of the whole of the property Tappa Patsanda was about Rs. 8,00,000 and if it be supposed that the purchasers at the sale in satisfaction of Jiban Ram and Anant Ram Marwari's decrees have purchased only the 10 annas encumbered share, then they have really obtained a very good value for their money. The purchasers are in fact Anant Ram Marwari and his sons and the amount which they have paid is about Rs. 4,00,000. We have been referred to the application for execution filed in Jiban Ram's case, (this is quoted in the judgment of the Judicial Committee) to the order of attachment, and to the sale-proclamation, and the learned Counsel has contended that from the terms of these three documents it is clear that what was offered for sale in execution of Jiban Ram's decree was the 6 annas out of the 16 annas of Mahal Tappa Patsanda subject to the mortgage of Babu Anant Ram Marwari. The wording or description is in itself very clumsy and it does not appear to us that it is only capable of the meaning that the 6 annas referred to are 6 annas subject to the mortgage of Anant Ram Marwari. Had it been the intention of the decree-holders to bring the encumbered 8 annas share to sale, we should have expected that instead of praying for the sale of 6 annas share he would at once have applied for the sale of the whole 8 annas share, and the fact that he applied for the sale of 6 annas share only, which was the balance remaining after deducting the 8 annas and 2 annas shares hypothecated to Babu Anant Ram Marwari, goes to support the case which the Subordinate Judge in the lower Court has accepted, that the intention of the decree-holder was to apply for sale of the 6 annas unencumbered share. There seems also no reason why, if 10 annas share of the property was subject to encumbrance, the decree-holder should apply for execution against the encumbered share and not against the 6 annas unencumbered share. In the copy of the sale-proclamation that was published in the Calcutta Gazette the description of the property is different. It is there stated to be the zemindari right, title, and interest, in 6 annas share, Mahal Tappa Patsanda, bearing towzi No. 462 and sudder-jumma Rs. 1,402-9 of the Dumka Collectorate, Thana Mahagama, Sub-Registry Godda, District Sonthal Pergunnahs, which is not covered by the mortgage bond of Babu Anant Ram Marwari and others of Shujaganj, and also another two annas share of the said Tappa which has been tendered as security in execution of the decree of the said Babu Anant Ram and "others." The learned Subordinate Judge, on considering these documents, has come to the conclusion that there was possibly an error in the application for execution and in the sale-proclamation by omitting the word 'not,' which was subsequently included in the copy of the sale-proclamation that was published in the Calcutta Gazette. If this view were correct that there has been such a mistake this would be a ground for setting aside the sale on account of irregularity and not a ground for our interfering with the order of the Subordinate Judge passed on the 20th December 1904. The property was brought to sale on the 26th June 1904 and the proceedings show that the property was described as described in the application for sale, but at the time of the sale it appears that a note was entered in the bid-sheet to the following effect :—'Be it known that out of 6 annas of Tappa Patsanda which has heen advertized for sale, three annas has been given in security in Money Execution Cases Nos. 3 and 4 of 1902, Gobardhan Das v. Raja Thakur Bramha.' It is suggested that the entry was made in order to indicate that the property that was offered for sale was the 6 annas unencumbered share and not the share which was subject to the mortgage of Babu Anant Ram Marwari. After the sale the sale-certificate was issued to the purchaser at his request and in it it is distinctly stated that the property purchased was the zemindari right in

RAJA THAKUR BARMHA v. JIBAN RAM MARWARI.

RAJA THAKUR BARMHA v. JIBAN RAM MARWARI.

6 annas of Tappa Patsanda and that this 6 annas share out of 8 annas is not included in the mortgage bond of Babus Anant Ram Marwari and Har Chand Rai and others, dated the 30th Sawan 1302, F. S.

"The learned Counsel for the Petitioner-Appellant has relied on the remarks made by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in the case of Balvant Babaji Dhondge v. Hirachand Gulabchand Gujar (1). He has contended that the sale-certificate cannot under the present Code of Civil Procedure be accepted as in itself a valid transfer of the property sold. It is argued that what is sold must be the property as described in the application for execution and in the proclamation of sale, and that no statement in the certificate of sale would give the purchaser a title in the property other than that which was advertized for sale by order of the Civil Court.

"The learned pleader on behalf of the Respondents has argued on the authority of the case of Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (2), that what we have to consider in the case is what was the property which the parties intended to sell or intended to be sold, and what was the property which the Court at the time intended to offer to sale.

"We think that the description given in the application for execution, in the sale-proclamation and order of attachment is not very happily worded, but its meaning need not necessarily be restricted to the 6 annas of Mahal Tappa Patsanda which was subject to Anant Ram's mortgage. The fact that at the time when the sale-proclamation was published on the 27th February 1904 in the Calcutta Gazette, a description was given which clearly indicated that the property which it was intended to sell was the unencumbered 6 annas, and the fact that at the time of sale this circumstance was also mentioned to the officer conducting the sale go to support the view that what was intended to be sold was the 6 annas unencumbered share. It is also to be observed that in the 13th paragraph of the petition which the judgment-debtor addressed to the Deputy Commissioner of Sonthal Pergunnahs on the 15th July 1904, that is to say, before the date of sale, he stated that six annas of Tappa Patsanda was under attachment and advertized for sale in execution of certain decrees amounting to Rs 2,00,000 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Godda, and that the remaining ten annas share of the said estate was on sale in execution of a decree of Anant Ram Marwari and others of Bhagalpur for Rs. 2,93,000 in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur. The letter which the Deputy Commissioner wrote to the Commissioner of the Division on the 29th July 1904 shows that it was then generally understood that the ten annas share had been sold in Bhagalpur and the remaining six annas share was being sold in Godda. The learned Counsel, however, has contended that if the six annas share was offered for sale it was the duty of the decree-holder under sec. 287 to have mentioned that the six annas was subject to the three annas mortgage in favour of Gobardhan Das. That fact, however, was mentioned at the time of sale and was notified to the purchaser and the mere fact that mention of this encumbrance was not made in the application for execution or in the sale-proclamation would not in itself be sufficient to vitiate the sale.

RAJA THAKUR BARMHA v. JIBAN RAM MARWARI.

"In our opinion it is clear that the intention of the par ies was that 6 annas unencumbered share should be sold, and that was the share which was in fact sold and purchased by the auction purchaser, and we think that no sufficient grounds have been made out for our interference with the order passed by the Subordinate Judge on the 20th December 1904 directing the issue of the sale-certificate to the purchaser. The grounds which have been taken against the execution proceedings are such as might have been taken in an application to set aside the sale, but we find that in this case the judgment-debtor, after making an application to set aside the sale, afterwards withdrew it.

"As we find that the main case fails on the merits, it is not necessary for us to deal with the objection which has been taken to the application for substitution. There are no doubt cases in support of the view urged by the learned pleader that where the elder member of a joint Mitakshara family dies, the person who succeeds to the estate by survivorship is not to be regarded as his legal representative and there is also a later case, Chandra Prosad v. Sham Koeri (3), which supports the view that in certain cases execution proceedings may go on against the person succeeding. But we do not think it necessary to discuss this question in the case, as in our opinion the Appellant or the Petitioner has failed to make out any case, whatever before us for our interference. We may add that no appeal in our opinion lies in this case and no ground for our interference in revision has been made out."

Hence this Appeal.

Mr. A. M. Dunne for the Appellants submitted that the Courts below had no jurisdiction to make the order complained of. What was in fact sold and what could legally be sold was the equity of redemption in the six annas subject to the mor gage of the 30th Sawan 1302. That alone was attached as would appear from the schedule appended to the application for execution and the Court had no jurisdic ion to sell anything more than what was attached. The sale of the excess, any, was absolutely void. It was not a question of intention of the parties, that was immaterial. At a judicial sale nothing more could be sold than what was ordered to be attached in that particular case.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. E. A. Eddis for the Respondents submitted that the real question was what was in fact sold at the auction. Both the lower Courts have concurrently found that the unencumbered six annas were sold. Assuming that what had actually been sold ought not to have been sold there was a special procedure to get rid of the sale—Secs. 311 and 312, C. P. C. The Court has no discretion but to confirm the sale of what has actually been sold. The sale was held in execution of other decrees besides that of Jiban Ram. In those proceedings the property was correctly described as the six annas unencumbered. In Jiban Ram's application for execution and the sale-proclamation based upon it there was an accidental omission of the word "not." In order to ascertain what was really attached and sold reference ought to be made to the execution proceedings of the other decrees as well. At best it was a case of misdescription, a mere irregularity and there was no right of appeal to the High Court.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

against a Judgment and Decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated 26th June 1906, affirming an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Godda in the Sonthal Pergunnahs, dated 20th December 1904, granting a certain sale certificate to the second set of Respondents hereto, described as auction-purchasers. The facts of the case so far as is necessary for the decision of this appeal are as follows:—

On the 23rd October 1903 the Respondents, Jiban Ram Marwari and Ishwar Das Marwari (described as the decree-holders), obtained judgment against the original Appellant Rajah Thakur Barmha (now represented by his heirs and legal representatives), for a sum of 42,562 rupees and interest, and on the 31st October 1903 the decree holders applied for execution of the decree by attaching and selling the property mentioned in the application. It is only material to refer to the first item in the schedule specifying that property which reads as follows:—

"The Defendants Zamindari and Milkiat right in the six annas out of 16 annas of Mahal Tappa Patsanda bearing towzi No. 462 and sudder-jumma of Rs. 2,402. 9. 0 (for the 16 annas) payable in Dumka Collectorate This property is mortgaged in the bond of Babu Anant Ram Marwari and others, decree-holders, inhabitants of Bazar Shujaganj in the Town of Bhagalpur, and also a two annas share of the said Mahal, which has been hypothecated as security on behalf of the Defendant in the case of execution of a mortgage decree of the said Babu Anant Ram Marwari and others, decree-holders, against the judgment-debtor, in the First Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, in all, eight annas share of the said Mahal, together with all rights and interests of the judgment-debtor and Kamat land, nami and benami jalkar, phalkar, bankar, &c., and Kachari House appertaining to the estate. The estimated value is Rs. 50,000."

In the ordinary course an order was made for the sale of the attached property mentioned in the above schedule by public auction, and proclamation of the sale was made in the required manner. The sale commenced on the 16th June 1904, but for a long time the bids were insufficient and the sale was not finally concluded until the 28th day of July 1904.

On the 20th day of December 1904 an application was made on behalf of the auction purchasers to obtain a sale certificate for the six annas share of Tappa Patsanda purchased by them at the auction sale. In making this application they alleged that a mistake had been made in the schedule of the property to be sold, in that the word "not" had been omitted from the description of the six annas in question and that the property should have been described as being six annas not mortgaged under the bond of Babu Anant Ram Marwari. At that date 10 annas of the property were so mortgaged while the remaining six annas were free from any mortgage. They claimed that their certificate should be made out as being a certificate of the purchase by them of the six unencumbered annas instead of (as described in the schedule) six annas subject to the existing mortgage. The Subordinate Judge granted them a certificate in the form which they desired and the High Court sustained his order. It is from this order that the present appeal is brought.

Their Lordships are of opinion that this is a very plain case. That which is sold in a judicial sale of this kind can be nothing but the property attached, and that property is conclusively described in and by the schedule to which the attachment refers. In the present case that property was six annas subject to an existing mortgage. The effect of the certificate of sale granted by the order of the Subordinate Judge is to make the sale that of a property not attached, namely the six unencumbered annas,—a property which could not be sold in such proceedings inasmuch as it was not the property attached.

An attempt was made to treat the matter as a case of misdescription, which could be treated as a mere irregularity. But in this case we have to deal with identity and not description. A property fully identified in the schedule may be in some respects misdescribed, but that is not the present case. Here we find an existing property accurately described in the schedule, and the order of the Subordinate Judge grants a sale certificate which states that another and a different property has been purchased at the judicial sale. It was beyond the powers of the Court to make such an order, inasmuch as there was no power to sell in these judicial proceedings the property thus certified to have been purchased.

Counsel for the Respondents sought to support his case by referring to documents in other judicial proceedings tending to support the view that a mistake had been made in drawing up the schedule, and that the property intended to be inserted therein was the unencumbered 6 annas. Their Lordships are of opinion that all such matters are irrelevant. If by a mistake the wrong property was attached and an order made to sell it, the only course open to the decree-holders on the discovery of the mistake was to commence the proceedings over again. They could not turn an authority to sell one property into an authority to sell another and a different one. Moreover it is impossible to attribute to the public to whom the attached property is offered in sale a knowledge of proceedings in other suits which might have led them to suspect that an error had been made. The only relevant document brought to their Lordships' notice in this respect was an advertisement in the Calcutta Gazette which, though purporting to be a description of the attached property, differed from the description in the schedule by representing that the property to be sold was free from the mortgage. This want of correspondence between the advertisement in the Calcutta Gazette and the schedule of the attached property in the proclamation of sale constitutes an additional irregularity which it might need the assistance of the Court to cure if the sale were regular in other respects, but it cannot validate a sale of property which was not the property to which the attachment related.

Their Lordships therefore will humbly advise His Majesty that this Appeal should be allowed, and that the Order of the Subordinate Judge confirming the sale together with the certificate granted thereunder dated the 20th December 1904 should be set aside. This will of course have the effect of setting aside all subsequent proceedings on the part of the auction purchasers based thereon.

The Respondents will pay the costs of the application to the Subordinate Judge of the 20th December 1904 and of the Appeal to the High Court of Judicature at Fort of William in Bengal, and also the costs of this Appeal.

[TESTAMENTARY AND INTESTATE JURISDICTION.]

CHAUDHURI, J. 1913, 2, July.

In the goods of KANAI LAL KHAN, deceased.

Surety for an administrator of estate, if may be discharged or substituted—Surety, creating charge on his immoveable property, release of charge—Surety bond, discharge of and substitution—Administration account, if may be examined by Court.

Letters of Administration were granted to the estate of the deceased K, a Hindu governed by the Dayābhaga law, to R one of his first cousins who for purposes of such administration was also appointed guardian of deceased's infant son, and R's two brothers stood surety for the administrator. The estate being a very large one the Court required the sureties to charge their immoveable properties in the surety bond besides making them personally liable. The infant having died without issue and intestate his paternal grandmother succeeded to the estate as his heir. R thereupon applied to Court stating that he had rendered an account of the estate as administered by him to the lady and that she had the same examined by her constituted attorneys and that they were satisfied with the account and that the residue of the estate had been made over to her and prayed that the sureties be discharged and the charge on their immoveable property be also discharged.

The Court ordered that on the lady's constituted attorneys filing a verified certificate together with the account or abstract thereof stating that they had examined and found it correct and on the administrator filing the receipts for the debts paid to the satisfaction of the Registrar, the surety bond creating a charge on the immoveable properties of the sureties would be discharged, conditional upon the sureties executing a fresh security bond making themselves personally liable for the administration of the estate by the petitioner.

RAJ NARAIN MUKERJEE v. FUL KUMARI DEBI (1) referred to.

The account of the administrator need not be investigated by the Court, there being no procedure or practice for doing so.

An application in Chambers was made on the 18th April 1913 by the administrator to the estate of the deceased and for the discharge of sureties and for the release of a charge on their immoveable properties.

The facts of the case are as follows :—

The deceased Kanai Lal Khan died on the 19th February 1908 leaving him surviving an infant son, named Shama Das Khan, who was his son by a predeceased wife. He also left his mother Srimuti Luckhymoni Dassee, a widow Srimuti Santosh Kumari Dassee and 3 daughters, one of whom was since married but childless. He was said to have been living jointly with his cousins, Raman Lal Khan, Bunwari Lal Khan and Mani Lal Khan, the sons of his father's brother.

On the 21st April 1908, the Petitioner, Raman Lal Khan, was appointed guardian of Shama Das Khan, for the purpose of taking out Letters of Administration, and on the 6th July 1908 obtained an order for the grant to him of such Letters of Administration, limited until Shama Das Khan attained majority.

The estate was a very large one.

There appears to have been some difficulty about obtaining sureties, and on the 17th July 1908 a special order was made giving the Registrar liberty to accept Bunwari Lal Khan and Mani Lal Khan above-named who were joint with the deceased and the Petitioner in estate, as sureties for the Petitioner, upon their and the Petitioner executing a bond, with a charge upon their immoveable property. This bond was given, and it contained provisions charging the property.

Shama Das Khan died on the 15th December 1912, an infant, unmarried and intestate, and Srimuti Luckhymoni Dassee, his paternal grandmother, became his heiress.

The Petitioner stated that he had rendered proper accounts of his administration of the estate to Srimuti Luckhymoni Dassee, who had satisfied herself of the same by having them examined and scrutinised by her sons-in-law her constituted attorneys, and who were the fathers of nine of the twelve grandsons by daughters who were the revisionary heirs, and the petition prayed that the Petitioner and his sureties might be discharged and their immoveable properties released from the obligation created by the bond.

Babu Lakshmi Narain Khettry, Attorney-at law, who made the application submitted that since the sole infant for whose use and benefit the administration was granted died under age, the grant to the guardian had ceased. Raman Lal Khan therefore was no longer entitled to administer the estate; that the liability of the sureties ceased on the completion of the administration of the original estate. The administration by Raman Lal Khan so far was to be considered as complete as he was no longer entitled to administer the estate and that he having rendered accounts of his dealings to the person now entitled to the estate and making over possession of the estate of the deceased to such person, so far as it was practicable, had complied with the terms of the administration bond and he was entitled to the order asked for.

The Registrar submitted the following note to the Court before an order actually issued :—

Before the order actually issues, I desire to place certain matters for the consideration of the Court. In the first place, I have been unable to find any precedent for such an order, either from the records of this Court, or by looking into Tristram and Coote, or Williams on Executors. The only authority mentioned with regard to discharge of sureties is, that the Court will not discharge the original sureties from an administration Bond and allow other sureties to be substituted for them, In the goods of Stark (2).

But assuming that the Court has power to discharge the sureties and their property, has a sufficient case been made out on the petition?

The condition of the Bond in the present case is, that if the administrator causes a full and true inventory of all the estates of the deceased, which has or shall come to his hands, possession or knowledge, or into the hands or possession of any other person or persons and the same so made do exhibit or cause to be exhibited in this Court before the 12th of February 1909, or within such further time, as the Court may from time to time appoint, and the same estate and all other estates of the said deceased at the time of his death or at any time after shall come to the hands or possession of the said administrator, or of any other person or persons for him do administer according to the law, and further do make or cause to be made a true and just account of his said administration at or before the 12th August 1909, or within such further time as may be allowed, and all the rest and residue of the said estate which shall be found remaining upon the said administration account, the same being first examined and allowed by the High Court, shall deliver and pay unto such person or persons respectively as shall be lawfully entitled to such residue, and if it shall thereafter appear that any will was made by the said deceased and the executor or executors do exhibit the same in this Court if the administrator being thereunto required do render and deliver the letters of administration, then his obligation to be void and of none effect else to remain in full virtue.

I find from para. 13 of the present petition that the Petitioner filed an inventory and account of the estate of the deceased on the 15th of February 1912. It does not appear that any further accounts have been filed.

(2) 1 P. and D. 76 (1866).

IN THE GOODS OF KANAI LAL KHAN.

In the affidavit of Luckymoni Dassee it is stated that she, as heiress of Shamadas Khan deceased and as such entitled to the share and interest, which was of the said deceased in the joint family properties, appointed her 3 sons-in-law by a power of attorney dated the 18th of February 1913 her agents to look after and manage on her behalf the estate of Kanai Lal Khan, which had devolved upon her and to scrutinise and take an account of the dealings of the administrator Raman Lal Khan therewith, and that they had done so and had reported to her that they were satisfied with the correctness of the accounts, and that she has thus satisfied herself that the accounts are correct, and Raman Lal Khan has made over to her all the rests and residue of the estate remaining in his hands

The question is, is that sufficient to justify the discharge of these persons from their Bond? I would point out that, from annexure B to the affidavit of valuation, it appears that there are a number of debts which were due by the deceased Kanai Lal Khan. There are also inter alia two very large amounts of Government securities standing in the name of the deceased but stated to have been purchased with the money of the joint family; also very large sums lent out on mortgage in the name of the deceased out of the joint family fund. Supposing that any of the creditors were to come forward hereinafter and to say that they had not been paid, what would be the position of the Court having released the administrator and his sureties from their bond?

With regard to the Government securities and the moneys stated to have been lent on mortgage in the name of the deceased out of the joint family fund, it is pointed out to me by the attorney for the Petitioner that the other members of the joint family are the Petitioner, and the two sureties, whose shares in the joint property are charged. They however have executed no receipt or release in favour of the Petitioner nor does it appear that they have satisfied themselves as to the accounts.

Another point that strikes me is, that Lukhymoni Dassee has a life-interest in the estate; would not the reversioners have a right to question whether the Petitioner has duly administered the estate or not?

The accounts which has been filed in Court has not been examined and though it is not the usual practice for administrator's accounts to be placed before the Court for examination and to be passed, on the other hand it is not usual to ask that the administrator and the sureties should be discharged from the Bond? Can they be discharged, if at all, without clear proof that the administrator has got in all the assets and duly discharged all the liabilities, and made over the balance of the estate, stating what that consists of, to the person entitled to the same?

To meet some of these objections made by the Registrar an additional affidavit of Raman Lal Khan, Bunwari Lal Khan and Mani Lal Khan was affirmed and filed on the 26th May 1913.

Babu Lakshmi Narain Khettry again appeared before Court and submitted that the case of In re Stark (2) referred to by the Registrar in his note was not applicable because this was not an application for the discharge of original sureties and substitution of other sureties in their place and that the grandmother as the heiress was quite competent to represent the estate of the deceased and the Registrar's objection on that account was not valid.

As regards the want of precedent, he submitted that neither here nor in England do the sureties in an administration matter ever charge their immoveable properties and therefore there was no necessity for asking for an order for discharge of their immoveable properties from the liability of their bonds and therefore no precedent would be found either in Indian or English law books. In this particular case, a special order was made for charging the immoveable properties of the administrator and his sureties and therefore a special order was necessary to have their immoveable properties discharged after the administration was over, for it would be difficult for those persons to deal with their respective properties if the charge created by the said bond continued for ever. It would be difficult in future to induce the friends and relatives of an intending administrator to come forward and help him by standing sureties for him in matters like these.

(2) 1 P. and D. 76 (1866).

IN THE GOODS OF KANAI LAL KHAN.

He referred to Raj Narain Mukerjee v. Ful Kumari Debi (1) as showing that the Calcutta High Court had passed an order for the discharge of a surety, in that instance Mr. Justice Chaudhuri thereupon ordered the discharge of the immoveable properties upon certain terms which will appear from the following judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CHAUDHURI, J.—Kanai Lal Khan died on the 19th of February 1908 leaving him surviving an infant son, Shama Das Khan, his only son by a pre-deceased wife. He also left his mother Lakhi Mani Dasi and his widow Sreemutty Santosh Kumari Dasi and three daughters. He was living jointly with his cousins, sons of his father's brother. On the 21st April 1908 the Petitioner, Raman Lal Khan, was appointed guardian of Shama Das Khan for the purpose of taking out Letters of Administration. On the 6th of July 1908 he obtained an order for grant to him of such Letters of Administration limited during Shama Das Khan's minority. The estate was a very large one, the gross value appearing from the affidavit of valuation to be over 26 lacs. The debts and trust properties amounted to over 9 lacs. There was considerable difficulty in finding sureties and on the 9th of July Mr. Justice Woodroffe made a special order giving the Registrar leave to accept Bunwari Lal Khan and Mani Lal Khan two of the cousins of the deceased as sureties for the Petitioner upon their executing the usual bond but with a charge upon their immoveable property. Now so far as the charge on their immoveable property is concerned, it was a special order and somewhat unusual. As a rule sureties give their personal bond and their properties are not charged. Shama Das Khan died on the 15th December 1912 an infant, unmarried and intestate. Lukhi Mani, the paternal grandmother, thereupon became his heir. This is an application on behalf of the Petitioner that the sureties might be discharged and the immoveable properties discharged from liability under the obligation of the said bond and that the Registrar do execute and register a release or other proper document discharging their respective shares. I made my order on the petition but before the order was drawn up, the Registrar brought certain facts to my notice and upon a reconsideration of the matter I think the order I originally made should be modified. There is no precedent for discharging sureties or discharging the bond executed by them. There can also be no order for substitution but the facts of this case are somewhat peculiar. There is no precedent for charging the immoveable properties of sureties. These properties are very large. If it be strictly held that "once a surety he is always a surety" these properties would remain charged for an indefinite time much to the prejudice of the person concerned. It it stated upon affidavits that the residue of the property has been made over to Lakhi Mani Dasi the heiress of the infant that she appointed her sons-in-law to examine the accounts of the administrator and that upon examination they as her attorneys have been satisfied with the accounts.

There is an affidavit by the sons-in-law about this matter and there does not seem to be any reason for doubting that the statements made in their affidavit are not true. Under the original bond an inventory was to have been filed on or before the 12th August 1909. The inventory and accounts were filed on the 16th February 1912. No further accounts have been filed. I think a copy of the account or an abstract thereof which the sons-in-law say they have examined and found correct ought also to be filed in this Court with their certificate that that is the account they have examined and which they have found correct. The account is to be verified by the applicant and the certificate is also to be verified. There was a considerable amount of debts due by the deceased Kanai Lal Khan. The affidavit of the administrator is that these debts have been paid. I think the receipts obtained from these persons ought to be filed. Then, amongst the assets there was a large amount of Government securities which stood in the name of the deceased, but it was stated in the original petition for Letters of Administration that they were purchased with the money of the joint family. So far as these Government securities are concerned there is a statement that the claim of the co-sharers has been released: they do not make any claim as against the estate in respect of them. The administrator says so in his affidavit and I think the affidavit on this point can be accepted. Very large sums were also lent out in mortgages, but now there is only a small sum outstanding. I think that the co-sharers should give a clear receipt to the administrator that they have no claim against the estate of the deceased. I do not think it is necessary to re-examine the account in Court, there is no procedure to examine these accounts. It is never done in practice. I do not want these persons to be put to additional cost and trouble.

I think if the accounts are filed with the certificate such as I have mentioned they may be accepted as correct. So far as this Court is concerned it has been held in the case of Raj Narain Mukerjee v. Ful Kumari Debi (1) by Sir Francis Maclean and Dr. Banerjee that under the provisions of sec. 130 of the Contract Act the surety of an administrator can come to Court on notice to the other side to ask to be discharged from future administration of estate upon a proper case being made for revocation of a continuing guarantee. Taking all the circumstances into consideration and treating this as a special case I direct that a fresh bond may be taken from the present sureties for their administration of the estate keeping them personally liable to the extent of the original amount of the bond but it is not necessary to keep their properties charged any further, as the debts have been satisfied as also the claims in respect of the Government securities. Therefore the fresh bond will only be a personal bond without in any way affecting their property. The Petitioners will remain liable for their administration of the estate. The immoveable properties only will be considered as released by this order.

Mr. Khettry.—There is a large number of receipts and they are mostly in Bengali.

CHAUDHURI, J.—The Registrar is to satisfy himself about the receipts.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL

No. 35 OF 1912.

JENKINS, C. J. MOOKERJEE, J. 1913, 9, July.	BENGAL PROVINCIAL RAILWAY, Defendant, Appellant, v. GOPI MOHON SINGH, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Negligence—Railway level-crossing, gate at, left open—Contributory negligence.

A gate at a railway level-crossing, left open, is an invitation to all comers to cross the line and an intimation that it could be crossed with safety, and is evidence of negligence for which the Railway Company may be made liable in the absence of contributory negligence on the part of the party injured in consequence of such negligence.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 19th of March 1912 against the decree of Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee, dated the 27th of February 1912, in Appeal from of Appellate Decree No. 1868 of 1910.

The Plaintiff sued the Defendant Company for damages for injuries alleged to have been caused to his carriage by a collision with a running train of the Company's at a level-crossing on its line. At the time the collision happened the gate at the crossing was open and there was no gateman present to warn the driver of the carriage. The Plaintiff's case was that the gate having been left open amounted to a statement and a notice to the public that the line at the time was safe for crossing. The Defendant Company in answer averred that the collision was due to the negligence and rashness of the Plaintiff's driver, inasmuch inter alia as the Railway line towards the direction from which the train arrived was visible from the gate and the driver would have seen the train approaching if he had looked that way before crossing the line.

The Munsif held that there was contributory negligence on the part of the Plaintiff's coachman, who had deposed that when he came over the line, the train was only 3 cubits off and that he did not try to ascertain before crossing the line whether any train was in sight or not. He accordingly dismissed the suit observing that "the coachman's knowledge that the gateman was absent should have prevented him from taking the fact of the gate being open as an invitation and notice to him to enter, as ordinarily any sensible man would be cautious and circumspect before he attempts to cross any railway line even if there be none to warn him."

On appeal by the Plaintiff before the Subordinate Judge, it was conceded on behalf of the Company that the Company was chargeable with negligence in leaving the gate of the level-crossing open, but it was contended that the Plaintiff's coachman on reaching the gate must have seen the train coming on and that he took the chance of clearing the whole distance over the line before the train arrived and rashly braved the risk of a collision. The Subordinate Judge upon this contention observed that no one but a mad man would endanger his life in that away, but that on the other hand it appeared that the carriage must have acquired some momentum when it entered the gate and it was probably quite as difficult for the coachman to pull back the horses at a distance of a few feet from the line (from where only the train was visible) as for the driver of the train to bring it to a dead stop as soon as the carriage was sighted, and this happened when the train was about 120 feet off from the spot. He held that "the proximate cause of the accident was the running of the train against the carriage and not the running of the carriage across the line, there being no obstruction at the time it was passing, and that the last opportunity of avoiding the accident was with the Defendant Company." Accordingly he decreed the suit.

The Defendant Company preferred this Second Appeal.

Babu Provash Chandra Mitra for the Appellant.

Babu Heralal Sanyal for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an Appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee confirming the decree of the lower Appellate Court.

The suit was one brought by the Plaintiff against a Railway Company for damages. The cause of action alleged was that a train of the Defendant Company ran into and damaged the Plaintiff's carriage as it was crossing the Defendant Company's line. The question therefore turns upon whether or not there was negligence on the part of the Defendant Company, and if so, whether or not there was a contributory negligence on the part of the Plaintiff. As this case comes before the High Court by way of Second Appeal, we cannot disturb any finding of fact, if there was any evidence to support it. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that the proximate cause of the damage to the Plaintiff's carriage was the running of the train against the carriage, and he finds that there was negligence on the part of the Defendant Company. The evidence shows that there was a gate at this level crossing where the accident occurred and that his gate was left open. There was thus an invitation to all comers to cross the line and an intimation that it could be crossed with safety. There is, therefore, ample evidence to support the finding of negligence against the Defendant Company and it cannot be disturbed.

Then, was there contributory negligence on the part of the Plaintiff? There again we have the finding of the lower Appellate Court that there was not, for the learned Judge of that Court excludes the running of the carriage across the line, as he terms it, as being a cause of the accident, and that expression in the context in which it appears amounts to a negation by the Court of any contributory negligence on the part of the Plaintiff.

The result then is that we have negligence proved to the satisfaction of the lower Appellate Court on materials which justify that finding, and contributory negligence on the part of the Plaintiff not proved to the satisfaction of that Court. The result is that the claim in the suit is established.

There remains to be seen whether damages are proved. The evidence in support of those damages has been criticised before us, and it has been suggested that there has been no damage. We have not gone through the evidence, nor is it necessary that we should do so, because we accept the finding of the lower Appellate Court that Rs. 316 has been proved to have been spent by the Plaintiff, in repairing his carriage. This clearly establishes damages resulting from the tort of the Defendant Company.

This Appeal, therefore, in my opinion must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 829 OF 1910.

HARINGTON, J. MOOKERJEE, J. 1912, 8, March.

PROSUNNO KUMAR BOSE, Defendant, Appellant,

v.

JAMALUDDIN MAHOMED, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), secs. 69, 70—Contribution, suit for—Co-sharer under-raiyats—Sale by one to the other not recognised by landlord—Decree for rent against both discharged by vendor—Right to recover.

A and B were under-raiyats in respect of a non-transferable holding. B transferred his share to A in 1904. The transfer was not recognised by their landlord. The landlord obtained a decree in a suit for arrears of rent against A and B in respect of the years 1902—05, whereupon A satisfied the decree and brought a suit for contribution against B.

Held—That sec. 69 of the Contract Act is applicable to the present case and B is bound to make compensation to A.

Held further—Even assuming that sec. 69 has no application, sec. 70 undoubtedly covers the case.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 14th of March 1910 against the decree of Babu Annoda Charan Sen, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Dinajpur, dated the 4th of December 1909, affirming that of Babu Kamini Kumar Mukerjee, Munsif of that place, dated the 31st of March 1909.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chucherbutty for the Appellant.

Babu Gour Chandra Pal for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an Appeal on behalf of the first Defendant in a suit for contribution. The Plaintiff and the second Defendant are under-raiyats and possess their holding in equal halves. In 1904 the second Defendant transferred his half share of the holding to the first Defendant. The superior landlord who was clearly not bound to recognise this transfer, brought a suit for arrears of rent against the Plaintiff and the second Defendant to recover his dues in respect of the years 1902—1905. He obtained a decree and proceeded to execute it by the attachment of the moveables of the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff thereupon satisfied the decree and commenced the present action for contribution. The sole question in controversy is whether the first Defendant can be made liable for any portion of the sum paid by the Plaintiff. It has been argued on his behalf in this Court that he ought not to be made liable because neither under sec. 69 nor under sec. 70 of the Indian Contract Act is any liability imposed on him.

Sec. 69 provides that a person who is interested in the payment of money which another is bound by law to pay, and who therefore pays it, is entitled to be reimbursed by the other. It has been argued that the first Defendant was not bound by law to pay the money which has been paid by the Plaintiff, because the decree satisfied was not against the first Defendant. This contention, upon a superficial view of the matter, may seem to have some force, but upon closer examination, it turns out to be fallacious. The Plaintiff by the payment which he made satisfied the arrears of rent due on account of the holding and that rent was payable unquestionably by the Plaintiff and the first Defendant. We are therefore not prepared to hold that sec. 69 has no application. The view we take is supported by the observations in Mathoora Nath v. Kristo Kumar (1) and Swarnomoyee v. Hari Das v. (2), notwithstanding the dictum in Fateh Ali v. Ganga Nath (3).

But even if it be assumed that sec. 69 has no application, sec. 70 undoubtedly covers the case. That section provides that where a person lawfully does anything for another person not intending to do it gratuitously, and such other person enjoys the benefit thereof, the latter is bound to make compensation to the former in respect of the thing so done. There can be no question that the first Defendant has enjoyed the benefit of the payment made by the Plaintiff. If the Plaintiff had not satisfied the decree, the landlord might have proceeded to sell the holding in which the first Defendant was interested. The result of the payment by the Plaintiff, consequently, has been that the property of the first Defendant has been saved, and the act of the Plaintiff cannot be deemed, to use the language in Damodara v. Secy. of State (4), "an officious interference of one man with the affairs or property of another." In our opinion sec. 70 completely covers the case, Smith v. Dino Nath (5).

The result is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge must be affirmed and this Appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2118 OF 1909.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.
WALMSLEY, J.
1913,
Heard, 17 & 22, July and 4 & 5, August.
Judgment, 4, September.

SREEMUTY BASANTA KUMARI DASSYA, Defendant, Appellant,
v.
MOHESH CHANDRA SHAHA and others, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Co-sharer, suit by, for joint possession of land and injunction—Injury or likelihood thereof not alleged in plaint—Hostile title not set up by defence—Decree for joint possession if should be given—Ouster, meaning of—Common law action for ejectment and equity suit for injunction, distinction between, if should be introduced in this country—Principle of equity, justice and good conscience.

The Plaintiffs and the Defendant were co-sharers in a mehal. Each co-sharer was in sole occupation of some lands appertaining to the mehal as khamar lands and the Defendant was in such possession of some lands. On the Defendant commencing some building on portions of the land the Plaintiffs brought a suit for recovery of joint possession of the land in dispute on declaration of their proprietary right to their share in it, for demolition of the building raised, for an injunction restraining the Defendant from building on the land. The Defendant did not claim any exclusive title to the land and the Plaintiffs did not allege that they had sustained or were likely to sustain any substantial injury by reason of the sole occupation of the land or building thereon by the Defendant:

Held—That the mere fact of sole occupation by one co-sharer does not necessarily constitute an ouster of other co-sharers nor does it entitle the latter to a decree for joint possession.

Ouster means 'dispossession' of one co-sharer by another where a hostile title is set up by the latter and when the occupation of the latter is not consistent with joint ownership.

Held—That there being no assertion of hostile title in the present case there was no ouster of the Plaintiffs by the Defendant.

That the distinction between a common law action for ejectment and an equity suit for an injunction should not be introduced in this country and questions of joint possession and injunction should be decided on the principles of justice, equity and good conscience.

That in the present case the mere fact that the land in suit adjoined the dwelling-house of the Plaintiffs irrespective of any injury would not be a sufficient ground, consistent with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, to give joint possession or order the demolition of the buildings already erected or restrain the Defendant from building on it.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 12th of October 1909 against the decree of Babu Kissori Lal Sen, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Dacca, dated the 27th of August 1909, modifying the decree of Babu Gour Krishna Bose, Additional Munsif of that place, dated the 25th of February 1909.

The facts will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Harendra Narain Mitra for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. Chakravarti, S. P. Sinha, Babus Mahendra Nath Roy and Ramani Mohun Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of joint possession of the land in dispute on declaration of Plaintiffs' proprietary right to 19 and odd gundas share in the same, for demolition of the buildings raised on portions of the land by the principal Defendant, and for an injunction restraining her from building on the land.

The Court of first instance merely declared the Plaintiffs' title to the 19 gundas and odd share of the land and rejected the other prayers. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that Plaintiffs were entitled to joint possession of their share with the Defendant No. 1 and to that extent modified the decree of the first Court. The Defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court against the decree in so far as it gave joint possession and the Plaintiffs have preferred cross-objections in so far as that decree disallowed the prayer for injunction.

It appears that the Plaintiffs, the Defendant No. 1 and the pro formâ Defendants, are co-sharers of a mehal within which the land in dispute is situated, the share of the Plaintiffs being 19 gundas and odd and that of the Denfendant No. 1 one-half of the share of the Plaintiffs. The remaining shares belong to other co-sharers.

It appears that each of the co-sharers is in sole occupation of same lands appertaining to the mehal as khamar lands. The land in dispute was in the possession of a family of barbers, who held the land at a nominal rent, and used to do service for both the Plaintiffs and the Defendant No. 1, until the Defendant No. 1 purchased it from the barbers. The Defendant No. 1 after her purchase having commenced some buildings on the land, the Plaintiffs instituted the present suit. The land is to the west of and adjoins the dwelling-houses of the Plaintiffs, and the Defendant No. 1. The other co-sharers who have their dwelling-houses elsewhere apparently have no objection to the sole occupation of the land by the Defendant No. 1, and they take no interest in the suit.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that there was an ouster of the Plaintiffs by the Defendant, and that the injury to the Plaintiffs must be substantial and incapable of being remedied in a suit for partition.

The first portion of the third paragraph of the written statement may, at first sight, be considered to lend some colour to the contention that the Defendant No. 1 set up an exclusive right to the land, but later on it is stated "the Plaintiffs and the other co-sharer maliks according to their own convenience have at different times taken possession of different lands of the joint taluk. This Defendant also took distinctive possession for upwards of 12 years of the land under claim." This shows that the Defendant did not mean to set up any exclusive title to the land, and it appears that the Defendant's case as understood in the Court of first instance really was one of sole occupation as khamar land by a co sharer, and not a case of adverse possession as against the other co-sharers, and it was stated in that Court that the plea of limitation although it found place in the written statement had no real foundation.

The questions whether or not the vendors of the Defendants No. 1 had any transferable right and whether in the absence of a right to transfer, the land became khas of the co-owners were not gone into, and the case was argued in both the Courts below on the footing that it was joint property and with reference to the rights of co-owners.

That being so, and there being no denial of the Plaintiffs' title, the question is whether sole occupation of the land by the Defendant No. 1 constituted an ouster of the Plaintiffs. We do not think that the mere fact of sole occupation by one co sharer necessarily constitutes an ouster of the other co sharers, nor does it entitle the latter to a decree for joint possession. We need not discuss the various cases cited in argument on both sides, and need only refer to the case of Watson v. Ram Chand (1), Dwijendra Narain v. Purnendu Narain (2) and Anand Chandra v. Parbati Nath (3). The first case dealt with the rights of co sharers in respect to agricultural lands and the last two related to joint lands on which permanent structures had been raised by one co owner. Most of the authorities relied upon, on behalf of the Respondents, were considered in the last two cases.

When a co-sharer is in sole occupation of a portion of the joint property, for instance, by building, or by carrying on cultivation on it, the other co sharers are to that extent excluded from making any use of that particular portion, as it is difficult to see how two different co-sharers can at the same time build upon or carry on cultivation, on one and the same piece of land. If the sole occupation of one co-owner in this manner constitutes ouster of the other co-owners, then in every case the occupation by the co-owners of the lands in their respective possession would constitute an ouster of each other, and this certainly cannot be held "Ouster" must, therefore, mean dispossession of one co-sharer by another where a hostile title is set up by the latter, and where the occupation of the latter is not consistent with joint ownership. This being so, and there being no assertion of hostile title in the present case, there was no ouster of the Plaintiffs by the Defendant No. 1.

The distinction between a common law action for ejectment and an equity suit for an injunction, as pointed out in the case of Dwijendra Narain v. Purnendu Narain (2), should not be introduced in this country. The distinction has been uniformly ignored in numerous cases, and the same equitable doctrine has been applied to cases of ejectment by one co-owner against another, as well as to cases of injunction between such co owners. As pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Watson v. Ram Chand (1), (in which both joint possession and injunction were claimed) the questions should be decided on the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, and we proceed to decide the case upon those 'principles.'

It will appear from the plaint that the Plaintiffs did not allege that they had sustained or were likely to sustain any substantial injury, by reason of the sole occupation of the land or building thereon by the Defendant No. 1. All that they said was that they had a 19 gundas and odd share of the land as co-owners and were entitled to joint possession; but we have already said in the absence of any denial of title or ouster, the mere fact that one co-sharer has taken possession of a portion of joint property, irrespective of any other consideration, does not entitle another co sharer to joint possession. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the land in dispute is apparently the only site where their dwelling-house admits of expansion. It is pointed out on behalf of the Appellant that the dwelling-houses of the parties are surrounded on all sides by ejmali lands, as appeared from the Commissioner's report. But apart from that, the mere fact that the disputed land is the only site on which the dwelling houses admit of expansion would not by itself be sufficient to entitle the Plaintiffs to joint possession. No doubt a piece of land adjoining a dwelling house may be, and often is, very valuable for that purpose, and the fact that co-sharers may have other joint lands at a distance might not be a sufficient answer to the Plaintiffs' claiming joint possession, if they sustain substantial injury by reason of the Defendant's alone occupying the entire piece of land. It is unnecessary to consider whether it would be equitable to refuse joint possession to one co sharer and restrain him from making advantageous use of the land by building thereon in the same way as the other co-owner where each of two co-owners wants to make such advantageous use of a piece of land adjoining their dwelling-house when it can be conveniently used by both. The Plaintiffs in the present case never alleged that they were going to expand their dwelling-house on the disputed land or that they even intended to do so or to make any other advantageous use of the land. They merely stood upon their rights as co-owners. Under these circumstances, the mere fact that the land adjoins the dwelling-house of the Plaintiffs, irrespective of any injury, would not, we think, be sufficient ground for giving joint possession to them. The learned Subordinate Judge, no doubt, says that the injury to the Plaintiffs must be substantial. Had there been a finding upon the evidence that the Plaintiffs had sustained or would sustain injury, we could not interfere with it. But no injury, actual or potential, was alleged in the plaint, no issue was raised and no evidence was adduced on the point.

The land was in possession of certain tenants. Had the Defendant No. 1 obtained a transfer of the lands from them, the Plaintiffs could not have claimed khas possession. The Defendant No. 1 apparently wanted the land for extension of her dwelling-house and therefore obtained an assignment of the land from the tenants, she peacefully entered into possession, and then built some structures on it. She does not deny the Plaintiffs' title. The Plaintiffs have other lands in their sole occupation and have constructed pucca buildings on those lands without any objection on the part of the Defendant or the other co-sharers. Some of the other co-sharers have similarly constructed pucca structures on the lands in their occupation. The learned Subordinate Judge says that that would not justify new ouster. He assumes that the Plaintiffs' or the other co-sharers' occupation of the other lands constitute ouster, but sole occupation of different parcels of lands by different co-sharers according to their convenience does not constitute ouster of the others, and it would be inequitable to hold that although the Plaintiffs and the other co-sharers are in sole occupation of other ejmali lands, this particular land occupied by the Defendant No. 1 should be the subject of joint possession. The disputed land, it is true, adjoins the dwelling-houses of the Plaintiffs and the Defendant No. 1, but we have already pointed out that the Plaintiffs never said that they wanted the lands for building or any other purpose or that they would sustain substantial injury by reason of the Defendant's sole occupation of the land and there is no evidence to show that they would do so. Under these circumstances, we do not think it would be consistent with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience either to give joint possession or order the demolition of the buildings already erected or restrain the Defendant No. 1 from building on it. We do not see why the equities between the parties cannot be worked out in a suit for partition, more specially when the Defendant No. 1 has not built upon the whole of the land.

Then as to compensation. The Subordinate Judge found that if the injury is to be calculated, having reference to the rent that was paid by the tenants, it is nil. The rent in the Plaintiffs' share was only half anna a year; that, however, was the rent paid by the tenants who used to do service and we might have directed the Defendant No. 1 to pay compensation to the Plaintiffs for the sole occupation of the land by her according to the proper rent of the land. But the Plaintiffs themselves are in sole occupation of other ejmali lands for which they do not pay anything to the Defendant No. 1. Under the circumstances, the Plaintiffs cannot claim compensation for this piece of land, nor do they seem to care for compensation.

We are, accordingly, of opinion that the decree of the Court of Appeal below should be set aside, and that of the Court of first instance restored. Under the circumstances of the case, however, each party will bear his own costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2126 OF 1910.

HOLMWOOD, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1913,
6, January.

BASKI MAMRIK and others, Defendants, Appellants,
v.
SUPHAL MANJHI and others, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Sonthal Perganahs Regulation (III of 1872), secs. 10 and 11—Sonthal Perganahs Settlement Rules, No. 27—Succession to jote held by Hindu goala*—Local custom if applies to Hindu immigrants—Point incidentally decided in settlement proceeding, if* res judicata.

A finding of the settlement officer in a proceeding under the Sonthal Perganahs Regulation, III of 1872, which was not necessary for the purpose of the proceeding and was arrived at only incidentally does not operate as res judicata.

Rule 27 of the Sonthal Perganahs Settlement Rules under which resident relatives who have taken part in the management of the family jote are to be given preference as heirs is only applicable to suits before settlement officers.

The Rule was intended to meet the peculiar customs of the Sonthals and aborigines in the locality and does not apply to persons governed by the Hindu law, who have settled in the Sonthal Perganahs.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 4th of July 1910 against a decree of Mr. H. W. Scroope, District Judge of Sonthal Pergannahs, dated the 29th of March 1910, reversing a decree of Mr. W. H. Thomson, Subordinate Judge of that place, dated the 16th of May 1909.

The parties in this case were up-country goalas who had permanently settled in Sonthal Perganahs. The Plaintiffs were the sons of four brothers, Nabbi, Shyam, Persi and Mathur, and they laid claim to all the property moveable and immoveable left by one Dewli Majhiaine, the younger widow of one Dular Manjhi, who they (the Plaintiffs) averred, was the son of Sanu Manjhi, the brother of their grandfather Nani. Dewli Majhiaine died in Bhado 1904, A. D., at Sahara, in Taluk Sahara Mahara. She was a childless widow and so also was her co-wife Sundri, the elder widow of Dular, who predeceased both of them.

Defendant Maharaji Mamrik was the son of Dewli Majhiaine's sister and his case was (1) that Dular's father and the grandfather Nani of the Plaintiffs were not brothers but came from different stocks, (3) that according to the Sonthal Perganahs khunapuri rules, he (Defendant) having lived almost all his life with Dewli and assisted her in her cultivation is entitled to inherit her jote lands, (4) that the judgment of the Assistant Settlement Officer in his objection suit No. 116 of 1901, Mohar Manthi v. Maharaji Mamrik and Dewli Majhiaine, operated as res judicata.

The issues framed inter alia were

"First.—Are the Plaintiffs the legal heirs of Dular Manjhi?

"Third.—Does the decision of the

BASKI MAMRIK v. SUPHAL MANJHI.

Assistant Settlement Officer in his objection suit No. 116 of 1901, act as a bar to this suit?

"Fourth.—Are the Plaintiffs even if they be Dular Manjhi's legal heirs, entitled to the properties they sue for?"

The history of the family as stated by the Subordinate Judge was as follows: One Lachhman Manjhi was believed to have been the original settler of the village Sahara and he was probably its first mustagir. The oral evidence showed that his grandson Dular was imprisoned for a dacoity during the Mutiny of 1857 and left two wives behind him at home, Sundri and Dewli, and on his death in jail some 10 years later, these ladies were appointed joint ijaradars of the village in 1868 by the zemindar and continued as such till Mr. Wood's settlement and were formally confirmed as mustagirs on the 3rd December 1873. Long before Mr. Wood's settlement, Dewli Majhiaine, the younger widow, brought and settled her brother Gannesh Mamrik in the village and gave him some lands, and bighas 28-2-6 were recorded in his name during the settlement. Her then kurpardaz Plaintiff Mohar Manjhi opposed this on the ground that it was being done to defraud him and his brothers, the reversionary heirs of her husband. His objection was tried by Munshi Isri Prosad, Assistant Settlement Officer (case No. 362 of 1874), who dismissed it on the ground that Gannesh had been 14 years in possession but remarked that Mohar Manjhi could, if so advised, fight out his claim on the death of Dewli Majhiaine. Dewli and Plaintiff Mohar having thus fallen out, she took her brother's son Defendant Maharaji Mamrik under her wings and he became practically an adopted son to her and managed all her affairs till her death and was the de facto mustagir, till Mr. McPherson's settlement began in 1900, A. D. Sundri died three years before the second settlement and Dewli bacame sole mustagir. At Mr. McPherson's settlement, it was found that the mustagir-ka-jote, i.e., the jote that Mr. Wood had recorded in the name of Sundri and Dewli had decreased from bighas 68-5-4 to bighas 57-16-18, while that which Defendant Maharaji had inherited from his father Gannesh had increased from bighas 38-2-6 to bighas 73-1-15. Plaintiff Mohar Manjhi again raised his voice in protest, he alleged that the increase was due to Dewli having given Maharaji a portion of her jote and to having settled with him fouti-ferazi lands instead of adding them to the mustagir-ka-jote and he brought a suit in the Settlement Court to cancel Dewli's alienations and illegal settlement and add the lands to the mustagir-ka-jote and declare him to be entitled to succeed to the whole of it, on her death. The case was tried by Babu Jotindra Narain Mukerji, Assistant Settlement Officer, who on the 28th June 1901 found that Dewli had of a fact transferred bighas 21-0-10 of her own land to Defendant Maharaji, so he restored it to her jote as according to him, she had but a life-interest in it; her recorded jote therefore rose from bighas 51-16-18 to bighas 72 17 8 against bighas 68-5-4 the recorded area at Mr. Wood's settlement, while Maharaji's fell from bighas 73-1-15 to bighas 52-1-15 against bighas 38-2-6 the recorded area at Mr. Wood's settlement. The Assistant Settlement Officer did not think the settlement of fouti-ferazi lands with Defendant Maharaji Mamrik, illegal, and as he had been long in possession without objection, he was confirmed as raiyat of bighas 52-1-15 of land. Incidentally he also framed and tried the issue of Mohar's kinship to Dular, the husband of Dewli, and found against him and immediately after ruled that the investigation was unnecessary as Mohar had no right to have brought his claim to Court during the lifetime of Dewli.

While this suit was in progress Plaintiff, Mohar Manjhi, worked up an agitation against Dewli continuing as mustagir, on the ground that she was too old to manage her own affairs and was entirely under the guidance of her nephew Maharaji, so on the 30th March 1900 she was removed and Mohar Manjhi appointed in her place.

Dewli died in August 1904 and Plaintiff Mohar promptly took possession of all her belongings; a possession case under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, followed which ended in everything being handed over to Defendant, Maharaji Mamrik, on the 28th November 1904 and then Mohar, linking his brothers and cousins to himself, brought the present suit.

Upon these facts, the Subordinate Judge held that the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer of the question as to Mohar's relation with Dular being unnecessary for the purposes of the proceeding before him was not res judicata. On the evidence he held that Mohar and his brothers were the great-grandchildren of Dular's grandfather, and that consequently the Plaintiffs were the legal heirs of Dular. He however dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit as, according to him the succession to the jote must be governed by the Sonthal Perganahs Settlement Laws and one of these was that resident relatives take precedence over non-resident ones, consequently the claim of Plaintiffs, Kripali, Matuki and Ganu, who were non-residents, to succeed to the jote, must be dismissed. As to the other five Plaintiffs, Sufar, Mohar, Dular, Tulsi and Uddan, he held that they were governed by khanapuri Rule 27 promulgated by Government, viz., the only persons entitled to succeed to a jote, are the relatives who are residents of the village and have taken part in the management of the family jote, as these 5 resident Plaintiffs did not even pretend to have assisted Dewli in the management of her jote, on the contrary, the chief among them Mohar had been at war with her for 26 years and thwarted her in every ac of her life. In the course of his judgment on this point he observed :—

But I am told that the khanapuri rule has not the force of Law and cannot override the personal laws of a Hindu even in the Sonthal Perganahs. I have hunted up old cases and find the khanapuri rule under reference does not owe its origin to the idiosyncrasy of a Settlement Officer but is based on the case law of the District and such being the case it is Defendant Maharaji Mamrik whom the fiscal authorities here have to recognise as Dewli's successor in her jote and all its appurtenances such as agriculturist's residence, rights to mahua fruit, etc., and I must therefore hold that the Plaintiffs though Dular's heirs-at-law are not entitled to the immoveables they have sued for, but only to her moveables.

On appeal to the District Judge the only point considered was whether local custom and the case law of the district should debar the Plaintiffs from succeeding to Dewli's lands.

The District Judge's judgment on this point was as follows :—

"In civil revision case No. 48 of 1907 the Divisional Commissioner who is the higest Appellate Court of those constituted under Act XXXVII of 1855 after referring to the Attestation Rule 27 quoted above, interpreted it as follows :—' In accordance with this recognised and prescribed custom, inheritance has been given to more distant relations who fulfilled the above conditions in preference to nearer ones who do not, and it is upon this dictum that the Defendant's pleader mainly relies in his argument. But the rule refers to the family jote and evidently contemplates a dispute between members of the same family. The Defendant, a sister's son of the deceased Dular's widow, does not belong to Dular's family at all and his case cannot be regarded as falling within the rule quoted.

"Then again I am referred to the Commissioner's order in Settlement Appeal No. 15 of 1909-10 (Rajkishore Gorai v. Gosta Behari Gossain) in which the Court found the Appellant at the time of his father's death was not living jointly with his father and his three brothers, but in another village where he had acquired a jote of his own which he held separately from his brothers and that he had voluntarily ceased to be a resident in the village and to take part in the management of the jote. Obviously there were strong reasons in this instance for applying Attestation Rule 25 but the facts are radically different from those of the present case.

"In his Appellate order in Settlement Appeal No 878 of 1905-1906, the Settlement Officers of the Sonthal Perganahs makes the following remarks regarding Attestation Rule 27 and the manner in which it has been applied in the course of the settlement operations: 'Now this (i e, Rule 27) means that we are not bound to recognise outside heirs who have never cultivated the family jote and come in to claim their share. This rule we have applied with discretion and it is one that is really applicable to Sonthals and the lower castes. It should only be applied with discretion in the case of Dokkus (i.e., non-aboriginals) of the class of the parties.'

"The parties to the present case are not Sonthals and as they are up-country goalas, it cannot be said that they belong to the lower caste Hindus. The Settlement Officer's remarks are relevant inasmuch as they show that the rule has not been interpreted as a hard-and-fast one throughout the settlement operations which have been in progress throughout the district for a period of ten years but that it has been administered with discretion.

"The rule is based upon the general principle which is the basis of all Agrarian law in Sonthal Perganahs that the land is for the use of the village community and that a man who had settled down at a distance from his own village ceases to be a member of the village community and forfeits his right to succeed as heir to his ancestral holding to his relations who have remained in the village. But practically none of the conditions which the rule was framed to meet, exist in the present case. The Plaintiffs with the exception of Nos. 6, 7, 8 are all residents of the village in which the disputed land lies and the Plaintiff Mohar is mustagir or headman of the village having succeeded Mussammat Dewli in that office. All the Plaintiffs, it may be noted here, are closely related and far from their having ceased to take an interest in the land which they claim, they or their representatives at the time have been striving to get possession of it for nearly forty years. During the widow's lifetime it was obviously impossible for them to assist her in the cultivation of her jote for she brought in her own relatives to prevent them from so doing. And I do not for a moment consider that Rule 27 should apply to their case because their efforts to cultivate the jote in the widow's lifetime were unsuccessful.

"To me the Subordinate Judge's order dismissing the claim of the Plaintiffs to succeed to the lands of Dewli as lawful heirs, seems tantamount to the sanctioning of an illegal alienation of her jote by Dewli in favour of a relation whom she brought in from another village. The Plaintiffs are the sons of four brothers, five of them reside in Mouzah Sahara and three outside the Mouzah and the circumstances of the case point irresistibly to the conclusion that the case as regards all is the same and that none of them can be regarded as having voluntarily ceased to interest himself in these lands. Anyone of them has a better right to succeed to the lands than the Defendant. Holding this view, I modify the decree of the Subordinate Judge and allow a decree in favour of the Plaintiff in respect of all Dewli's immoveable as well as of her moveable property. I do not think it necessary to make any order as to costs."

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Second Appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs for recovery of the moveables and immoveable property of a deceased lady Dewli Majhini, widow of a certain Dular Goala, who died in jail in the year 1867. After his death the zemindars settled the property with his widows and made them ijaradars, and mustagirs under them. The Plaintiffs are the legal reversionary heirs of Dular Goala, and apart from the question of confiscation which has been raised in this appeal and from certain allegations of res judicata which we shall deal with presently, there is no possible reason why they should not succeed as reversioners of Dular Goala. But it is argued in this appeal that Rule 27* framed under sec. 10 of the Sonthal Pergannahs Settlement Regulation, III of 1872, applies to all persons resident and settled in the Sonthal Pergannahs and that under that Rule the Defendants are the preferential heirs to the Plaintiffs.

Dealing first with the question of confiscation we find that in neither of the Courts below was there any finding that the Courts had confiscated the property of Dular Goala on his conviction for dacoity during the Mutiny of 1857. On the contrary the finding of the first Court which has been upheld in appeal in the lower Court clearly shows that during the 10 years which Dular spent in jail before his death he was recognised as the owner of the property. There is therefore nothing in the point.

Then as regards the question of res judicata the finding of the Settlement Officer on the 28th June 1901 that Mohar had not the kinship to Dular which he alleged was clearly stated by the Settlement Officer himself to be unnecessary and to be outside the scope of the proceeding then before him, inasmuch as Mohar had no right to the estate of inheritance during the lifetime of the widow Dewli Manjhini. He brought a suit to restrain the widow from waste, and as far as the waste was concerned the suit was decreed in his favour. 21 bighas odd was restored to the estate and the alienations improperly made to the Defendants were cancelled. Now if the Settlement Officer's finding that the Plaintiffs had failed to prove their kinship to Dular had been given effect to no such order could have been passed in that suit, for the Plaintiffs would have been nonsuited and the suit dismissed on the ground that they had no locus standi. The Settlement Officer's finding appears to have been not only not res judicata but to have been erroneous, and the Court of first instance in this case clearly found that the Plaintiffs were the lawful heirs of Dular and the Defendants had not ventured to appeal against this finding. There is therefore nothing in the second ground.

As regards the third point we think that the learned District Judge has dealt with it in a very satisfactory manner. He has shown what the course of custom and the decision of the Courts has been in the Sonthal Pergannahs, and no instance to the contrary to what he has held has been produced before us. It is perfectly clear that the law governing up-country goalas

* The Rule is as follows :—

"The custom of inheritance in raiyati holdings of the Sonthal Perganahs may be stated thus : The person or persons who have been resident in the village and have taken their part in the management of the family jote are the only persons entitled to succeed to it as heirs on the death of the head of the family."

BASKI MAMRIK v. SUPHAL MANJHI.

who choose to settle in the Sonthal Pergannahs is their own Hindu law. We presume that the Regulations of the Sonthal Pergannahs have never been sought to be imposed upon the very numerous Bengalee gentlemen who have made their domicile within the Sonthal Pergannahs, and there is no reason why the rule which applies to the Kayasthas and Brahmins of Bengal should not equally apply to the goalas of the North Western Provinces. The rule was clearly made to meet the peculiar customs of the Sonthals and the aborigines in that portion of the country and can have nothing to do with persons who are governed by the Hindu law. Moreover exceptions have been made even in the case of the Sonthals themselves, and the rule has always been applied with extreme discretion and has clearly never been held to be applicable to every case. It is also clear from secs. 10 and 11 of the Sonthal Pergannahs Regulation that the rule is only applicable to suits before Settlement Officers.

We, therefore, think that the third point in this Appeal also fails and the Appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3413 OF 1910.

STEPHEN, J.
MULLICK, J.
1913,
Heard,
5, February.
Judgment,
20, February.

SHAIZUDDIN and anr., Defendants, Appellants,
v.
MATHURA MOHAN SAHA and others, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 195, cl. (e), 11, 12 and 17—Putni, sale of, registered under the Act, but not recorded in zemindar's sherista under the Putni Regulation (VIII of 1819), sec. 3—Zemindar if must recognise sale—Inconsistent provisions of statutes.

The Putni Regulation provides rules for the alienation of the whole or a part of a putni taluk and these cannot be affected by anything in the Bengal Tenancy Act in view of sec. 195, cl. (e) of the latter Act.

The registration of a sale of the whole or a part of a putni tenure under sec. 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not give the purchaser an interest in the land by force of secs. 12 and 17 of the Act.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 21st of November 1910 against a decree of Babu Hari Prosanno Mukerjee, Subordinate Judge of Tipperah, dated the 28th of May 1910, reversing a decree of Moulvie Abdul Rahim, Munsif of Comillah, dated the 24th of September 1909.

The appeal arose out of a suit for rent.

The Plaintiffs, claiming to be the purchasers of the putni in which the lands in arrears were situated, at a Court sale for its own arrears of rent, sued the Defendants who held those lands for arrears of rent due by them.

The Defendants denied the relationship of landlord and tenant between the Plaintiffs and themselves, on the allegation that the former had not acquired any title to the putni by the sale. They also contended that one of the co-sharer zemindars, Saha Banu, having been born before the decree was made in the zemindar's suit for rent though after the institution of that suit and not having been added as a Plaintiff therein, the sale did not pass the defaulting putni.

The lower Court held that the sale passed to the Plaintiffs no more than a 5 gundas share of the putni and that such 5 gundas share of the rent was not proved to have ever been separately collected and so dismissed the suit. The Plaintiffs appealed.

The putni was created in favour of one Shukur Mahmud, who appears to have sold it to one Durga Charan Roy and his six brothers some time in 1276, B. S. Durga Charan Roy and his brothers never took any steps to get themselves or any one of them registered in the sherista of the zemindars. Shukur Mahmud was dead.

On 10th Ashar 1306, Purna Chandra Roy, proprietor of a 1½ annas share of the putni, executed in favour of the zemindars a kabuliyat (Ext. 6) in respect of his 1½ annas share whereupon such share was separated from the original putni in the sense that he was recognised as putnidar to the extent of that share of which the rent also was apportioned. Thus the remaining 14½ annas share with its proportionate share of rent formed an entire tenure thenceforward.

Shukur Mahmud had ceased to have any share whatever in the putni ever since 1278. He also died 20 or 22 years ago. Durga Charan Roy also, in whose name the kobala of the purchase from Shukur Mahmud was suggested to have stood, had ceased to have any interest in the putni and had also died before the kabuliyat by Purna Chandra Roy was executed in 1306.

At the time the kabuliyat was executed by Purna Chandra Roy in 1306, the owners of the putni, as the evidence showed, were as follows :—Kali Kishore Ray, 5½ annas, Haladhar Chatterjee, 8 annas, Brojo Kishore Ray, 1 anna and Purna Chandra Roy, 13 annas.

Between 1306 and 1308, Kali Kishore Roy parted with 5¼ annas out of his 5½ annas to different persons from time to time and thenceforward the owners of the putni began to default in a most systematic manner to pay their rent, while no one beginning with Durga Charan Roy ever took any steps whatever for getting himself registered in the sherista of the landlords. The result was that the landlords had to bring four successive suits for rent of the putni. But these were brought against Dr. Rahim Buksh and Kali Kishore Ray only. Dr. Rahim Buksh was the eldest son of Shukur Mahmud and the best known amongst his heirs. Kali Kishore Roy was one of the seven brothers who purchased the putni from Shukur Mahmud and at the time in question was the eldest member of the family, and immediately before the first suit was brought for rent of the putni had been holding the largest extent of share of all the Roys. Decrees were obtained in all the four suits and it was in execution of the latest of these decrees that the Plaintiff purchased the putni.

Upon these facts, the Subordinate Judge held that the entire defaulting putni consisting of a 14½ as. share of the original putni passed to the Plaintiff at the sale.

With regard to the allegation that Saha Banu was not joined as a co-Plaintiff in the zemindar's suits for rent the Subordinate Judge found that she was not born until after the decree in the last rent suit.

He accordingly decreed the suit.

The Defendants preferred this Second Appeal.

Babu Tarak Chandra Chuckerbutty for the Appellants.

Mr. S. P. Sinha and Babu Sarat Chandra Basak for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a Second Appeal in three analogous rent suits, in which two points are raised before us. The first arises thus. One Shukur Mahmud was the owner of a putni which the Plaintiffs-Respondents purchased at an execution sale in execution of a decree for arrears of the rent thereof. He sold the putni to Durga Charan Roy who purchased on behalf of himself and his six brothers of whom one was Kali Kishore Roy who parted with all his in'erest in the putni except 5 gundas. Subsequently the rent of the putni fell into arrear and the landlords brought four suits in respect of it against Rahim Buksh, the son of Shukur Mahmud, who had no interes' in the putni, and Kali Kishore. They obtained decrees in execution of one of which a sale of the putni took place at which the Plain iff became the purchaser.

Neither Durga Charan Roy nor any of his brothers ever took any steps to have the alienation to them registered in the landlord's sherista: but the sales were registered under sec. 12 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the first Court the Plaintiff failed to recover from the Defendants though it was held that he was entitled to the five annas share of Kali Kishore. In the lower Appellate Court the suits were decreed in respect of the entire claim.

The first point raised before us, which was not raised in either of the Couris below, is that the registration of the transfer to Durga Charan and his brothers opera ed to give them an in'erest in the land affected by force of secs. 12 and 17 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. We consider that in view of sec. 195 (e) of the Bengal Tenancy Act this proposition is unsound.

The Reg. VIII of 1819 enacts (sec. 3) that putni taluks are valid, and transferable; in sec. 5 it prevents the zemindar from refusing to register and otherwise give effect to alienations, but it entitles him to exact a fee and demand security from the transferee, and by sec. 6 he may refuse to register a transfer until the fee is paid, and the security registered. This section concludes: "It is hereby provided that the rules of this and of the preceding section shall not be held to apply to transfers of any fractional part of a putni taluk, nor to any alienation other than of the entire in'erest: for no apportionment of the zemindar's reserved rent can be allowed to stand good unless made under his special sanction." In terms the proviso of sec. 6 applies only to the zemindar's right to exact a fee and demand security, as the zemindar's right to refuse to register or to give effect to an aliena'ion, seems to be taken away by sec. 3, but it is impossible to read the concluding words of the sec ion as doing less than forbidding alienation of a part of the putni without the zemindar's sanction, and the earlier part makes it impossible to force a zemindar to register or give effect to an aliena'ion of a part. The Regulation therefore provides rules for the alienation of the whole or a part of a putni taluk, and that cannot be affected by any hing in the Bengal Tenancy Act, by force of sec. 195 (e) The Appellants' argument therefore, which is that the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to the alienation of part of a putni taluk, because its operation is consistent with the provisions of Reg. VIII must fail, in so far as it is sought to show that alienation of a part of a putni is valid without registration with the zemindar.

The second point raised by the Appellauts is that Saha Banu, an infant zemindar, is improperly omitted from the list of Plain'iffs, because she was born before the decree in the suit. The findings of fact however only show that she was born before the sale money was withdrawn. This point therefore also fails.

The result is that this Appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 27—Transferee for value from lessor with constructive notice of agreement for renewal in favour of lessee—Constructive notice—Possession of tenant, notice of covenants—Specific performance.

Occupation of property by a tenant ordinarily affects one who would take a transfer of that property with notice of that tenant's rights and if he chooses to make no enquiry of the tenant he cannot claim to be transferee without notice.

Where on 11-7-06, during the currency of a jalkar lease for seven years executed by the owners in favour of the Defendants on 2-3-1901, the Plaintiffs took a settlement of the jalkar from the lessors for a term of seven years from 1-5-08 on payment of a sum of Rs. 600, and on the expiry of the Defendants' term sued them for recovery of possession of the jalkar.

Held—That an agreement for renewal of their lease upon certain conditions, made between the Defendants and their lessors on 1-5-01, was specifically enforceable by them against the Plaintiffs who claimed title under the lessors and were affected with notice of the agreement of 1-5-01.

That Plaintiffs could not consequently recover.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 23rd of May 1910 against the decree of F. Roe, Eq., District Judge of Zillah 24-Pergunnahs, dated the 11th of March 1910, modifying the decree of Babu Mohim Chandra Sarkar, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 22nd of June 1909.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

No. 1667.

JENKINS, C. J.—This Special Appeal arises out of a suit brought to recover possession of certain jalkar rights. This jalkar has been leased on the 2nd of March 1901 to the first Defendant for a period of seven years. On the 1st of May 1901, the lessors entered into an agreement with the lessees for renewal under certain conditions, on the determination of this term. On the 11th of July 1906, the lessors purported to settle the jalkar with the Plaintiffs for a term of seven years from the 1st of May 1908 and we are told that the Plaintiffs, in return of this, paid a sum of Rs. 600. The Plaintiffs now seek to recover possession of these jalkar rights on the ground that the lease of the 2nd of March 1901 in favour of Defendant No. 1 has come to an end. In the Court of the Subordinate Judge, a decree for possession was passed, but on appeal it was reversed and as against the tenant Defendant the suit was dismissed with costs. The Plaintiffs appeal from this decree.

The position then is this, the Plaintiffs, never having obtained possession, seek to eject the tenant Defendant on the ground that his lease has determined.

The answer made by the tenant Defendant is that though the lease of the 2nd of March 1901 may have come to an end, still he, the Defendant, is in possession of the land and he holds it under the agreement of the 1st of May 1901.

The first question therefore we have to consider is whether the agreement of 1901 is an agreement which can be specifically enforced. It is not suggested before us that it is incapable of enforcement against the lessors; all that can be argued is that the Plaintiffs are persons against whom it cannot be enforced. Sec. 27 of the Specific Relief Act provides that "except as otherwise provided by this chapter specific performance of a contract may be enforced against (a) either party thereto: (b) any other person claiming under him by a title arising subsequently to the contract, except a transferee for value who has paid his money in good faith and without notice of the original contract." The Plaintiffs come within the description of 'any other person claiming under a party by a title arising subsequently to the contract' of the 1st of May 1901, so that primâ facie the contract can be specifically enforced against the Plaintiffs. Do the Plaintiffs bring themselves within the exception, that is to say, have they shown that they are transferees for value who have paid their money in good faith and without notice of the original contract? It is shown that they are transferees for value who have paid money. But can it be said that they did it without notice of the original contract? In determining that we must have regard to the fact that the tenant Defendant was, and has throughout remained, in possession and occupation. But the occupation of property by a tenant ordinarily affects one who would take a transfer of that property with notice of that tenant's rights, and if he chooses to make no enquiry of the tenant, he cannot claim to be a transferee without notice. The Plaintiffs, therefore, are unable to predicate of themselves that they are persons who claim without notice of the contract of the 1st of May 1901. That contract therefore is capable of specific performance against the Plaintiffs and it furnishes a complete answer to their claim for possession.

The only question then is, whether it can fairly be said that the Plaintiffs have been taken by surprise. It is quite true that the contract of 1st May 1901 is not specifically mentioned in the written statement: but it is equally true that the tenant Defendant did plead the relationship of landlord and tenant, and this was referable to that contract. Further than that, we have the fact that this particular agreement was filed prior to the trial, and I cannot read the judgment of the Munsif without feeling that the issue, though in very general terms, was settled in reference to the preceding statement in his judgment where there is an obvious allusion to this contract on which the tenant Defendant now relies.

BABURAM BAG v. MOHADEB CHANDRA PALLAY.

Therefore we cannot give effect to the suggestion that the Plaintiffs were taken by surprise. I accordingly think that the decree of the District Judge should be confirmed and this Appeal dismissed with costs, one set, payable to the tenant Defendant.

We dismiss this Appeal with costs, two sets.

RULE No. 239 OF 1913.

JENKINS, C. J.
RAY, J.
1913,
18, April.

HARI CHARAN GHOSH, Petitioner,
v.
MONMATHA NATH SEN and others, Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 141, Or. 21, rr. 100, 101, Or. 9, r. 13—Execution case, procedure in—Effect of sec. 141—Order allowing claim case ex parte—Jurisdiction to set aside such order, for sufficient cause.

Where the Petitioner put in a claim under r. 100 of Or. 21, C. P. C, and, the decree-holder not appearing, obtained an order in his favour under r. 101 and the Court subsequently on the application of the Opposite Party set aside this order acting under Or. 9, r. 13, C. P. C.:

Held—That Or. 9, r. 13 is not applicable to a proceeding under rr. 100, 101, Or. 21, C. P. C., and the Court had not the jurisdiction which it purported to exercise.

Sec. 141, C. P. C., does not make applicable to proceedings in execution all the procedure provided by the Code in regard to civil suits.

This was a Rule granted on the 3rd of March 1913 against the judgment of Babu Khagendra Nath Dutta, Munsif of Barasat, dated the 8th of February 1913.

The Opposite Party obtained two separate decrees for arrears of rent against one Tustu Charan Ghosh in respect of two jamas which they alleged were held under them by the said Tustu. According to the Petitioner's case the said Tustu Charan held only one jama of 6½ bighas of land under the Opposite Party and the Petitioner purchased the said defaulting jama at the sale held in execution of the decree for the arrears of rent due in respect of that jama and obtained possession thereof through the Courts. Subsequently the Opposite Party executed the other decree for the arrears due in respect of the other holding said to belong to the said Tustu Charan and purchased the alleged holding at the sale held in execution of that decree. The Petitioner's case was that the Opposite Party illegally dispossessed the Petitioner from the major portion of the lands purchased by him at the first sale on the allegation that those lands constituted the alleged second holding which they had purchased in the second sale. The Petitioner thereupon applied to the second Court of the Munsif of Barasat complaining of such dispossession under Or. 21, r. 100, C. P. C. Thereupon an objection case was started by the Munsif under Or. 21, r. 100, C. P. C., and this case coming on for hearing the Petitioner adduced evidence in support of his case and the Munsif by his order, dated the 23rd November 1912, allowed the Petitioner's claim. It appears from the order-sheet in the above case that on the day fixed for the hearing the Opposite Party were absent and their pleader stated that he had no instructions but the Munsif holding that the Petitioner had proved his case allowed his claim and in the decree prepared by the Court it was stated that the claim case was disposed of in the presence of the pleaders of both parties. On the 14th December 1912, the Opposite Party made an application to the Court below under Or. 9, r. 13, C. P. C., for setting aside the order of the 23rd November 1912 on the ground that the said order was passed ex parte and that they could not be present on the 23rd November 1912, as they were told by their pleader that that case would come on for hearing on the 30th November 1912. On the 8th February the Munsif allowed the said application of the Opposite Party under Or. 9, r. 13, C. P. C., and restored the claim case.

Against this order the Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained the present Rule.

Babu Mohini Mohan Chatterjee for the Petitioner submitted that the decision in Safdar Ali v. Kishun Lal (3) was an authority against him, but in that case the history of sec. 141 was overlooked. Relied on Asim Mundal v. Raj Mohan Das (2) and referred to Thakur Prasad v. Fakirullah (1).

Babus Shiva Prosanna Bhattacharjee, Probodh Chunder Bose and Mona Mohan Bose for the Opposite Party submitted that Safdar Ali v. Kishun Lal (3) was correctly decided upon the terms of sec. 141. The omission of the explanation to sec. 647 of the old Code points to this as the natural interpretation.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS C. J.—This is a Rule obtained at the instance of a claimant under Or. XXI, r. 100, C. P. C., calling upon the Opposite Party, the decree-holder, to show cause why the order of the Munsif should not be set aside on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction.

The claimant applied under r. 100, and the decree-holder not appearing, he obtained an order in his favour under r. 101. R. 103 provides that "Any party not being a judgment-debtor against whom an order is made under r. 98, r. 99 or r. 101 may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property; but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive." The claimant therefore maintains that the order in his favour, though made in the absence of the decree-holder, is conclusive: and his complaint is that notwithstanding the terms of r. 103, the Munsif has set aside the order made under r. 101. The Munsif appears to have acted under Or. IX, r. 13. That rule, as it is expressed, clearly does not apply to a proceeding in execution; but an attempt has been made before us to uphold the Munsif's order on the terms of sec. 141 of the Code which provides that "The procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of Civil Jurisdiction." This section reproduces with modification sec. 647 of the previous Code. But in sec. 647 there was an explanation in these terms; "This section does not apply to applications for the execution of decrees, which are proceedings in suits." That explanation has been omitted, and it has been argued before us that this omission is an indication that the Legislature in passing the present Code intended that sec. 141 should have a wider operation than sec. 647. There is a certain amount

NOTES.

Lord Chief Justice's title.

Sir Rufus Isaacs, the Lord Chief Justice of England, has taken the title of Lord Reading of Early on being raised to the peerage. He was member for Reading in the House of Commons in the Liberal interest for a long time before his elevation to the Bench.

Purdanashin Lady, execution of deed by—Independent advice.

The rule of law which places on the party relying on a deed executed by a purdanashin lady, the burden of proving affirmatively that the terms of the document were duly explained to, and were really understood by her, although not of statutory origin, yet having been so held by a long course of judicial decisions and repeatedly affirmed by the Privy Council, is regarded of no less binding force than any statutory rule of law. It is, therefore, of the greatest importance that the limits of the rule should be well understood. Kali Buksh Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh, reported at p. 282 of the current volume of our reports, the latest of Privy Council decisions on the point, will go a great way towards defining these limits.

The rule in fact raises a general presumption against intelligent execution by purdanashin ladies who, it is said, are from the manner of their life specially exposed to undue influence, somewhat in the same way as dealings with "expectant heirs" have been presumed by Courts of Equity in England to be tainted with fraud until the contrary is proved by the person seeking to found upon such dealings. To rebut this presumption, the party relying on the deed has to prove intelligent execution by the lady and her mental capacity. The facts of the deed having been explained to her, and of her having had independent advice, are obviously matters which are relevant to such an enquiry. What weight is to be attached to each or all of these matters would necessarily depend upon the circumstances of each case. But to lay down once for all that the lady must in every case be shown to have possessed marked business capacity or that proof must be given of minute and detailed explanation of the terms of the deed and of its possible consequences to her, or that she must have independent advice from outside, would obviously be going further than the purpose of the rule, viz., proof of intelligent execution, would require. A purdanashin lady, like any other free person, must be allowed the liberty to make whatever disposition of her properties she pleases and it would, we think, be wrong (in the absence of special circumstances) to expect that the party claiming under the deed should prove that he took adequate measures to explain to her all the possible consequences of the disposition to her and to others interested in her.

So also with regard to the supposed requirement of independent advice. In English law persons in authority or holding confidential employments such as that of a spiritual, medical or legal adviser, are called on to act with good faith and more than good faith in the matter of accepting any benefit (beyond ordinary professional remuneration for professional work done) from those who are under their authority or guidance. Sir Frederick Pollock in summing up the law as above (See Indian Contract Act, p. 77) adds: "In fact their honourable and prudent course is to insist on the other party taking independent advice." It was held in Libs v. Terry, [1895], 2 Q. B. 679 C. A., to be an essential condition to the validity of a gift by a client to his solicitor that the client should have had independent advice. The tendency in India has been to insist upon the purdanashin lady having had independent advice as essential to the validity of her deed. Lord Shaw lays down in the clearest possible terms that this view of the law is erroneous. So to hold, his Lordship said, would be to convert what is intended to be legal protection into legal disability. Proof of independent advice, his Lordship is careful to indicate, may still be demanded in the special circumstances of a particular case. The same view is expressed by their Lordships the Chief Justice and Woodroffe, J., in a recent Calcutta case (Keshub Lall Pyne v. Radha Raman Nundy, 17 C. W. N. 991) where his Lordship Jenkins, C. J., observed: "It cannot be accepted as a formula conclusive of every case that the absence of advice vitiates the transaction. Advice is not in itself essential; it is merely a means to secure that which is essential, an intelligent apprehension of the transaction."

The lady in the Privy Council case was found to have been a woman of strong will and business capacity, and the gift also did not appear to be unnatural. Under the circumstances any failure to prove independent advice was not considered as of sufficient importance to overweigh other proofs of intelligent execution by the lady.

The requirement that the deed should be read over and explained to the lady, appears, on the face of Lord Shaw's judgment, to be, however, one of the essentials to the validity of the deed. But all purdanashin ladies are not illiterate, and many of them are, as the lady in this case was, good business women. The findings of the Courts in India on this point in the case were conflicting. The Subordinate Judge found that the explanation was thorough, the Judicial Commissioner, that it was perfunctory. "Upon this matter," his Lordship said, "much depends upon whether the grantor of the deed was a person accustomed to business or to the management of affairs. It is upon this point that their Lordships find themselves in agreement with the Subordinate Judge." From this observation it is open to us to infer that explanation of the deed to the lady need not be, any more than taking independent advice, an absolutely indispensable condition of the validity of the deed.

In noticing this case we should not omit to refer to another observation in the judgment though it is made somewhat casually. His Lordship remarks on the importance of distinguishing "independent outside advice" from "independent outside control"—a distinction not infrequently overlooked. The protection which the Courts have thought fit to throw around a purdanashin lady has from time to time been criticised as being too wide and indiscriminate in its operation. But if the limits indicated in Lord Shaw's judgment are kept in view, the rule will not only not lead to failure of justice, but will have a beneficent operation on the community on the whole, until substantial progress should have been made towards the education and emancipation of purda women.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CRIMINAL.)

Indian Penal Code, secs, 90, 366—Kidnapping—Consent.

Re N. JALADU, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 453.

If a minor is taken with the consent of the guardian and subsequently married improperly without the consent of the guardian to any person, such improper marriage would not by itself amount to kidnapping.

A consent obtained by fraud would not be sufficient to justify the taking of a minor.

The expression "under misconception of fact" in sec. 90 is broad enough to include all cases where the consent is obtained by misrepresentation.

Indian Penal Code—Defamation—Duty of prosecution—Cr. P. C., sec. 428—Additional evidence.

JEREMIAH v. VAS, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 457.

In a case of defamation it is incumbent on the prosecution affirmatively to prove that the Defendant published the libel complained of. An admission by the accused made in answer to questions put by the Court under sec. 342, Cr. P. C., cannot be utilised by the prosecution to fill up a gap in its own evidence.

There are no pleadings in a criminal case similar to those in civil proceedings which are conclusive against the party making them. The prosecution has to prove all the facts necessary to constitute the offence charged against the accused.

The lower Court having refused to take evidence of publication offered by the prosecution, the High Court ordered additional evidence to be taken.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 349—Case submitted to superior Magistrate, proper order in.

Re N. PONNUSAMY NADAN, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 470.

A Magistrate to whom a case is referred under sec. 349, Cr. P. C., is bound to dispose of the case himself and has no power to send the case back to the subordinate Magistrate for disposal.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 195—Conditional sanction if legal.

Re P. MUNEYYA, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 471.

No sanction can be granted of a provisional character in case certain conditions are satisfied in the future. It is the duty of the Court before granting sanction to satisfy himself that there is at the time of the order a prima facie case against the accused.

Indian Penal Code, sec 379—Theft of fish from tank.

Re SUBBIAN SERVI, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 472

The capture of fish in an ordinary irrigation tank does not amount to theft but when the water in a tank is so low that the fish cannot escape such fish can be the subject of theft.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 107—Detention in custody.

Re NARAYANASAMI NAICKEU, I. L. R. 36 Mad. 474.

The general provision in sec. 496 must be taken to be subject to the special provision in cl. (4), sec. 107 and a Magistrate before whom a person is sent under sec. 107 may in his discretion detain such person in custody until the completion of the enquiry.

Where a plaint returned for presentation to the proper Court on the ground of absence of jurisdiction in the Court to which it was originally presented is again presented to the proper Court the suit cannot be regarded as a continuation of the infructuous suit in the wrong Court.

Sec. 14 of Act, XV of 1877, proceeded on the basis that where a plaint was returned under sec. 20 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 and presented again to another Court the suit must be regarded as a new one.

Hindu Law—Woman's estate.

LORD ATKINSON.
LORD SHAW.
LORD MOULTON.
1913,

MARY JONES
v.
THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Fatal Accidents Act—Fellow servant charged by employer with work for which he is unfitted—Employment contrary to statutory direction—Liability for injury caused.

The action was brought by the Plaintiff, as administratrix of the estate of Gilbert Jones, deceased, for damages under the Ontario Statute (R S.O. 1897 Ch. 166) corresponding to the Fatal Accidents Act in England, in respect of the death of the said Gilbert Jones, who was on the 14th February 1911 killed in a collision between a snow-plough (which is used to clear the line of snow) belonging to the Defendants and a train belonging to the Defendants which was standing in a siding at the said junction.

The statement of claim based the Plaintiff's right to recover on the violation by the Company of a statutory duty imposed upon them, namely, by putting in charge of this plough one Henry Weymark, who was merely a section foreman, and who had not passed the examination or submitted to the test required by the Orders of the Board of the Railway Commissioners of Canada.

LORD ATKINSON in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee observed :—

The Defendant Company in the present case did not rely upon any contributory negligence on Jones's part. And it does not appear to their Lordships that they could, even apart from the above-mentioned provision of the Railway Act, have relied upon the fact that Weymark and Jones were fellow servants, since Weymark was placed in the position he held in breach of the employer's clear statutory duty, and the breach of such a duty by an employer is not one of the risks which a servant can be assumed to undertake to run when he enters that employer's service. Lord Watson in Johnson v. Lindsay, 1891, A. C. 371, at p. 382, states the general common law principle thus :—

> "The immunity extended to a master in the case of injuries caused to each other by his servants whilst they are working for him to a common end is an exception from the general rule, and rests upon an implied undertaking by the servent to bear the risks arising from the possible negligence of a fellow servant who has been selected with due care by his master.

It is difficult to see on what principle a servant can be said to be selected with due care by his master when the master, in defiance of a positive statutory prohibition, selects for a particular work a servant whose fitness for that work has never been ascertained in the manner prescribed.

Moreover, there is an entire absence in this case of all evidence to show that Weymark was in fact fitted to discharge the duties he was put to discharge, or was ever considered so to be by any responsible official of the Company. It is not at all the case of a servant of proved and known efficiency for a particular work being selected to do that work without having passed a test which his employers knew, or bonâ fide and reasonably believed, he could pass. Not at all. The Defendant Company abstained from giving any evidence to that effect. They took that course no doubt for good reason, but they must bear the consequence.

The principle upon which the cases of Groves v. Wimborne (1898) 2 2.B. 402, David v. Britannic Merthyr Coal Company (1909) 2 K.B 146, and Butlar v. The Fife Coal Company, Ltd., 1912 A.C. 149, were decided, applies, in their Lordships' view, to the present case. In the first-mentioned of these cases it was held that the doctrine of common employment does not apply where a statutory duty is violated by the employers. In the second, the Master of the Rolls, at page 152, says :—

"But, on the other hand, a master is liable to his servant for the consequences of an accident caused to that servant by the breach of a statutory duty imposed directly and absolutely upon the master, and the master cannot shelter himself behind another servant to whom he has delegated the performance of the duty. In such a case the negligence is the master's negligence, and the doctrine of common employment has no application."

And at page 157, Moulton, L. J., as he then was, says :—

"The risk of an employer failing to perform a statutory duty incumbent upon him seems to me to be clearly not a risk that can be considered one of those which the workman must be assumed to have accepted. On the contrary, he in his position as a member of the public has a right to assume that his employer will fulfil the duties which the statutes impose upon him. But we are not left to decide this question only as a matter of principle. There is clear authority to the same effect. In the case of Groves v. Lord Wimborne this Court decided that the defence of common employment is not applicable in a case where injury has been caused to a servant by the breach of a duty imposed on the master.

And in the last case of the three, Lords Kinnear and Shaw, at pp. 160, 162 and 174 of the reports, expressly approve of the decision in the last-mentioned case, and Lord Loreburn apparently concurred with them. Indeed it appears to their Lordships that the abovementioned decisions on this point are but applications of the principle laid down in 1856 by the then Lord Chancellor and approved of by the other noble lords in the House of Lords in the case of the Bartonshill Coal Company v. Reid, 3 Macqueen, 266, at p. 276, in these words :—

"With reference to the law of England, I think it has been completely settled that in respect of injuries occasioned to one of several workmen engaged in a common work (and I know of no distinction whether the work be dangerous or not dangerous) the master is not responsible if he has taken proper precautions to have proper machinery and proper servants employed."

Applying the principle of these authorities, (Ayles v. South Eastern Railway Coy., L. R. 3 Ex. 146 ; William v. The Great Western Railway Coy. L. R. 9 Ex. 157 ; McArthur v. Dominion Cartridge Coy., A. C. (1905) 72 ; Richard Evans Coy. v. Astley (1911) A. C. (674), which could be multiplied, to the present case) their Lordships think that the reasonable conclusion to draw from the evidence is that the flagrant failure of Weymark to discharge his duty on this occasion was most probably due to his want of skill, knowledge, or experience, or to some physical incapacity or defect which the examination or test prescribed for him would have revealed. If so, this failure was but a natural consequence of the act of the Company in setting him, such as he was, to do the work actually set him to do; and that their action in that respect was either the sole effective cause of the accident or a cause materially contributing to it.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before TEUNON, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3337 OF 1912. MOHENDRA NARAIN BASU, Plaintiff, Appellant v. LALIT KUMAR MUKERJEE AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents. 19th January 1914.

Bengal Tenancy Act, secs. 159, 161, 164, 167—Sale subject to registered and notified incumbrances, if sale under the Civil Procedure Code or Bengal Tenancy Act.

This appeal arose out of a suit by a purchaser at a sale of a tenure in execution of a decree for 16 as. rent obtained by the landlord to recover possession of lands held by the Defendants as a Osat or Nimhowla after alleged service of notice under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The amount of the decree for rent was Rs. 291. The sale was held on the first day fixed without the fresh proclamation provided for by the second part of sub-sec. (1) to sec. 165 of the Act and the tenure was purchased for a sum of Rs. 26 only. The District Judge held that in these circumstances that Plaintiff acquired only the rights of a purchaser under the Civil Procedure Code and without power to avoid any of the incumbrances upon the tenure sold.

Held—That the District Judge had overlooked the provisions of secs. 159 and 161 and sec. 164, sub-sec. (2) of the Act under which the purchaser was authorised to annul any incumbrance other than a registered or notified incumbrance.

of force in this argument, but it overlooks the history of this section and the case law. At one time there was a considerable divergence of opinion between various Courts as to whether sec. 647 applied to execution proceedings: and, it was in consequence of this that by Act VI of 1892 this explanation was introduced into the section of the Code of 1882. But after this alteration in the law, the Privy Council in the case of Thakur Prasad v. Fakirullah (1), decided on sec. 647 as it stood before the explanation was added, that the section did not apply to execution proceedings. The purpose of the Legislature in omitting that explanation was to do away with that which was shown to be unnecessary by the Privy Council decision and to rely upon the terms of the section as interpreted by the Privy Council. So it was that the explanation came to be omitted. This may have been an unfortunate way of proceeding, because it involves some knowledge of the history of sec. 647 and of the decision on that section to appreciate the effect of this change; but this is how the matter was dealt with by the Legislature. The result is that sec. 141 does not make applicable to proceedings in execution all the procedure provided by the Code, and I think for very good reason; as is indicated by Mr. Justice Mookejee in a decision which has been brought to our notice [Asim Mundal v. Raj Mohan Das (2)], to hold otherwise would lead to complications and to results which never could have been contemplated. It is not as though there was any necessity in the interest of justice that the provision of r. 13, Or. IX, should be applicable to proceedings in execution, because, the order is not conclusive, but is subject to the right of the person aggrieved to bring a suit. I therefore hold that Or. IX, r. 3 is not applicable to a proceeding under rr. 100 and 101 of Or. XXI, and that the learned Munsif had not the jurisdiction which he purported to exercise.

MR. AMEER ALI.

Judgment, 1, December.

BARHAMDEO PRASAD, (now represented by RAM SUMIRAN PRASAD) & anr., Appellants,
v.
TARA CHAND and ors., Respondents.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 120, 132—Mortgages, successive—Surplus sale proceeds left after discharge of decree on first mortgage—Suit to enforce second mortgage against third mortgagee who has withdrawn same—Withdrawal with notice of second mortgage, if creates implied trust—Limitation—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 295.

Where immoveable property subject to three mortgages, of which the first and third were in favour of the Appellants and the intermediate mortgage in favour of the Respondents was sold in a suit on the first mortgage in which the intermediate mortgagees were made parties, and the surplus left after discharge of the decree was subsequently withdrawn by the Appellants in enforcement of a decree obtained by them in a suit on the third mortgage in which the Appellants did not make the intermediate mortgagees parties :

Held, in a suit by the intermediate mortgagees on their mortgage in which they sought a decree against the Appellants for the amount with interest of the surplus sale proceeds withdrawn by the Appellants, that the surplus sale proceeds represented the security which the Respondents had under their mortgage and did not cease to represent that security owing to the Appellants having wrongfully and in fraud of the Respondents withdrawn them from Court, and the suit was governed by Art. 132 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act of 1877.

That section 295 of the Civil Procedure Code did not apply to the facts of the case.

Held, per HENDERSON, J., in the High Court, and not dissented from by the Judicial Committee—That the Appellants having obtained possession of the surplus proceeds which had been deposited in Court with the knowledge that they were subject to the claim of the Respondents in priority to their own claim, the proceeds in their hands were saddled with a charge in favour of the Respondents to the amount of their charge.

This was an Appeal from a Judgment of the Calcutta High Court (Sale, Henderson and Geidt, JJ.), reported in I. L. R. 33 Cal. 92: s. c. 9 C. W. N. 989. The facts of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment. Henderson, J., held that Art. 132 and not Art. 120 of Act XV of 1877 applied and Sale, J., to whom the case was referred owing to Geidt, J., dissenting, agreed with that view. In the course of his judgment Henderson, J., said:—

"But the Plaintiffs' suit is really a suit brought to enforce his mortgage against all the properties, the subject of that mortgage. Among these properties was Mouzah Chak. It is true that that mouzah has been sold, and that after the sale all that remained of it, to which the Plaintiffs' lien could attach, was the surplus sale proceeds. The contention, as I understood it, was not that the lien did not attach to the surplus proceeds, but that the Plaintiffs' lien had been extinguished in consequence of the Plaintiffs' neglect to take step in time to obtain payment of the amount. In my opinion it cannot be argued with any show of reason that the Plaintiffs' lien did not attach to these surplus sale-proceeds. In the Court of the Subordinate Judge where they were in deposit they continued to be portion of the security to which Plaintiffs were entitled to look for satisfaction of their mortgage. It so happened that the entire Mouzah Chak was sold and that it realized more than was sufficient to discharge the first incumbrance, but suppose that a portion only of the mouzah sufficient to discharge that incumbrance had been sold, there can be no question that the Plaintiffs' lien would still have continued to attach to the remainder, and that the Plaintiffs would have been entitled to enforce their lien against that, and against the other properties covered by their mortgage. I am unable to see any real difference between the two cases. Art. 120 of the Limitation Act applies to suits for which no period of limitation is elsewhere in Schedule II provided. If it applies in the present case, then the suit, not having been brought within 6 years from the time when the right as against the Appellants accrued, that is, from the date of the withdrawal of the money, would no doubt be barred. But in my opinion, Art. 120 does not apply, but Art.

BARHAMDEO PRASAD v. TARA CHAND.

132 does. The suit was to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property. It was a suit upon a mortgage to enforce payment of the money to secure which the mortgage was granted. That money was by the mortgage deed charged upon immoveable property. The suit therefore comes within the precise terms of Art. 132, and the Plaintiffs therefore had 12 years to bring it from the date on which the money became due, that is, in the month of Kartick 1296, and the last day in Kartick in that year corresponds with the 18th November 1888. The suit having been instituted on the 17th November 1900 was therefore not barred. In this view I am to some extent supported by Jogeshur Bhagat v. Ghanasham Das (1) and Kamala Kant Sen v. Abdul Bakrul (2), and Padmanabh v. Khemu (3).

The Plaintiffs' money was undoubtedly charged on a number of immoveable properties, and the fact that one of those properties should subsequently have been converted into money, can in my opinion make no difference to the character of the suit. This suit was not a suit brought under the penultimate clause of sec. 295 of the Civil Procedure Code."

Mr. G. E. A. Ross, K. C., and Mr. J. M. Parikh submitted that the suit was barred under Art. 120 of the Limitation Act. It was a suit for money and not to enforce a lien charged upon immoveable property. Reference was made to Ramdin v. Kalka Pershad (4). Further, the suit came within sec. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and was barred by time.

Mr. E. U. Eddis, Counsel for the Respondents, was not heard.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This Appeal has arisen in a suit which was brought by the Plaintiffs on the 17th November 1900, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, to enforce payment of principal moneys and interest which were charged upon immoveable property by a deed, dated the 19th September 1887, by which one Kalu Babu mortgaged to the Plaintiffs Mouzah Chak and other properties. The mortgage money was repayable on the 18th November 1888. By the suit, so far as it concerned the Defendants Barhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad, the Plaintiffs sought a decree against them for Rs. 12,197-8-3, together with interest, on the ground that they were in possession of a sum of Rs. 12,197-8-3, which had been deposited in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr, and was the balance remaining over of the purchase money of Mouzah Chak, after satisfying a decree for sale of that Mouzah of the 8th October 1890, such possession having been obtained by them wrongfully with full knowledge that it was affected with a charge to the Plaintiffs under a mortgage of Mouzah Chak. Barhamdeo Prasad, now dead, is represented in this Appeal by his brother, Ram Sumran Prasad. The only question in this Appeal is whether the suit so far as it related to Barhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad was a suit to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property within the meaning of Art. 132 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, or was a suit to which Art. 120 of that Schedule applied.

The facts, briefly stated, are as follows: On the 21st May 1887, Kalu Babu mortgaged Mouzah Chak and other properties to Barhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad. On the 19th September 1887, Kalu Babu mortgaged Mouzah Chak and other properties to the Plaintiffs, and on the 19th July 1889, Kalu Babu further mortgaged Mouzah Chak to Barhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad. On the 8th October 1890, Barhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad obtained a decree for sale on their mortgage of the 21st May 1887. To the suit in which that decree was obtained the Plaintiffs in this suit were made parties, but they did not appear. In execution of the decree of the 8th October 1890, Mouzah Chak was sold. After satisfying that decree a balance amounting to Rs. 12,197-8-3 of the moneys which were realised by the sale of Mouzah Chak, remained, and that balance was deposited in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Monghyr. On the 14th January 1891, Barhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad obtained a decree for sale on their mortgage of the 19th July 1889, and in execution of that decree they, on the 22nd April 1892, drew out of Court the balance of Rs. 12,197-8-3, which had been deposited in Court. Barhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad were well aware of the existence of the Plaintiffs' mortgage and that it had priority to the charge they were seeking to enforce, but they did not make the Plaintiffs parties to the suit, nor did they give them notice that under the decree of the 14th January 1891 they were drawing out of Court the balance of Rs. 12,197-8-3.

On behalf of Barhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad it was contended in the Court of the Subordinate Judge that this suit, so far as it related to the claim of the Plaintiffs against them in respect of the Rs. 12,197-8-3, surplus moneys of the sale of Mouzah Chak, was barred by limitation; their contention on the point of limitation was that Art. 120, and not Art. 132, of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, applied to that claim. They also raised various other contentions in the Court of the Subordinate Judge to which it is not now necessary to refer. The Subordinate Judge held that the surplus sale proceeds of Mouzah Chak were part of the mortgage security to which the Plaintiffs were entitled under their mortgage, and gave the Plaintiffs a decree. From that decree of the Subordinate Judge, Barhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad appealed to the High Court at Calcutta. In that appeal two learned Judges, Sale and Henderson, JJ., held that the surplus sale proceeds of Mouzah Chak were portion of the security to which the Plaintiffs were entitled to look for satisfaction of their mortgage, and that they were entitled to follow that mortgage security in the hands of Barhamdeo Prasad and Sumran Prasad. Mr. Justice Henderson also suggested that Barhamdeo Prasad and Sumran Prasad, having obtained possession of the surplus proceeds which had been deposited in Court with the knowledge that they were subject to the claim of the Plaintiffs in priority to their own claim, and that they had abstained from giving notice of that suit to the Plaintiffs, might be taken to hold the surplus proceeds under an implied trust for the Plaintiffs. The High Court, holding that the suit was a suit to enforce a claim for money charged upon immoveable property and had been brought within time, dismissed the Appeal. From that decree of the High Court this Appeal has been brought.

Before this Board it was contended on behalf of the Appellants that this suit, so far as it related to the Appellants, was not a suit to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property, and that it was a suit to which Art. 120 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, applied, and consequently that the suit was not brought within time. It was also contended by one of the Counsel of the Appellants that as the Rs. 12,197-8-3, surplus assets, had been received by Barhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad, who were not entitled to receive such surplus assets, the case came within sec. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, and the remedy of the Plaintiffs by a suit under that section was barred by time. As to the last-mentioned contention, it is sufficient to say that the facts of this case show that sec. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, does not apply.

BARHAMDEO PRASAD v. TARA CHAND.

If Mouzah Chak had not been sold under the decree for sale of the 8th October 1890 it could not be suggested that the Plaintiffs could not by suit, subject to the rights of the prior mortgagees, have enforced payment of the money charged upon that Mouzah by their mortgage of the 19th September 1887. Mouzah Chak was sold under the decree for sale of the 8th October 1890, which Barhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad had obtained on their prior mortgage, and the surplus moneys of that sale represented the security which the Plaintiffs had under their mortgage of the 19th September 1887, and did not cease to represent that security owing to the fact that Barhamdeo Prasad and Ram Sumran Prasad had wrongfully and in fraud of the Plaintiffs drawn them out of the Court in which they had been deposited. Their Lordships do not think that it is necessary to decide the point referred to in the judgment of Mr. Justice Henderson, viz., that under the circumstances of this case the money in the hands of the Appellants was saddled with a charge in favour of the Plaintiffs to the amount of their charge, but they do not wish to be understood to express dissent from that view. For the decision of this case, it suffices to say that in their Lordships' opinion this is a suit to enforce payment of money charged upon immoveable property within the meaning of Art. 132 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, and having been brought within twelve years from the time when the money sued for became due is within time. The Appeal fails.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this Appeal should be dismissed. The Appellants must pay the costs of the Appeal.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL

No. 45 OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J. MOOKERJEE, J. 1913. 26, May.	BANKO BEHARY DAS and anr., Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. KRISHNA CHANDRA BHOWMICK and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 160 (c), 167—"Protected interest"—"Plantation," meaning of—*Boroj or betel plantation if "protected interest—" Date of sale," meaning of."

The word "plantation" is one of wide significance and would include an assemblage of growing plants of any kind that have been planted.

BANKO BEHARY DAS v. KRISHNA CHANDRA BHOWMICK.

As to whether or not a particular assemblage of plants comes within the policy of sec. 160, cl. (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act must be largely, if not exclusively, a question of fact.

The lower Appellate Court having held a "boroj" or betel plantation to be a plantation within the meaning of the section :

Held—That it could not be said on the materials on the record that that Court's determination of the question was erroneous.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 16th of March 1911 against the decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Nalini Ranjan Chatterjea, dated the 13th of February 1911, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 537 of 1909.

The Plaintiffs having on 26th April 1905 purchased what they claimed to be an occupancy holding at a rent sale, more than one year after the date of sale but within one year of the confirmation thereof, presented an application to the Collector for service of notices under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the Defendants for annulment of a holding claimed by the latter to be their kaimi mourasi tenancy. The Plaintiffs instituted the present suit for recovery of two plots of land said to have been included in this holding.

The Defendants contested the suit inter alia on the grounds (1) that the application to the Collector for service of notices of annulment was not made in time and that the holding alleged to have been purchased by the Plaintiffs was a tenure and that they (the Defendants) had been holding the lands in suit as occupancy raiyats for upwards of 12 years by erecting a betel plantation thereon.

The Munsif found the Plaintiffs to have purchased a tenure, so that the Defendants were occupancy raiyats not liable to ejectment. The Defendants, he further held, were in any event protected by cl. (c) of sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the betel plantation erected by them being a "plantation" within the meaning of the section.

On appeal, the Subordinate Judge held that the Plaintiffs' interest was that of occupancy raiyats but he agreed with the Munsif in holding that the Defendants owned a "plantation" which was a "protected interest" within the meaning of the section. In the course of his judgment he observed :

"The Defendant No. 1 and a number of witnesses, examined by the Defendants, prove that there has been a boroj or betel-plantation on the land of the Defendants for considerably over 12 years. The Plaintiff No. 1 ignores the fact, but Janu Sirdar, witness No. 8 on the Plaintiff's side, speaks to it. It is a fact of common observation that, whenever (wherever?) there is a boroj, there is a khad or excavation near it, for the site of such plantations has to be raised in order to make them fit for the purpose, and if the evidence of Plaintiffs' witnessess Nos. 9 and 10 be examined, it seems beyond doubt that the khad near the disputed land was excavated by the Defendants years ago for taking earth for the purpose of the boroj. I believe upon the evidence on the two sides, that the boroj has existed over 12 years and that the Defendants erected it. I have no doubt, that the dakhilas adduced by the Defendants, or at least two of them, are unquestionably false, and that the amalnama, which the lower Court wrongly admitted to evidence, is a worthless document, but there is no reason to come to the conclusion that the Defendants erected the boroj since the taking of symbolical possession by the Plaintiffs. Nor am I prepared to believe that the Plaintiffs did not know of the existence of the boroj and the right of the Defendants to the lands, till Kartick 1312, B. S. I hold, on the evidence, that the Defendants are tenants of the lands and have held possession of them for the purpose of their boroj for upwards of 12 years and that, under cl. (c), sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, their interest is a protected interest. Assuming, however, that they are trespassers, I must say, that the notice served on them was not valid and that the incumbrance has not been legally annulled. The Plaintiffs presented their application for service of notice before the Collector after one year from the date of sale, and I strongly believe from the evidence and the circumstances of the case, that they knew of the incumbrance before the date of sale. The learned Pleader for the Appellants has argued that the date of sale should be taken to mean the date of confirmation of sale ; but I am unable to accept this contention as sound. For the foregoing reason, I am of opinion, that the appeal must fail and it is, accordingly dismissed with costs."

The Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court. The Appeal was dismissed by N. R. Chatterjea, J., sitting alone. His Lordship's judgment was as follows :—

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—Two questions have been raised in this appeal. The first is whether a lease of land on which a boroj or betel-leaf plantation has been made is a protected interest within the meaning of sec. 160, cl. (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the second, whether the words 'date of sale' in sec. 167 of the Act mean the date on which the sale is held or the date on which the sale is confirmed.

With regard to the first question it is urged that the word 'plantations' is governed by the word 'permanent' in sec. 160, cl. (c), and that betel-leaf cultivation cannot be called a plantation which implies permanency in the plant and that betel-leaf does not stand on a different footing from other vegetables.

I do not think that the word 'permanent' governs the word 'plantations' in the section. If it applies to 'plantations,' it would equally apply to the words which follow, viz., "tanks, canals, places of worship or burning or burying grounds." But it seems that the word 'permanent' is not used with reference to them because they in themselves imply some sort of permanency.

Nor do I think that the word 'plantation' necessarily means permanency in the plant, though I think it implies permanency in the nature of the work.

The nature of the betel-leaf cultivation in the present case has not been fully gone into by the Courts below, but ordinarily in betel-leaf cultivation, the ground has to be raised and bamboo and reed structures have to be made for protecting the plants, and all this cannot be done at a small cost. It does not stand on the same footing as other vegetable cultivation. The boroj in the present case has been found to have been erected, and existing for considerably over 12 years. The word 'plantations' is not defined in the Act.

I think that land on which a boroj is made is a protected interest within the meaning of sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The second contention turns upon the meaning to be attached to the words 'date of sale' in sec. 167 of the Act and the question is whether the words mean the date on which the sale is held or the date on which the sale is confirmed. It has been urged on behalf of the Appellant that the former construction would be unreasonable and may cause hardship in many cases. I think there is much force in this contention. An application may be made for setting aside a sale and the proceedings may not be disposed of before the expiry of one year from the date of sale. The purchaser according to the former construction must take steps under sec. 167 within one year from the date of sale while the proceedings for setting aside the sale are pending and though the sale may eventually be set aside. Again, a sale may be set aside before the expiry of one year from the date of sale and an appeal may not be disposed of within one year. In such a case also the purchaser, according to the above construction, must apply under sec. 167 before the order setting aside the sale is reversed and the sale is confirmed on appeal.

Besides the mere filing of an application is not enough. He must pay process fee and request the Collector to serve a notice on the incumbrancer declaring that the incumbrance is annulled. It is not clear how all these proceedings can be taken while the order setting aside the sale itself remains unreversed.

The words 'date of sale' also occurred in sec. 169 of the Act, and it was held in the case of Matangini Chowdhurani v. Sreenath Das (1), that the said words mean the date of 'confirmation of sale.' That section lays down rules for disposal of sale proceeds and the question to be considered in that case was whether the landlord is entitled to the rent between the date of the suit and that of sale or up to the date of confirmation of sale. Under Act XIV of 1882 title to the property did not vest in the purchaser until the sale was confirmed, and the Court held that having regard to the object of the section, it would be a narrow construction to say that "date of sale" means the actual date of sale as opposed to the date when it becomes absolute.

Sec. 169 was amended by substituting the words 'date of confirmation of sale' in the place of the words 'date of sale' but the same expression in sec. 167 was not amended.

In sec. 65 of the new Civil Procedure Code, Act V of 1908, it is laid down that where a sale has become absolute, the properties sold shall be deemed to have vested in the purchaser from the date when the property is sold and not from the date when the sale becomes absolute.

The present case must however be decided upon the law as it stood in April 1905 when the sale took place. Sec. 169 was amended subsequently by Act I, E. B. and A. C. of 1908.

The words 'date of sale' occurred in both the secs. 167 and 169, and at the time of the sale in the present case the title to the property did not vest in the purchaser until the sale was confirmed, and the words 'date of sale' in sec. 169 was judicially interpreted at that time to mean the date of confirmation of sale and I think that the same construction should be put upon the words 'date of sale' in sec. 167. In the case of Kesa Sahay Singh v. Giani Roy (2), Maclean, C. J., agreeing with Ghose, J., held that the words 'date of sale' in sec. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code mean the date on which the sale is actually held and not the date on which it is confirmed. But as pointed out by Maclean, C. J., in his referring order in the case of Chundi Charan Mundal v. Banke Behary Lal (3), sec. 310A affords a special indulgence to the judgment-debtor. It gives him, so to say, yet one more chance by saving his property. But he can only avail himself of that special indulgence if as a condition precedent he makes the deposit within 30 days.

It is urged that sec. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act, also gives a special indulgence to the purchaser but I do not think that is so. Before the Bengal Tenancy Act, VIII of 1885, the purchaser had not to give any notice for avoiding an incumbrance or do any act before bringing the suit for possession and there was no restriction as to the time within which the suit was to be brought except the period fixed by the Limitation Act, Unnoda Churn v. Mothura Nath (4), though incumbrances were not ipso facto void by the sale but were voidable at the option of the purchaser, see Titu Bibi v. Mohesh Chunder Bagchi (5). The Bengal Tenancy Act, for the first time, laid down that the purchaser must give notice for annulling the incumbrance and within a limited time. His rights were therefore restricted by the Act.

In view, however, of my finding upon the first question, the Plaintiff cannot succeed in the present case and the appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—This litigation turns upon the meaning to be attributed to the word 'plantation' in sec. 160, cl. (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The word is one of wide significance and would include an assemblage of growing plants of any kind that have been planted. The policy of the section is obvious and as to whether or not a particular assemblage of plants comes within this must be largely, if not exclusively, a question of fact, and it appears to us that we connot on the materials before us say that the lower Court of Appeal was in error when it determined that that with which we are concerned in this case was a "plantation" within the meaning of sec. 160. We must accordingly dismiss the Appeal with costs.

L. P. APPEAL NO. 29 OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J.
MOOKERJEE, J.
1911,
11, June.

RUDRA NARAIN MAITY, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
NATABAR JANA, Defendant No. 1, Respondent.

*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 3—Interpretation to be strict—Landlord colluding with third person who purchases holding at a fraudulent rent sale—*Ijaradar's decree after expiry of ijara, if rent decree.

Where a holding which had been purchased by the Plaintiff at a previous rent sale was fraudulently sold in execution of another rent decree obtained against the the former tenant, and the Plaintiff was dispossessed by the purchaser, but the lower Appellate Court found that the landlord himself had no hand in the ouster but that he was hoodwinked by his gomastha who was colluding with the purchaser :

Held, on the findings which could not be reversed on second appeal, that there was no dispossession by the landlord and Art. 3 of Sch. III of Bengal Tenancy Act did not apply.

The case of dispossession alleged against a raiyat should be clearly shown to fall within the terms of Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act before it can be applied in bar of his suit for recovery and the terms of the article should not be extended by use of figures of speech and metaphors.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 7th of March 1911, against a decree of Coxe, J., dated the 16th of February 1911, passed in Second Appeal No. 2597 of 1909.

The Plaintiff having purchased a holding at a sale in execution of a decree for rent obtained against the original tenant by an ijaradar sued to recover possession thereof from the Defendant No. 1 who purchased the holding at a later sale held in execution of a rent decree obtained against the original tenant by the zemindar after the expiration of the ijara.

The Defendant pleaded inter alia that as the Plaintiff purchased only the right, title and interest of the former tenant and not the holding itself, the landlord was not bound to recognise his purchase, and also that the suit was barred by the special rule of limitation laid down in Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The Munsif dismissed the suit as barred by limitation. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the Plaintiff had purchased the holding at a rent sale. On the question of limitation the Subordinate Judge held as follows :—

" It is clear that the Plaintiff was out of possession for over two years. It is therefore that the learned Munsif relying on Aminuddin Munshi v. Ulfatunnessa Bebi (1) and Rakhit Mahanta v. Puddo Bauri (2), held that the suit was barred by limitation. In my opinion, the second of the two cases does not apply to the present case. In that case the dispossessor was a tenant settled by the landlord, so the dispossession by that tenant was held to be dispossession by the landlord himself. In the present case, the dispossessor was not a tenant settled by the landlord but an auction-purchaser who dispossessed by his own right of purchase.

In Brojo Kishore v. Saraswati Dassi (3), Abhoy Churn Mukerjee v. Sheikh Titu (4) and Mahomed Khalil v Hirendra Nath Bhattacharjee (5), it has been held that even if a landlord himself purchases a jote in execution of a decree for its own rents, and then dispossesses other persons than the judgment-debtor such dispossession is not dispossession by the landlord but dispossession by the auction-purchaser and that therefore two years' rule of limitation would not apply in such cases of dispossession. So the dispossession by the Defendant No. 1 as an auction-purchaser would not render the law of two years' limitation applicable to this case. In Aminuddin v. Ulfatunnessa (1), the dispossession by the auction-purchaser was held to be dispossession by the landlord simply because " dispossession was made by the landlord through the contesting Defendant who acted in collusion in dispossessing the Plaintiffs." In this case there is nothing to show that the landlord was colluding with the Defendant No. 1. On the other hand, it is clear that the Defendant No. 1 is in collusion with the Defendant No. 2 who is not the landlord but who is the landlord's gomastha who hoodwinked the landlord in all respects. In this case the landlord had no hand in dispossessing the Plaintiff, it was simply because a suit had arisen between the Plaintiff and the Defendant No. 2 in 1901 that the Defendant No. 2 obtained the fraudulent decree against Madhu and got the jote sold in 1902 to have his revenge on the Plaintiff and cause it to be purchased by his creature, the Defendant No. 1. I hold that Amin-uddin v. Ulfatunnessa (1) does not apply to this case but tha the rulings cited in the commencement of this paragraph govern this case."

In the result the suit was decreed in Plaintiff's favour.

The Defendant No. 1 preferred a Second Appeal.

COXE, J., before whom the case came on for hearing in Second Appeal, delivered the following judgment.

COXE, J.—The land in suit in this case was originally in the tenancy of one Madhu Bhuinya. It appears that one Tara Prosad Pal who was at one time the ijaradar of the mahal in which the land lies brought a suit for rent against Madhu, obtained a decree and sold the holding. At the sale the holding was purchased by the Plaintiff. That was in 1890. Many years after that another suit was brought for rent against the same Madhu Bhuinya and the property was purchased in the execution sale by the first Defendant. The Plaintiff's case was that this second decree and sale were fraudulent and that he was all along the tenant of the land which he had sublet to Defendant No. 3; that he brought a suit against Defendant No. 3 for rent in which Defendant No. 3 repudiated the relationship of landlord and tenant. The suit was therefore dismissed and on enquiry the Plaintiff came to know of this fraudulent decree and sale and that Defendant No. 1 had purchased the holding. Defendant No. 3 claims to hold the land as a sub-tenant under Defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 2 is the gomasta of the landlord in collusion which whom the decree is said to have been obtained. The Plaintiff, therefore, alleging that he was dispossessed in January 1905 by reason of this fraudulent suit brought by Defendant No. 2 and the consequent execution purchase by Defendant No. 1, brings this suit for recovery of possession. The suit has been decreed and the Defendant No. 1 appeals to this Court It is first contended on behalf of the Appellant that there is no sufficient legal evidence of the Plaintiff's rights. The Plaintiff's title, as I have said, is based on the purchase in 1890, and the question arose in the Courts below whether that purchase was made in the execution of a decree under the Tenancy Act under which the holding was sold for its own arrears or was made in the execution of a mere money decree under which the tenancy would not pass. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the execution in the course of which the land was purchased was the execution of a rent decree He based this finding on the sale certificate which showed that the execution case was a rent execution case and he inferred from that that the decree executed was also a rent decree under the Tenancy Act. I am not prepared to say that, if this were all, I could interfere with the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge based as it is on evidence, or could say that his finding was not a finding of fact. It is argued, however, that in coming to this conclusion the learned Subordinate Judge has clearly omitted to notice a very important piece of evidence, namely, that the ejara of Tara Prosad Pal admittedly came to an end in 1885 many years before the Plaintiff's purchase. And it is argued that if the suit for rent was brought after the expiration of Tara Prosad Pal's ejara, the decree obtained by him would not be a rent decree, and the holding would not pass at a sale in execution. Assuming for the purpose of this case that the suit for rent was brought after the expiration of Tara Prosad Pal's ejara, I have to decide whether on that account the decree could not possibly be a rent decree under the Tenancy Act, in execution of which the holding itself could be sold. The learned pleader for the Appellant relies on the case of Srimunt Roy v. Mahadeo Mahata (1).

(1) I. L. R. 31 Cal. 550 (1904).

RUDRA NARAIN MAITY v. NATABAR JANA.

That case is certainly in his favour. It was held therein that when a ticcadar obtained a decree for rent after the expiration of his ticca all that he could sell was the right, title and interest of the tenant but that he could not sell the tenure. I am strongly inclined to follow this ruling. It seems to me very doubtful whether when the relationship of landlord and tenant has expired and the former landlord brings a suit against the former tenant for rent which accrued due during the tenancy that money can still be regarded as rent as defined in the Bengal Tenancy Act. At the time the suit is brought the money, it appears to me, can hardly be said to be payable by a tenant to his landlord and I doubt, therefore, whether a suit for that money can be regarded as a suit for rent as defined in the Bengal Tenancy Act. There is, however, authority on the other side, namely, the decision in the case of Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Forbes (2). In that case the learned Judges considered that the case of Srimunt Roy v. Mahadeo Mahata (1), to which I have alluded, was no longer an authority, inasmuch as the case of Hem Chunder Bhunjo v Mon Mohini Dassi (3), on which it was based had been overruled by a Full Bench The case of Hem Chunder Bhunjo v. Mon Mohini Dassi (3), however, is an entirely different case from the case of Srimunt Roy v. Mahadeo Mahata (1), and I respectfully venture to doubt whether the Full Bench can be regarded as overruling it. There is also the case of Chhatrapat Singh v Gopi Chand Bothra (4), in which the learned Judges certainly appear to have thought that the termination of the landlord's interest would not prevent his decree for rent or for what had been rent, from being executed under the provisions of the Tenancy Act by the sale of the tenancy in respect of which the rent had been payable, though as pointed out in the case of Srimunt Roy v Mahadeo Mahata (1), there is no formal decision on this point in the case. It seems therefore that there is a conflict of authority on this point and though I am inclined to follow the case of Srimunt Roy v. Mahadeo Mahata (1), yet I must admit that the balance of authority is perhaps against the view taken in that case. But in the view that I take in this case it is unnecessary for me to come to a final decision on this point.

(3) 3 C. W. N. 604 (1899).
(4) I. L. R 26 Cal. 750 (1899).

Secondly, it is argued that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the second decree in execution of which Defendant No. 1 purchased the holding was fraudulent. The learned Subordinate Judge relied on certain dakhilas produced by the Plaintiff which show that the landlord accepted rent from him as marfatdars and held that these dakhilas showed that the landlord knew that the Plaintiff was in possession, that consequently the suit against the original tenant was fraudulent. It is argued on the authority of several cases of which the last is Deb Narain Dutt v. Baidyanath Napit (5), that these dakhilas did not show that the landlord had ever recognised the Plaintiff to be the real tenant and that therefore he was entitled to sue the original tenant of the land. This, however, is not all the evidence on which the learned Subordinate Judge relies. He says "the reasons given by the learned Munsif for his coming to the conclusion that the decree was not bonâ fide are correct and fully supported by the evidence on the record," and the Munsif refers to the other evidence, such as a certain compromise between the landlord's gomasta and the Plaintiff in addition to this evidence with respect to dakhilas. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge, on this point, therefore, appears to me to be a finding of fact based on evidence with which I cannot interfere in Second Appeal.

Thirdly, it is argued that the suit is barred by the law of limitation laid down in Sch. III to the Bengal Tenancy Act. It appears to me that this contention must prevail. The Plaintiff was admittedly dispossessed in January 1905. It is clear that the manner of his dispossession was that the landlord obtained a decree for rent and in execution of that decree sold the holding which was purchased by the first Defendant. It is now settled that when a tenant is dispossessed of his land by another tenant and the landlord has a hand in the ouster the limitation laid down in the schedule applies. It has also been held that when a landlord sells a holding in execution of a decree for rent and the holding is purchased by another raiyat the special limitation will apply. The case of Aminuddin Munshi v. Ulfatunnissa Bibi (6) seems to me a clear authority for this view. There are several cases in which co-sharer landlords have sold holdings for their shares of the rent due and purchased them themselves. And it has been held that in such cases when they dispossessed the tenants the dispossession was not effected by them qua landlord but qua auction purchasers. But these decisions appear to me to be wholly dissimilar to the case now before me. If the whole body of landlords bring a suit for rent, obtain a decree, and in execution sell the holding which is purchased by another tenant I do not see how it can be disputed that they have a hand in the ouster. The learned Subordinate Judge holds that the landlord in this case had no hand in the ouster, because every thing was done by his gomasta, the Defendant No. 2. He says "In this case there is nothing to show that the landlord was colluding with Defendant No 1 On the other hand it is clear that Defendant No. 1 is in collusion with Defendant No. 2 who is not the landlord but who is landlord's gomasta who hoodwinked the landlord in all respects." This finding is totally inconsistent with a finding at which the learned Subordinate Judge arrived a little earlier in his judgment which runs as follows :—"It was in my opinion fraudulent on the part of the zemindar to sue the old tenants instead of the Plaintiff for rent. The dakhilas produced by the Plaintiff show that the landlord knew that he was in possession" It is not disputed that the landlord was the Plaintiff in the suit and the holder of the decree in execution of which the first Defendant purchased. It is not suggested that the gomasta exceeded his powers in filing the suit for rent. It appears that the landlord lives elsewhere and leaves the whole management of his estate to his gomasta. He has no personal knowledge of the circumstances of the case But I am assured by the learned pleader for the Appellant that there is no evidence whatever on the record that the gomasta actively and deliberately concealed anything from the landlord in connection with this matter; and the learned pleader for the Respondent to whom I gave an opportunity of looking through the evidence to see if he could question this assurance was unable to show to me anything which would imply that the landlord was in any way misled or deceived by the gomasta. A finding of fact which is based on no evidence whatever can be questioned in Second Appeal. And even if the rent suit which resulted ultimately in the dspossession of the Plaintiff was brought by the landlord in ignorance or even by being deceived, that fact does not make it any the less true that the Plaintiff was dispossessed by the action of the landlord.

(6) 13 C. W. N. 108 (1908).

RUDRA NARAIN MAITY v. NATABAR JANA.

Under the circumstances it seems to me that the landlord must be regarded as the real Plaintiff in the suit for rent and the real decree-holder in the execution case in the course of which the first Defendant purchased the holding. Therefore it appears to me clear that the landlord had a hand in the ouster of the Plaintiff, and the limitation laid down in Sch III to the Tenancy Act applies. The dispossession took place in January 1905 and the suit was instituted in January 1908. The suit, therefore, appears to me to be barred by limitation. The appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs of this Court and of the first Appellate Court.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—The only point that arises on this Appeal is whether the Plaintiff's suit is barred by Art. 3 in the third schedule to the Bengal Tenancy Act. This is an article which after a lapse of certain time deprives the Plaintiff of his right to come to Court for the purpose of vindicating a claim which is his, and therefore it must be clearly made out that any particular case falls within its terms. We recently had occasion to enter a protest against extending the terms of this article by use of figures of speech and metaphors.* What we have to see in each case is whether in fact there has been such dispossession as the article requires. That dispossession, it is conceded, must be by the landlord. The Subordinate Judge untrammelled by the various authorities which can be cited one way or the other came to the conclusion on the facts that there had been no dispossession by the landlord. I see no reason why the High Court should interfere with that finding. It is a finding for which there is foundation in the evidence, and, in my opinion, it would be erroneous to interfere with it. Mr. Justice Coxe has interfered with it, and in so doing, we think, he has committed an error. We must, therefore, reverse his judgment and restore the decree of the lower Appellate Court.

RUDRA NARAIN MAITY v. NATABAR JANA.

The Appellant before us must have the costs of the two appeals in the High Court.

[On 16th July 1913, the Court added :—

JENKINS, C. J.—It has been brought to our notice that Defendant No. 2 was no party to the Letters Patent Appeal. That is doubtless because he was not an Appellant in the appeal to the High Court which was heard by Mr. Justice Coxe. Though Mr. Justice Coxe's judgment is expressed in general terms, where it directs that the suit must be dismissed, we read his judgment as meaning that the suit must be dismissed as against Defendant No. 1 who also was Appellant before him : and, as regards Defendant No. 2 the decree of the lower Appellate Court was left untouched by his judgment. It is therefore unnecessary for us to give any further direction, because we restore the decree of the lower Appellate Court as against Defendant No. 1, that being the only part of the decree that was disturbed.]

Mitra, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Murshidabad, dated the 24th of March 1909, reversing the decree of Babu Annada Prosad Mazumdar, Munsif, 2nd Court at Jangipur, dated the 9th of March 1908.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Govinda Chandra Dey for the Appellants.

Babu Tarak Chandra Chuckerbutty for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal is preferred against the decision of a suit brought by a Hindu widow for recovery of possession of certain plots of land and for declaration of title thereto. The original Plaintiff is now dead, and the Appellants before us are her sons, who have been substituted in her stead.

It appears that the Defendants were in possession under a permanent lease, which was granted to them in the month of March 1873, by one Bamasundari, the sister of the original Plaintiff. It has been held that Bamasundari had only a life interest in the land, and that the permanent lease granted by her to the Defendants was invalid; and that decision has not been assailed. The lower Appellate Court, however, found that the Defendants had nevertheless acquired an occupancy right, they having been in possession for more than twelve years and that they were, therefore, not liable to be evicted.

The principal point taken before us is that, as the Defendants claimed to be raiyats holding at fixed rates, they could not acquire the lower rights of mere occupancy raiyats; and, in support of this contention, reliance is placed on the decision of this Court, Bhutnath Naskar v. Surendra Nath Dutt (1), which was a Letters Patent Appeal, but a reference to that case, and especially to the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in it makes it quite clear that the decision is no authority whatever for the proposition—to our minds, a startling one—that a person who claims the higher status of a raiyat at fixed rates cannot, if that claim is disallowed, fall back upon and establish, if he can, the lower status of an occupancy raiyat. Moreover, the arguments which were put forward by two of the learned Judges in that case and on which the Appellants rely, proceeded, not upon general principles, so far as we can see, but upon the special provisions and framework of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885. But the permanent lease with which we are here concerned, was, as we have observed, granted in March 1873; the Bengal Tenancy Act did not come into force till the 1st November 1885; and thus it would seem that the occupancy right which the Defendants are said to have acquired was acquired under the former law and is saved by the special provisions of sec. 19 of the Act of 1885. That being so, the case is still less an authority on the point now before us, and we have no hesitation in saying that, in our view, the learned District Judge was right.

There remain two smaller points relating to two specific parcels of land included in the land in suit. First, as regards a plot of 6 cottahs, it is contended that, as that was purchased by one of the Defendants from the original Plaintiff, the Appellants are entitled to it as her reversionary heirs. Now, it seems to us quite clear that the Appellants who stand in the shoes of the original Plaintiff cannot, in this suit, set up any such right. Their cross-appeal in respect of this plot of land was, therefore, rightly dismissed as being without substance.

(1) 13 C. W. N. 1025 (1909).

ICHHYAMOYI v. KAILASH CHANDRA MUKHOPADHYA.

The second plot referred to is one of 11 cottahs and it is contended that, as this plot was purchased by one of the Defendants from Rajabullav, a lakheraidar, and the Plaintiffs do not question the lakheraj right of Rajabullav and his transferee, they ought to be given a declaration as to their tenant right in the plot. As regards this, all we need say is that this was not the case set up by them in their cross-appeals in which the lakheraj right of Rajabullav was expressly denied. We cannot, therefore, listen to this contention now.

The result is that this Appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 61 OF 1912.

JENKINS, C. J.
WOODROFFE, J.

1913, Heard, 22 & 28, August, 25 & 26, November. Judgment, 28, November.

BHUPENDRA K. GHOSH
v.
AMARENDRA NATH DEY and another.

Will by Hindu, construction of—Hindu testator, bequest by, to nephews, contingent upon the death of son directed to be adopted without issue and after the life of widow—Conditional bequest—Beneficial interest—Estate, if in abeyance—Bequest by implication—Contingent bequest—Annuity by Will—Succession Act (X of 1865), sec. 107, illustrations.

Where a Hindu testator by his Will authorised his widow to adopt a son and provided that if she died without adopting a son or if the son adopted predeceased her without leaving any male issue, in such event his estate, after the death of his wife, who was also appointed sole executrix, should pass to testator's sister's sons who might be living at his death:

Held—That the widow and the adopted son took a qualified interest and on the death of the adopted son without issue and of the testator's widow thereafter, the property passed on to the nephews as directed in the Will.

An estate on a future contingent event would be within the meaning of sec. 107 of the Succession Act (X of 1865) as contemplated in the illustrations thereof.

SOORJEEMONEY DOSSEE v. DINOBUNDHOO MULLICK (2) referred to.

The question in this case was as to who is entitled under the Will of a Hindu named Herambo Chandra Ghose who had himself been adopted by the widow of another deceased Hindu of the name of Girindra Chandra Ghose. Herambo died on the 10th of November 1907 leaving a Will. The question in this case depended on the construction of this Will of which the material part was as follows:—

"This is the last Will and Testament of the Herambo Nath Ghose of No. 45, Pathuriaghata Street, Calcutta, son of Girindra Chandra Ghose, deceased zemindar—I revoke all prior testamentary writings and appoint my wife Srimuti Paritoshini Dasi to be the sole executrix of this my Will—I hereby authorise my said wife to adopt dattaka putra. In case of death of an adopted son my said wife shall adopt one after another 5 five sons in succession. If my said wife dies without adopting a son or if such adopted son predeceases her without leaving any male issue, in such case my estate after the death of my wife shall pass to the sons of my sister Sreemutty Benodini Dasi who may be living at the time of my death. My said wife shall during her life receive from my estate Rs. 300 a month in lieu of her maintenance and she shall be at liberty to reside in my family dwelling-house No. 45, Pathuriaghata Street aforesaid. I hereby direct my executrix to pay the following annuities out of the income of my estate, viz., to my said sister Srimutty Benodini Dasi Rs. 50 a month, and to each of her sons who may survive me Rs. 100 a month, and to each of her daughters who may survive me Rs. 10 a month during their respective lives."

It was alleged by the Plaintiff that the widow of Herambo only adopted Hem Chandra Ghose on the 3rd of August 1909 and that thereupon the whole estate of Herambo vested in Hem Chandra. Upon Hem Chandra's death on the 11th of March 1910 the estate devolved upon Poritosini, the adoptive mother of Hem Chandra, as his heiress and upon the death of Poritosini it came to Kisori Moni, the paternal grandmother of Hem Chandra. On Kisori Moni's death the estate devolved on Tarilakya Nath Ghose, the reversioner, and the present Appellants were the legal representatives of Trailakya who had died pending the appeal.

The fact of the adoption of Hem Chandra by Herambo's widow was denied by the Defendants in the Court of the first instance but the same was allowed to be proved by consent of parties by an affidavit in the Court of Appeal.

The suit was originally heard by Fletcher, J., who dismissed it with costs. Against that order the Plaintiffs preferred this appeal.

Mr. B. Chakravarti (with him Messrs. C. R. Das, B. K. Lahiri, N. Ghatak and K. C. Bose) for the Appellant contended that there is no prior gift but there is a mere contingent gift to come into operation after the widow's death. On the death of Hem Chandra there would be intestacy and the estate will come to the widow and after her by a course of succession to me. The Will merely provides for the adoption of a boy who however does not take under the Will. Once the adoption takes place, the ordinary law of inheritance comes into operation. In Soorjeemoney's case (2), there was a prior gift, upon a certain contingency happening there was a defeasance. Here, in the event of an adoption taking place there is no gift to the adopted son or to the widow. A Hindu testator cannot make a disposition of the character the Defendants claim to be entitled to. Until adoption the widow takes it but immediately there is the adoption the adopted son takes it by inheritance and once the law of inheritance comes into operation the testator can no further control the devolution. Sec. 111 of the Succession Act cannot apply.

[JENKINS, C. J.—What is the rule of Hindu law that prevents it?]

Mr. Chakravarti.—(1) The donor must divest the whole of his interest in favour of the person or persons capable of taking. (2) The only estate which after being vested can be divested is the estate of a Hindu widow who has got the authority to adopt and has adopted in pursuance of such authority. The present estate once having vested in the adopted son cannot afterwards be divested.

(2) 9 M. I. A. 135 (1862).

[JENKINS, C. J.—Refers to illustration (a), sec. 107. What is the difficulty?]

Mr. Chakravarti.—In that case the whole estate is dealt with by the testator. Here, he is to take the whole of the estate on adoption.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Isn't there a falacy? The whole estate is not disposed of but only a portion of it—so much is therefore subtracted.]

Mr. Chakravarti.—If there was a vested interest in anybody then the law of inheritance would be with regard to the remainder.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Supposing the wife predeceased the testator?]

Mr. Chakravarti.—Then the contingency would arise. There is no vested interest in anybody to take effect from the death of the testator.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Is the whole interest vested then?]

Mr. Chakravarti.—Yes, that is so and so the law of inheritance must apply.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Do you maintain that a future legacy can't be given?]

Mr. Chakravarti.—It can't be, if there is no body in the meantime to take it.

[JENKINS, C. J.—In that case an annuity by Will would be bad?]

Mr. Chakravarti.—The corpus would vest in somebody and there must be a trust. You cannot have the estate in abeyance, for if you do, the law of intestate succession comes in. Whatever may be done under any other system of law, it cannot be done under the Hindu Law. If before the passing of the Hindu Wills Act the Hindu testator was incompetent to do so he cannot do it after the passing of the Act. (Sec. 3, Hindu Wills Act, last paragraph). What the testator does is a contingency which may or may not happen. [Raneemoney v. Premmoney (3)], [Bramamoyi v. Joges Chandra (4)]. Refers to the judgment of Norman, J., at bottom of page 408.

[JENKINS, C. J.—That doctrine does not apply.]

Mr. Chakravarti.—That is to say, there it would be an attempt to leave the estate undisposed of and the ordinary law of inheritance comes in. You cannot keep the estate in suspense by any testamentary disposition. The estate tried to be created by the Will is futile. (At this stage the hearing was adjourned till after the long vacation and on the 25th of November Mr. Chakravarti continuing his argument said:) Annuities under Hindu Law stand on a separate footing. They are recognised by the Hindu Law and also by the Hindu custom and usage. See Ganendra Mohan Tagore v. Upendra Mohan Tagore (5) and Jatindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore (6). Adoption or no adoption, we are entitled to succeed. Refers to Bhoobun Moyee v. Ram Kishore Acharya (7). Adopts the judgment in Gordhan Das v. Ram Coover (8) as part of his argument. Prosonno v. Gocool Chunder (11), Manikyamala v. Nund Kumar (12), Alangamonjori v. Sonamani (13).

Mr. S. P. Sinha (with him Messrs. B. C. Mitter, A. N. Chaudhuri and N. Sarkar).—The intention of the testator is clear from the Will and there is nothing in the Hindu Law to prevent giving effect to that intention. It is not absolutely necessary that the bequest should be in express words though this bequest is in express words. The word "pass" in the Will assumes that it is in somebody from whom it is to pass. When there is no effectual adoption my wife gets it and on her death my nephews. There is a gift over by implication. The provision of Rs. 300 a month contemplates that if the adopted son had lived she would get maintenance only.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Is it not an essence of implication that without it the particular individual would not take?]

Mr. Sinha.—Of course these persons take under the law of inheritance.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Is there anything in the Succession Act about a gift by implication?]

Mr. Sinha.—There is no section. It is possible to say that the testator wanted to leave his property to the adopted son and, if he died without leaving male issue, to the widow and after her to the nephews. The other side relies upon an occult doctrine of Hindu Law. One can understand about the estate lying in abeyance. Their fallacy lies in the fact that when they talk of the estate they talk as if it were so many rupees or so much land but not as a whole hereditus or universitas.

[JENKINS, C. J.—An executory gift is said to be good when there is no particular gift to support it.]

Mr. Sinha.—There must be some reason or principle which is contrary to such gift. Refers to sec. 4 of the Probate Act which applies to a Hindu Will. Apart from the gift by implication the property would be held by the executor for the wife until adoption and after adoption for the adopted son; then the widow again as heir of the adopted son; then after the widow for the nephews. The whole estate vested in the widow. There is no authority for the proposition that a gift is bad if it is not to take effect immediately on the death of the testator. The cases go no further than this that an estate under the Hindu Law cannot be in abeyance. Contingent executory bequest is good and the other side has not shown it to be bad. There is nothing in Hindu Law which prevents a contingent executory bequest being given effect to. [Soorjeemoney v. Dinobundhoo (2)]. Under the Hindu Law you could make a gift inter vivos. There is no reason why one could not make a direct gift inter vivos to A for life and then to B. It is the normal kind of disposition. Both secs. 113 and 114 of the Succession Act which relate to executory bequests apply to Hindu Wills. There is no case to the effect that a legacy in the way suggested is bad—i.e., a gift in future. If the doctrine of trust can be invoked then that doctrine can be extended further for the purpose of the kind. Estate vested in the executor by virtue of the Hindu Wills Act and not of the Probate and Administration Act, (Mayne, 7th Edn., 578). A testamentary bequest need not follow the rule of gift. Nothing in Hindu Law that a gift in presenti is bad. A mere promise to give is not a gift. Essentials of a valid gift being (1) giver must divest himself, (2) property must vest in taker. As long as donor does not retain the property himself, he can give it to A for life and then to B. Re Wills, the death of the testator is the extinction of his right and the gift to donor need not be in presenti and possession may be given at a future time. Soorjeemoney's case (2) shows that possession in presenti is not necessary. If the property is to be given to anybody in presenti to which he is not admitted, the appointment of executors satisfied it. Nafar Chandra v. Ratan Mala (14). Where there was no gift of the estate beneficially for 10 years still it was held valid. The whole argument on the other side is based not on Hindu Law but on a fundamental principle of a prior estate to support a gift over. The estate is in the executors who can deal with it. No question of abeyance arises. The heir takes only that which has not been disposed of by the testator. Since 1870 the estate is vested in the executor.

[WOODROFFE, J.—You say (1) implied gift to wife until adoption; (2) implied gift to son after adoption; (3) implied gift to wife after death of adopted son without male issue.]

Mr. Sinha.—In the alternative I may assume there is no implied gift. Then the question of resulting trust comes in. Reason, convenience and public policy are in favour of a gift of this character. He further referred to sec. 107 of the Succession Act.

Mr. B. C. Mitter dealt with the cases cited by Mr. Chakravarti and referred to Trevelyan's Hindu Law, p. 501. Bishen Chand v. Asmaida Koer (15), Lakshman v. Ram Chandra (16). Jarman on Wills, Vol. II, p. 1433. Dharmadas v. Nistarini (17), Bhupati Nath v. Ram Lal (18).

C. A. V.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—The determination of this suit turns on the validity of a bequest contained in the Will of Herambo Nath Ghosh in favour of the Defendants.

The original Petitioner was Kishori Mohini Dasi, the testator's mother; on her death the suit was continued by Troylukho Nath Ghose, the next reversioner, and when he died, by his executor, the present Appellant. It is not disputed that if the bequest in favour of the Defendants fails, the Petitioner is entitled to the estate.

The Will, after appointing the testator's wife, Poritoshini Dasi, sole executrix and authorising her to adopt proceeds as follows: "If my said wife dies without adopting a son, or if such adopted son predeceases her without leaving any male issue, in such case my estate after the death of my said wife shall pass to the sons of my sister Srimuti Binodini Dasi who may be living at the time of my death." There then follow provisions for the maintenance and residence of his widow and for certain annuities.

Herambo Nath Ghosh died on the 10th

November 1907, and was survived by his wife Poritoshini Dasi.

She adopted Hem Chandra Ghosh under the authority vested in her, but the adopted son died on the 11th March 1910 unmarried.

Poritoshini died on the 16th March 1910. The Defendants are the sons of the sister Benodini Dasi, and were both alive at the testator's death. It is in these circumstances that the present rival claims to Herambo Nath Ghosh's estate are made.

If, as Fletcher, J., has held, the gift in favour of the Defendants is good, the suit must fail. The Petitioner however maintains that the bequest is bad, and so has appealed from the judgment of dismissal pronounced by Fletcher, J.

The Appellant based his contention on two grounds :—

First, he argued, that if property vests in a full owner under the ordinary Hindu Law of inheritance, then the future devolution of the property from him cannot be disturbed except by a restriction imposed from the beginning.

Next, he maintained that if effect were given to the bequest in favour of the sons, there would be such an uncertainty as to who would take, that the property would be in abeyance, and this would contravene a fundamental rule of Hindu Law.

I am not much impressed by either of these contentions.

The first is founded on a fallacy, for it assumes that the complete interest in the property has devolved on the full owner. But that is the very point in dispute, for if the bequest is operative, there would be merely a partial intestacy and a qualified interest would vest in the widow or adopted son as the case might be. The conditional bequest would not be an attempt to give an unauthorised direction to property vested in a full owner, but simply the curtailment of the interest in that property. Nor do I think the second line of argument possesses any greater merit, for I see no ground for saying that the property would be in abeyance, or that there was any more uncertainty as to the destination of the property than is the necessary consequence of every contingent bequest.

The testator's scheme is, I think, clear from the terms of his Will. First, he contemplated that he would be survived by his wife, to whom he gave a power to adopt a son. By appointing her his sole executrix, he provided that she should be his legal representative, and that on his death all his property should vest in her as such. It thus became her duty to carry out, as far as the law would permit, the testator's directions as to the property so vested in her.

Though it is not expressly so stated, still it must have been the testator's intention that his estate should be beneficially enjoyed by his wife or adopted son until the death of his wife without male issue.

If there was no adopted son or male issue of an adopted son then living, he expressly provided that the estate should pass to the Defendants.

It has been argued that the interests preceding this bequest to the Defendants arose by implication under the Will: but whether this be the true view or not, I think the bequest is good.

It does not infringe any rule against remoteness, nor are the legatees incapable of taking.

It is true that the bequest is contingent, but that does not avoid it. (sec. 107 and Part XV of the Succession Act). Nor was it fatal to the bequest that it was to take effect, not necessarily at the testator's death, but possibly at a future date. This view is sanctioned by the illustrations to sec. 107.

It has never been suggested that an annuity cannot be created by a Hindu Will, and yet according to Lord Cottenham an annuity of £100 is the gift of as many sums of £100 as the donee shall live years [Blewitt v. Roberts (1)].

And so a bequest of a legacy, or of an estate on a future contingent event, would be good within the meaning of sec. 107 of the Succession Act [see the illustrations to that section and Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Dinobundhoo Mullick (2).]

But if the future contingent bequest of a sum of money, or an estate, or a farm or a fund, all of which are mentioned in the illustrations to sec. 107, be sanctioned, why is the bequest in this Will bad? It was conceded by Counsel for the Petitioner that if the bequest had been of a sum of money it would have been good, unless it was a sum of money that exhausted the whole estate: this, it was argued, would have been a fraud on the law. In other words, according to the Petitioner the validity of the legacy is dependent upon its amount. I am unable to perceive any sound principle in this.

Fletcher, J., (in my opinion) rightly held the bequest to be good, and the Appeal should therefore be dismissed with costs.

the notice of the Court and it was the duty of the Court to inquire into it.

"A person aggrieved" is a person who has suffered a legal grievance—a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully affected his title to something, and does not mean a person who has lost a benefit which he might have obtained if an order had been made.

EX PARTE SIDEBOTHAM (1) referred to.

This was a Rule granted on the 6th of January 1913 against an order of M. Yusuf, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Burdwan, dated the 28th of August 1912.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Chandra Mullik for the Petitioner.

No one for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order by which the Court below has refused an application ostensibly made under sec. 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907. The Petitioner alleges that he obtained a mortgage decree against one Rakhal Das Ghosh on the 20th March 1908. That decree was made absolute on the 7th December 1909. Before the decree could be executed, the mortgagor made an application in insolvency on the 31st May 1910. During the pendency of the proceedings under the Insolvency Act, the decree was executed and the mortgagee purchased the properties at the execution sale, on the 24th November 1910. The mortgagor was subsequently adjudged an insolvent on the 31st May 1911, and a Receiver was appointed on that date with direction to act in accordance with law. On the 25th July 1911, the Receiver sent to the Court a sale proclamation in which he included the properties purchased by the Petitioner. The sale proclamation was served on the 1st August 1911. On the 28th August 1911, the mortgagee purchaser appeared in Court and presented a petition of objection in which he stated that the Receiver had no authority to sell the properties purchased by him. His application was based on the allegation that the properties in question had ceased to be part of the estate of the insolvent long before the Receiver had been appointed: and that the Receiver was not competent to sell properties which did not in reality belong to the insolvent. The Court summarily overruled the objection on the ground that it had been made after the expiry of 21 days from the date of the order of the Receiver. The propriety of this order is assailed before us, and the question in controversy is whether sec. 22 has any application to the matter.

Sec. 22 provides that if the insolvent or any of the creditors or any other person is aggrieved by any act or decision of the Receiver, he may apply to the Court, and the Court may affirm, reverse or modify the act or decision complained of, and make such order as it thinks fit. The Petitioner is not the insolvent, nor is he one of the creditors, because his case is that he ceased to be a creditor when the execution sale took place. Is he, then, a person aggrieved by any act of the Receiver? The act of the Receiver which he challenges is the issue of the sale proclamation: and the question arises, whether he can be said to be aggrieved by that act of the Receiver. Now, it was pointed out by Mr. Justice James in Ex parte Sidebotham (1) that a person aggrieved means a person who has suffered a legal grievance: a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully refused him something or wrongfully affected his title to something: and does not mean a person who has lost a benefit which he might have obtained, if an order had been made. If the allegations of the Petitioner are well-founded on fact the intended sale by the Receiver cannot affect his title, because the properties in question are no longer the properties of the insolvent. Consequently, he cannot be deemed to be a person aggrieved by the act of the Receiver. Sec. 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act has consequently no application to the case before us.

But it does not follow that the Court is not competent to deal with the objection taken by the Petitioner. When a Receiver has been appointed, he becomes an officer of the Court, and if he is about to act in excess of his authority, it is competent even to a stranger to bring that fact to the notice of the Court, which has inherent power to review the conduct of the Receiver and to make an appropriate order so that the stranger may not be prejudiced by an unlawful act of its own officer: and for this purpose the Court may hold a summary enquiry. This view is in accord with that taken in the cases of Ex parte Cochrane (2), Searle v. Choat (3) and In re Rasul Hasi Cassum (4). The inference follows that the application made by the Petitioner to the Court below must be entertained and an enquiry held into the truth or otherwise of his allegations; but the application is not one under sec. 22 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and is consequently not subject to the period of limitation prescribed by the proviso to that section.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute, the order of the Court below set aside and the case sent back to that Court for enquiry whether or not the allegations of the Petitioner are well-founded. If it is found as a fact that the Petitioner has acquired a valid title to the properties by his purchase at the mortgage sale on the 24th March 1910, the Receiver plainly cannot proceed to sell them as the properties of the insolvent. As the application has not been opposed, we make no order as to costs.

It is conceded that this order will govern the other Rule (25 of 1913).

The Appeals (Mis. Appeals Nos. 567 and 568 of 1912) are dismissed under Or. 41, r. 11, C. P. C.

Indian Copyright Bill.

We have before us a copy of the Draft Bill for the adaptation of the English Copyright Act of 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. V, Ch. 46) to the special conditions of India. Before we come to consider the special provisions of the Government of India Bill we shall briefly notice the circumstances under which the English Act of 1911 came to be passed and was extended by proclamation in the Gazette of India to be in operation throughout British India on and from the 31st of October 1912. At the Berlin Conference and Convention held in 1908, to which Great Britain was a party, it was decided to bring about an international uniformity in the copyright law which necessitated certain changes in the English law of copyright. One of the important changes was the abolition of the formality of registration of copyright and extension of its scope to musical and artistic works, photographic negatives, phonograph records etc., and designs which may be patented. By sec. 37 (2) (d) of the Imperial Act, which is the concluding section, the Chief Executive (the Governor) in British possessions is empowered to extend the operation of the Act to such possessions. The English Act in its entirety was extended to British India by proclamation in the Gazette of India as referred to above. But at the same time it should be noted that power was given under sec. 27 of this Parliamentary statute to the Legislature in the British possessions to add to or alter the statute in respect of procedure and remedies and also to modify it in respect of works composed or published in such possessions. Sec. 27 is in the following terms.

> The Legislature of any British possession to which this Act extends may modify or add to any of the provisions of the Act in its application to the possession, but, except so far as such modifications or additions relate to procedure and remedies, they shall apply only to works the authors whereof were, at the time of the making of the work, resident in the possession, and to works first published in the possession.

Amongst the most important changes that are proposed to be made in respect of "procedure and remedies" is, we note, that in cl. 13 of the Bill it is provided that all "civil proceedings regarding infringement of copyright shall be instituted in the High Court." Surely "in the High Court" is an error in drafting. In the first place, it does not specify which High Court or High Courts are meant. In the next place, the draftsman of the Bill has evidently overlooked the fact that the Allahabad High Court, the Judicial Commissioners' Courts, and the Chief Courts in other provinces (except in Lower Burmah) are not Courts of Original Jurisdiction. We are sure this obvious error will be remedied in the Select Committee. But we think that the provision in sec. 7 of the Act of 1847 to the effect that such suits shall lie "in the highest local Court exercising Original Civil Jurisdiction" was both comprehensive and appropriate. If it was felt desirable that only the Court exercising the highest Original Civil Jurisdiction, should entertain such suits all that was necessary was to omit the word "local" before "Court" and add at the end "in the Province." But we doubt whether even such a change would meet with public approval. It would indeed be a great hardship to authors, who are as a rule not rich men, to come from the Mofussil to institute a suit in the High Court. For instance, it would be unreasonable to require people from distant parts of Bengal or Assam, such as Sylhet, Chittagong, Mymensingh or Dacca to come to Calcutta and institute suits in the Original Side of the High Court and bring witnesses from there even if the infringement took place at Dacca or any of the other places mentioned. It would, therefore, be preferable, to give the aggrieved party an option to bring the suit either in the local or in the highest Court of Original Jurisdiction in the Province.

But another change is proposed in the substantive law which would affect Indian authors very prejudicially as compared to British or continental authors. Under secs. 1—3 of the English Act of 1911, the term for which copyright subsists in translations is the life of the author and a period of fifty years after subject to the right of republication by others by the payment of royalties on a specified scale as provided for in the English Statute. It is however proposed by the Indian Legislature that translations of works first published in British India should be permitted after expiry of five years from the date of first publication, provided that two years' notice of the intention to publish a translation has been given to the author. In justification of this drastic change it is said that "vernacular translations from English and from one vernacular to another are not only common but serve the useful purpose of disseminating knowledge." But we are sure that "dissemination of knowledge" would gain immensely if the same liberty were given to Indian authors to publish translations in India of works of European authors published in Great Britain or abroad under similar conditions. Such rights of translation of European works, of course, the Indian Legislature has no authority to provide for by legislation. We see, therefore, no reason why it should go out of its way to curtail the rights of Indian authors in respect of translations of their works. This will enable European authors to exploit the best works of Indian authors and publish translations and trade in the fruits of their labour after five years without any payment to them but by only paying something to a mere translator.

Such a disparity in the law in respect of copyright in translations in England and India will land the Indian authors and publishers into anomalies and complications. It would be putting a premium in the hands of English publishers to the great prejudice of publishers in India. For, Indian authors who may be anxious to protect the right of translation of their work written in English will have to send their manuscripts to be published in England. Besides affecting the printing and publication trade in India, it is also likely to retard the growth and development of the Indian Vernaculars. Original researches by Indian authors will in self-protection henceforth be largely written in foreign tongue and published abroad. So this will have the effect of retarding rather than advancing the "dissemination of knowledge" as intended by the Indian Legislature. Then, again, with regard to literary works written in the Vernacular it would put the authors not unoften in an embarrassing position which will be further complicated by the law Courts in this country being landed into conflict of laws which the Judges would find it hard to reconcile.

Let us take the specific instance of "The Gitanjali" which was written originally in an Indian Vernacular. The author translated it into English himself and published the English translation in London. He secures a copyright in the translation for his life and for fifty years after under the law as it is in England. But a piratic publisher or translator in India after giving notice to the author may publish another version of it, which may or may not be colourably altered. The author, or his English publisher who may have bought up the copyright in the author's translation, will be powerless to obtain any protection against the right vested in him by the English Statute being nullified by conflicting legislation in India. Should the Indian Legislature pass cl. 4 of the Bill into law, it would not only deprive Indian authors of repute of a valuable right but also greatly inperil the rights of English or Continental publishers in translations of the works of Indian authors. In view of the instance given above we are not sure whether cl. 4 of the Bill, if passed into law, would not be ultra vires.

It should also be noted by our Legislature that the Protocol of the European Powers accepting the principle that translations should be placed on the same footing as the original work was signed by the Ambassador of His Britanic Majesty. Should any English or continental publisher acquire translation right in any work published in India and choose to question the competency of the Indian Legislature to modify the law with regard to such rights, we apprehend that the High Court in England or any of the High Courts in this country might declare the change in the provisions of the English Statute in this respect as ultra vires. Under the English Statute as we have pointed out above, the right would b vested in him for the lifetime of the author and fifty years on the one hand which would be nullified by the Indian law on the other. It would therefore be desirable to avoid such complications.

Then, again, there is another very large and industrious class of authors, who will be very hard hit by the proposed law. For instance, a writer of an educational work in Vernacular may after years of hard labour compose a work on arithmetic, physical or natural science or chemistry or history, geography or grammar or of translations or commentaries of classical literature. Under the proposed law any one in India will be at liberty to take away the fruits of the life-long labour of an author written in Bengalee, Urdu, Hindi, Maharattee, or Guzrati or any other Indian language and even in English by translations which will in most of such cases involve not much more labour than transliteration. We think this is drastic and decidedly hard upon Indian authors and is also contrary to the general policy of the copyright law. We are, therefore, of opinion that cl. 4 of the Bill should not be passed into law before public opinion in India has been more carefully ascertained with regard to it. It is private rights that would be placed in jeopardy if cl. 4 were to become law. It is therefore not enough to obtain the opinion of the Local Governments or a Select Committee, but the opinion of the educated community should be specially obtained by Government with regard to the matter.

A further, though by no means a less serious, anomaly would be that the English Act in its entirety has been in force in India since the 31st of October 1912 and should the law be changed now, the translation rights in works published in India during the interval will be governed by the English law and, five years after, will be governed by the modification introduced by the Indian Legislature. What complication this alone will give rise to it is not easy to foresee.

In conclusion, we would make a suggestion with regard to the substitution of "the Government of India" in the place of "the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council" in sec. 4 of the English Act. We think it would be preferable to give jurisdiction to the High Courts to hear complaints with regard to non-publication of works of deceased authors and the grant of license, as judicial adjudication may be necessary for passing orders with regard to such applications. It is however quite appropriate for the Indian Legislature to substitute the words "Government of India" wherever the words "Board of Trade" occur in the English Act.

Since the above was in type we have received a copy of the Report of the Select Committee on the Indian Copyright Bill. We welcome the option given to the party to bring his suit before the District Judges or in the High Courts. But, we would have preferred if the highest local Court of Original Civil Jurisdiction as in the Act of 1847 had been substituted for the District Judge. The Select Committee have recommended that complaints regarding non-publication of works of deceased authors and for the grant of license for publication of the same should be made to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council from all parts of the Empire. This seems to be an impracticable suggestion so far as India is concerned. So we adhere to our opinion that it would have been preferable if jurisdiction had been given to the High Courts in India to entertain such applications. An appeal by special leave in suitable cases would always lie to the Judicial Committee and it would without prejudice to any one add considerably to public convenience to adopt our suggestion. We are glad to note that the limit of time with regard to copyright in translations has been extended to ten years and still more that a proviso has been added to the effect that this limitation will not apply to cases where the author or his legal representative has translated the work himself or granted permission to translate to others within the period. This will no doubt protect authors' rights. But we are not sure whether the prescribing of a different period of limitation from that of the English Statute may not still give rise to complications and conflicts as indicated above.

Chief Judge of the Calcutta Small Cause Court.

Rumours are rife as to the possible incumbent in the place of Dr. Thornhill, who, we understand, is going to be appointed the Land Acquisition Judge in connection with the Calcutta Improvement Trust. If any well-qualified energetic barrister who has seen a fair amount of practice in our law Courts is appointed to be the Chief Judge of the Presidency Court of Small Causes in Calcutta, confidence in that Court will surely increase. Should, however, any temporary arrangement be made, we think Nawab Abdur Rahman, the Second Judge, is entitled to officiate in the place of Dr. Thornhill. No doubt the Second Judge's term of office is up and now he is working under an extension of service but it would be doing him and the Indian community a grievous wrong if he is superseded from below. When senior Puisne Judges in the Calcutta High Court are allowed to officiate in the place of the Chief Justice during his absence on leave or deputation irrespective of nationality or creed, we see no reason why the seniormost Judge of the Presidency Small Cause Court cannot officiate in the place of the Chief Judge.

Report of the Calcutta Incorporated Law Society.

We have received a copy of the Report of the Incorporated Law Society of Calcutta for the year 1913. The Society has decidedly increased its sphere of useful work during the year under review. The Society on a representation from a member of the Bar appointed a Sub-Committee to enquire into the operation of r. 32 of the Taxation Rules regarding counsel's fees. Opinion seems to be divided as to the practical utility of the Rule. We shall await the report of the Sub-Committee with interest. Another matter which engaged the attention of the Society was the limited operation of Rule 297 of Civil Service Regulations so far as the Registrar of the High Court is concerned. It surely seems invidious that the special leave rules in respect of the Registrar on the Original Side of the High Court have been declared to be inapplicable if he be a Solicitor. We are at one with the Society that the Rule should be applicable to the office irrespective of the fact whether the Registrar was a Solicitor or a Barrister before he was appointed. We thoroughly endorse the appreciative notice of the late Mr. Robert Belchambers in the Society's Report and the very useful and practical method it has adopted to perpetuate his memory by the award of a gold medal annually to the articled clerk who secures the highest marks in the final examination.

The decision of the Society to institute a course of lectures to the articled clerks is also a very wise one. The Society also notices the correspondence between its Secretary and the Collector of Calcutta regarding his requisition that "Powers of Attorney should be filed in the Collector's Office by Solicitors applying for the validation of documents, for the stamp to be certified or for adjudication or other similar purposes on behalf of their clients." We published the correspondence and were of opinion that the view taken by the Secretary of the Society was right and that of the Collector untenable and we are glad to find that the Collector has yielded to the representation and not made any innovation on the practice which has prevailed in the profession as also in his office for a long time past. It is also very creditable to the Society that it can be quite candid in its criticism, as in the case of congestion in the Taxing Office, when the Solicitors and not public officers are at fault. The Society also assisted the Court in matters of professional misconduct. Altogether the Report of the Society is very encouraging.

The question in the case was whether an arbitration award was binding upon one of the Respondents to the proposed appeal. Admittedly the award related to property far exceeding rupees ten thousand in value.

Held—That as the decree involved a question respecting property of value exceeding Rs. 10,000 and as the decision of the lower Court was reversed by the High Court the case fulfilled the requirements of sec. 110, C. P. C.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Charrington & Co. "Ld." v. Wooder. Before THE LORD CHANCELLOR AND LORDS DUNEDIN, KINNEAR AND ATKINSON. 11th December 1913.

"Fair market price" in a covenant ought to be construed in view of the facts and circumstances surrounding the covenant.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal. By the terms of the lease the Respondent covenanted that he would deal exclusively with the Appellants, and would not during the tenancy buy or dispose of any beer or other malt liquor other than such as should have been bonâ fide purchased from the Appellants, provided that they were willing to supply the same to him "at the fair market price."

In his judgment the Lord Chancellor said :

The real point to be determined was whether the language of the covenant meant that the fair market price was the price to be paid by a tenant of a tied house as distinguished from the price at which beer could be bought in an altogether open market.

It was evident that the Court of Appeal and the Lord Chief Justice himself were much influenced by the previous decision of the Court of Appeal in Russell v. Crawford (unreported), a decision to which the Lord Chief Justice was a party. There it had been held that in an analogous covenant the words "fair current market price" meant the market price between people unrestricted in their right of bargaining.

Their Lordships had to construe the covenant in the present case not abstractly but in the light of the circumstances to which it applied. If the language of a written contract had a definite and unambiguous meaning, parol evidence was not admissible to show that the parties meant something different from what they had said. But if the description of the subject matter was susceptible of more than one interpretation, evidence was admissible to show what were the facts to which the contract related. If there were circumstances which the parties must be taken to have had in view in entering into the contract it was necessary that the Court which construed the contract should have these circumstances before it. The covenant in the present case was directed to the circumstances of the land brewers' trade. There was evidence as to these circumstances of a kind which did not appear in Russell v. Crawford, and which ought, he thought, to have made the Court of Appeal hesitate before treating that case as governing the present one.

What was the fair market price must depend on what was meant by the market, and this must be ascertained by reference to the facts proved. The great bulk of the business of the London brewers was transacted with the tenants of their tied houses. These tenants bid for these houses, and they knew that the terms on which they got the right to be supplied with malt liquor were that they should take it exclusively from the owning brewer at the standard price less certain discounts, the variation of which was to be limited by the prevailing practice. That seemed to his Lordship to be the well-understood meaning of the term "market" in this connexion, and he did not believe that the Respondent when he entered into his contract understood it in any other sense. "Market" was a word covering a variety of possible forms, and the evidence appeared to him to establish that it had a special significance in the trade done in tied houses with the London brewers. The fallacy in the view taken by the Court of Appeal appeared to him to have been that they endeavoured to interpret the covenant without reference to the circumstances of the particular trade and of the situation of the parties who entered into the contracts contained in the leases.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Crumplin v. London Joint Stock Bank, Ld. Before MR. JUSTICE PICKFORD. 19th November 1912.

Cheques crossed and endorsed "not negotiable" and signed "per pro," paid into the account at a Bank of a person other than the payee—If the Bank collecting for such constituent liable for negligence in not making enquiry about such cheques.

The Plaintiff drew cheques in favour of Davies crossed and endorsed "not negotiable" and signed by the Plaintiff or by Spencer "per pro," and handed them over to his manager Rands to deliver them to Davies. Instead of so doing Rands paid the cheques into his bank (the Defendants) which collected the moneys and credited Rands with the proceeds. The Plaintiff now claimed that the Defendants had wrongfully converted the cheques, which were his property or that they received the proceeds of the cheques to his use. Defendants claimed protection under sec. 82 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882.

Evidence was given by managers of other banks on behalf of the Defendants that it was very common for cheques marked "not negotiable" to be paid into the accoun of a person other than the person in whose favour they were drawn, and that that fact was not sufficient to put a bank upon inquiry, and further the fact that the cheque was drawn "per pro" would also not put a bank upon inquiry.

The learned Judge dismissed the claim. He said :—

The question came to this—whether the Defendants were negligent in this case in not making inquiries. If they had made inquiries of Rands they might or might not have been satisfied with his answer, but there was no doubt that if they had made inquiries of the Plaintiff the whole matter would have come out. Were they negligent in not doing that ? It was said on behalf of the Plaintiff that the mere fact that the cheques were crossed "not negotiable" made it negligence in the Defendants to take them without inquiry. A dictum of Lord Brampton in Great Western Railway v. London & County Banking Company

([1901] A. C., 414) was cited in support of that contention. But that fact certainly was not conclusive evidence of negligence. It would be remarkable if, while the section provided that bankers were protected if they took a crossed cheque in good faith and without negligence, that it should be possible to hold that the bankers were negligent merely from the fact that they took such a cheque, unless they gave rebutting evidence that they had made proper inquiries before taking it. It was a matter which ought to be taken into consideration together with all the other matters, and that it did not go higher than that. In the present case evidence was given by persons of importance in the banking world, who said that transactions of this kind were not uncommon. One witness said that 20 to 25 per cent. of the cheques paid into his bank were cheques of this description, although that was probably due to a special reason. At any rate, it was quite clear from that evidence that the practice for cheques of this description to be paid in was so common as not to raise suspicion. It came down to a mere question whether, looking at the total number of the payment in, the number of these cheques that were paid in, their amount, and the period over which they were paid in, those circumstances were sufficient to put the Defendants upon inquiry. Some of the witnesses thought that the case was near the line. He thought that if the account had been opened with a small sum, followed by a succession of large cheques similar to Davies's cheques, he would have no difficulty in holding that they ought to have put the bank upon inquiry. But when, as in this case, the cheques were for small amounts, and when they were paid in at such long intervals, it was not negligence in the bank not to have made inquiry, and therefore as regards the cheques which were not signed "per pro." the Defendants were entitled to judgment.

Two of the cheques were signed "per pro.". Mr. Justice Coleridge had held in Morison v. London County & Westminister Bank (29 T. L. R. 342) that the fact that cheques were signed "per pro." ought to put a bank upon inquiry. His Lordship did not think that Mr. Justice Coleridge meant to hold that whenever cheques were drawn "per pro." that fact was enough to put the bank upon inquiry. He thought that that decision must have been intended to apply only to the facts of that particular case. In the present case he did not think that the fact that two of the cheques were signed "per pro." was an intimation that there was probably or possibly anything wrong in the transaction. But it was an intimation that Spencer had only a limited authority to sign the cheques, and the bank took the chance whether or not the cheques were within that authority. He did not think that the Defendants were put upon inquiry by the fact that the cheques were signed "per pro." and therefore he did not think they had been guilty of negligence.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM QUEBEC.]

THE LORD CHANCELLOR. LORD DUNEDIN. LORD ATKINSON. LORD MOULTON. 1913, 15, July.	THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY OF CANADA, v. WILLIAM H. MCALPINE, since deceased, and others.

Negligence—Contributory negligence—Person crossing railway line, injury to.

This was an Appeal from a Judgment of the Court of King's Bench for the Province of Quebec (Appeal Side), whereby a judgment of Mr. Justice Demers in favour of William H. McAlpine, deceased, for a sum of $6,500 and costs was affirmed. This sum was the amount of the damages awarded to McAlpine by the verdict of the Jury in an action instituted by him against the Appellants in respect of injuries he sustained by being knocked and injured by one of their locomotive engines.

The action was founded on the negligence of the Company's servants.

One morning an engine and tender belonging to the Company was engaged in shunting operations in connection with the work being done in a yard also belonging to them, and for that purpose was running backwards and forwards on the northern siding track. The morning was fine, and there was nothing abnormal in the state of the atmosphere. McAlpine, who lived in the vicinity on the southern side of the line, and was well acquainted with the place where the accident was alleged to have occurred, was about 9 A.M. in the act of walking up Guy Street and crossing the tracks from south to north, on his way to his employment, when he was struck by the tender of this engine then being driven backwards and proceeding eastwards.

LORD ATKINSON in delivering the Judgment of the Court observed: Whether in a case of this character, the Plaintiff's negligence was the sole cause of his own misfortune, or whether he was guilty of contributory negligence are questions of fact to be decided in each case on the facts proved in that case. There is no such rule of law in England as that if a person about to cross a line or lines of railway looks both ways on approaching the track, he need necessarily not look again just before crossing it. Neither is it true, as the learned Judge apparently supposes, that according to the law of England a Plaintiff who is guilty of negligence cannot recover damages. On the contrary a Plaintiff whose negligence has directly contributed to the accident, that is that his action formed a material part of the cause of it, can recover, provided it be shown that the Defendant could by the exercise of ordinary care and caution on his part have avoided the consequence of the Plaintiff's negligence.

Where a statutory duty is imposed upon a Railway Company in the nature of a duty to take precautions for the safety of persons lawfully travelling in its carriages, crossing its line, or frequenting its premises, they will be responsible in damages to a member of any one of these classes who is injured by their negligent omission to discharge, or secure the discharge of, that duty properly, but the injury must be caused by the negligence of the Company or its servants. If, as in the example taken by Lord Cairns in The Dublin, Wicklow and Wexford Railway v. Slattery (3 A. C. 1—155, 1166), the folly and recklessness of the Plaintiff, and not the admitted negligence of the Company be the cause of the injury to the Plaintiff then the negligence of the servants of the Company in omitting to whistle, for instance, as the train approached a station or level crossing, would be an "incuria," but not an 'incuria dans locum injuriæ." In Davey v. The London and South Western Railway Company (12 Q. B. D., 70) this principle was applied.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before CARNDUFF AND RICHARDSON, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3163 OF 1911. PISER alias BABU GOMEZ, Plaintiff-Appellant v. MOHAMED IDOO MIAH, Defendant-Respondent. Heard, 23rd January. Judgment, 26th January 1914.

Admissibility in evidence—Certificate if may be proved without examining writer—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 167—Improper admission.

The question raised in second appeal was as to the effect of the improper reception of inadmissible matter in evidence.

The Plaintiff suing on a bond, endeavoured to save the bar of limitation by proving payment of interest by the Defendant in Faridpur on the 15th December 1907. The Defendant in reply produced a certificate which he swore he had received from the hands of the manager of the Pegu Club, and which apparently showed that he was in the service of that club in Rangoon on the date mentioned. The Court of First Instance beleived the Plaintiff's witnesses, and, holding that the certificate was not duly proved, refused to attach any importance to it. The suit was accordingly decreed. The lower Appellate Court, on the contrary, considered the Plaintiff's evidence discrepant and not at all very satisfactory, and held, referring to sec. 67 of the Indian Evidence Act, that there was sufficient proof of the certificate. In this view the lower Appellate Court reversed the decree and ordered the dismissal of the suit.

Held, that the certificate could not be admitted in lieu of the evidence of the writer himself and that the provisions of sec. 167 of the Evidence Act could not be applied to such a case.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE AND BEACHCROFT, JJ. CIVIL RULE No. 1200 OF 1913. BRAHMANANDA DEB SARKAR, Decree-holder, Petitioner v. HEM CHANDRA MITRA AND OTHERS, Defendants, Opposite Party. 30th January 1914.

Usufructuary mortgagee of 4 as. interest of a landlord—Suit for rent—Whether tenure liable to sale under secs. 148A and 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act—Power of revision by High Court.

The facts out of which this Rule arises are that the Petitioner took a usufructuary mortgage of a 4 as. share of one Mohim Chandra Mitter, Opposite Party, in the disputed jote and that he has been in possession by receiving rent from the tenants. The rent in the Petitioner's share having fallen into arrears he brought a suit for rent making the remaining 12 as. landlords pro formâ Defendants, for his share of the rent due. He stated in his plaint that the co-sharer landlords refused to join with him in the suit and to state what amount was due to them from the said tenants. He further stated that if they be willing to join with him as co-Plaintiffs and to state the amount due to them, he would pay the ad valorem fees on their dues also. Neither the tenants nor the pro formâ Defendants appeared in the rent-suit which was decreed ex parte. Then the Petitioner applied for execution of his decree by sale of the tenure in arrears under sec. 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The co-sharer landlords raised various objections which were disallowed by the Munsif on the ground that they should have been raised in the rent-suit. On appeal to the District Judge, he held that as the Petitioner did not sue for the full rent due to all the co-sharer landlords, the tenure cannot pass by the sale but the right, title and interests only of the tenant Defendants can pass by the sale. The Petitioner thereupon moved the High Court and obtained the above Rule.

For the Opposite Party it was contended that as a usufructuary mortgagee is not a landlord within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the privileges conferred upon the landlords by the Tenancy Act cannot be enjoyed by him. His decree is but a money decree and he cannot sell the tenure of the tenant. It was also contended that a usufructuary mortgagee as such is not a "co sharer landlord" within the meaning of secs. 148A and 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act and so he cannot proceed to sell the tenure. Then the provisions of sec. 148A having not been complied with strictly, sec. 158B cannot apply. Rent due to all the co-sharers means rent payable to all of them. The suit being not for the entire rent due to all the landlords, the tenure cannot pass in execution of a decree passed in the suit, but the right, title and interest only of the judgment-debtors will pass. It was also urged that as there was no second appeal, the suit having been valued at an amount less than one hundred rupees, the High Court could not interfere in its Revisional Jurisdiction, inasmuch as the mistake which the learned District Judge had made, if any, was only a mistake of law and he had jurisdiction to decide rightly or wrongly.

Held—That the Bengal Tenancy Act applied to the facts of the case. Secs. 148A and 158B were complied with in the case and the High Court could interfere in such cases.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE AND BEACHCROFT, JJ. RULE No. 861 OF 1913. ABDUL AZIZ AND OTHERS, Petitioners v. TAFAJUDDIN SHEIKH, Opposite Party. 2nd February 1914.

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 21, r. 90—Application to set aside rent sale—Transferee of a portion of a nontransferable occupancy holding, if has locus standi.

The Petitioners were transferees, under a kobala and a mortgage deed of portions of a nontransferable occupancy holding owned by one Kapiluddin and another, the tenant judgment-debtors. The holding was sold in execution of a rent decree obtained by the landlord against the recorded tenants and was purchased by a third party, namely, the Opposite Party in this Rule. The Petitioners were neither made parties to the execution proceedings nor were apprised of any notice of the same. The Petitioners within 30 days of the sale applied before the Munsif of Bagerhat to set aside the sale under sec. 47 and Or. 21, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code on the ground of material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale and substantial injury in consequence.

The Munsif held that the Petitioners had no locus standi to make the application and therefore without going into the merits of the case rejected the application. On appeal the Subordinate Judge of Khulna affirmed the decision of the Munsif and he observed "it seems there is a conflict of authority on this point; the decisions reported in 9 C. W. N 134, 7 C. L. J 282 and 16 C. L. J. 139 and 141 are in favour of the Appellants and the decisions in 11 C. W. N 312, 13 C W. N. 652 and 16 C. W. N 421 are in favour of the Respondents. The decision reported in 7 C. L. J. 282 was considered in the decision reported in 16 C W. N. 421 and was dissented from. I think I am bound to follow the latest decision reported in 16 C W. N. 421. R. 90, Or. 21 allows only such persons to come under that section as have acquired some interest in the property. The landlord is the decree-holder and the purchaser or mortgagee of a nontransferable right of occupancy acquires no interest as against him."

Against the decision of the Subordinate Judge the Petitioners made an application to the High Court under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Held, that the transferee of a portion of a nontransferable occupancy holding can come in under Or. 21, r. 90 to set aside a sale by the landlord in pursuance of a rent decree against the recorded tenant.

Held, further, that the words "whose interests are affected by the sale" in r. 90 are much wider than the language used in sec. 311 of the old Code and in r. 89, Or. 21 of the new Code.

The cases reported in 8 C. W. N. 55 and 132, 12 C. L. J. 609, 17 C. W. N. 163, 16 C. L. J. 139 and 141 and the decisions cited above were reviewed and discussed.

HEMNATH DUTT v. ASHGHAR SINDAR (1) overruled.

MAZHAR RAI v. RAMGAT SINGH (2) approved.

This is an Appeal from a judgment, dated the 29th June 1909, of the Calcutta High Court (Sharfuddin and Coxe, JJ.).

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment. In the course of his judgment Sharfuddin, J., said :—

"The Plaintiff (Administrator-General of Bengal) has brought this suit as executor of the Will of Kumar Indra Chandra Singh Bahadur, Zemindar of Pergunnah Bhulua. The suit is for declaration of the Plaintiff's zemindari right to, and for khas possession of, certain char lands by ejecting the Defendants from the possession thereof.

"The Defendant No. 1, Ashutosh Roy, is the owner of the Patni Taluk No. 3034, which is known by the name of Taluk Ramsaran Pal. Part of this taluk is Kismat Algi, which forms part of the zemindari of Pergunnah Bhulua. The Plaintiff's allegation is that the Defendant No. 1 and, before him, his predecessors-in-interest had, in three successive suits, obtained abatement of rent in respect of a diluviated portion of the taluk. The last of these three suits for abatement was Suit No. 470 of 1888. According to the plaint the total quantity of land of all descriptions, found to be existing then, was four drones and odd. It is next alleged that from 1296 (1899), a char began to form gradually on the old diluviated site of the mouzah, and that the Plaintiff was in khas possession of the char up to 1308 by receipt of grazing rent. The plaint then goes on to say that the char having become fit for cultivation, the Plaintiff attempted to grant agricultural leases to some tenants but he was unable to do so, as in 1309, Defendants Nos. 2 to 45 trespassed on the land, on the strength of their having been let in by Defendant No. 1 who claimed the char to be reformation of or accretion to his Patni Taluk mentioned above. The Plaintiff in his plaint contends that since the Defendant No. 1 had obtained successive abatements of rent in respect of the gradual diluviation as observed before, the char in dispute could not be regarded either as reformation or accretion, and on the above ground the Plaintiff lays claim to this char as appertaining to his zemindari and prays for khas possession by evicting all the Defendants. He also claims mesne profits. But as regards Defendants Nos. 2 to 45, there is an alternative prayer for declaration of Plaintiff's title to recover fair and equitable rent from them, if they be not found liable to be ejected. It is important to note here that no such alternative prayer is made with respect to Defendant No. 1.

"We have it that soon after the execution of the kabuliyat, Ex. 53, the river began to recede which brought more lands into the possession of the talukdar and that the zemindar twice obtained rent decrees for the excess lands; and on no occasion did she ever claim these lands as her khas zemindari land. From her conduct, I gather that she allowed the talukdar to hold possession of those lands as a part of his taluk, while she claimed to be entitled to receive rent from him.

"I have already observed that latterly the talukdar obtained abatement decrees in three successive suits for the diluviated lands. These lands having been washed away by the river were thus thrown into the category of unassessable lands. When these lands again reformed on their old sites or became accretions to the lands already in possession of the talukdar, I do not see why the representatives-in-interest of the zemindar who created the taluk should not follow the procedure that was followed by her in the two suits for rent of excess lands. On the construction of the kabuliyat coupled with the conduct of the original grantor of the mokurari in bringing enhancement suits instead of suits for ejectment, I am of opinion that the intention of the parties at the time of the creation of the taluk was that with the increase or decrease of area the rents would enhance or abate and that if the talukdar was dispossessed by the action of the river of any portion of the taluk, he would be entitled to take into his possession the lands that might be thrown up by the river but that he would be bound to pay rents at the stipulated rates."

In the course of his judgment Coxe, J. said :—

"Now in the present suit it is the case of both sides that the disputed land is a reformation in situ. This will be apparent from a reference to paragraph 3 of the plaint and paragraph 9 of the written statement. Nor is it alleged that any remission of Government revenue has ever been asked for or given with respect to the land washed away from the estate in which the taluk Ram Saran Pal is situated. So far as the estate is concerned, he land cannot be regarded as an accretion or as coming within the scope of sec. 4 of the Regulation. That being so, it seems hardly possible to me that it can be regarded as an accretion to the subordinate taluk. It would be anomalous that land which cannot be lawfully regarded as 'gained' from the river by the estate could be regarded as 'gained' from the river by the subordinate taluk. If it is 'gained' at all by the taluk, it must be gained from the estate, to which, on the hypothesis it belongs. It may be that this view is opposed to that taken in Bhuggobut Pershad v. Doorg Bijoy (3), but that decision seems to have proceeded on an unquestioned finding of fact that the land was an accretion, and does not bind us, in my opinion, to hold that land which is not an accretion to an estate, may be an accretion to a tenure included in that estate.

"I think therefore that the Appellant cannot claim the land as an accretion to his tenure, nor can he, I think, claim it as a reformation in situ under the general law, inasmuch as he has thrice applied for and obtained remission of rent for diluviations. This view is warranted by the decisions quoted above as well as by that in Saligram Singh v. Puluk Pandey (4). To succeed therefore he must show that he is entitled to the land by virtue of his contract with the Plaintiff.

"The terms of the kabuliyat creating the taluk taken with the evidence of the subsequent conduct of the parties leaves no doubt in my mind that the Appellant is entitled to the land in suit as part of his taluk. The history of the dealings between the parties must be discussed in some little detail. They begin with the kabuliyat itself, dated 1837. This shows that the taluk consisted of two villages, Algi and Paniar Tek. In this case we are concerned only with Algi. The nett area of the taluk was stated to be about 2¾ drones and the rate of rent fixed at Rs. 51-odd a drone. Then come the stipulations that follow: 'I shall not be entitled to raise any plea on the ground of Uthit, Patit, inundation, drought etc. If the land be found to be more on measurement by Nal prevalent according to the custom of the pergunnah, I shall separately pay the rent thereof at this rate. If it be less I shall get remission therefor.'

"Now these words may, of course, be differently construed by different persons. But reading them with the evidence of what the parties did under the kabuliyat I am satisfied that by that instrument the whole of Algi was let to the Defendant's predecessor; that it was recognised that the area would probably vary from time to time, inasmuch as, to quote the written statement, a strong tidal navigable river was situate near the boundaries; that therefore a rate of rent per drone was fixed and provision made both for enhancement and reduction of rent; and finally that it was understood that no allowance would be made for temporary fluctuations of cultivation, due to causes not of a permanent nature such as inundation, drought, etc."

Hence this Appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. A. M. Dunne for the Appellant submitted that the char in dispute on its re-appearance formed part of the khas lands of the Appellant's zemindari and that the putnidar had no title thereto. The terms of the kabuliyat on which the High Court relied had no application to the question at issue. The intention of the parties at the time of the execution of the lease was immaterial. The re-formed lands could not be an accretion to the putni. If the putnidar was entitled to retain possession of the re-formed lands he was bound to pay rent for them. He had previously been granted abatement of rent in consequence of the diluvion of the lands. Mere non-payment of rent during the period of submersion did not terminate the tenancy. Hemnath Dutt v. Ashghar Sindar (1) is not sound. Reliance was placed on Mazhar Rai v. Ramgat Singh (2), Saligram Singh v. Puluk Pandey (4). There being no abandonment of the tenancy the Appellants were entitled to proper rent.

(4) 6 C. L. J. 149 (1907).

ARUN CHANDRA SINGH v. KAMINI KUMAR.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents submitted that the Plaintiff's suit was a suit in ejectment. It was based on the allegation that the Plaintiff had been unlawfully dispossessed by the Defendants. That claim had failed as the Defendants were tenants of the Plaintiff. If the Plaintiff wished to recover rent from the Respondents, he must seek his remedy in the proper Court.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—The sole question involved in this Appeal, which is from a Judgment and Decree of the High Court of Bengal, relates to the title to certain lands that had been washed away some years ago by the river Siddhi in the Noakhali district and have since reformed in consequence of a change in the course of the stream.

The Plaintiffs, Appellants, are the owners of a zemindari called Pergunnah Bhulua, situated in that district. Within this zemindari lies a Patni tenure called Taluk Ram Saran Pal, created so long ago as 1837 by one of the predecessors in title of the present zemindars. The Taluk is now owned by the first and second Defendants, Respondents in this Appeal. The remaining numerous Defendants are raiyats placed on the land, by the Patnidars, since its reformation.

(1) I. L. R. 4 Cal. 894 (1879).
(2) I. L. R. 18 All. 290 (1896).
(4) 6 C. L. J. 149 (1907).

The Dowl Kabuliyat executed by the Patnidar in respect of the tenure shows that it comprises parts of two Kismats or subdivisions of villages, named respectively Kismat Paniartek and Kismat Algi; and the area included in the Taluk was evidently given approximately, for the lease contains the following covenant—

If the land be found to be more on measurement by Nal prevalent according to the custom of the pergunnah, I shall separately pay the rent thereof at this rate; if it be found to be less, I shall get remission therefor.

Their Lordships have little doubt that the reason for the approximate statement of the area and the particular provision regarding the variation of the rent in certain probable contingencies was due to the fact, which has not been seriously controverted, that a strong tidal river flowed close to the boundaries of the Taluk in question.

It is in evidence that in 1843 the Plaintiffs obtained a Decree in the Revenue Courts for increased rent on the ground that additional land was found upon measurement to be in the Patnidar's possession.

Later, considerable parts of the Algi lands having been washed away by the action of the river, the Defendants obtained, under the provisions of sec. 19 of the Bengal Council Act VIII of 1869, a proportionate remission of rent. The last proceeding in this respect was in 1889.

Since then the diluviated lands have reappeared and admittedly reformed in situ. With their re-appearance disputes arose between the parties; the Plaintiffs claimed that the lands in question formed part of their zemindari, whilst the Defendants contended that they were accretions to the Taluk Each party attempted to exercise rights of ownership in order to create evidence of adverse possession against the other side. Their Lordships agree with the High Court that the evidence on this point is wholly inconclusive.

The suit was brought by the Plaintiffs, the Zemindars, in June 1906 to obtain Khas or direct and exclusive possession of the lands in question by a declaration of their title, the usual form of relief asked for in the Indian Courts in these cases. In the alternative they urged that if their claim to Khas possession failed, it might be declared that the Defendants were entitled to hold the land subject to the payment of proper rent for the same. The Defendants, besides pleading that the lands in suit were accretions to their Taluk, urged that the Zemindars were only entitled to rent, but not to Khas possession.

The District Judge made a Decree in the Plaintiffs' favour, substantially on the ground that as the Defendants had obtained abatement of rent in respect of the lands that had been washed away by the river, they had lost all title to the reformed lands. On appeal the High Court has taken a different view. It has held in substance that having regard to the terms of the contract and the conduct of the parties, the Plaintiffs had no right to eject the Defendants from lands which originally formed part of Kismat Algi and had been washed away by the river. They accordingly dismissed the Plaintiffs' suit. In their Lordships' opinion the learned Judges are right in holding that the lands do not come within the provisions of sec. 4 of Regulation XI of 1825, and cannot be claimed by either party as accretions to their respective property. The learned Judges of the High Court appear, however, to have laid too much stress on the terms of the Kabuliyat and the evidence of intention deducible from the various proceedings in respect of additional rent and abatement of rent. They evidently felt pressed by an older ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Hemnath v. Ashghar Sindar (1). Their Lordships, however, do not find themselves in accord with the rule of law expressed in that case. They think that the principle applicable to this class of cases is correctly enunciated in Mazhar Rai v. Ramgat Singh (2).

In the present case there is nothing to show that, by claiming or accepting remission of rent in respect of lands washed away from time to time by an action of the river, the Defendants abandoned, or agreed to abandon, their rights to such lands on their reformation in situ, as is admittedly the case here. The diluviated lands formed part of a permanent, heritable, and transferable tenure ; until it can be established that the holder of the tenure has abandoned his right to the submerged lands it remains intact.

In the result, their Lordships are of opinion that this Appeal should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

This decree, however, will be no bar to any proceeding on the part of the Plaintiffs authorised by law to recover proper rent in respect of the reformed lands.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM THE CHIEF COURT OF LOWER BURMA.]

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.
LORD MOULTON.
LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.
LORD SUMNER.

1913,
17, November.

CLIFFORD and ors., Petitioners,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR, Respondent.

Special leave to appeal—Criminal case—Interference with verdict of jury—Fraudulently issuing false balance-sheet and inducing different depositors to deposit money, if separate offences in the case of each person so induced.

The function of the Privy Council in dealing with a petition for special leave to appeal in a criminal case is not that of a Court of Criminal Appeal, being limited by the principle laid down in IN RE DILLET (1). If the Board finds that what has been done has been grossly contrary to the forms of justice, or violates fundamental principles then they have power to interfere.

So where there was evidence to go to the jury on all the matters which had been dealt with,

Held—That it would be contrary to the constitutional duty of the Board to express any opinion as to whether, in that state of things, the verdict found by the jury was a right one or the summing up a perfect one.

Where the Petitioners who were two of them the directors and a third the general manager of a banking concern were charged with and convicted of the offence of having by means of a false balance-sheet and false advertisements induced three persons on three different dates to deposit moneys in the Bank:

Held—That technically there were three separate offences.

This was an application for special leave to appeal against a conviction of the Petitioners on a charge of issuing a false balance-sheet passed by the Chief Court of Lower Burma. Two of the Petitioners were the Directors and the other Petitioner was the General Manager of the Bank of Burma, Limited. The balance-sheet of the Bank which was for the six months ending on the 30th June 1911 was issued on or about the 18th August 1911 after which date there was a continuous and heavy fall in the value of the securities held by the Bank. An order was subsequently made by the Chief Court of Lower Burma for the winding up of the Company by the Court and an Official Liquidator was appointed. The Official Liquidator filed a complaint in the Court of the District Magistrate of Rangoon alleging that the Petitioners had, by knowingly issuing a false balance-sheet for the half year ending on the 30th June 1911 and by continuing to advertise the Bank as a prosperous and going concern up to the time of its close, dishonestly induced certain persons to deposit moneys with the Bank. He further alleged that the Petitioners had committed the offence of criminal breach of trust by paying dividends out of capital. The District Magistrate held an enquiry under Chap. XVIII of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and at the conclusion of the case for the prosecution the Government Advocate stated that he did not ask the Magistrate to charge the Petitioners with criminal breach of trust and the Petitioners were committed for trial by the Court of Sessions on a charge with three heads framed against each of the Petitioners of having by means of a false and fraudulent balance-sheet and by false advertisements falsely and fraudulently induced three persons on three dates to deposit moneys with the Bank. The Petitioners were tried before Mr. Justice Twomey and a jury and during the trial the Judge amended the charge by adding the words "and by intentionally keeping the Bank open as a going concern after it had ceased to be solvent." The Judge in the course of his summing up directed the jury that the fundamental issue in the case was whether the balance-sheet was false in taking as good assets a large amount of debts which could not honestly be considered as good debts and in crediting to profit and loss and treating as earned income a large amount of interest on these doubtful and bad debts, which interest was unpaid and which there was no reasonable prospect of recovering. The Judge further stated that the prosecution case really amounted to a case of paying dividends out of the moneys of depositors. The jury returned a verdict of guilty against each of the Petitioners on all the charges and the Judge sentenced two of the Petitioners to eight months' rigorous imprisonment on each charge and the other Petitioner to six months' rigorous imprisonment on each charge, the sentences running consecutively. On the application of the Petitioners, certain questions of law were reserved by the Judge under sec. 434, Cr. P. C., and a Bench of three Judges decided all the questions against the Petitioners.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., (with Mr. F. J. Coltman) for the Petitioners, submitted that leave to appeal should be granted.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—You say the case comes within the rule in In re Dillet (1)?]

I should submit it does. The charge was that of issuing a false balance-sheet and the first and one of the most serious grounds on which I shall ask leave to appeal is this, that, at the trial, the learned Judge admitted as a substantive charge against the Defendants that the balance-sheet was false in respect of its including as good debts owing to the Bank certain debts which were not good.

[LORD MOULTON.—Is there no colouring word importing the mens rea ?]

Yes, my Lord, I do not complain of that, but what I say is that that had not formed part of the charge before the Magistrate, and that it was really inconsistent with the nature of the charge which the Liquidator had put forward before the Magistrate, and which was put forward in the first instance at the trial, and that the addition ought not to have been made.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—Taking that first charge, it is a question of fact, is it not, whether you could properly pay dividends when certain debts had not yet been realised ?]

Certainly, and the particular charge here was based on the fact that certain interest had been carried in to swell the profits when the interest was so uncertain that it ought really, as it was said by the prosecution, to have been carried to an Interest Suspense Account.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—That is a question of fact, surely.]

Yes.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—That is nowhere near In re Dillet (1).]

What I complain of is that the question of the goodness of the debts was left to the jury.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—The point you complain of was contained in the charges ?]

(1) 12 App. Cases 459 (1887).

(1) 12 App. Cases 459 (1887).

CLIFFORD v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

It is covered by the charges, it would be covered by the Indictment charging generally that this was a false and fraudulent balance-sheet, but at the same time it would be necessary that particulars should be supplied. What I complain of is that the charge being that the interest had been improperly carried to Profit and Loss Account, to that was added what was indeed treated ultimately in the summing-up as the chief charge, that debts had been treated as good which were of no value.

[LORD SUMNER.—Is the point of your complaint that what took the place of an Information or Indictment stated a general attack on a balance-sheet in respect of which some debts had been treated wrongly as secured, and at the trial you found you had to deal with another matter of fact ?]

Yes, I may say this, that certain evidence was given attacking the carrying interest to profit which involved an attack on the debts themselves. It was said the interest should not have been carried to profit because the debt itself was not a good one, and you could not expect to get the unpaid interest really paid. In that way there was evidence, but there was no charge, that the debt itself was a bad debt, and what I complain of is that the prosecution was allowed to shift their ground, and to make the main head of the claim his allegation that bad debts had been treated as good.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—What was in fact the complaint we are not primarily concerned with ; what we are concerned with are these charges, and it is equally plain to see that what happened was that the charges were generally drawn wide enough to cover this.]

Yes.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—You are not complaining of the procedure at the trial ?]

I am not complaining of the procedure at the trial.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—Just look at this case. Here is a particular debt at any rate, as to which there was evidence. We are not a Court of Criminal Appeal sitting here trying matters as to whether the case was properly tried in every detail ; we are only here to exercise in a criminal case the prerogative in an extreme instance, that of there having been a disregard of the form of legal process, or some violation of the principles of natural justice or something ejusdem generis.]

I quite agree.

What I do complain of is this, that the charge upon the fraudulent nature of the balance-sheets must depend on treating debts as good which were bad, which not only were never treated by the prosecution before as bad but which was inconsistent with their case.

[LORD MOULTON.—It really is not near In re Dillet (1). Suppose you make out a case for a Court of Criminal Appeal, that is not enough, as the Lord Chancellor says.]

I perfectly agree, I must go a great deal further than that. My case here substantially depends on this point being left to the jury which was really inconsistent with all the earlier proceedings.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is not inconsistent with the charges formulated. I may tell you what strikes me so strongly is this : this is a case which may have been improperly tried, but it went to the Court of Criminal Appeal in Burma. They investigated the charges, and they came to the conclusion that there was a mass of evidence about these debts which the jury was entitled to take into account. They pointed out that, so far as the charges at any rate which took the place of the indictment were concerned, these matters were within it, and they said there was a mass of evidence upon which they could not say that the learned Judge was not entitled to direct the jury, and they dismissed the appeal. Now you come to us, not as a Court of Criminal Appeal, because it cannot be too emphatically stated that this Board does not advise His Majesty as to criminal cases on that footing, but you come to us and ask us to say that there has been a disregard of the forms of legal process or some violation of the principles of natural justice.]

(1) 12 App. Cases 459 (1887).

What I submit is that not only was the charge not put forward but that all the documents were inconsistent with that being part of a charge which the liquidator was making.

[LORD PARKER.—Is there any one of these Directors who have been convicted as to whom you could say there was no evidence that they knew, that ought to go to the jury, and that the whole thing depended on presumption ?]

Submits that it was put by the learned Judge as a case of presumption, and that there was no actual evidence. As regards Mower the case was a very cruel one, because Mr. Mower had been away from April until the 1st of August. He came back actually on the 1st of August, and because there are a few hours in which he might have got information, it was held that he might be convicted of fraud.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—You have another point ?]

Yes, it is with regard to the sentence.

[LORD MOULTON.—Was this question of the sentence brought up before the Court of Appeal ?]

Yes, it was.

[LORD MOULTON.—Are they charged for the same thing ?]

Yes, I was going to submit to your Lordships that these consecutive sentences to rigorous imprisonment in Burma was contrary to sec. 71 of the Penal Code. The 71st section of the Penal Code contains provisions which I submit ought to have excluded passing consecutive sentences ; it amounts to a sentence of 24 months' rigorous imprisonment in Burma in the case of two of the Defendants.

[LORD MOULTON.—You say it is one and the same offence ?]

Yes, my Lord, and I submit it is quite wrong. It is only one matter, and what they have been convicted of is issuing this balance-sheet. Reads sec. 71 of the Penal Code and the explanation which is given in the note in Stokes' edition of the Indian Code, quoting from Mr. Justice Straight in Empress v. Ram Partab (2).

It would have been all very well if the man had been charged with three acts of false pretences whereby he got money from three individuals but that is not the case at all. This is one offence, namely, the false balance-sheet, and I submit it cannot be said there is a separate offence in respect of each of them. As my friend says, after they have come out of prison, they may be charged in respect of other deposits. I submit, it is really one offence.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by ships do not propose in this case to recommend that leave to appeal be given. Their functions are not to sit as a Court of Criminal Appeal, and it would be contrary to their constitutional duty to assume that position. A Court of Criminal Appeal can go into questions of evidence and into questions of procedure, and can deal with the case on the same footing as as ordinary Court of Appeal. Their Lordships' functions on the other hand are limited by the principle laid down in In re Dillet (1) to something much more narrow, namely, this: that if they find that what has been done has been grossly contrary to the forms of justice, or violates fundamental principles, then they have power to interfere. But in the present case they think there was evidence to go to the jury on all the matters which have been dealt with, and it would be contrary to their duty to express any opinion as to whether in that state of things the verdict found by the jury was a right one, or the summing up a perfect one. As regards the sentences, it is obvious that the question is one of form only. The learned Judge has given three periods of eight months in one case and three periods of six months in another, taking each offence as a separate offence. Technically, their Lordships think that these were separate offences, and moreover it would have been possible to give a longer term upon any one or the whole of the charges in question. The analogy between this case and other cases which constantly occur in criminal jurisprudence is a perfect one, and their Lordships see no difficulty in treating these as separate offences. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the petition ought to be dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 805 OF 1913.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1913, Heard, 6 and 7, May. Judgment, 8, May.

KAILASH CHUNDRA NANDY and others, Defendants, Appellants, v. SURENDRO NATH SAMANTA, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Easement—Right to discharge surplus water across a public way, if may be acquired by prescription—Right acquired before dedication of way to public.

A person cannot by prescription aquire a right of easement to discharge surplus water from his own to another tenement through a channel across a public way intervening between the two tenements. To establish such a right he must prove that the public way was formerly private property, and the easement claimed had been acquired while it was still private property.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 24th of February 1913 against a decree of Babu Bejoy Gopal Basu, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Burdwan, dated the 21st of December 1912, reversing a decree of Babu Rash Behary Mukerjee, Munsif at that place, dated the 27th of July 1911.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babus Mahendra Nath Roy, Surendra Chandra Sen and Trailokhya Nath Ghose for the Appellants.

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar, Naresh Chandra Sen-Gupta and Kailash Chandra Biswas for the Respondent.

KAILASH CHUNDRA NANDY v. SURENDRO NATH SAMANTA.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal by the Defendants in a suit for declaration that the Plaintiff has acquired a prescriptive right to discharge the surplus water of his land and tank on the land and tank of the Defendants through a channel across a public road. The properties owned by the parties are not contiguous and are separated by a public road. The case for the Plaintiff is that the surplus water of his tenement flows into his tank, and when there is an overflow, the water is discharged into a channel across the public road and then enters into the Defendants' land where it finds its way into a tank. The question in controversy is, whether a prescriptive right of easement of this discription can be acquired. If the tenements had been contiguous, there is no doubt that the Plaintiff might by prescription have acquired a right to discharge the surplus water of his land through a channel into the land of the Defendants. But in the case before us, a public way intervenes between the two tenements. It cannot be disputed that the Plaintiff cannot possibly have acquired a right of easement in so far as passage of his water through the channel across the public way is concerned. If any authority is needed for this proposition, reference may be made to the cases of Fowler v. Sanders (1) and Dowell v. Sanders (2), where it was laid down that there can be no prescription to make a common nuisance which is prejudicial to all people because it cannot have a legal beginning by license or otherwise, being against the common law. [Comyn, Dig. Pres. F. 2, Viner. Abridg. Pres. E.] Consequently the Plaintiff has not acquired a right under the law to discharge the water from his land into the channel in the public road. How can it be contended then, that he has acquired a right to discharge water from his premises into the servient tenement of the Defendants? He is bound to show that he has acquired a right to carry water by lawful means to the boundary of the land of the Defendants before be can claim to have acquired a right to discharge that water into the Defendants' tank through a channel on another's land. It has been argued, however, that although the way is a public way, it is possible that the Plaintiff has a prescriptive right of easement to discharge his water through the channel across that road. In support of this proposition, reliance has been placed upon the well-known principle that a private right of way and a highway may exist over the same road, and the acquisition by the public of a highway over a road in respect of which private individuals enjoy a right of way does not necessarily destroy the right of the latter. This proposition need not be disputed and is supported by the cases on which reliance has been placed on behalf of the Respondent, namely, Brownlow v. Tomlinson (3), Duncan v. Louch (4), R. v. Chorley (5) and Attorney-General v. Esher Lenoleum Co. (6). As was pointed out by Lord Denman, C. J., in R. v Chorley (5), it is conceivable that a man may have acquired a right of easement over property while it is still private property : if subsequently the owner has dedicated the property to the public, the public have a right subject to the pre-existing easement; in this sense, a private person may have a right of easement over property dedicated to the public. The case before us, however, is not of this description. There is no evidence to show that the land now described as a public road was at any time private property or that before it was dedicated to the public, the Plaintiff had acquired a prescriptive right of easement to discharge the water of his tenement across it. We must consequently hold that the Plaintiff has failed to establish a right to take the surplus water of his tenement by lawful means across the public road up to the boundary of the tenement of the Defendants: it follows that the Plaintiff has no prescriptive right to discharge the water of his tenement into the land of the Defendants.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and the suit dismissed. As the ground upon which the suit fails does not appear to have been taken in the Courts below, each party will pay his costs throughout the litigation.

Appeal allowed.

RULE No. 4168 OF 1912.

HOLMWOOD, J.
CHATTERJEE, J.
1912,
2, September.

CHANDERBODAN KOER, Petitioner,
v.
SHEODHOR PURSHAD, Opposite Party.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), sec. 23—Plaint in suit of Small Cause Court nature involving question of title, returned by Small Cause Court for presentation in Civil Court—Refusal of latter to receive plaint—Remedy if by appeal or revision—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 7, r. 10, Or. 43, r. 1 (a).

When a plaint originally presented in the Small Cause Court is under an order under sec. 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act presented in the ordinary Civil Court, the latter has no authority to refuse to entertain the suit.

An order by the latter Court returning the plaint for presentation to the Small Cause Court, was not an order under Or. 7, r. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code as the plaint had not been originally filed in that Court, and such an order did not require to be set aside by an appeal under Or. 43, r. 1 (a).

The High Court in revision set aside the order as one made in violation of the provisions of sec. 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

This was a Rule granted on the 1st of July 1912 against the order of Babu Lal Behary Bhaduri, Small Cause Court Judge of Mozufferpur, dated the 30th of March 1912.

The Petitioner in this case brought a suit in the Subordinate Judge's Court with powers of a Court of Small Causes for recovery of 169 rupees on account of rent due under a ticca pattah which the Defendant as joint lessor was alleged to have realised from the lessee.

The Subordinate Judge (holding that the right of the Plaintiff depended upon proof or disproof of a title to immoveable property), returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. The plaint thereupon was filed in the Munsif's Court. The Munsif, however, held that the suit was cognisable only by a Small Cause Court, and in this view returned the plaint for presentation in the proper Court.

The Petitioner thereupon again filed his plaint in the Subordinate Judge's Court. A preliminary objection was taken by the CHANDERBODAN KOER v. SHEODHOR PURSHAD.

Defendant that the suit did not lie in his Court in the face of his predecessor's order and this objection was upheld by the Subordinate Judge.

The Plaintiff thereupon moved the High Court and obtained the present Rule.

Babu Lakhi Narayan Singh for the Petitioner.

Babu Gour Chandra Paul for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

It is perfectly clear that this Rule must be made absolute and the Munsif must be directed to admit and hear this suit. The Subordinate Judge passed an order under sec. 23, which order is open only to revision in this Court and that order was a final order. The Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to refer such a case to the regular Civil Court, and the Munsif had no jurisdiction to refuse to entertain the plaint. It is not a case of a plaint originally presented before the Munsif and refused by him which would be open to appeal to the District Judge. It is a case where a case was directly referred to him under the special provision of the law which empowers Small Cause Court Judges to refer such cases when proof or disproof of title to any immoveable property is in their opinion necessary; and looking at the case in that light we do not think that it is at all necessary to direct the Petitioner to file an appeal before the District Judge against the Munsif's order. The Munsif's order is incompetent and must be set aside.

The Rule is made absolute and the case remanded to the file of the Munsif for retrial according to law. The plaint filed in this Court will be sent along with the record to the Munsif.

Rule made absolute.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 884 OF 1913.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. TEUNON, J. 1913, Heard, 12, December. 1914, Judgment, 13, January.	KHETTRA NATH GANGOPADHYAY and another, Petitioners, v. USHABALA DASI, Opposite Party.

Arbitration without intervention of Court—Award—Order filing award, if appealable after decree in accordance with award—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 104, cl. (f). Sch. II, sec. 21.

An Appeal lies against an order filing an award made upon an arbitration without the intervention of the Court even after a decree is passed upon the award.

The decree based upon the award is no doubt final if it is in accordance with the award, but the validity of the decree depends upon the validity of the order directing the award to be filed and if the latter is set aside the decree must be declared inoperative.

This was a Rule granted on the 23rd of June 1913 against an order of Babu Bijoy Gopal Basu, Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 28th of February 1913, affirming that of Babu Achinta Nath Mitra, Munsif, first Court, Burdwan, dated the 28th of July 1911.

The material facts are shortly as follows :—The Plaintiff, Opposite Party, applied under Sch. II, para. 20, C. P. C., for filing an award made upon an arbitration without the intervention of the Court. The Court of first instance ordered that the award be filed in Court. There was an appeal against the order filing the award, which was dismissed on the ground that no appeal lay against the order filing the award.

KHETTRA NATH GANGOPADHYAY v. USHABALA DASI.

Babu Bepin Behary Ghose, for the Petitioners, submitted that the lower Court failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law in refusing to hear the appeal on its merits. Under sec. 104, cl. (f), C. P. C., an appeal lies against an order filing an award. The appeal was filed against the order filing the award and the fact that a decree was drawn up in accordance with the award cannot take away any right of appeal. The following cases were cited: Ganesh Narayan Sing v. Malida Koer (3), Sabitri v. Promoda Prosad Chatterjee (4).

Babu Ram Chandra Majumdar (with him Babu Lalit Mohan Ghose), for the Opposite Party, submitted that no appeal lay after a decree was prepared and signed. As there was no appeal against the decree passed in accordance with the award the decree could not be set aside and therefore there cannot be any appeal against the order filing the award. Sec. 104, cl. (f) merely codifies the law enunciated in the Full Bench case of Janoky Nath Guha v. Brojo Lal Guha (1). The order filing the award is a preliminary order and the judgment and decree in accordance with the award is the final order. You cannot prefer an appeal against the preliminary order when the final order is passed, in the same way as you cannot file an appeal against the preliminary decree.

C. A. V.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The question involved in this Rule is whether an appeal lies against an order filing an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court after a decree is made upon the award. That an appeal lies against an order filing the award is not, and cannot be, disputed having regard to the express terms of cl. (f) of sec. 104 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is contended, however, on behalf of the Opposite Party that an appeal lies only so long as no decree is passed upon the award, but that where the order is followed by a decree before the appeal is filed, the appeal is incompetent, and reliance is placed upon the provisions of sec. 21, cl. 2, of the Second Schedule, and upon certain decisions of this Court.

Now, sec. 21 of the Second Schedule provides that when the Court is satisfied as to the matters stated in that section it shall order the award to be filed and shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award, that a decree shall follow upon the judgment, and no appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award.

The section does not deal with the right of appeal from an order filing an award which is provided for by sec. 104, cl. (f), but it is contended that because a decree, if made in accordance with the award, is final, no appeal lies against the order filing the award if the appeal is not filed before the decree is made. But if the argument of the Opposite Party is well-founded, it would be in the power of the Court making the order filing the award to deprive the complaining party of his right of appeal against the order, by making a decree promptly, although the party may have thirty days or ninety days (as the case may be) within which to file his appeal against the order. It is suggested that the party against whom the order is made should ask the Court not to make the decree until he prefers his appeal against the order. But the section directs the Court to proceed to pronounce its judgment according to the award after ordering the award to be filed and lays down that a decree shall follow the judgment. The Court thus has no option but to pronounce judgment and make a decree and we do not think the Legislature intended to make the right of appeal against an order filing the award, expressly given by sec. 104, cl. (f), depend upon the fact whether a decree is or is not made upon the award before the appeal against the order is filed.

The argument based upon the finality of the decree may equally apply to a case where a decree upon the award is made, subsequent to the filing of an appeal, against the order directing the award to be filed and we are of opinion that the argument is not well-founded.

Reliance is placed, however, on certain observations made by some of the learned Judges in the Full Bench case of Janoky Nath v. Brojo Lal (1). The Full Bench had to consider the question whether an appeal lay from an order passed under sec. 526 of the old Code (Act XIV of 1882) directing the filing of an award and Maclean, C. J., and Ghose, J., were of opinion that a bare order passed by the Court under sec. 526 directing the filing of an award is appealable, but that when a decree has been pronounced by the Court affirming the award it is not appealable. It is contended on behalf of the Opposite Party that the present Code merely formulates the opinion there expressed and that no appeal lies against the order after the decree is made.

It is not profitable to discuss the reasons which led the learned Judges to make the observations on a consideration of the provisions of the old Code. That Code did not expressly give any appeal against an order filing the award whereas the present Code expressly gives a right of appeal from such order, and if it were contended to take away the right of appeal from such an order as soon as a decree is prepared in accordance with the award, we would have expected the Code to provide that no appeal shall lie against such an order if the appeal is not preferred before the decree is made.

Besides, the matters to be considered in an appeal against an order filing the award are totally different from the matters to be considered in an appeal against the decree based upon the award. An appeal will lie against the decree only if, and in so far as, it is not in accordance with or is in excess of the award. A decree may be perfectly in accordance with the award, but a party may have good grounds for complaint against the order filing the award, and we are unable to hold that although a party is expressly given a right of appeal against such an order, such right is taken away as soon as the Court makes a decree in accordance with the award.

Reference was also made to that class of cases where it has been held that it is not open to an Appellant to challenge the correctness of an interlocutory order or preliminary decree without preferring an appeal against the final decree, where (as explained in subsequent cases) the final decree has been made before the appeal against the interlocutory order or preliminary decree has been preferred. But the analogy of these cases cannot apply to a case like this. The reason of the decision in that class of cases is that the Appellant could have appealed against the final decree, whereas a decree based upon an award is not appealable where such decree is in accordance with the award.

(1) I. L. R. 33 Cal. 757 : s. c. 10 C. W. N. 609 (1906).

Lastly, it is contended that the Appellant himself treated his appeal as being one against the decree itself. It is pointed out that full Court-fee upon the value of the suit was paid upon the memorandum of appeal, and a copy of the decree was filed along with it. It appears that the Munsif overruled the objections to the award and by his order, dated the 28th July 1911, directed that the award be filed in Court, and that a decree be passed according to the award. The decree was signed on the 3rd August and the appeal was filed on the 28th August. The appeal was described as an appeal from the decision of the Munsif, dated the 28th July 1911. It seems that the Petitioners paid full Court-fee and filed a copy of the decree because a decree had already been made. There is however nothing to show that the Petitioner acquiesced in the decree, on the contrary the record shows that his pleader refused to sign the decree. The grounds of appeal were directed agains the validity of the order directing the award to be filed and we do not think that under these circumstances the Petitioner lost his right of appeal against the order directing the filing of the award, merely because he erroneously paid the full Court-fee and filed a copy of the decree. In the case of Shib Kristo v. Satish Chandra (2) to which reference was made, the appeal was directed solely against the decree itself and not against the award and the learned Judges observed that had the order appealed from been an order passed under rule 15 it would have been necessary to consider whether an appeal lay against such an order under the Letters Patent.

In two cases in this Court, an appeal was held to lie against an order directing the award to be filed notwithstanding that a decree had been made in accordance with the award. See Ganesh v. Malida (3), and the unreported case of Sabitri v. Promoda (4). In the latter, there was an appeal against the order directing the award to be filed and a Rule was obtained to set aside the order and the decree consequent thereon. The order filing the award was set aside on appeal and the following order was passed in the Rule. "The Rule is made absolute and the decree which has been drawn up on the basis of the order now set aside, will stand cancelled." It does not appear however whether the question raised in this Rule was argued in those cases.

The decree based upon the award is no doubt final if it is in accordance with the award, but the validity of the decree depends upon the validity of the order directing the award to be filed, and if the latter is set aside, the decree must be declared inoperative.

We are of opinion that an appeal lay against the order of the Munsif directing the award to be filed, and we accordingly set aside the order of the Court of Appeal below, and direct that Court to hear the appeal according to law. The Petitioners are entitled to costs of this Rule, which we assess at 2 gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL REFERENCE.]

REF. No. 143 OF 1913.

IMAM, J. CHAPMAN, J. 1913. 16, July.	BALADEV MISRI, Complainant, v. A. A. M. CLARKE, Accused, Petitioner.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 494—European British subject, rights of, regarding trial—Conviction by a Magistrate not a Justice of the Peace—Omission of Magistrate to inform accused of such rights, if vitiates trial.

Where a European British subject was placed on his trial before a Magistrate who was not a Justice of the Peace on a charge under sec. 323, I. P. C., and the Magistrate convicted the accused without asking him whether he was a European British subject and without informing him of his rights as a European British subject under the Code of Criminal Procedure :

Held—That the conviction and sentence should be set aside on account of the error in the procedure of the Magistrate in the trial.

This was a reference from the Sessions Judge of Sylhet (S. E. Hinton, Esq), dated the 27th of May 1913, for setting aside the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Habiganj, dated the 10th of April 1913, convicting the accused under sec. 323, I. P. C, and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 8 or in default to suffer simple imprisonment for 3 days and also directing him to pay the Court-fees (Rs. 2-12) to the complainant.

One Baladeb Misri filed a petition before the Sub-Divisional Officer, Habiganj, alleging that the Petitioner, who was the Assistant Manager of Satchuri garden, beat him on his back with a cane.

The Petitioner pleaded not guilty stating that he heard that some Satchuri coolies beat the complainant because he was formerly the coolies' priest in Satchuri and lived there, but it was discovered that he kept a Mussalman woman. They consequently threatened to beat him and he fled to Surma garden. Soon after, complainant, with some Surma coolies, came to Satchuri garden, assaulted several coolies and forcibly took away the Head Babu, the Head Sardar and some coolies to the bunglow at Surma. He was therefore set upon and beaten.

The Sub-Divisional Officer found the Petitioner guilty and convicted and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 8, in default to undergo simple imprisonment for 3 days under sec. 323, Indian Penal Code, and ordered him to pay the Court-fees expenses incurred by the complainant.

Against this order the Petitioner moved the Sessions Judge on the ground that the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction inasmuch as he did not, as required by sec. 454, Cr. P. Code, ask the accused whether he was a European British subject. The Petitioner stated that he was a European British subject and that his rights were not explained to him. Moreover, the Magistrate was not a Justice of the Peace and was therefore not empowered to try a European British Subject.

The Sessions Judge made a reference to the High Court under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., recommending the setting aside of the conviction and sentence.

Babu Hememdra Kumar Das for the Accused.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a reference by the Sessions Judge of Sylhet sent up to us for setting aside the sentence of fine passed upon one Mr. A. A. M. Clarke for the offence of assault. The ground on which the order is attacked is that the accused was not informed of his right under the law to be tried according to the procedure laid down for the trial of European British subjects.

The law is quite clear and distinct on the subject and the error in the procedure of the Magistrate in the trial of the accused is apparent.

We therefore accept the reference and set aside the conviction of the accused, Mr. A. A. M. Clarke. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Conviction set aside.

APPEAL No. 569 OF 1913.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1913,
Judgment,
1, September.

C. H. BOOTH, Accused, Appellant,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party, Respondent.

Bengal Excise Act (V, B. C. of 1909), secs. 2 (12), 46, 61—"Import," meaning of—Attempt to 'import"—Evidence—Letter written by accused when admissible against himself—Letter written to accused and intercepted, if evidence—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 11.

Where the accused was convicted under sec. 46 of the Bengal Excise Act of having illicitly imported cocaine but it appeared that the cocaine was seized by the Customs authorities and was never delivered to him.

Held—That the accused was liable to be convicted of an attempt to commit the offence of importation under sec. 61 read with sec. 46 of the Act.

That under cl. 12 of sec. 2 of the Act the word "import" means to "bring into Bengal."

That though an article may be actually within the geographical limits of Bengal it cannot be said to have been brought into Bengal if it was intercepted at the Customs office.

It is well settled that a letter written by an accused person when self-disserving is primâ facie evidence against him if it relates distinctly to a relevant point; it is not necessary that it should be signed; it is enough if it be traced to the writer, and it is admissible though it may have been intercepted or surreptitiously detained and opened.

R. v. DERRINGTON (1) referred to.

A letter addressed to the accused which appeared to have been sent in reply to a communication by the accused himself was admissible in evidence, under sec. 11 of the Evidence Act, even though the letter having been intercepted never reached the accused.

R. v. COOPER (2) referred to.

This was an Appeal against the order of the 2nd Presidency Magistrate, Mr. E. Keays, passed on the 6th June 1913, convicting the accused under sec. 46 of the Excise Act and sentencing him to undergo 3 months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Mr. James and Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Petitioner.

Mr. Pugh and Babu Jotindra Mohan Ghose for the Crown.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Appellant, C. H. Booth, was charged with the commission of an offence under sec. 46 of the Bengal Excise Act, 1909, inasmuch as he had imported 491 ounces of cocaine without a license or pass. He was tried by the Second Presidency

C. H. BOOTH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Magistrate of Calcutta, convicted and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for three months and payment of a fine of one thousand rupees.

The circumstances under which the Appellant was convicted may be briefly stated in so far as they are disclosed by the evidence.

On the 23rd January 1913, the Customs authorities discovered a large quantity of cocaine concealed in several bales of old clothes which had been exported from England by C. Porter & Co., by S. S. Borneo for delivery to the adressee, one Rasu Prasad. The Invoice and Bill of Lading for the consignment had been made over by one Kalicharan Mukherjee to Cox & Co., in order that the goods might be cleared and passed through the Customs House. Kalicharan Mukherjee called at the office of Cox & Co., on the 23rd January to take delivery, and was taken to the Customs authorities who had already discovered the cocaine secreted in the bales of clothes. What information enabled the Customs authorities to make the discovery has not been disclosed in the evidence and is not material for the purposes of the present case. It is sufficient to state that Kalicharan Mukherjee was prosecuted before the Chief Presidency Magistrate and was convicted. He moved this Court and obtained a Rule. The Rule has been discharged and the sentence affirmed, though the conviction has been altered to one under sec. 61 of the Bengal Excise Act, namely, the offence of attempting to import cocaine in contravention of the law. As already stated, the Bill of Lading showed that the goods were consigned by Porter & Co. to Rasu Prasad and bore the endorsement of both Porter & Co. and Rasu Prasad. The present Appellant had ostensibly no connection with the incident, and we have not been told what circumstances led the investigating officers to suspect that the accused was in any way connected with the matter. We know this much only that on the 30th January 1913, an order was obtained from the Chief Presidency Magistrate to intercept all letters posted at Calcutta to the address of Porter & Co. of London, and on the 3rd of February a similar order was obtained for the interception of all letters addressed to the Appellant. The result was that the investigating authorities intercepted a letter dated the 28th January which was addressed to Porter & Co., and had been posted on the 29th January. This letter does not bear the signature of the writer, but evidence has been given to prove that it is in the handwriting of the accused. The letter has rightly been described by the Magistrate as a remarkable document and was in these terms :—

"Dear A., 28-1-1913.

There is no news to send. There was nothing from you this mail, and I only hope you did not send any more goods after the Borneo, but fear this would be too good. From very patient enquiries from the highest sources, I find these people were given away by people they had quarrelled with, and so far as our work was concerned, there is no fault to find. The goods were passed by the appraiser and only examined in Messrs. Cox's godown on receipt of information. So, you see, had you only remained out here, as I arranged, we might still be carrying on a good business, beside having already done 40% better. I find, when my plans are not carried out, disaster follows, but it is idle to go over this ground again. As old clothes are finished with, the question now is, what new to try. I suggest remnants of cloth and also alpaca; C. in paper packets can be put in these rolls after a time. But I rely chiefly on Quinine. Go to Messrs. Dompier & Co., 8, Harp Lane, London, E. C., and ask them cost price for 1lb tins for export. Don't say, of India, because they have an agent here, or if you do say, for Karachi. Pack about 40 in a case, and let me have one case to commence with, addressed to Messrs. Smith & Co., Chemists, Jubbulpore. Of course, you must get another room somewhere, and call yourself something new—how would Allen & Co., Shippers and Agents do? You should have new stationery printed. I shall clear this myself, and, in future, all goods, and store myself as well, and all will be well. About the third lot of quinine should be loaded. Unfortunately, quinine is very dear now, but we cannot help that. Some day we may make a profit on the quinine also; all you have to (do is?) to get some C. packed in a soldered tin, well papered inside; having slipped the quinine out of the outer paper, slip in the other tin and replace labels. A piece of clean wet blotting paper will remove all labels and enable you to do this quite easily. Better sell the press. Get the quinine packed in exactly similar boxes each time, nicely lined with paper, and don't fasten the top too tightly, but make all other sides very secure (with screws;) this will cause examiners to open top lid only and the loaded tins will be at the bottom. I think this is a safe game. I expect our friend Mukherjee will get 3 months and he is making an awful outcry about it. Why he gave his own name, I don't know. The silly ass talks of appeals, and will spend thousand instead of getting it over quickly. I am very sick at the accident, and fearfully disappointed but not surprised. How we shall ever get the present stock out, I don't know. Perhaps I will bring some myself some day. I can't think of any plan to get hold of already shipped stuff by transferring to Madras or recalling. But this you would have thought out a long time ago and will do your best about. In a case like this, the least said is better, and it only remains to make fresh plans. I shall never have any confidents in future. You and I only. I shall have a safe cache and sell myself according to the market; a little that way is better than a lot the old way. Unluckily the quinine plan does not deal with bottles. Hoping you are well.

Sincerely.

P. S.—But clear out of Bartholomew close at once. You might hear from Board of Trade otherwise, not to mention India Office. But they can only bluster."

The first question for determination is, whether this letter was written by the accused. We have on the record several letters admittedly written by the accused, including one written by him to the Collector of Customs. The Magistrate has noticed the extraordinary general resemblance of handwriting in the case of the intercepted letter and the letter addressed to the Collector of Customs. There is also the evidence of Mr. Hardless that two-thirds of the intercepted letter is in the handwriting of the accused, though the expert is not equally sure as to the remaining one-third. It is patent, however, that the whole of the intercepted letter was written by one person. We have further the evidence of an assistant in the Mercantile Bank who is perfectly familiar with the handwriting of the accused as one of the customers of the

C. H. BOOTH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Bank. We feel no doubt upon the whole evidence that the intercepted letter was written by the accused. The next question which arises is, whether the letter refers to the incident of the 23rd January 1913. Upon this point, there is really no room for controversy. The letter plainly refers to the seizure of the cocaine on S. S. Borneo, and there is no suggestion that there was any other consignment by the same steamer which was seized about the same time. There is also no doubt that the "friend Mukherjee" mentioned in the letter, is Kalicharan Mukherjee who was prosecuted in connection with the same incident and convicted. We have, consequently, the two facts that the letter was written by the accused and that the incident mentioned therein is the discovery and seizure of the consignment of cocaine concealed within old clothes on S. S. Borneo on the 23rd January 1913. It is obvious that the letter is, in these circumstances, admissible against the accused, though it may have been intercepted. It is well settled that a letter written by an accused person, when self-disserving, is primâ facie evidence against him, if it relates distinctly to a relevant point; it is not necessary that it should be signed; it is enough if it is traced to the writer, and it is admissible though it may have been intercepted or surreptitiously detained and opened. R. v. Derrington (1).

We have next to consider the effect of the contents of the letter. It has been argued by learned Counsel for the accused that the recitals in the letter do not show that the writer was the importer of the cocaine, and in this connection an elaborate argument has been addressed to us as to the relative rights of a consignor and a consignee under a C. F. I. contract. The question raised, however interesting it may be, does not affect the matter before us. The point for determination is, whether the accused has imported cocaine in contravention of the Bengal Excise Act. The term "import" as used in the Statute has a very wide significance, for under cl. (12) of sec. 2, the term "import" means "to bring into Bengal." The contents of the letter make it manifest that the accused imported the cocaine into Bengal or at least attempted to do so; it is immaterial for our present purpose to enquire whether he was the consignee and whether the title to the goods had vested in him under the terms of the contract between him and the exporters. It is worthy of note that the accused states in the letter that if the addressee had only remained in this country as suggested by him "they might still be carrying on a good business." He then proceeds to discuss with some elaboration future plans of work and possible modes of importation of cocaine with the least chance of detection. It has also been argued that on the most unfavourable view, the accused was the partner of Porter & Co., and consequently an exporter from England and not an importer into Bengal. The answer to this argument is that he may have been both exporter and importer, and it is plain, that whether he was an exporter or not, he was an importer. We are convinced that the accused did attempt to import cocaine in contravention of the law, though it may not be possible, on the evidence as it stands, to determine with precision the extent of the benefit that would accrue to him upon a successful venture. In this view, it is needless to consider in detail the other evidence on the record, which, in our opinion, materially confirms the conclusion at which we have arrived. But we may mention that there is satisfactory evidence to show that on the day following the discovery of the cocaine by the Customs authorities, telegrams were sent by C. Barker, 71, Canning Street, to Portanigra, London, and Applebaum Grodnow, each containing a single word "Milla." What this term means has not been proved, but it has been plausibly suggested on behalf of the prosecution that it was intended to signify 'Discovered.' It has been proved that 71, Canning Street, is the business address of the accused, and in this Court as also in the Court below a remarkable similarity was noticed between the admitted handwriting of the accused and the signature C. Barker on the telegraph forms. It has also been proved that a man named Applebaum was a partner of the accused, while the term Portanigra is the telegraphic address of Porter & Co., the exporters of the cocaine. These circumstances, though not conclusive by themselves, do undoubtedly tend to throw very important light on the case. We have further two other letters posted in England and addressed to the accused, which were intercepted in the Post Office. One of these is dated 24th January 13, and states "Your Milla received." This fits in precisely with the telegram sent on the morning of the 24th January 1913. The effect of this piece of evidence against the case for the defence was fully appreciated by the learned Counsel for the Appellant, and he contended that the letter addressed to the accused was not admissible in evidence. But we are of opinion that this contention is not well-founded and is opposed to the decision in R. v. Cooper (2). In that case, A was charged with obtaining and attempting to obtain money by false pretences from four persons by an advertisement offering employment to all who sent him one shilling in stamps. Letters from 281 other persons, expressed to be in answer to the advertisement, and each enclosing twelve one penny stamps were held admissible, although the letters had been intercepted at the Post Office and had never in fact reached A, and could consequently be deemed at best only constructively in his possession. In the case before us, the fact that a reply from Porter & Co., posted immediately after the telegram purporting to be sent by C. Barker and referring to the telegram, was addressed to Booth, would be a relevant fact under sec. 11 of the Evidence Act and cogent evidence to show that Booth was the sender of the telegram. Upon a consideration of the entire evidence on the record we are fully satisfied, notwithstanding the very able argument addressed to us by Mr. Langford James, that the accused did attempt to import the cocaine which was seized on S. S. Borneo on the 23rd January 1913. There is only one other point which requires consideration, namely, can the accused be held, as the Magistrate has done, to have imported cocaine, when as a matter of fact the cocaine was seized by the Customs authorities and was never delivered to him. In our opinion, upon the facts found, he is guilty of an attempt to import rather than of actual importation. Though an article may be actually within the geographical limits of Bengal, we do not think it can be said to have been brought into Bengal, if, as happened here, it has been intercepted at the Customs House. Consequently, the accused is liable to be convicted, not of an offence under sec. 46 but of an attempt to commit the offence of importation under sec. 61 read with sec. 46 of the Bengal Excise Act. We alter the conviction accordingly, but confirm the sentence and dismiss the Appeal. The accused must surrender and serve out the remainder of the term of sentence as imposed by the Magistrate.

(1) 2 C. & P. 418 (1826).

IMAM, J. CHAMPMAN, J. 1913, 7, August.	MIRZA HASSAN MIRZA, Accused, Petitioner, v. MUSST. MAHBUBAN, Complainant, Opposite Party.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 211—Laying false information before police—Duty of prosecution—Onus of proof—Elements necessary to be proved—Failure of defence to examine witness, effect of.

Where the Petitioner was convicted under sec. 211 of the Penal Code of having laid a false information of theft before the police and the Petitioner's case was that he had heard from his wife that the persons named in the information had disappeared and the properties named therein were missing and his information was based on this statement of the wife and the prosecution did not prove that there was no such statement by the wife who was not examined as a witness for the prosecution nor did the Petitioner examine her as a witness on his side :

Held—That the duty of the prosecution in a case under sec. 211, I. P. C., is to prove by satisfactory evidence that the charge was wilfully false to the knowledge of the maker of the charge.

That it is for the prosecution to establish their case and if they fail to supply hat proof which is required to secure the conviction of the accused, the failure on the part of the latter to examine any particular witness or witnesses will not imply the guilt of the accused.

That the case against the Petitioner being that no theft took place, the obligation of proving it rested on the prosecution.

In the present case the Prosecution not having established that there was as a matter of fact no theft and the Petitioner knew that there was no theft, the High Court set aside the conviction and sentence under sec. 211, I. P. C.

This was a Rule against the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Patna, dated the 11th day of April 1913, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 211, I. P. C., and sentencing him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three months, an appeal from which order was dismissed by the Sessions Judge of Patna, on the 16th of May 1913.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Surahwardy and Mv. A. K. Fuzlal Huq for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad for the Crown.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioner has been convicted of an offence under sec. 211, I. P. C., the case against him being that he laid a false information before the Police charging his mother-in-law Mussamut Langri with stealing properties belonging to him from his house and that the false information was maliciously laid with intent to cause injury to the persons implicated in the case.

The relations between the parties may be shortly stated here. Mussamut Mahbuban, daughter of Mussamut Ghafuran, who died some time before this alleged occurrence, was the widow of one Wajid Hossain. On the death of her husband, she married the Petitioner, Mirza Hossain Mirza. Mussamut Ghafuran, her son named Ashgar by her former husband, her sister-in-law, that is a brother's wife, Mussamut Langri and Mussamut Mahbuban, all these people seem to have been living with the Petitioner in a house in Patna city, the house being the property of Ghafuran. On the death of Ghafuran, her heirs, according to the Mahomedan Law, were entitled to their respective shares in the inheritance, the Petitioner as husband being one of them.

The case propounded by Mussamut Mahbuban was that the Petitioner was not the husband of Ghafuran but had an improper intimacy with her and was only her lover. This statement of Mahbuban has not been believed by the learned Sessions Judge who heard the appeal and the status of the Petitioner as husband has been accepted by him. We thus have it that the prosecution in attempting to prove their case against the Petitioner started by denying his status in relation to Mussamut Ghafuran and so, on a very important and material part of the case, the prosecution have set up a false allegation.

The case against the Petitioner being that no theft took place, the obligation of of proving it rests on the prosecution. We are not satisfied that they have succeeded in establishing by evidence that there was no such theft. The motive alleged for the institution of a false case against Mahbuban and Langri is said to be that the Petitioner claiming the house left by Ghafuran as his own under a purchase made by him from her attempted to propound two sale-deeds, and finding his difficulty in respect of propounding genuine title-deeds wanted to have evidence of their disappearance and thus falsely alleged against Mahbuban and Langri that they had removed the sale-deed, along with other properties belonging to the Petitioner.

We are not satisfied that the motive alleged against the Petitioner is quite sound. According to the evidence in this case, the value of the house does not seem to be much more than Rs. 95. In the absence of a sale-deed, the Petitioner would yet be entitled to a one-fourth share in the house as husband of Ghafuran. It seems to us that by laying this information against Mahbuban and Langri and stating therein that the sale-deeds had disappeared, the Petitioner, instead of establishing any evidence of the existence of the deeds, was as a matter of fact weakening his position by urging that they had been lost or stolen. No doubt, that would have left him an opportunity of adducing secondary evidence as to their contents; but it is also to be borne in mind that they were never alleged to have been registered and, that being so, more than ordinary evidence would be required to prove their contents. In the circumstances, we are not impressed by the motive alleged by the prosecution for the institution of a false case.

The Petitioner's case in the First Information was that on a certain Eid day, he had been out visiting friends. When he came back to his house, he found his wife whom he had married on the death of Ghafuran crying, and he learnt from her that Mahbuban, Langri and Asgar had disappeared from the house, that the box containing G. C. notes, jewelleries and the sale-deed had been broken open and the contents thereof were missing. He then examined the box and found that the valuables contained therein were not there. Thereupon he informed some of his neighbours and started on a search to find out the three absconding persons but in vain. He at last reported the incident to the Police at the thana in Patna city. From the prosecution case, it seems that Mahbuban, Langri and Asgar had been living in the same house with the Petitioner and did, as a matter of fact, disappear on the day in question.

The only point that remains to be considered is whether on that day there was a theft or not. It is quite possible that there was no theft; but we require good evidence to satisfy us on the point. The duty of the prosecution in a case under sec. 211 is to prove by satisfactory evidence that the charge was wilfully false to the knowledge of the maker of the charge. That has not been done in this case. The prosecution have not established that there was as a matter of fact no theft; nor have they established that the Petitioner knew that there was no theft. His case has been from the beginning that he heard from his wife that the three persons had disappeared and that the money, G. C. Notes and ornaments in the box were missing. The prosecution have done nothing whatever to prove that there was no such statement by the wife to the Petitioner. Had there been such proof, the Petitioner would undoubtedly have been guilty of laying a false charge against the persons whom he intended to injure; but that important evidence is wanting in this case.

On behalf of the Crown, it has been contended that the Petitioner having entered on his defence and examined the witnesses to prove his case was bound to examine his wife in order to prove his innocence. We may say here that it is for the prosecution to establish their case and if they fail to supply that proof which is required to secure the conviction of the accused, the failure on the part of the latter to examine any particular witness or witnesses will not imply the guilt as having been proved.

We, therefore, make this Rule absolute and set aside the conviction of the Petitioner. He will be discharged from his bail.

Rule made absolute.

IMAM, J. CHAPMAN, J. 1913, Heard, 17, July. Judgment, 25, July.	LAKHAN CHANDRA ROY and others, Petitioners, v. FAKUB MONDAL and others, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 145, 435, 526, cl. (8)—Proceeding under sec. 145 sec. 526 if applies to.

A party to a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., is not entitled to an adjournment of the case under sub-sec. 8 of sec. 526 Cr. P. C.

This was a Rule against the order of A. W. Warde-Jones, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Purnea, dated the 12th of November 1912, declaring under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., the 1st party to be in actual possession of the disputed land and forbidding interference therewith by the 2nd party.

The portion of the judgment of the Magistrate which bears on the question decided is set out below :—

"This is a trial under sec. 145, Cr. P. C, in order to decide actual possession to eight parcels of lands claimed by one or other of the 1st party as against a certain zemindar named Mansukh Bhai Bhagu Bhai and his servants who are the 2nd party in his case.

"The case has been pending since the 14th of August last, but Mansukh Bhai Bhagu Bhai was added as a party on the 8th of September last; since then there have been five postponemen s for various reasons and parties fully warned more than once to be ready in all respects in the matter both of oral and documentary evidence. Notwithstanding this on the 7th November current, the 2nd party applied to this Court for another postponement under sec. 526, Cr. P. C, to move the Hon. High Court for quashing the present proceedings. As the case has been under hearing since the 2nd September the petition was rejected, it having obviously been made with no other object than to delay and defeat justice. On the 7th instant when the evidence of the 1st party was recorded, the 2nd party left the Court room and made no cross-examination of the witnesses tendered by the 1st party."

Mr. P. L. Roy and Babu Jogendra Nath Mookherjee for the Petitioners.

Messrs. B. Chacktaburtty, Z. R. Zahed and M. Sowghat Ali for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Rule was issued to show cause why the order passed under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., should not be set aside on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to go on with the proceedings after an application under sec. 526, Cr. P. C., had been made before him.

The only point that requires to be considered in this case is whether the provisions of sec. 526 have any application to proceedings under Chap. XII of the Code.

After carefully considering the cases, Lolit Mohun Moitra v. Surju Kanta Acharjee (1), In re Pandurang Govind Pujari (2), In re Arumuga Tegundan (3), Gurudas Nag v. Gaganendra Nath Tagore (4) and Jaggu Ahir v. Murli Shukul (5), and on considering the effect of the provisions of sec. 435, Cr. P. C, in respect of proceedings under Chap. XII of the Code, we are of opinion that a party to a proceeding under sec. 145 s not entitled to an adjournment of the case under sub-sec. 8 of sec. 526.

That being our view, the order of the Magistrate refusing to postpone the case to enable the Petitioners to come up to this Court under sec. 526 was not improper and therefore the order made under sec 145 is not without jurisdiction.

We herefore discharge this Rule.

Rule discharged.

ULFAT SHEIKH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Assam—Act VII of 1905, sec. 3, effect of—Notification of Local Government issued prior to 1905, application of, to Districts formerly in Eastern Bengal and Assam.

The notification issued by the then Government of Bengal under sec. 16, Cr. P. C., prior to 1905, that a difference of opinion between two Honorary Magistrates forming a Bench is to be settled by the casting vote of the Chairman, which was one of the notifications which were kept in force in the Province of Eastern Bengal and Assam by sec. 3 of Act VII of 1905, still applies to the District of Faridpur under sec. 3 of Act VII of 1912.

This was a Rule granted on the 2nd of September 1913 against an order of Babu Gopal Lal Chuckerbutty of the Bench of Honorary Magistrates of Gopalgunge, dated the 31st of July 1913, convicting the Petitioners Nos. 3 and 5 under secs. 325 and 142, I. P. C., and sentencing each to rigorous imprisonment for two months under the former section and one month under the latter and convicting Petitioners Nos. 4, 2, 6, 8 and 1 under secs. 147 and 323, I. P. C., and sentencing each to one month's rigorous imprisonment under the former section and a fine of Rs. 30 under the latter, an appeal from this order was dismissed by the District Magistrate of Faridpur, on the 11th of September 1913.

The order was the order of one of two Magistrates on the Bench, viz., the Chairman who recorded a judgment of conviction whilst his colleague recorded a judgment of acquittal. The Magistrates took the view that in the circumstances the Chairman had a casting vote, the result being the convictions and sentences as stated above.

Babus Monmatha Nath Mukherjee and Satindra Nath Mukherjee for the Petitioners.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioners were tried by a Bench consisting of two Honorary Magistrates. At the conclusion of the trial the Chairman recorded a judgment of conviction and his colleague a judgment of acquittal. The Magistrates took the view that in these circumstances the Chairman had a casting vote. The trial thus resulted in a conviction. The appeal to the District Magistrate was dismissed.

The Code of Criminal Procedure enables the Local Government to make rules respecting the mode of settling differences of opinion which may arise between the members of a Bench of Magistrates. In exercise of this power the Government of Bengal issued a notification in 1906, directing that in the event of a disagreement the case shall be referred back to the District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Officer as the case may be. The Rule was issued in the present case upon the ground that the direction contained in the notification had been contravened.

The case, however, comes from the District of Faridpur. That District was not within the limits of the Government of Bengal in the year 1906, and we have not been able to find any provision under which we can hold that the application of the notification of 1906 was extended when the territorial limits of the Government of Bengal were extended in 1912. We must hold therefore that the notification does not apply.

It has however been contended that there is at the present time no rule in force in the District of Faridpur providing for the settlement of a difference of opinion between the members of a Bench of Honorary Magistrates. To deal clearly with the contention it will be necessary to shortly relate the history of the matter so far as the District of Faridpur is concerned. Prior to 1905, the District was within the territorial limits of the former Province of Bengal. During that period a notification was in force under which a difference of opinion between two members of a Bench was to be settled, as it was in fact settled in the present case, by the casting vote of the Chairman. In 1905, a new Province, the Province of Eastern Bengal and Assam, was created and the District of Faridpur was declared to be within the limits of the new Province. The District thus ceased to belong to the Province of Bengal, but by the provisions of Act VII of 1905, the old notification on the present subject as well as all other notifications of the then Government of Bengal were retained in force. In 1912, the Province of Eastern Bengal and Assam was brought to an end with the result that the District of Faridpur found itself within the territorial limits of the new Presidency of of Bengal.

The contention is that when the Province of Eastern Bengal and Assam came to an end and the Act of 1905 was repealed in 1912, the old notification of the former Province of Bengal referred to which, between 1905 and 1912, derived its force in the District of Faridpur by reason of the Act of 1905, also came to an end, and the notification of 1906, having no application, as we have seen, to Faridpur, it is contended that the result was that there is no rule on the subject in force in Faridpur.

The contention cannot in our opinion prevail. Sec. 3 of Act VII of 1912 provided that all notifications in force in Faridpur (as in other parts of the former Province of Eastern Bengal and Assam) should be construed as if they had been issued by the new Governor-in-Council of Bengal. This is the meaning we attach to the section. It would be contrary to principle to hold that the general terms of the subsequent sec. 8 of Act VII of 1912, repealing Act VII of 1905, limited the application of the special provisions of the former sec. 3. It is not possible to hold that the intention of the Legislature was that the provisions of sec. 3 should not apply to notifications which derived their force in the former Province of Eastern Bengal and Assam from the Act of 1905

We must therefore hold that in the District of Faridpur the old notification is still in force, under which a difference of opinion between two Honorary Magistrates forming a Bench is to be settled by the casting vote of one of them, namely, the Chairman.

This Rule came before a Full Bench of this Court in 1906. The Chief Justice in the case of Emperor v. Kali Prosanna (1) then stated that the rule was "very unsatisfactory and equally undesirable." Similar opinions were expressed by Ghose, J., Rampini, J., Sale, J., and Pratt, J. We desire to express our concurrence and to add that we would be glad to see the new rule issued in 1906 extended to the Districts of Eastern Bengal both upon principle and with a view to uniformity.

We have been asked to set aside the convictions upon the ground that in view of the difference of opinion between the two Magistrates the District Magistrate should have acquitted in appeal. We are not able however to lay down any such

(1) 10 C. W. N. 642 (1906).

ULFAT SHAIKH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

general rule though no doubt the fact that one of the two trying Magistrates was in favour of acquittal was a very important factor calling for careful consideration.

The Rule is discharged so far as the convictions are concerned. We do not interfere with the sentences passed upon the Petitioners Nos. 3 and 5, Lebu Sheikh and Khader Sarip. In the case of the other Petitioners we reduce the sentences of imprisonment to the periods already undergone. The sentence of fine and of imprisonment in default will in each case stand.

Rule discharged.

HARENDRA NARAYAN DASS, Petitioner,
v.
RAMJAN KHAN, Complainant, Opposite party.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 379, 109—Theft, abetment of—Claim of right set up by defence—Finding of absence of good faith without adjudication as to the existence or otherwise of right set up if sufficient for conviction.

Where the Petitioner was convicted of abetment of theft of wood from a forest and the defence of the Petitioner was that he had a right to take wood from the forest in question without a pass, but the Magistrate without deciding whether the Petitioner had such a right or not found that the Petitioner's claim to take wood without a pass could not possibly have been made in good faith inasmuch as the Petitioner had himself taken passes previously for the removal of wood from the forest:

Held—That whatever the intention and knowledge of the Petitioner was, he could not be convicted of theft or abetment thereof when it was not found as a matter of fact that he was not entitled to take wood from the forest.

This was a Rule against the order of P. G. Mukerjee, Esq., Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Goalparah, dated the 18th of April 1913, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 379, 109, I. P. C., and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 50 or in default to undergo rigorous imprisoment for one month, an application for a reference of which order to the High Court for revision was rejected by the Sessions Judge, Assam Valley Districts, on the 12th of May 1913.

The facts will sufficiently appear from the material portions of the judgment of the Magistrate which is quoted below :—

"The accused Harendra Narayan Das is a tenant of the Mechpara zemindars at Goalpara, and the accused Ram Sing Teli is a cartman in his employ. The case for the prosecution is that accused Ram Sing did, on the 20th January last, commit theft of a cart-load of wood including a karai tree by cutting and removing the same from the forest of the said zemindar, without the consent of the said zemindar or their officers and without any pass for so doing and that the accused Harendra Narayan abetted the commission of the said offence.

"The accused have pleaded not guilty. The accused did not choose to make any statement verbally but have filed written statements. In his written statement the accused Harendra has said that the tenants of Goalpara have a right to cut and take fuel and grass and bamboos for home consumption from the zemindar's forests without any payment and that they have been doing so from the time immemorial, that zemindars are attempting to deprive them of this right: that in exercise of this right he sent his servant to cut and bring the fuel, who did so. The accused Ram Sing Teli admits having brought away the firewood but denies having cut and brought any Mohali tree.

"It has been urged by the learned pleader for the defence in this case, with considerable emphasis, that his clients had a right to take the fuel without any pass and that also it should be regarded as an incidence of their tenancy. I think it is beyond the province of this Court to adjudicate whether such a right existed or not. The only thing I need look into is whether the claim of right that has been set up in the case is at all bonâ fide or not. In order to be bonâ fide the claim must be fair and good and there must be evidence to show that it is so. It has not been disputed that by general law the right to trees belongs to the landlords. In the absence of proof to the contrary the right to fell trees and take them cannot be regarded as an ordinary incidence of tenancy. Apart from this it has been proved by the prosecution in this case, that the accused Harendra Narayan Das had himself taken out passes for fuel for home consumption in 1307 and again in 1309, that his brother Meru had taken out a similar pass in 1308 and that his father Dhairjyaram had taken out passes before them. It has also been proved that the accused Harendra's neighbours have taken out passes. It has been contended on behalf of the defence that the accused Harendra was a mere school boy at the time when he took out passes and consequently did not know what he was doing and should not be held to be bound thereby. It is true that he was quite young then. But I think that this fact of having taken passes should, at any rate, be taken into consideration as showing his knowledge that passes are taken out. It is also in evidence that about a fortnight before the occurrence accused Ram Sing Teli brought another cart load of fuel and on that occasion the complainant Barkandaz spoke to Harendra and enquired if he had taken a pass and that Harendra promised to take out a pass on the next day. It also appears from the evidence of prosecution witness Hridoy Kanta Maitra, Naib of the zemindars, that in Agrahyan last accused Harendra came to him and said that he had purchased a cart and wanted to take a pass and enquired about the fee he would have to pay. The Naib told him that Rs. 6 should be paid, whereupon the accused enquired if in view of the fact that many months of the year had already expired a reduction could not be made and the Naib replied in the negative, whereupon the accused went away. This evidence stands unchallenged and unrebutted. In the circumstances set forth above I find it difficult to come to the conclusion that the claim of right set up by the accused is fair and good and justifiable.

"In view of the facts and circumstances stated above, I am inclined to hold that the accused Harendra did not act in the assertion of a bonâ fide claim of right, but that he acted with intent to cause wrongful gain to himself and therefore dishonestly. The accused Ram Sing Teli is a cartman in the employ of accused Harendra and I think the prosecution has not been able to sufficiently prove that he shared the dishonest intention of his master. The fact that he ran away leaving his cart may be interpreted in a way consistent with his innocence, namely, that he was simply frightened. I find the accused Ram Sing Teli not guilty of the offence of theft with which he has been charged and acquit him. The accused Harendra is clearly guilty of abetment of theft and I find him guilty of an offence under secs. 379/109, I. P. C., and convict him accordingly."

Mr. H. N. Sen and Babu Sahay Ram Bose for the Petitioner.

Messrs. C. R. Das and Bardalai for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

COXE, J.—This was a Rule on the District Magistrate of Goalpara to show cause why the conviction of the Petitioner for an offence under sec. 379 read with sec. 109, I. P. C., should not be set aside on the ground that there was no dishonest intention in the act complained of. The Petitioner has been convicted of abetment of theft and the property said to have been stolen was wood taken from the forest.

It appears from the judgment of the Magistrate that it was urged on behalf of the Petitioner that he had a right to take wood without a pass. The Magistrate however refused to decide whether the Petitioner had such a right or not. He says :—"I think it is beyond the province of this Court to adjudicate whether such right exists or not"; and in the conclusion of his judgment he also refused to go into the question—"whether the tenants have any such right as has been set up in this case." But he fouud that inasmuch as the accused had himself taken passes for the removal of wood from the forest, his claim to take wood without a pass could not possibly have been made in good faith. It does not appear to me that the question of good faith really arises in this case. From the passage I have quoted it is clear that it was the Petitioner's case in the Court below that he had a right to take this wood. Before he can be convicted of theft or of causing wrongful gain or wrongful loss it must, in my opinion, be found that he had not this right to take the wood. The Magistrate carefully guarded himself from coming to any decision on this point, and therefore it appears to me that whatever the intention and knowledge of the accused was, he cannot be convicted of theft, when it has not been found as a matter of fact that he was not entitled to the property which he took.

In my opinion, the Rule must be made absolute and the conviction and sentence set aside and the fine, if paid, refunded.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

Rule maae absolute.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 202, 522—Local enquiry by pleader—Dispossession of immoveable property—Consideration of new ground at hearing of Rule.

A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order a local enquiry by a pleader in the nature of a commission in a civil case.

An order under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., is not sustainable where there is no finding that the complainant has been dispossessed of any immoveable property.

Case in which the High Court considered a ground other than those on which the Rule was issued.

MOHAR KHAN v. GAYZUDDIN SHEIKH.

This Rule was issued against the order of Mr. Abdul Barik, Deputy Magistrate of Pabna, dated the 8th of March 1913, convicting the Petitioners under sec. 341, I. P. C., and sentencing them each to pay a fine of Rs. 15, in default to undergo 10 days' simple imprisonment and awarding a compensation of Rs. 15 to the complainant and further directing under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., the removal of the obstructions in question, an application for the revision of which order was rejected by Mr. G. S. Dutt, Sessions Judge of Pabna and Bogra, on 25th of April 1913.

The Petitioners were convicted under sec. 341, I. P. C., of wrongfully restraining the complainant by obstructing a path along which he alleged he was entitled to pass. The Magistrate also made an order under sec. 522, Cr. P. C, that the obstruction should be removed and the complainant allowed to use the path. The material portion of the Magistrate's judgment is set out below.

"The accused deny the existence of a path as alleged by the prosecution. Baser Khan, whose bari lies on the north of Goizuddin's, says that the complainant has brought this case in order to secure a path over his homestead land to the Dulai Raninagar Road.

"The accused have not adduced any evidence for their defence. They prayed for a local enquiry. According to their prayer Babu Pramatha Nath Chackrabartty, a pleader of the local bar, was deputed by an order of this Court, dated 31st March 1913, to make an enquiry and to report as to whether the disputed path ever existed.

"There was a case under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., by the same complainant against Mohor Khan and others about the obstruction caused by the latter on the Dulai Raninagar Road (vide Ex. No. 1). As Mohor Khan lost that case it is probable that the accused obstructed the path leading out of the complainant's bari to that bari.

"Save and except the statement of the accused there is nothing else on the record to show that this case has been falsely brought against them in order to secure a path over Baser and Mohor's bari.

"For the reasons stated above I hold that there was a path running by the east of the bari of the accused as alleged by the complainant and that it has been closed by the accused by use of force.

"I therefore find the accused (1) Mohor Khan and (2) Baser Khan guilty of the offence under sec. 341, I. P. C., and sentence them to a fine of Rs. 15 each and, in default, to undergo 10 days' simple imprisonment. The complainant shall get Rs. 15 only as compensation out of the fine when realised.

"I also order, under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., as force has been used in obstructing the path, that the obstructions should be removed and the complainant should be allowed to use the path."

Babu Monmatha Nath Mukherjee for the Petitioners.

Babu Sasadhar Roy for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Petitioners in this case have been convicted of wrongfully restraining the complainant by obstructing a path along which he was entitled to pass. They have obtained a Rule from this Court on the District Magistrate to show cause why this conviction should not be set aside on the ground that the complainant's allegations are not borne out by the Proposed Rules for Recording Confessions.

The Government of India have published the despatch which they sent to the Secretary of State on the subject of the recording of confessions of accused persons. The enquiry instituted by the Government was two-fold, namely, (1) whether on a balance of the advantages and disadvantages, it facilitated the ends of justice to have confessions recorded at all before the commencement of the trial; (2) whether assuming that the practice of recording confessions before trial continued it was practicable to introduce more stringent safeguards against abuse and whether the actual procedure of Magistrates in recording confessions was susceptible of improvement. So far as the doing away altogether with the practice of recording confessions is concerned the Government of India is not prepared to support a radical modification of procedure, but it is proposed to make some rules with a view to ensure the voluntary character of confessions.

The argument that the cancellation of the provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure for recording confessions will remove one of the principal incentives that the police have of ill-treating accused persons and that it will compel the police to rely upon evidence and the pursuit of clues in place of the confession of the accused as a means of securing the conviction of the guilty does not find favour with the Government. One of the reasons for which Government is not prepared to refuse entirely to accept this source of information is that it would be "unwise to ignore the proved fact that the novice in crime in this country is frequently unable to keep his guilty knowledge to himself while even the more hardened criminal not infrequently insists upon unburdening his mind." This is a piece of argument which we are not prepared to accept as a proved fact; at best it is bu a surmise. It may however be stated without fear of contradiction that the instances that have been brought to light in Courts of law where confessions solemnly put forward by the prosecution as a strong piece of evidence have been ruled out as involuntary and extorted are by no means few.

It is however proposed to frame certain rules to ensure the voluntary character of confessions and the question is whether these proposed rules will have the desired effect. It is proposed that the police should be forbidden to question a prisoner once he has been arrested except with the permission of the Magistrate. A remand to police custody should not be given unless the officer making the application is able to show good and satisfactory grounds for it. A general statement that the accused may be able to give further information should not be accepted. No such order should be passed by an officer of lower status than a stipendiary Magistrate exercising second class powers and the period of remand should always be as short as possible.

Government however is not prepared to make a general rule that a prisoner who has confessed should in no circumstance be returned to police custody, but whenever possible where the object of the remand is the verification of the prisoner's statement he shall be remanded to the charge of a Magistrate and a prisoner who has been produced for the purpose of making a confession but has declined to do so or has made a statement unfavourable to the prosecution should never be remanded to police custody. It may be observed that the system of verification of confessions was introduced by a police circular and was very strongly condemned by the Calcutta High Court in Radha Halwai's case, 7 C. W. N. 220.

Government is prepared to restrict the recording of confessions to Magistrates of some status and experience, namely, to Sub-Divisional Magistrates and stipendiary Magistrates of the first class or of the second class if specially empowered. As to the suggestion that no prisoner should be produced for the recording of his confession unless he has spent at least one night out of police custody Government is of opinion that although the principle underlying the suggestion is a sound one no definite rule to this effect is practicable. We think that it would have been conducive to the wholesome administration of justice if something definite could have been done in this respect specially bearing in mind that the whole mischief due to involuntary confessions is invariably traceable to police influence and that, as pointed out in Queen-Empress v. Narayan, I. L. R. 35 Bom. 543, the duration of police custody is an important factor in determining the voluntary nature or otherwise of a confession.

The Government of India is also prepared to support for general adoption the suggestion that when a confession is recorded the investigating police-officer should not be present. This suggestion has been offered by the Bengal Government in agreement with the Calcutta High Court. The Government of India also favours the suggestion made by the same Government that confessions should ordinarily be recorded in open Court and during Court hours unless for exceptional reasons.

Another suggestion is made that confessing prisoners should be questioned by the Court whether they have any complaint of ill-treatment to make, but Government does not approve of the idea of prescribing a direct interrogation of the kind suggested, but suggests as a safeguard that the Magistrate should add to the certificate required by sec. 164 in his own hand a statement of the steps which he took to remove the accused from the influence of the Police and the time, if any, given to him for reflection.

On the whole we think that the proposed rules will have a salutary effect although the net result must depend on the care and caution taken by Magistrates of Districts and other responsible officers in bringing them into operation.

(CIVIL.)

Indian Succession Act (X of 1865)—Order refusing to grant Letters of Administration.

MIRS EVA MOUNTSTEPHENS v. MR. HUNTER GARNET ORME, I. L. R. 35 All. 448.

Under sec. 261 of the Succession Act proceedings on a contentious application for Letters of Administration or probate shall take the form of a regular suit under the Civil Procedure Code and an order of a District Judge refusing to grant Letters of Administration with a copy of the will annexed is a decree and is appealable and the Court-fee payable on the appeal is Rs. 10.

Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. II, Arts. 75, 120—Instalment bond.

AMOLAK CHAND v. BAIJNATH, I. L. R. 35 All. 455.

The Plaintiff sued on an instalment bond which provided that if any instalment remained unpaid on the due date the creditor would be entitled to recover the whole sum at once or might sue for each instalment as it fell due and remained unpaid. The Defendant made default in paying the third instalment nor did he pay any of the subsequent instalments The Plaintiff brought his suit more than six years after the date on which the third instalment fell due and sought to recover the full amount of the debt due by reason of the default in one instalment.

Held—Under Arts. 75, 120, Sch. II, the suit was barred.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 92—Suit for declaration of Mutwali rights—Proper Court to entertain suit.

MUHAMMAD BADUL MAJID KHAN v. AHMAD SAID KHAN, I. L. R. 35 All. 459

The Plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to the office of Mutwalli of a certain wakf property and for the possession of the same by the ejectment of the Defendant.

Held—That the Plaintiff sued merely as an individual to enforce his own individual rights and sec. 92, C. P. C., did not apply and the suit could be entertained by the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

Occupancy holding—Usufructuary mortgage—Subsequent surrender—Ejectment of mortgagee by Revenue Court—Subsequent suit for declaration that surrender not binding on mortgagee.

SHIVA PROKASH v. KARNA—I. L. R. 35 All. 464

An occupancy tenant after making a usufructuary mortgage of his holding surrendered it to the zemindar who had the mortgagee ejected by a decree of the Revenue Court. The mortgagee then brought a suit to have it declared that the surrender of the holding was not binding on him.

Held—That the suit was not maintainable.

Held—That the Appellant could not contend that the Court should not have granted the certificate, although it is inconvenient that a certificate should be granted to more than one person.

Reviews.

THE RULES AND ORDERS OF THE HIGH COURT OF JUDICATURE AT FORT WILLIAM IN BENGAL ON ITS ORIGINAL SIDE. By J. H. Hechle, Registrar, Original Side. Published by the Superintendent, Government Printing, Calcutta.

A revision of the rules on the Original Side of the High Court of Calcutta had been long called for. The late Mr. Robert Belchambers' compilation of Rules and Orders of the High Court which had served to guide the solicitors and barristers for some generations were admittedly getting antiquated and obsolete in many respects. The Civil Procedure Code and many other important Acts of the Indian Legislature have undergone considerable changes and a compilation of the new rules has been anxiously expected by the profession for a long time. The work was commenced by Mr. Fink, the successor of Mr. Belchambers to the office of the Registrar on the Original Side of the High Court, but its consummation has at last been brought about by Mr. Hechle, the present Registrar, with the assistance of Mr. Remfry and Mr. J. C. Mitra, two other able officers of the Court, under the guidance of his Lordship the Chief Justice. But the brunt of the work has fallen on Mr. Hechle and it is highly creditable on his part to have been able to edit the work so ably in the midst of his multafarious duties. The Preface, which is perhaps the most interesting part of the work from a historical point of view, traces the growth of the Court from the early days of the East India Company. The editor has compiled the historical account from such standard works as Cowell, Morley, Smoult and Ryan's Preface to the Rules and Orders of the Supreme Court published in 1839, a work which is now getting very rare. The author also gives the Supreme Court Charter, the Regulating Act, subsequent statutes and the High Court Charter and Letters Patent, all of which have to this date to be referred to by our Judges (the last-mentioned almost every day and even the earlier ones not unfrequently) in connection with the Ordinary Original and the inherited jurisdiction of the Court. See The Amrita Bazar Patrika case (17 C. W. N. 1253). How the Rules of the High Court have undergone wholesale changes will be evident from the very first chapter which deals with the admission of Advocates. A barrister to be entitled to be admitted as an Advocate of the Calcutta High Court must be a graduate of some University in the United Kingdom or one of the Indian Universities or one who has been educated in the United Kingdom for three years. Besides, he must have read in the chambers of a barrister in England for at least a year. We understand that a Committee appointed by the India office have recommended, that reading in Chambers with a barrister need not be with a barrister in England but option should be given for reading with the barristers in India. So the rules may require hereafter some modifications. We are not however concerned with the merits of the rules in this review. They will have to be tested in practice before we can pronounce any opinion on them. But we notice that in framing the new rules or altering the old ones relating to practice matters the framers have compared the rules of the Bombay and the Madras High Courts and also the rules and orders of the High Court of Judicature in England and adopted such portions thereof as may be applicable here. For instance, in Chap. XXXI we find that a series of Rules, 96 in number, have been framed in connection with the Indian Companies Act. These rules were originally modelled on the English Companies Consolidation Act (1908) and since the passing of the Indian Companies Act of 1913, they have in some respects been modified to conform to it. These Rules are not merely applicable to the Original Side of the High Court but also to all Mofussil Courts subordinate to the High Court. We also find Rules relating to Receivers, Guardians of Minors, Sales by Registrar, Taxation of costs, Arbitration, Rules relating to the Crown side of the Court, Privy Council Appeals, Habeas Corpus proceedings are all incorporated with many important modifications and changes. The new rules are indicated in the margin as also the alteration in the old rules. In the appendix a large number of very useful forms and tables are given for illustrating the Rules. Every portion of the book testifies to the great care and labour bestowed on the work by the editor and his collaborators. The book has been very neatly printed and handsomely bound by the Government of India Printing Press.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before IMAM, AND CHAPMAN, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER No. 547 OF 1908. RAM CHARAN PAL CHOWDHURY AND OTHERS, Decree-holders, Appellants, v. SRIMATI ANANDA MOYE AND OTHERS, Respondents. 30th January 1914.

Mesne profits—Interest—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 211.

The appeal arose out of an application for determination of the amount of mesne profits due to the Plaintiffs, decree-holders, under a decree made by the Subordinate Judge and affirmed on appeal by the District Judge. The first Court allowed interest at six per cent. per annum for three years from the date of the decree or until possession within that time under sec. 211 of the Code of Civil Procedure, though the decree did not provide for interest. On appeal, the District Judge modified the order of the Subordinate Judge and disallowed interest on the mesne profits. Against this appellate order, an appeal was preferred to the High Court, and the case was remanded to the District Judge for ascertainment of the amount of mesne profits with the following direction. "In any case he should allow the Appellants interest on any sum found due to them." On the matter coming on for hearing before the District Judge after remand the question he was asked by the parties to decide was whether interest should be allowed for the whole period or only for three years from the date of the decree. The lower Appellate Court declined to consider the issue as raised by the parties on the ground that it had not formed the subject of appeal before him.

Held, that the Judge ought to have allowed interest on the entire amount of the mesne profits for three years anterior to the institution of the suit and for the period between the institution of the suit and the recovery of possession of the land by the Plaintiffs, decree-holders.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before COXE and D. CHATTERJEE, JJ. APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS. 3393 OF 1911 AND 320 OF 1912. BADUJHAMAN SINGH AND OTHERS, Appellants v. NARAIN SAHU AND OTHERS, Respondents. Heard, 30th January. Judgment, 10th February 1914.

Mortgagee, if entitled to crop—Purchaser of equity of redemption—Conditional decree for possession—Dispossession by mortgagor and mortgagee—Mesne profits.

The Plaintiff bought the disputed land from the 2nd and 3rd Defendants. The land at the time of sale was mortgaged to the 1st Defendant. The Defendants would not give up possession and the Plaintiff had to sue for recovery. He obtained a decree for possession on condition that he deposited the mortgage money due to the 1st Defendant. He complied with this condition but the 1st Defendant cut the crop standing on the land at the time of the decree and all the Defendants kept him out of possession although he had obtained formal delivery of possession from the Court.

The only questions arising in the appeals were whether the Plaintiff was entitled to the crop cut by the 1st Defendant, and up to what time he was entitled to mesne profits. The lower Appellate Court decided that the Plaintiff was entitled to the crop and to mesne profits up to the date of the decision of the first Court. The Defendants appealed.

In the plaint of the first suit, it was not pleaded that any tender had been made to the 1st Defendant.

Held, that as the crop was almost ripe at the time of the decree in the first suit it would have been unjust if the Plaintiff had been allowed to take it without compensation, inasmuch as up to that date the possession of the 1st Defendant had been perfectly lawful and regular.

That the Defendants were liable for mesne profits, not only for so long as they held the land but also until they communicated their relinquishment of it to the Plaintiff. This was effected by the filing of the written statements in which the Defendants disclaimed all rights to the land. Hence mesne profits were allowed up to that date and not up to the decision of the suit by the first Court.

facts; and also to show cause why the order that has been passed under sec. 522 should not be set aside.

The first ground in our opinion fails. But we have heard the learned Vakil who appears for the Petitioners on another point. It appears that the accused applied for a local enquiry and the Magistrate thereupon ordered a local enquiry by a pleader as if he were directing the issue of a commission in a civil case. The pleader ultimately reported, but no notice was taken either of this report or of any evidence on which it may have been based. It appears to us that the accused must have been misled by this procedure. The learned Vakil who appears for the Opposite Party tells us that he is prepared to argue the point and we think we can deal with the question without issuing another Rule. The Magistrate clearly had no authority to issue this commission, and it is natural to suppose that the accused must have been seriously misled by it and must have thought that when the Magistrate had ordered an enquiry he would pay some attention to the results of it. In such circumstances, they might well have refrained from producing witnesses. We think therefore that the accused should have a further opportunity of adducing evidence.

As regards the order under sec. 522 it is not in our opinion sustainable. There is no finding in this case that the complainant has been dispossessed of any immoveable property.

The Rule will accordingly be made absolute in these terms and the case will go back to the Magistrate for further enquiry. The accused will be given an opportunity of adducing such evidence as they desire.

Rule made absolute.

[APPEAL FROM OUDH.]

LORD ATKINSON.
LORD SHAW.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1913,
Heard, 1, 4 and 5, August.
Judgment, 10, December.

BHAIYA SHER BAHADUR, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
BHAIYA GANGA BAKHSH SINGH & ors, Defendants, Respondents.

Will—Interpretation—Intention of testator to be gathered from language of will and surrounding circumstances—Illegitimate son of Hindu by Mahomedan concubine, treated as Hindu and living and marrying a Hindu lady according to Hindu rites—Issue, if legitimate—"Aulad" and "Khandan," meaning of, primâ facie refer to legitimate issue.

Where it appeared on the evidence that the testator, a Hindu, treated J, an illegitimate son of his by a Mahomedan woman, as a Hindu in religion and desired that others should so treat him, that he had been married twice to two Chhatri ladies, and he treated these marriages as lawful marriages and desired that others should so treat them, and consequently resolved to regard and treat the offspring of these unions as legitimate and desired that they should be so treated and regarded by others; and by a testamentary disposition, dated the 15th of May 1878, made a settlement of certain properties for the maintenance of J and his "aulad" issues for generation after generation, in which it was provided inter alia that the grant was to be perpetual, impartible, indivisible and incapable of being otherwise charged or encumbered and was not to be the subject of any co-ownership, and that on the death of J, his representative was to succeed him as proprietor without "division" as a rais and this proprietor was to be one of the issues (aulad) of J "on whom the right may devolve," the other issues

BHAIYA SHER BAHADUR v. BHAIYA GANGA BAKHSH SINGH.

(aulad) of the family (khandan) of J being only entitled to get food and raiment out of the grant, with the further provision that the marriage and funeral expenses of the male and female children of the family of J were to be paid also out of the grant :

Held—That in interpreting the document the Court had to determine what were the wishes and intentions of the testator as revealed by its language, viewed through the light of the circumstances which surrounded him at the time he made it, and that the intention of the testator was that on J's death only those of J's issue whom he wished to be regarded as J's legitimate issue by his Chattri wives were to benefit by the gift.

That there was nothing in the Will to suggest that the word "aulad" should be given a meaning defferent from its primâ facie meaning of "legitimate issue." Nor was there any reason for extending the meaning of the word "khandan" which ordinarily refers to the group of descendants who constitute the family of the progenitor, so as to include illegitimate offspring.

Quære :—Whether J who was found to have done his utmost to become an orthodox Hindu and to pass as such in society and whose father from his youth upwards aided and encouraged him in those efforts and procured his marriage, when he was only 15 years of age, to be celebrated according to strict Hindu rites with a Hindn lady, did in fact thereby become a Hindu and whether the issue of such marriage was legitimate according to law.

This was an Appeal from a Decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, dated 26th February 1906, confirming a Decree of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda, dated 3rd January 1905. The principal point for decision was whether the Appellant was the legitimate son of one Jang Bahadur Singh. Both Courts in India found that he was in fact illegitimate.

The facts out of which the litigation arose are as follows :—Maharaja Sir Digbijai Singh of Balrampur (hereinafter referred to as "the Maharajah") was a Hindu of the Janwar Chattri caste. He had relations with a Mohamedan woman, a prostitute, named Imam Bandi, by whom he had a son named Jang Bahadur Singh, who was the father of Plaintiff and the first four Defendants. Jang Bahadur Singh was born in 1849.

The mother of the Plaintiff and of the second, third and fourth Defendants was a Mohamedan, named Najmunnisa or Rahmani. The Plaintiff's case was that Jang Bahadur Singh was born, lived and died a Mohamedan, that he was lawfully married according to Mohamedan customs to Najmunnisa, and that Plaintiff and his brothers, the second, third and fourth Defendants, were the legitimate offspring of that marriage.

Jang Bahadur Singh was three times married according to Hindu rites, first to a lady of the Kumar Chattri caste, named Musamat Hansraj Kunwar, by whom he had issue the first Defendant ; second to another lady of the same caste, named Raj Kali Kunwar, the fifth Defendant, and third to another Hindu lady who was not a party to the suit.

The Plaintiff in his plaint denied that Jang Bahadur Singh was lawfully married to these Hindu ladies ; but the fact of these marriages was not untimately disputed by him, and they were found by both the lower Courts to have taken place. The children of these marriages were married to Hindus.

On the 15th March 1878, the Maharajah made a Will, by which, after reciting that he had then no legitimate issue, but was not without hope of having issue, he provided that, in case he should die without leaving a natural born or adopted son, his widow should have power to adopt.

On the same day the Maharajah executed a document which was referred to throughout the proceedings as a codicil, by which, after reciting that he had an illegitimate son, Jang Bahadur Singh, who would not, according to Hindu law, succeed to his property, but for whom he was anxious to make provision, he settled a sum of Rs. 48,000 per annum, to be paid "to Jang Bahadur Singh and his issue for generations after generations, as long as the family of Jang Bahadur Singh and his descendants remain in existence."

Cls. 3 and 4 of the codicil were as follows:—

"3. For his lifetime Jang Bahadur Singh has a right to spend this money, but after his death, one of his issue, on whom the right may devolve, shall be considered the proprietor of this maintenance allowance without division as a rais. The other issue of the family of Jang Bahadur Singh shall be entitled to get food, raiment and other necessary expenses out of the monthly allowances, and in addition to it the representative of Jang Bahadur Singh, whoever he may be, shall pay the marriage and funeral expenses of male and female children which may from time to time be required in the family of Jang Bahadur Singh; and this rule shall continue to be observed in the family of Jang Bahadur Singh for generation after generation.

"4. When there remains no descendant of the family of Jang Bahadur Singh at any time, the monthly allowance of Rs. 4,000 will be resumed, and remain in proprietary possession of the proprietor of the riasat the gaddinashin."

To secure the payment of the allowance a number of villages were assigned in perpetuity to "Jang Bahadur Singh and his family descendants."

The Maharajah died on the 27th May 1882. Jang Bahadur Singh died on the 1st October 1899, and the first Respondent succeeded to and took possession of the whole of his property. This property fell under two categories, first, the villages comprised in the said codicil, and set out in Schedule "A" of the plaint, and second, certain other moveable and immoveable properties set out in Schedules "B" and "C".

The present suit was instituted on the 3rd April 1902, to eject the first Respondent from all the said properties. In his plaint the Plaintiff claimed that as the eldest legitimate son of Jang Bahadur Singh he was his father's sole heir, and entitled to possession of all his father's estate, which he alleged to be impartible, both by virtue of the said codicil, and in accordance with the custom prevailing both in the Balrampur estate and generally among Raises.

Written statements were filed by all the Defendants. The second, third and fourth Defendants who filed identical written statements generally supported the Plaintiff's case, except that they denied that the estate was impartible and claimed that it was divisible in equal shares between themselves and the Plaintiff.

The first Defendant in his written statement denied that Jang Bahadur Singh was a Mohamedan. He alleged on the contrary that he had from his birth been brought up as a Hindu, remained a Hindu all his life and was buried with the ceremonies prescribed by the Hindu religion. He alleged that he was the legitimate son of the lawful marriage of Jang Bahadur Singh and Hansraj and as such was Jang Bahadur's sole heir, and that the fifth Defendant was also the lawful wife of Jang Bahadur.

The fifth Defendant claimed to be the sole lawful wife of Jang Bahadur Singh and denied that the mothers of the Plaintiff and the first four Defendants were his wives.

The following issues were fixed—

1. Was Jang Bahadur a Mohamedan and is succession to his estate governed by the Mohamedan law?

2. Are the Plaintiff and the Defendants 2, 3 and 4 Jang Bahadur's ligitimate sons and entitled to his estate under the Mohamedan law?

3. (a) Does the codicil of the 15th March 1878 entitle the Plaintiff to succeed to Jang Bahadur's estate to the exclusion of his brothers (Defendants 2, 3 and 4) on the score of seniority in years?

(b) Does there obtain the rule of primogeniture in the family of the Maharajah of Balrampur? If so, does the custom apply to the estate left by Jang Bahadur?

(c) Is the Plaintiff otherwise entitled to Jang Bahadur's estate to the exclusion of Defendants 2, 3 and 4?

4. Did Jang Bahadur live and die a Hindu and is succession to his estate governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu law? If so, is the Defendant No. 1 Jang Bahadur's legitimate son and his sole heir?

5. If the Plaintiff and his brothers (Defendants 2, 3 and 4) be the illegitimate sons of Jang Bahadur, and the Defendant No. 1 (Ganga Bakhsh) his legitimate son, does the Plaintiff possess the right of inheriting the whole estate by virtue of the codicil and the custom put in issue 3, or of inheriting an equal share in the estate with Defendant No. 1?

6. If the Plaintiff and the Defendants 1, 2, 3 and 4 be all illegitimate sons of Jang Bahadur, is the Plaintiff entitled, according to the codicil of 15th March 1878, and the custom referred to in paragraph 13 of the plaint, to the whole of the property in suit, or is he entitled in the alternative to share Jang Bahadur's property equally with Defendants 1, 2, 3 and 4?

7. If Jang Bahadur did not die either a Hindu or a Mohamedan, what would be the rights of the parties in regard to succession to his estate?

8. Did the Defendant No. 1 get the properties mentioned in List C attached to the plaint on Jang Bahadur's death? What is their value?

The hearing of the case extended, with intervals, from August 1903, to July 1904, more than 100 witnesses were examined, and a great mass of documentary evidence was recorded.

The Subordinate Judge found that the Maharajah brought up Jang Bahadur Singh as a Hindu from his birth, had him initiated into the Hindu religion, and caused him to be married to two Hindu ladies of the Chattri caste. That these marriages were, in fact, performed at the instance of the Maharajah was admitted in argument by the Plaintiff's counsel.

The Subordinate Judge also found that Jang Bahadur Singh had his food cooked by Hindu cooks, and observed the rules and customs of Hindus in eating, that he habitually worshipped Hindu idols, and had free admission for purposes of worship to Hindu temples, that he wore the sacred thread, that he put on the tilak or caste mark of chandan, and wore the Hindu dhoti, and that in many other respects, social and religious, he observed Hindu customs and ceremonies, and lived as a Hindu.

These conclusions of the Subordinate Judge were based on a consideration, not only of a mass of oral evidence, but more especially of a series of documents extending over a large number of years, consisting of accounts and correspondence which shewed that Jang Bahadur Singh observed Hindu feasts, performed Hindu religious ceremonies, visited Hindu shrines and places of pilgrimage, and was to all outward appearance a Hindu, and could not have been mistaken for a Mohamedan.

The Plaintiff produced a great volume of evidence, both oral and documentary, to prove that Jang Bahadur Singh was brought up and lived as a Mohamedan, that he was circumcised, and that he was married to Najmunnisa according to Mohamedan law. In reference to this evidence the Subordinate Judge says: "The Plaintiff has in my opinion utterly failed to show that Jang Bahadur Singh during his infancy was brought up as a Mohamedan, and was circumcised and married to the mother of Plaintiff and Defendants 2, 3 and 4. He has also failed to show that Jang Bahadur Singh ever professed Mohamedanism or observed any of the practices which adherents of Mohamedanism usually observe."

The Subordinate Judge also said with reference to the nikah marriage alleged to have taken place between Jang Bahadur Singh and the Plaintiff's mother "I have carefully considered the evidence of the five witnesses produced by the Plaintiff, and I am of opinion that they have been tutored to make the statements they have made. Among the five witnesses there is not even one on whose evidence any reliance can safely be placed. The story told by these witnesses moreover seems to me to be an exceedingly improbable one." "It is clear that the documents relied on by the Plaintiff do not at all show that the Plaintiff's mother was treated as the married wife of Jang Bahadur, or the Plaintiff as his legitimate son."

The Subordinate Judge also relied on certain statements made on oath by Jang Bahadur Singh in the course of litigation in 1886: "My first marriage was in the family of a Surajbans of Poora Murah, a Hindu, and my second was with the Birhar Thakurs, where the Maharajah was married the second time. The present Bari Maharani is the third wife. If I had been a Musulman I could not have married as I have done." "I have a Mohamedan woman in keeping. She is not married. I have four children by her. I do not cohabit with her."

On a full consideration of all the evidence the Subordinate Judge found that Jang Bahadur Singh was presumably from his birth a Mohamedan until he was able to make a choice, but that he never did in fact profess the Mohamedan religion, that the Plaintiff and his brothers were the illegitimate sons of Jang Bahadur Singh and therefore not his heirs, that Jang Bahadur Singh was not born a Hindu, but that he all his life professed the Hindu religion, that neither Hindu nor Mohamedan law nor the Indian Succession Act governed the succession to his estate, but that the principles of justice, equity and good conscience applied, and that in accordance with these principles the succession to Jang Bahadur Singh's estate should be decided, under the circumstances, in accordance with the rules of Hindu law, and by those rules Ganga Baksh, the first Defendant, was Jang Bahadur Singh's sole heir. These findings disposed of issues 1, 2, 4 and 7.

The third issue was decided by implication by the above findings and required no further consideration.

The fifth issue raised the question whether the Plaintiff, though illegitimate and not a legal heir of Jang Bahadur Singh, was entitled to possession of the latter's estate by virtue of the aforesaid codicil. The argument on behalf of the Plaintiff was that the rule of primogeniture prevailed in the Balrampur family, and that by the codicil the Maharajah intended that the same rule should apply to the estate settled by it, so that the estate should descend to the eldest son of Jang Bahadur Singh whether legitimate or not.

The Subordinate Judge found that the Balrampur Raj was one of those to which the rule of primogeniture applied, but that this rule could not apply to an illegitimate son.

On the sixth issue the Subordinate Judge held that the first Defendant was Jang Bahadur Singh's sole heir, and on the eighth issue that certain specified moveable property valued at Rs. 14,935 came into first Defendant's possession on his father's death.

In the result the Plaintiff's suit was dismissed with costs.

In the course of his judgment, the Subordinate Judge, Mr. Krishna Kumar, said :—

Mahadeo (Defendant's witness No. 1) was only 6 or 7 years old when Jang Bahadur was born and his evidence on the question before us must be put aside as worthless. Tulshi Ram Thekadar (Defendant's witness No. 16) who has for a long time been connected with the Balrampur Estate confirms Chattarpal and Kali Parshad Singh in their statement that the wife of Bhindya Chal was Jang Bahadur's wetnurse. Tulshi Ram lives where Bhindya lived and Bhindya Chal was related to him. The evidence furnished by the testimony of Chattarpal Singh (Defendant's witness No. 17), Kali Parshad Singh (Defendant's witness No. 7), Tulshi Ram (Defendant's witness No. 16), and Sheo Dial (Defendant's witness No. 35), and by the statement of Jang Bahadur made on the 8th January 1886 before the District Judge of Fyzabad (Defendant's Exhibit 1) does in my opinion fairly establish that on Jang Bahadur's birth, his father, the late Maharaja Sir Digbijai Singh, determined that the infant would be brought up as a Hindu and that as the first step of the scheme which he had formed for Jang Bahadur's introduction into the Hindu community he arranged that the infant got its suck from Hindu women The learned Counsel for the Plaintiff has strenuously contended that this testimoney should be rejected as worthless, because, he says, it is impossible to suppose that an intelligent man like the late Maharaja Sir Digbijai Singh, K. C. S. I., should ever have entertained the foolish notion of accomplishing the impossible task of making Hindu of a non-Hindu. The contention in my opinion is based on a mistaken notion that Hinduism is rigidly exclusive and does not under any circumstance admit into its fold one who is not born a Hindu. Hinduism is described by Sir Monnier Williams (Religious Thought and Life in India, Part I, page 57) as "a vast hospitable mansion which has opened its doors to all comers and has not refused a welcome to applicants of every grade from the highest to the lowest if only willing to acknowledge the spiritual headship of the Brahmans and adopt caste rules."

Sir Alfred Lyall in his "Asiatic Studies," (page 101) endorses this view and says that Brahmanism so far from being a non-missionary religion in the sense of a religion that admits no proselytes is one that every year makes more converts than is done by all the other religions in India put together. At p. 104 of the "Asiatic Studies" Sir Lyall quoted from Sir George Campbell's report upon his Government of Bengal in 1871-1872, where Sir George Campbell observed: "It is a great mistake to suppose that the Hindu religion is not proselytising: the system of caste finds room for any number of outsiders: so long as people do not interfere with existing castes they may form a new caste and call themselves Hindus and the Brahmans are always ready to receive all who will submit to them. The process of manufacturing Rajputs from ambitious aboriginies goes on before our eyes." (The italics are mine.)

A remarkable illustration of the elastic and accommodating nature of Hinduism is furnished by the present day Kshatriyas of Nepal which, adjoins the Estate of the Maharaja of Balrampur. According to Hodgson, the original stock of Nepal is Mongol. Driven by the Musalman invaders in the 12th century, the Brahmans fly from the plains and settle on the neighbouring hills of Nepal. They make converts of the Mongol natives and invest them with the rank of Kshatriyas They marry the native Mongol girls and to their descendants by these girls they give the rank and dignity of Kshatriyas which they enjoy to the present day. (W. J. Wilkins' Modern Hinduism, p. 177, and Carnegy's Notes on the Races, Tribes and Castes of Avadh 1868, p. 50).

Sir Alfred Lyall cites in his "Asiatic Studies" (p. 104) the case of a tribe in Ajmere "of whom one-half were forcibly made Musalmans while the other held its own non-Hindu customs and until very lately inter-married with its Musalman kindred," and Sir Lyall tells us that "this last mentioned half has Brahmanized and would no more marry with Musalmans than the Raja of Benares."

If Hinduism is so elastic, the constitution of the Chattri community would seem to be still more so.

"We know on the authority of Todd" says Mr. Carnegy in his Notes on Races, Tribes and Castes of Awadh, at p. 38 "that the proud Udeypur family, the oldest royal family in the world, which alone of all the royal Chattri families of the East disdained a matrimonial alliance with the Mohamedan Emperors of Delhi, is yet descended from a Christian princess. About the laxity in matrimonial alliances among the Chattris and the causes which until recently conduced to it, I would refer to Mr. Carnegy's Notes from pp. 37 to 40. The late Maharaja's wish to make Hindu of Jang Bahadur from the time of his birth when strictly speaking he could have no religion, was then not so foolish as the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff would make it appear to be. The Maharaja had social position, immense wealth and great sagacity to help him in carrying out his scheme and we will see presently what he was able to achieve with these powerful instruments in his hand.

* * * * * * *

I hold that Jang Bahadur, though presumably born a Mohamedan, was not brought up as a Mohamedan and never professed the Mahomedan religion and that he was never a Mohamedan in fact. I also hold that Jang Bahadur was brought up as a Hindu and that Jang Bahadur throughout his life was a follower of the popular form of the Hindu religion. I further hold that the Plaintiff and his brothers are illegitimate sons of Jang Bahadur and have no title to inherit Jang Bahadur's estate even if Mohamedan law governed the devolution of that estate. This leads us to the next question as to what law is applicable to succession to the estate of Jang Bahadur.

According to the Mohamedan law of the Sunni School, Jang Bahadur was presumably a Mohamedan by birth and should be presumed to have been a Mohamedan until he was able to make a choice. We have found however that as a matter of fact Jang Bahadur was brought up not as a Mohamedan but as a Hindu and that after he was able to make a choice, he did not choose the religion of Islam but on the other hand lived and died in the faith of Hinduism. Jang Bahadur was throughout his life a follower of the popular idolatrous form of Hinduism, a form directly antagonistic to the cardinal principles on which the religion of Islam is founded. He never believed in "the messengership of Mohammad" and his whole life showed that he was not a believer in the unity of God.

Jang Bahadur was throughout his life then never a Mohamedan and the Mohamedan law is clearly not applicable to succession to his estate. Is the Hindu Law applicable? "Hindu law has obligatory force only upon those who are Hindus by birth as well as by religion." (Tagore Law Lectures, 1870, edition 1870, p. 3), see also Mr. Justice Banerji's Tagore Law Lectures on Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhan, 2nd Ed., pp. 15, 16, 17 and 18. Jang Bahadur, it has already been found, was not a Hindu by birth although his religion was Hinduism. The Hindu law is not applicable to the succession of Jang Bahadur's estate.

What is the law then which governs succession to Jang Bahadur's estate? It has not been pleaded on either side that the Indian Succession Act has any application. And I do not think it is applicable. Stokes in his Commentaries on the Indian Succession Act has pointed out that "in sec. 331 of that Act the term "Hindu" was used as a theological term and denoting a person professing any form of the Brahminical religion or religion of the Purans" (vide notes under sec. 331 of Act X of 1865 in Henderson's Testamentary Succession and Administration of Intestate Estates in India, 2nd Ed., p. 236). I am unable to hold that in enacting the Indian Succession Act, an Act "based upon and in the main embodying the English law," the legislature intended to force its provisions on a person like Jang Bahadur, who though born of a Hindu father by a Mohamedan woman, was throughout his life a consistent follower of the Hindu religion, and who contracted matrimonial alliances with a number of respectable Hindu families according to the forms of the Hindu religion. This view finds support in the case of Buddhi Bibi v. Babu Ram (1). Sir John Edge, C. J, and Justice Knox in that case held that the Indian Succession Act was not applicable to a person who though born of a Hindu father by a Mohamedan mistress had followed and professed the Hindu tenets and lived the life of a Hindu.

The Mohamedan law and the Hindu law and the Indian Succession Act being equally inapplicable to the succession of Jang Bahadur's estate we must under the provisions of sec. 3 (g) of the Oudh Act (Act 18 of 1876), act according to "justice, equity and good conscience." In Buddhi Bibi v. Babu Ram (1), the case above cited, a Mohamedan claimed as heir to one Inder Kunwar through her mother. It was found that Inder Kunwar was the daughter of a Mohamedan prostitute by a Hindu father and had been brought up in her father's house as a Hindu. She had been married according to Hindu ceremonies to a person who was the son of a Mohamedan mother by a Hindu father and who lived as a Hindu. The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court who decided the case held that "neither Babu Ram (Inder Kunwar's husband) nor Inder Kunwar can be regarded for any purpose as Mohamedans." The learned Judges further said: "They must be regarded if not strictly as Hindus as persons following and professing the Hindu tenets and living as Hindus . . . . . . We do not think the Indian Succession Act applies . . . . . We can only apply the principle adopted by this Court in Raj Bahadur v. Bishen Dayal (2) and, as far as possible, the rule of Hindu law."

(1) All. W. N. for 1891, p. 66 (1890).

(2) I. L. R. 4 All. 343 (1882).

Jang Bahadur, we have seen, was throughout his life a follower of the Hindu religion and its tenets and always lived the life of a Hindu and in acting on the rule of justice, equity and good conscience for determining his lawful heir and successor to his estate, we must as far as possible apply the rule of Hindu law. And judged by these rules, the Plaintiff and his brothers who are Mohamedans and illegitimate sons of Jang Bahadur have clearly no right to inherit his estate. Is the Defendant No. 1. Jang Bahadur's legitimate son and also heir on the rule of equity, justice and good conscience and on the application of so much of the Hindu law as may be applicable to Jang Bahadur? The question must in my opinion be answered in the affirmative. The Defendant No. 1 is the Hindu son of Jang Bahadur by Hansraj Kunwar, who was married by her Hindu guardians to Jang Bahadur in strict observance of the Hindu ceremonial of marriage and in the belief that the solemnization of the Hindu rites made the marriage as good as any other marriage in a Chattri family.

On Hansraj's death Jang Bahadur performed her obsequies according to Hindu rites. His son by Hansraj (Defendant No. 1) he brought up as a Hindu. He educated him with all the care which a father could bestow on the education of his son. He married him in Chattri family of unquestionable respectability amidst great rejoicing and strictly according to Hindu rites. The evidence of the Defendant No 1's witnesses Sri Bahadur (Defendant's witness No. 8) and Lalman (Defendant's witness No 38) and Mendai Lal (Defendant's witness No. 52) shows that Jang Bahadur died in the belief, that his sole heir and successor could be no other than his Hindu son, Ganga Bakhsh On the principle of justice, equity and good conscience I hold that Ganga Bakhsh is the legitimate son and sole heir of Jang Bahadur.

Against the decree of the Subordinate Judge the Plaintiff appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.

BHAIYA SHER BAHADUR v. BHAIYA GANGA BAKHSH SINGH.

Judgment in the said appeal was delivered on the 26th February 1906.

The learned Judges of the Appellate Court held as a point of law that Jang Bahadur Singh was by birth a Mohamedan. They also held that the Subordinate Judge rightly rejected the evidence by which it was sought to establish that Jang Bahadur Singh was circumcised, and the direct evidence as to the celebration of the alleged nikah or marriage between Jang Bahadur Singh and Najmunnisa.

The Plaintiff, however, relied chiefly on evidence that Jang Bahadur Singh lived with Plaintiff's mother and recognised Plaintiff and his brothers as his sons, which they alleged amounted to evidence of acknowledgment of legitimacy from which a valid nikah should be presumed.

The Appellate Court, after considering all the evidence on this point put forward by the Plaintiff, found that the Plaintiff had failed to produce reliable evidence of the nikah, and that it was impossible to infer the existence of a lawful nikah from such cohabitation as had been proved, or to presume that Plaintiff and his brothers were legitimate from the conduct or statements of Jang Bahadur Singh.

The learned Judges said: "There is no evidence that Jang Bahadur defrayed the expenses of clothing and feeding the Plaintiff and his brothers, and there is clear evidence that after Imam Bandi's death, when they succeeded to part of her property, he refused to pay anything for them. The evidence that Jang Bahadur cohabited with Plaintiff's mother is of no value. That he visited her constantly is clear enough; but it seems that his private rooms were in the Hindu part of the house, and that he did his daily puja in that part of the house. I do not consider it proved that they lived together as husband and wife, or that they had the reputation of doing so."

In the view taken by the learned Judges of the Appellate Court, the question whether or no Jang Bahadur Singh became a Hindu was of no importance, provided that the nikah could be shewn to have taken place, and that he was then a Mohamedan. "The crucial question was whether there was a nikah between Plaintiff's mother and Jang Bahadur." The learned Judges came to the conclusion that Jang Bahadur Singh was "neither an orthodox Hindu nor an orthodox Mohamedan. He no doubt called himself a Hindu and if he had any religion, it was the popular idolatrous form of Hinduism," and therefore if the Plaintiff were found to be of legitimate birth, the circumstance that his father became a Hindu to the extent shewn by the evidence would be no reason for passing over the Plaintiff and giving the property to the Defendant."

Having found that the nikah was not established, the Appellate Court held that it could not be contended that Plaintiff, being an illegitimate son, could be entitled to the estate under the provisions of the codicil.

On these findings the Plaintiff's appeal was dismissed with costs.

Against the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh the Plaintiff has appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. B. Dubé for the Appellants, while admitting that Jang Bahadur adopted many of the observances of the Hindu religion, contended that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in treating the matter as though Jang Bahadur became a Hindu and a member of the Kshatriya caste under which conditions alone his marriage could be valid and his children legitimate. Both Courts have concurrently found that Jang Bahadur was a Moslem by birth. A Moslem could not be converted into a Hindu. Jang Bahadur could become a Hindu by religion but he could not possibly thereby become a Kshatriya by caste. The caste is now too rigidly fixed—he could not be a Sudra even. A man cannot acquire caste except by birth. The marriage of Jang Bahadur with Hansraj Kunwar was absolutely void. Banerjee's Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhana (Tagore Law Lectures, 1878) 2nd Edn, pp. 68 and 74; Trevelyan's Hindu Law (1912), p. 34; Mayne's Hindu Law (7th Edn.), pp. 106-107; Padam Kumari v. Suraj Kumari (3), Melaram Nudial v. Thanooram Bamum (4), Narain Dhara v. Rakhal Gain (5). A Hindu can marry outside his caste under Act 3 of 1872 only and then by declaring that he is not a Hindu. The circumstances are similar to those in Barlow v. Orde (6), which case was applied in Skinner v. Naunihal Singh (7). "In justice, equity and good conscience" the Appellant should succeed as rais, but under the present decision he gets nothing, not even a right to maintenance.

The word "aulád" means "children," "offspring," and was wide enough to include both legitimate and illegitimate children.

Barlow v. Orde (6) laid down that according to natural law "children" of a man meant children begotten by him from a wife or other woman and acknowledged by him as his children. The Respondent was not a legitimate son under the Hindu Law. All the sons of Jang Bahadur were treated by the Maharajah with equal kindness and consideration, and even by Jang Bahadur himself. There was no reason why the Appellant and his brothers should not have been provided for by the Maharajah. They were brought up and educated by the Maharajah who appointed a special servant to look after them. There was a mass of evidence including that of witnesses of the Respondent himself which showed that Jang Bahadur was not treated by the Janwar Kshatriyas and other high caste Hindus as a Kshatriya, and even as a pure Sudra. Whatever might have been the Hindu Law or usage of the Hindus in ancient times, the Hindu Law of marriage and caste was well-settled in the present age. A marriage to be valid according to the Hindu Law must be between members of the same caste of Hindus by birth and not by conversion.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C, and Mr. Eddis for the Respondents.—The case now put forward on behalf of the Appellants differs from that presented by the plaint by which the Appellant claimed the whole estate or alternately a quarter by including his uterine brothers but excluding the first Respondent. Their case at the trial was that the four sons were legitimate but that the first Respondent was illegitimate. If Jang Bahadur remained a Mohamedan, the Mohamedan Law governs the inheritance and the Plaintiff as an illegitimate son can have no claim. Both Courts found that the alleged marriage did not take place. The object of the codicil was to make provision for Jang Bahadur, not for his illegitimate children. The Maharajah had made a separate settlement upon Imam Bandi and had in his lifetime given large estates to Jang Bahadur from which he could himself make such provision for them as he wished. The evidence shows that the first Respondent was sufficiently accepted into the Kshatriya caste to make a valid marriage in that caste. The authorities cited on behalf of the Appellant do not controvert the proposition that a person may be introduced into a Hindu caste—Bhattacharja's Hindu Castes and Sects, p. 9, where he says that even Englishmen could become Hindus. Banerjee's Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhana, 2nd Edn., p. 73. Reliance was placed on the judgment of the Subordinate Judge. A Hindu Will should be construed according to the ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus respecting the distribution of property and having regard to the surrounding circumstances. Effect ought to be given to the real intention of the testator. Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (8), Maulvie Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewukram (9), Radha Prosad Mullick v. Ranimoni Dassi (10) which shows that succession passes to legitimate heirs only. The word "aulad" includes only legitimate children unless there is something in the Will to indicate a different intention, which there is not. It is not possible to suppose that the Maharajah intended that the Appellant, a Mohamedan, should be rais. Again the word "Khandan" of Jang Bahadur could only mean one thing and that is his Hindu family and not the illegitimate Moslem children. If Jang Bahadur did not truly become a Hindu yet under the justice, equity and good conscience rule, the succession should be guided by the principles of the Hindu law since he was brought up by the testator as a Hindu and adopted the religious observances of that religion. Abraham v. Abraham (11), Francis Ghosal v. Gabri Ghosal (12). Justice, equity and good conscience in the present case point to the application of the law most nearly applicable to Jang Bahadur, and to that which the Maharajah intended should be applied.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., in reply. The evidence was conclusive that the first Respondent was not recognized as a member of the Kshatriya caste. He could not become a member of the Kshatriya caste. Once born in one caste a person cannot enter into another caste, much less enter it by conversion. Williamson's Modern Hinduism, pp. 262 and 263.

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an Appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 26th February 1906, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which affirmed a judgment and decree, dated the 3rd of January 1905, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda, dismissing the Plaintiff's suit.

The action out of which the appeal arises was instituted on the 3rd of April 1902 by the Plaintiff as eldest son and heir of his father, Jang Bahadur Singh by a Mahomedan woman, claiming to recover the possession of the several villages mentioned in the Schedule annexed to the Statement of Claim, same forming part of an estate called the Balrampur estate which had been bequeathed to the Plaintiff's father by his, the Plaintiff's paternal grandfather, the Maharajah of Balrampur, by a codicil, dated the 15th of March 1878, to the last Will of the Maharajah. Possession of these villages had been taken in the year 1899 by the first Defendant, and since then retained by him. Mesne profits were claimed in respect of this possession, and a claim was added to recover possession of the moveable and immoveable property mentioned in Schs. B and C, also annexed to the Statement of Claim, or in the alternative the Plaintiff's legal share thereof, on the ground that the same was property acquired by the Plaintiff's said father, with an additional claim for further relief.

The first Defendant, Bhaiya Ganga Bakhsh Singh, filed a written statement alleging that the Plaintiff was the issue of a Mahomedan woman with whom his the said Defendant's father, Jang Bahadur Singh, had had illegal intercourse, as were also the Defendants numbered 2, 3, and 4, and that her nikah had never taken place, that his father followed the Hindu religion bigottedly, and was a Hindu from his boyhood up to his death, that he married for the first time a Hindu lady of a Surajbansi Chhattri family, that the Defendant No. 1 was the only child of that marriage, is the only legitimate son and heir-at-law of his father, and is consequently under the provision of the said codicil entitled to the allowance therein mentioned.

The Plaintiff replied traversing the several allegations contained in this and the other written statements filed by other Defendants, and upon these pleadings the eight issues set forth at page 884 of the Record were knit. A vast body of evidence was given bearing upon each of these issues. Many of them are no longer of importance on this appeal, which is the ultimate stage of the litigation. The real questions now in dispute are first, the proper construction of the language of this codicil of the 15th of March 1878, and second, the actual intention which the Maharajah desired to effect in executing it.

The facts so far as material to the decision of these questions are as follows. The Plaintiff is the first-born son of his father, and the 2, 3, and 4 Defendants are his brothers, sons of Jang Bahadur Singh by the Mahomedan woman already mentioned. It has been found as a fact by both the Courts before which this case has come, that no ceremony of marriage was ever gone through between Jang Bahadur Singh and this woman, that she was his mistress not his wife, and that, consequently, the Plaintiff and his brothers are illegitimate. The Appellant accepts this finding as conclusive on this point. The first Defendant is the son of Jang Bahadur by a Hindu lady of the Chhattri caste with whom he had, admittedly, gone through the ceremony of marriage according to the strict Hindu rite.

The validity of this marriage is impeached by the Plaintiff upon the ground that at the time it was celebrated Jang Bahadur was neither a Hindu nor a member of the Chhattri caste, and that consequently the first Defendant is, like the Plaintiff and his brothers, illegitimate. The issue thus raised necessitated a somewhat lengthy examination of the life history of Jang Bahadur. He was, as already mentioned, the son, born in the year 1846, of a rather distinguished man, a Hindu by religion of the Junwar Chhattri caste, Sir Drighijai Singh, Maharajah of Balrampur, by a Mahomedan mistress named Imam Bandi, and was therefore, as held by both the Courts above-mentioned, a Mahomedan by birth. This dicision is also accepted by the Appellant.

The Subordinate Judge, at page 945 of the Record, finds that "Jang Bahadur was brought up, not as a Mahomedan under the influence of his Mahomedan mother, but by his Hindu father in the religion of Hindus." "That (p 956) he never professed the Mahomedan religion and was never a Mahomedan in fact; that after he was able to make a choice he did not choose the religion of Islam, but on the other hand lived and died in the faith of Hinduism. . . . that he was throughout his life a follower of the popular idolatrous form of Hinduism, a form directly antagonistic to the cardinal principles upon which the religion of Islam is founded," "and he (the Judge) came to the conclusion that as Jang Bahadur was never throughout his life a Mahomedan, the Mahomedan law did not regulate the succession to his estate, and as he was not a Hindu by birth neither did the Hindu law regulate it; that (p. 959) neither of these laws nor yet the Indian Succession Act governed him at his death, and that according to the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience, and by the application of so much of the Hindu law as was applicaable to the case, Ganga Bakhsh Singh, the first Defendant, was his father's legitimate son and sole heir."

The Court of the Judicial Commissioner, whilst abstaining from pronouncing any definite opinion on the legitimacy of the first Defendant, gave in the following passage of their judgment a sketch of the status, life, and character of Jang Bahadur Singh, which, though it differs to some extent from that of the Subordinate Judge, is, in their Lordships' view of the evidence, fairly accurate. It runs thus:

"Jang Bahadur belonged to no caste, and even if the issue of his marriage with Hansraj Kunwar should be held to be legitimate, a point on which I express no opinion, it is clear that the Hindu community at Balrampur treated the validity of the marriage as open to question The Subordinate Judge has cited several authorities to show that the Hindu religion admits proselytes of all kinds The truth of this is indisputable, but it is equally true that the admission of a proselyte and his descendants into the society of orthodox Hindus is a very slow process. The Defendant's witnesses hit off the position exactly when they say that they might eat with Jang Bahadur's family if they persevered in their Hindu habits and maintained their character for several generations (see the evidence of Defendant's witnesses Nos. 9 and 10). In two parts of one and the same house Jang Bahadur had a Mohamedan and a Hindu family and seems to have been on equally affectionate terms with both. He ate food in English Hotels and Railway Refreshment Rooms, drank gin and kept fowls and pigs. It is evident that he was neither an orthodox Hindu nor an orthodox Mohamedan. It appears to be that he led a double life as was almost inevitable under the circumstances. He no doubt called himself a Hindu, and if he had any religion it was, as the Subordinate Judge says, the popular idolatrous form of Hinduism, but he is not proved to have been an orthodox Hindu and therefore it seems to me that if the Plaintiff were found to be of legitimate birth the circumstance that his father became a Hindu to the extent shown by the evidence would be no reason for passing over the Plaintiff and giving the property to the first Defendant."

It has been urged on behalf of the Respondents that the Court of the Judicial Commissioner was mistaken in supposing that Jang Bahadur kept his two families in two sides of the same house, that in truth and fact, he kept them in two different houses. This is really a small matter and does not affect the general accuracy of the passage.

A vast body of evidence was given describing in great detail the participation of Jang Bahadur Singh on many occasions in the most solemn rites and ceremonies of the Hindu religion. It was proved by many witnesses that he wore, somewhat ostentatiously, the Hindu tilak on his forehead, that he was invested by his father with the scared thread, that he kept a Hindu cook to cook his food, &c. The fair result of the evidence in their Lordships' opinion is that Jang Bahadur did his utmost to become an orthodox Hindu, and to pass as such in the society in which he lived. That his father, from the boy's youth upwards, aided and encouraged him in those efforts; and, finally, when he was only 15 years of age, procured a marriage to be celebrated with great pomp and rejoicing according to the strict Hindu rite between him and the already mentioned Hindu lady of the Chhattri caste, Hansraj Kunwar.

This lady's family were apparently not well off, and it was stated in evidence that the Maharajah gave to her brother Sheo Dial a village to induce him to consent to the union. This, however, only proves the anxiety of the Maharajah to bring about the marriage. No doubt the Maharajah did not attend the ceremony himself. He allowed certain priests to perform for him those ceremonies properly performable on such occasions by a father, but the marriage cannot but be regarded as a somewhat bold attempt to force, as far as possible, the son's entrance into the ranks of a high (twice-born) caste, and it might well be that the father, as the Subordinate Judge thought, may have absented himself from the ceremony from motives of prudence. On the other hand it is difficult to believe that all the parties concerned, Sheo Dial, with his own sons and his daughters to get married, the Maharajah with his position and distinction, the priests with their duties to their religion and office, and all those who assisted at the ceremony with their notions of what was due to their creed, would have promoted, or taken part in an elaborate public function if they knew that it could at best create only a relation of permanent concubinage, without hope or prospect of elevation into a worthier and more respected state. The evidence of Sheo Dial is important in this connection. He said he went with two Pandits to visit the Maharajah, that he had learned that Jang Bahadur was a Mahomedan woman's son, that on his expressing his scruples about the contemplated marriage owing to this fact the Maharajah assured him that Jang Bahadur was a Hindu; that he (the Maharajah) held him (Sheo Dial) by the arm and said: "From childhood I have got him suckled by a Brahmin woman. He eats with me. He does puja, and his ways are the ways of a Hindu." Sheo Dial further says that Jang Bahadur Singh wore a tilak of chandan, that his cook was a Hindu, that he saw him sitting near the Maharajah at dinner, and that hearing and seeing this he, Sheo Dial, consented to the marriage of his sister with Jang Bahadur. No doubt it is stated by another witness that the Maharajah did not sit at meals with this son, but unless this evidence of Sheo Dial be an entire fabrication it bears additional testimony to the anxiety of the Maharajah to have his son accepted and treated as a Hindu. Hansraj Kunwar died in the Maharajah's lifetime. Jang Bahadur performed all the obsequies proper to be performed according to the Hindu religion by a surviving Hindu husband. His father, in the year 1872, got him, then about 24 years of age, again married to another Hindu lady, a member of the same Chhattri caste, Raj Kali Kunwar, who survived him, and is the fifth Defendant in this suit. There was the same publicity and pomp as on the occasion of the first marriage, the same religious ceremonial. The Maharajah absented himself on this, as he did on the former occasion, and got his duties performed vicariously in the same way. The sole issue of this second marriage was a girl. Both she and Bhaiya Ganga Bakhsh Singh married members of the Chhattri caste. Sir Robert Finlay insists that the law for many centuries has been that a Hindu must be born not made, and he cited several authorities in support of that proposition. On the other hand the treatises referred to by the Subordinate Judge at page 889 and the following pages of his judgment appear to tend in an opposite direction, and the facts of this case show that in this matter of marriage the rules both of Hinduism and of caste were not, in this instance at all events, strictly applied. In the view their Lordships take it is unnecessary to express any opinion on the point. The matter for decision in this case being the construction of a codicil to the Maharajah's Will, the point is not what is the strict rule of the Hindu religion, or the strict rule of the Chhattri caste, but this, namely, what were the wishes and intentions of the testator as revealed by the language of that instrument, viewed through the light of the circumstances which surrounded him at the time he made it.

It would be strange indeed if the man who had made it his special care to rear this son of his as a Hindu, and had succeeded in marrying him to two high caste Hindu women, should intend or desire, whatever might be the strict letter of the law, to place the offspring of these unions on the same level as the illegitimate children of his son's Mahomedan mistress and make them all equally the objects of his bounty.

Much reliance was placed by the Appellants upon the evidence of several witnesses, members of the Chhattri caste, which was directed to show that they would not eat with Jang Bahadur Singh, take betel leaves from him, or recognise him as a member of that caste, or of the Hindu religion, and it was contended that the Subordinate Judge had not paid sufficient attention to this evidence, or given it its due weight. He has no doubt not commented upon it at any great length, but it would be quite unreasonable because of this to conclude that he had not fully considered it. When the evidence is examined it will be found that the objection of many, if not most of these witnesses, to eat with Jang Bahadur or to give him betel leaves, &c., was due to the well-known and undisputed fact that he was the illegitimate son of a Mahomedan mistress, rather than to the fact that he was not a genuine Hindu. This is notably so in the case of the witnesses Kali Parshad, page 723, and Jagdeo Singh, page 726. The former said, "I did not eat with Jang Bahadur because he was Imam Bandi's son," and again, "I wont eat kutcha food touched by Ganga Bakhsh.

BHAIYA SHER BAHADUR v. BHAIYA GANGA BAKHSH SINGH.

I wont drink water from his hand because his grandmother was a Mahomedan," and the latter said "I cannot eat food cooked by Raj Kali Kunwar because she was Jang Bahadur's wife," but he proceeded to say that he would have no objection to eat with Jang Bahadur Singh if the Maharajah had asked him to do so, and then he added the important statement: "Jang Bahadur had offended the Maharajah by keeping a Mahomedan woman, that woman had four sons, she lived with Bandi as Jang Bahadur's mistress for 12 or 13 years until her death." Babu Basudeo Lal, an educated man and an advocate, at p. 731, says "Jang Bahadur took particular care to put on the tilak more than a born Hindu would take because he was anxious to appear a Hindu; that from the orthodox point of view he (the witness) did not consider him a Hindu, but he could not say he was a Mahomedan, because he professed to be a Hindu," yet he gave not this fac but the fact that Jang Bahadur was of illegitimate birth as the reason for his unwillingness to take water from his hands.

Hanwant Singh (page 127) gives remarkable evidence to the same effect. He said: "I consider Jang Bahadur a Hindu. He worshipped like a Hindu. He did pilgrimages like a Hindu. He gave dans to Brahmins like a Hindu. His ways were those of a Hindu. I saw him doing puja in the temple for the first time 30 years ago, and three times altogether I saw him feeding Brahmins at the temple." Yet despite what he saw, and his opinions on Jang Bahadur's religion, he says on the next page he would not eat with him because he was born of Imam Bandi, nor would he eat with Ganga Bakhsh, because presumably he was his father's son, though he admits that if the latter "persevered in his Hindu habits for two generations, he would be taken into the biradri."

These witnesses are fair specimens of those examined on this point. Their evidence might be of importance if it was necessary for their Lordships to determine whether or not the Defendant No. 1 was the legitimate son and heir-at-law of Jang Bahadur. The Subordinate Judge has (at page 961) determined that question in the affirmative. Their Lordships concur with the Court of the Judical Commissioner in thinking that it is not necessary to determine it one way or the other, for the purposes of the decision of the appeal, and they therefore abstain from expressing any opinion upon it. What is of importance, when one has to construe this codicil, and determine what was the testator's intention in making it, is to ascertain in what light he regarded his son, the marriages he helped that son to contract, and the issue that sprung from them.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the reasonable conclusion to be drawn from the evidence is that the Maharajah treated this son of his as a Hindu in religion, and desired that others should so treat him, that he treated his marriages with the two Chhatri ladies as lawful marriages and desired that others should so treat them, and consequently resolved to regard and treat the offspring of these unions as legitimate, and desired they should be so treated and regarded by others; and that it was in this frame of mind he made the testamentary deposition which is in dispute. It is lengthy, and in its material parts runs thus:—

"Whereas I have a son, named Jang Bahadur Singh born of an unmarried Mahal, and whereas he is not born of Khas Mahal, and it is against the usage of the family and against religion according to the Hindu Shastras, so he is not considered capable of gaddinashini and the proprietorship of the riasat. But he also being born of my loins, it is incumbent on me that such means be provided for support as would enable him and his (aulad) issues to support themselves well and with respect. Accordingly ever since the date of his birth till this day whenever proper opportunity presented, grant was made for his support; and during my lifetime I shall make grants according to my will whenever I shall deem it expedient to do so. But with a view to clearly make a provision beforehand in order that there may not remain any co-ownership and dispute relating to a part or the whole of my moveable and immoveable property, a property should be determined for Jang Bahadur Singh and his (aulad) issues for generation after generation in order that the conditions of the deed may remain binding in perpetuity. Accordingly the settlement is made as follows. It is this: Rs. 4,000 per mensem or Rs. 48,000 per annum shall be continued to be paid by the proprietor of the riasat, the locum tenens of the gaddinashin for the time being; and that amount shall be paid to Jang Bahadur Singh and his (aulad) issues for generation after generation as long as the (Khandan) family of Jang Bahadur Singh and his (aulad) issues remain in existence."

"DETAILS OF CONDITIONS.

"1. He shall not directly or indirectly take part in running the riasat, and shall also remain a well-wisher of the riasat.

"2. He shall not transfer his maintenance allowance to a stranger by sale, mortgage or otherwise.

"3 For his lifetime Jang Bahadur Singh has a right to spend this money, but after his death from among his (aulad) issues one person (Jis Ko haq pahunchta ho) to whom the right may go shall be considered proprietor of this maintenance allowance without division as a rais. The other issues of the family of Jang Bahadur Singh shall be entitled to get food, raiment and other necessaries out of the monthly allowance; . . . .

"4. When there remains no descendant of the family of Jang Bahadur Singh, at any time, the monthly allowance of Rs. 4,000 will be resumed and remain in proprietary possession of the proprietor of the riasat, the gaddinashin.

"5. For the realisation of the monthly allowance, a few villages with jama and names of demarcated villages and hamlets are selected, and a list of the same is annexed to the document The jama of the selected (tajwis shuda) villages will be credited from year to year towards the aforesaid fixed monthly allowance of Rs. 4,000. Neither has the proprietor of the riasat, gaddinashin, power to realise the jama of the selected villages yielding Rs. 48,000, including mal and sewai, from Jang Bahadur Singh or his descendants, nor is Jang Bahadur Singh or his family descendants competent to demand the fixed monthly allowance of Rs. 4,000 from the gaddinashin, the proprietor of the riasat.

"6. The jama of the selected villages, a copy of which is attached to the document, shall be deemed the jama, including mal and sewai in perpetuity. And the proprietor of the riasat for the time being shall have no power to increase or decrease the jama. And Jang Bahadur Singh and his family descendants shall raise no excuse as to increase or decrease of the jama. And the proprietor of the riasat shall have no power to cancel the lease. And Jang Bahadur Singh and his family descendants shall have no proprietary right against the proprietor of the riasat, except that of deriving benefit from the selected villages. Besides, Jang Bahadur Singh and his family descendants shall have no power to transfer the immoveable property by sale or mortgage or otherwise. But they shall continue in perpetuity to hold possession over the said villages.

"7. The villages selected for payment of the monthly allowance shall have their boundaries maintained according to the map of had-o-bast kishtwar. The proprietor of the riasat shall have no power to vary them contrary to it, nor shall Jang Bahadur Singh or his descendants have any."

Then follow the details of the villages leased out in perpetuity for the payment of the monthly allowance of Rs. 4,000. The testator then makes a bequest to Imam Bandi, the mother of Jang Bahadur, in the following words:—

"Besides, with a view to support the mother of Jang Bahadur Singh, I propose to fix Rs. 1,000 per mensem, or Rs. 12,000 a year for her personal expenses. She, that is, the mother of Jang Badadur Singh has power to spend the fixed allowance without interference by anybody else, and may, in her lifetime, make a will in favour of anybody whom she pleases, and in respect of any good work she likes, and it will be deemed liable to be acted upon. And for the purpose of realising the aforesaid annuity of Rs. 12,000, a few villages, mentioned below, are given by way of theka with jama assessed thereon. The money will be realised from those villages from year to year."

He then gives a list of the villages out of which the Rs. 12,000 was to be collected, and proceeds to add :—

"These few sentences have been put down to make provision for her support while in the enjoyment of health and possession of the five senses and out of my own pleasure and accord, in order that they may be of use after me."

The testator died on the 27th of May 1882. In or about January 1894 Jang Bahadur Singh became insane. He so continued for several years, and died on the 1st of October 1899 leaving as his own the moveable and immoveable property mentioned in Schedules B. and C. attached to the Statement of Claim. The first Defendant, as already mentioned, immediately went into possession of the property mentioned in Schedule A. and has since retained it.

Jang Bahadur Singh was created by the codicil ancestor or first proprietor of the estate, maintenance allowances somewhat resembling rent-charges, were charged upon it. It was to be perpetual, impartible, indivisible, and incapable of being otherwise charged or encumbered, and it was not to be the subject of any co-ownership. On the death of Jang Bahadur a person, styled at page 224 the representative of the former, was to succeed him as proprietor of this maintenance allowance, without "division" as a rais. "This proprietor was to be one of the issue of Bahadur Singh"—the other issue (aulad) of the family (khandan) of Jang Bahadur Singh being only entitled to get food and raiment out of the allowance. In addition the marriage and funeral expenses of the male and female children of the family of Jang Bahadur Singh were to be paid. The only indication given as to how the particular individual, one of the issue of Jang Bahadur, who was to succeed him as proprietor of the allowance, was to be ascertained is that contained in the words "on whom the right may devolve." The testator must have had in mind some law or rule which would apply to fix the succession. What law could this high caste Hindu possibly have had in mind for such a purpose other than the Hindu law ? That law, however, in the matter of succession to property, takes no account, in the three higher classes, of illegitimate descendants. Sir Robert Finlay, as their Lordships understood, admitted this contention—at least to this extent, that if when a suceessor came to be ascertained the class of beneficiares contained both legitimate and illegitimate members, the eldest legitimate male would by the Hindu law succeed ; but where, as in the present case, as he contended, all the children were illegitimate, the eldest male amongst them should succeed. But by what law or rule he did not indicate. It is difficult to suppose that if the testator intended all his grandchildren to be put upon the same level he would not have indicated some method by which the successor to his son should be selected. If he relied at all upon the Hindu law to select that successor it could only be because he wished it to be assumed that that law applied to some of the issue of his son, and that could only be the case if those members of the issue were to be taken to be legitimate.

At the date of this codicil Jang Bahadur was only about 30 years of age. He had already had one son by his deceased Chhattri wife. He had been married for some time to another Chhattri wife, by whom it was quite possible he might have had male issue, and it would have been quite in conflict with the whole tenor of the Maharajah's treatment of and conduct towards his son Jang Bahadur, to deprive by this codicil these marriages and the issue springing from them of the character and status he had striven to secure for them. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner came to the conclusion that the Maharajah thought these marriages of his son were valid, and the issue of them legitimate. However that may be, it is clear, their Lordships think upon the whole of the evidence, that he wished them to be so regarded by others. Nothing would more surely have defeated that desire—than that he should by this testamentary instrument show that he himself regarded them in a wholly different light, and placed the children of these marriages on an equality with those of a Mahomedan concubine. The Maharajah has used the word "aulad" throughout this codicil to describe the issue of his son Jang Bahadur. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner has laid it down that this word primâ facie means legitimate issue. This case is not one where a gift is made by will of the corpus of a fund, or a life interest in a fund to the "children" of the testator or of another as a class. There may be good reason in some such cases for holding that in India the word "children" includes illegitimate children, but here a succession of life interests from generation to generation is intended to be set up, the successor or "proprietor" in each instance being vested with absolute control of the income, subject only to the duty of maintaining the issue (aulad) of the family (khandan) of the first proprietor, Jang Bahadur Singh. There is nothing on the face of the will to suggest that a meaning should be given to the word "aulad" different from its primâ facie meaning; but if it is to be read as including illegitimate issue, then it follows that the testator intended to bring into the line of succession not only his illegitimate grandchildren but their illegitimate issue from generation to generation. Such a construction would render rather unnecessary the provision (No 4, page 224) that if no descendants of the family of Jang Bahadur remained, the monthly allowance should fall into the possession of the gaddinashin, and would also seem to defeat the whole purpose and object of the testator in establishing this succession of life interests. Nor do their Lordships see any reason for extending in this instance the meaning of the word "khandan," which ordinarily refers to the group of descendants who constitute the family of the progenitor, so as to include illegitimate offspring, who from the necessities of the case cannot share in the family life or its worship or ceremonials.

It has been strenuously urged by Sir Robert Finaly on behalf of the Appellant: firstly, that there would have been nothing easier for the testator, if he desired to exclude his illegitimate grandchildren from all benefit under this codicil than to have said so. The question is, has he not done so by the use of the word aulad. But even if this be not so, it was quite as easy for him to include them in the class described by the word issue as to exclude them from it, so that the argument cuts both ways. And it was in the second place contended that having regard to his interest in these children, he never could have intended to leave them unprovided for. He undoubtedly did show some interest in them, but not a very keen interest, and it is by no means clear that he did not intend them to be provided for in the way they have been, in fact, provided for, namely, by being maintained by their grandmother Imam Bandi during her life, out of the income left to her by the codicil. He enabled her by the exercise of the testamentary power over this income conferred upon her to provide for them after her death. The income was large, Rs. 1,000 per mensem. She was a woman who at the date of the codicil must have been at least 45 years of age, her son Jang Bahadur being then 30 years of age. The son's mistress and her children lived with her. She, according to the evidence, helped to rear them. It was scarcely conceivable that she should require Rs. 12,000 per annum for her personal expenses alone. The power of disposing of this income by will clearly showed that the testator had some object in view beyond providing adequately for her maintenance. What more natural than that this income, handsome in amount, and disposable by her will, should have been given to enable her to provide for her grandchildren. Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that having regard to all the evidence in the case and the provisions of the codicil itself, the intention of the testator plainly was to treat the marriages of Jang Bahadur with the two Chhattri women already mentioned as valid marriages, and the issue of those marriages as legitimate issue. They think that the judgment appealed from was right, and that this Appeal should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES

Nos. 4090 OF 1910 AND 98 OF 1911.

FLETCHER, J. N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. 1913, Heard, 26 and 27, November. Judgment, 27, November.	SARAT CHANDRA MUKHOPADHYAY and another, Defendants, Appellants, v. RAJENDRA LAL MITRA and others, Plaintiffs and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Lease for a term—Clause allowing removal of fixture after expiry of lease, if a renewal clause—Notice of a lease—Notice of terms of a lease—Estoppel—Ouster—Suit for joint possession.

Terms in a lease giving the lessee, if unwilling at the end of the term to take a fresh settlement, the right to take away the fixtures put on the land cannot operate as a covenant under which the lessee could compel the lessor to grant a fresh term.

A party having notice of a lease must be taken to have notice of the terms of the lease.

The doctrine of estoppel by conduct does not apply in a case in which the party claiming that the other side is bound by the estoppel had express notice of the fact which he says was not represented to him by the other side as the true fact.

A suit for joint possession is not maintainable unless there is actual ouster.

If it is stated by the Defendant in possession that the Plaintiff has no right and if he is refused leave to enter the land, it is a case of actual ouster and a suit for joint possession will lie.

This was an Appeal against the decree of W. N. Delevingne, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Hughly, dated the 30th of SARAT CHANDRA MUKHOPADHYAY v. RAJENDRA LAL MITRA.

August 1910, modifying the decree of Babu Surendra Nath Mitra, Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 22nd of March 1909.

The facts necessary for the purpose of this report are shortly these :—

Luchmi Narain and Gouri Sankar were owners of a plot of land about 7 bighas odd allotted to their share on partition. Luchmi Narain granted a lease with respect to his share of the land in favour of Gouri Sankar for a term of 51 years on the 1st Falgun 1262, corresponding to 12th February 1856, which was to expire in Magh 1313, corresponding to February 1906. This lease was described as ijara pattah and the following clause was inserted in it.

"If you or your heirs be unwilling to take an ijara settlement of the said property on the expiry of the term you or your heirs shall take away such appurtenances which you make at your own cost."

Gouri Sankar, on the 2nd April 1856, granted a permanent lease in favour of Bengal Coal Co. Ld., (Defendant No. 7) of the entire land and in this lease there was a recital to the effect that Gouri Sankar was entitled to the lands of his brother by virtue of a settlement from him. Defendants Nos. 6 and 8 were the purchasers of the interest of Gouri Sanker in the property.

The Plaintiffs, who were the heirs of Luchmi Narain, instituted this suit on the 26th September 1907 for recovery of joint possession of their share. The other facts will be found in the judgment of the Court.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

FLETCHER, J.—These are two appeals presented against a judgment and decree passed by the learned District Judge of Hughly, dated the 30th August 1910, reversing the judgment and decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge. The suit was brought by the Plaintiffs for joint possession of certain lands in which they claimed an 8 annas share. The first Court dismissed the suit; but, on appeal, the learned District Judge reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge. Two appeals have been presented to this Court : one (No. 4090 of 1910) by the Defendant No. 7, i.e., the Bengal Coal Company and the other (No. 98 of 1911) by the Defendants Nos. 6 and 8. The case has been dealt with very fully by the learned District Judge who has given a very long and careful judgment. When you look at the facts, the case is one of extreme simplicity. The Plaintiffs derived their title to the land through one Luchmi Narayan. The Defendants Nos. 6 and 8 claim title through one Gouri Sankar. It is not necessary to go into the intermediate title. The Defendant No. 7, the Bengal Coal Company, claim under a lease executed by Gouri Sankar in their favour, dated the 21st Chaitra 1262, of the Bengali year which corresponds to 2nd April 1856. Gouri Sankar had, prior to the granting of this lease to the Bengal Coal Company, the Defendant No. 7, acquired from Luchmi Narain a lease of his share for a term of 51 years from the month of Falgun in the Bengali year 1262 to the month of Magh in the Bengali year 1313 : and in that lease was contained this clause:—"If you or your heirs be unwilling to take an ijara settlement of the said property on the expiry of the term, you or your heirs shall take away such appurtenances which you make at your own cost." The lease expired on the expiration of the term of 51 years when an attempt was made by the Plaintiffs to be put into joint possession but they were refused. The statements made in the written statement in this suit show quite clearly what the case made by the appealing Defendants is. First of all, in para. 7, Sarat Chandra Mukerjee, that is, the Defendant No. 6, sets up that he is entitled to have a fresh settlement and get a new lease granted under the terms of a covenant for renewal. In the 8th para. he sets up another case that even assuming that he is not entitled to a renewal, he is entitled, under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act to receive a notice to quit before the Plaintiffs can get a decree for khas possession and in the 12th para. he sets up a case that the Plaintiffs cannot get joint possession unless they make an application for partition. The defence set up by the Bengal Coal Company is much stronger because they set up that the Plaintiffs' suit is barred by estoppel, latches and acquiescence as well as by limitation, the Defendant Company having been in adverse possession for 51 years upon a claim of permanent title. It seems to me that those are the cases on which the parties offered to defend the suit when it was brought to Court and we are bound to consider those defences in deciding this case. As my learned brother pointed out in the course of the argument, if the sole defence that was raised in the suit had been that the proper remedy of the Plaintiffs was by partition, then the Plaintiffs could have either applied to the Court to have the plaint amended by adding a claim for partition or they could have instituted another suit claiming partition. But the case has not proceeded on that footing at all. These points have been used solely with intent to defeat the Plaintiffs in the present suit. One thing is clear on the findings of the learned District Judge. First of all, that the Bengal Coal Company had express notice of the lease by Luchmi Narain to Gouri Sankar. That is a finding of fact and the facts on which the learned Judge finds that amply warrant the finding. But if that had not been so, I do not think it would have made very much difference. Having found that the Defendant No. 7, the Bengal Coal Company, had notice of the lease, of course, the learned Judge very properly found that they had notice of the terms of the lease. The term of the lease was 51 years and the grant to the Bengal Coal Company purported to be a grant of a permanent tenure from the 2nd April 1856. The Bengal Coal Company must be taken to have known that the permanent lease could only operate out of the share of Gouri Sankar; and so far as regards the share which Gouri Sankar held as a lessee from Luchmi Narain, it could only take effect during the pendency of the term. That seems to have been found by the learned District Judge quite clearly and there is no doubt about that fact.

The first point which has been raised in these appeals is that the lease from Luchmi Narain to Gouri Sankar, dated the 12th February 1856, contained a covenant for renewal—either a covenant to renew for a term of 51 years or a covenant to renew in perpetuity. In my opinion, if the matter is free from authority, it is quite impossible to say that these words giving the lessee a right at the expiry of the term to take away what the document calls the appurtenances,—I suppose, the fixtures put on the land,—could operate as a covenant under which the lessee could compel the lessor to grant a fresh term. Moreover, this has been the view that was taken on this very document in a former case. Our attention has been directed to Jagendra Chandra Mitter v. Rajendra Nath Mitter (1), and the same view was taken as to the effect of this lease of the 12th February 1856. It would be quite impossible for any body reading this document to come to the conclusion that a license in a lease giving to the lessee a right to carry away the fixtures on the expiry of the term necessarily involves a stipulation that if he does not carry away the fixtures his lease would be renewed. That is sufficient, in my opinion, to dispose of the case of renewal.

Then we had a very extraordinary point discussed before us, that is, estoppel by conduct against the persons claiming through Luchmi Narain. The learned District Judge found and found as a fact that the Bengal Coal Company, the persons who set up this estoppel against the Plaintiffs had express notice of the terms of the lease from Luchmi Narain to Gouri Sankar. If the Bengal Coal Company cared to lay out money on a 51 years' lease on a portion of the land they must take consequences. Many people lay out money on lands which are let out for shorter terms than a permanent tenure; but I have never heard that the doctrine of estoppel by conduct applies in a case in which the party claiming that the other side is bound by the estoppel had express notice of the fact which he says was not represented to him by the other side as the true fact. This case of estoppel, in my opinion, has no force at all.

The other point is really the point which has been argued before us most strenuously, at any rate this morning, and that is as to whether the Plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for joint possession or whether their proper remedy is not to proceed by way of partition and have their share in the property allotted to them. Of course, the authorities are clear, that, unless there is an ouster of the Plaintiff, he cannot sue for joint possession. In this case, I have already called attention to what the points are that were raised in the written statements. In those written statements there is a clear denial of the title of the Plaintiffs to have any immediate right in the property. It is said that the interest of the Plaintiffs is reduced to that of being entitled to a portion of the rent payable by the Defendant No. 7 for the land of which the Defendant No. 7 claims to be a permanent tenant. If it is stated by the man who is in possession that the other side has no right and if he is refused leave to enter the land that is a case of actual ouster, and it is apparent that the present case is a case of actual ouster when you read the written statement. As my learned brother pointed out in the course of the argument, if that point had been the only point raised that the proper remedy was to proceed by way of partition, the Plaintiffs might have elected to proceed either by a fresh suit or by an amendment of the existing suit to have the property partitioned. But that was not the case at all. The whole case that was presented before us was that the

SARAT CHANDRA MUKHOPADHYAY v. RAJENDRA LAL MITRA.

Plaintiffs were not entitled to get joint possession on the ground that the Defendant No. 7 had obtained a permanent interest in the property. That being so, it seems to me that on all grounds the judgment of the learned District Judge which has been very carefully considered and written out at great length is right and that the present appeals must fail and must be dismissed with costs.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 499, Exc. 9—Pleader, question by, to witness in cross-examination conveying imputation, if can be subject of charge of defamation—Presumption of good faith—Rebutting evidence, nature of.

A question put to a witness in cross-examination by a pleader making an imputation affords no ground for a criminal prosecution. A pleader is entitled to the presumption that the questions he asks in cross-examination are asked in good faith for the protection of the interest of his client. To rebut this presumption there must be convincing evidence that the pleader was actuated by an improper motive personal to himself and not by a desire to protect or further the interests of his client in the cause.

This was a reference under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., by the Sessions Judge of Sylhet, recommending that the proceedings taken by the Additional District Magistrate of Sylhet, on 2nd June 1913, summoning the accused pleader to answer a charge of defamation under sec. 500, I. P. C, on the ground that the accused pleader put an alleged defamatory question to the complainant while being examined as a witness for the prosecution in a case, might be quashed.

The facts were as follows :—

The accused, a pleader of the Judge's Court of Sylhet, was summoned by the Additional Magistrate of Sylhet under sec. 500, I. P. C, on the complaint of one Nikunja Behari Sen. The complainant was a prosecution witness in a case under sec. 408, I. P. C., in the Court of a Deputy Magistrate and the accused was the pleader for the defence. In cross-examination he asked the complainant (Nikunja) the following question—"Do you drink or smoke ganja?" The complainant said that there was no foundation for the question and that the accused in the case under sec. 408, I. P. C., maliciously had it put by his pleader because he was angry with the complainant for giving evidence. The Sessions Judge of Sylhet made a reference to the High Court recommending the quashing of the criminal proceedings started against the accused pleader and he stated therein that the question was admittedly based on specific instruction. Moreover, the question was not a random one. The defence in the sec. 408, I. P. C., case was that the case was entirely concocted and the witnesses were associates of Girindra the complainant. The complainant Nikunja said in cross-examination "Girindra drinks liquor and smokes ganja." The next question "Do you drink and smoke ganja" naturally follows for the purpose of showing association with Girindra. The learned Magistrate in his explanation suggests that the pleader acted without good faith,

NOTES.

Rules for admission of Barristers in the High Courts.

In reviewing the new rules and orders on the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court last week we said that the requirement that a barrister desiring to join the High Court must read in the chambers of a barrister in England for a year is now under the consideration of the Secretary of State. It may ultimately be decided in favour of the view we put forward viz., that he must be given the option to study with a barrister in India or England as he pleases. The English Law Journal of the 24th January last published the following information on the subject :—

The High Courts in India have recently adopted certain regulations for the enrolment of duly qualified barristers, which have been the subject of some criticism. The sub-committee recently appointed by the London Advisory Committee for Indian students to inquire into the difficulties of the Indian students in the United Kingdom have made the following recommendations :—(1) That students should be given the option of deciding whether the year prescribed for reading in chambers should be worked out in the United Kingdom or in India. (2) That students should be allowed to commence their chamber work before being called to the Bar. (3) That the Rule of the Bombay High Courts requiring a student to read in the Chambers of a European Barrister of 10 years' standing should be widened so as to allow students to read with barristers of recognised standing of any nationality. The Advisory Committee have approved these recommendations and have submitted them to the Secretary of State for his consideration.

Habeas Corpus—Court of Appeal.

The decision of the Court of Appeal in England in the matter of a recent Habeas Corpus petition is both interesting and instructive. In Rex. v. Governor of Brixton Prison, the application was made for a rule nisi first in the King's Bench Division before Ridley and Bankes, JJ., for a writ of Habeas Corpus for the production of Le Gros who was arrested in London upon an extradition warrant on a charge of an extraditable offence committed within the jurisdiction of the French Republic and was kept in custody in the Brixton gaol. This application was refused. Thereupon Counsel on the same facts and affidavits wen before the Court of Appeal presided over by the Lord Chief Justice and moved for a writ. On His Lordship pointing out to Counsel that under the Judicature Act of 1873, the Court of Appeal was precluded from reviewing any order of the Divisional Court in a criminal matter except in some special cases provided for by special statutes, counsel relied on the Extradition Act of 1870, and Cox v. Hakes (15 App. Cas. 506), which followed the practice before the three Common Law Courts in England were amalgamated under the Judicature Act of 1873. The law as laid down there by Halsbury, L. C., was that after an application had been rejected by one Court or Judge, "the person detained might make a fresh application to every Judge or every Court in turn, and each Court or Judge was bound to consider the question independently and not be influenced by the previous decisions refusing discharge," the reason assigned being that "for a period extending as far back as our legal history, the writ of Habeas Corpus has been regarded as one of the most important safeguards of the liberty of the subject."

It was, therefore, argued before the Lord Chief Justice that even if his Lordship denied the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeal, still he was a Judge of the King's Bench Division and the Petitioner had every right to move him personally. To this his Lordship replied that while sitting in the Court of Appeal he ceased for the time being to be a Judge exercising original jurisdiction and could only exercise the powers of a member of a Court of Appeal. His Lordship refused to decide the question whether the applicant was entitled to go from Court to Court or Judge to Judge till a writ was granted or a legal justification made out for his detention. It would not be out of place to notice in this connection a similar application made before the Court of Appeal in Savarkar's case. There the application was made to the Court of Appeal after its rejection in the King's Bench Division. The Court of Appeal held that they had jurisdiction but rejected it on its merits. The reason their Lordships assigned for their decision was that the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, which is applicable only to cases where extradition was demanded from one part of His Majesty's kingdom to another, by secs. 10 and 35 gave "original jurisdiction" to every "Superior Court" and "Superior Court" in that Ac is defined to be "Her Majesty's Court of Appeal and High Court of Justice" It may seem at first sight to be anomalous that the Superior Court should be authorised to go into the question of legal justification of detention when the prisoner is to be tried by another Court within the Empire but not when his surrender is demanded by a Foreign power. But the difference in procedure may be justified on the ground that the obligation to extradite at the instance of a Foreign power arises out of treaty obligations, and it is obviously not desirable that the trial of the criminal in the State which has jurisdiction to try him should be put off indefinitely by the decision of the enquiring Court being made subject to review by higher Courts in a Foreign Jurisdiction.

Pleaders' clerks if may "file" documents.

A correspondent from the Mofussil writes to us questioning the authority of pleaders' clerks, even when registered, to file petitions and other papers in Court or in offices attached thereto. We can hardly conceive of a practice being suffered to grow up of allowing pleaders' clerks to exercise for themselves functions reserved by the law and rules having the force of law to pleaders and mukhtears only. But pleaders, any more than mukhtears, are not bound to do every act they are authorised to do by their own hands. They must often employ agents to perform the physical acts of putting in papers and taking them out, and therefore there is no objection to pleaders' clerks delivering or depositing documents in Courts and offices under the directions of their employers, the latter and not their clerks being responsible for these acts. The practice on the Appellate Side of the High Court is for pleaders to endorse on the back of papers to be filed by their clerks an authority to them to file the papers. Of course, when there is the authority of the pleader in fact, a written authority endorsed as above is not absolutely essential. No exception, we think, can be taken therefore to clerks filing papers and documents in Courts and Court offices if they do so under the authority of pleaders or mukhtears under whom they are employed. Solicitors' clerks are also allowed to file papers in the same way in the offices on the Original Side of the High Court.

Deportations and Martial law in South Africa.

The English Law Journal of the 24th January last has the following leaderette on the recent deportations and the declaration of martial law in South Africa.

While, of course, there is no resemblance between the condition of South Africa at present, threatened as it is with a general strike and outrages by dynamitards, and that of Alsace-Lorraine, English jurists must view with equal concern the use of martial law in either country. It is a serious matter, even in times of civil commotion, for the ordinary law courts of the country to be divested of their jurisdiction—however partially—in favour of military tribunals. In times of actual warfare, of course, when the country is invaded by a foreign enemy, the rule is different; then martial law supersedes the ordinary law until the invader is expelled and peace restored (Ex parte Marais [1909]). Then the maxim comes into play, Salus republicæ suprema lex. But in times of peace no Government has power to substitute military for civil courts where British law prevails Such is the Common Law of England as laid down in a long series of constitutional cases, and a careful examination of the South Africa Act, 1909, which created the Union of South Africa, reveals, in its one hundred and fifty-two sections, no statutory provision over-riding this rule. Indeed, by section 17 the command of naval and military forces throughout the Union is expressly reserved to the King or the Governor-General as his representative; military affairs are taken out of the province of the Colonial Government. It follows, then, that acts done in South Africa by military tribunals in pursuance of the powers conferred upon them by the recent proclamation are all subject to revision in due course by the civil and criminal courts of the Colony. Only two pleas can be used in defence of any such acts before an ordinary court. One is the Common Law plea that the persons entrusted with the execution of martial law has used no greater amount of force than was reasonably necessary to safeguard life and property. That is always in a proper case a justification of acts which would otherwise be criminal whether or not martial law has been proclaimed. The second plea is that an Act of Indemnity has been passed, either by the Cape or the Imperial Parliament, excusing such acts, otherwise illegal. It is authoritatively announced that the South African Government is about to introduce into the Cape Parliament such an Act of Indemnity. It may be assumed that, in accordance with constitutional precedents, the proposed Indemnity Act will expressly provide for compensation to persons injured by the operation of martial law, and for redress where abuse of the powers entrusted to any officer may be proved.

Pre-emption, suit for—Custom—Material evidence.

JANKI MISSIR v. RANNO SINGH, I. L R. 35 All. 472.

In a suit for pre-emption where the Court is trying the issue of the existence or non-existence of a custom every instance of a sale to a stranger is material evidence which the Court ought to take into consideration but it should be clearly and distinctly proved to the Court who the vendees were and any other circumstances connected with the sales.

Acquisition of occupancy right by Mohunt—Agra Tenancy Act.

PARMANAND SING v. MAHANT RAMANAND GIR, I. L. R. 35 All. 474.

There is no express prohibition against the acquisition of an occupancy holding by the manager of a muth on behalf of the muth, under the Agra Tenancy Act.

Ad valorem Court Fee must be paid on an appeal against an order under Or. 34, r. 5, C. P. C., which is a final decree.

Hindu Law—Female heir, representing estate.

MAHADEO SING v. SHEO KARAN, I. L. R. 35 All. 481.

A Hindu daughter died after obtaining a decree for possession of her father's estate against trespassers, and her sons applied for execution.

Held—That the daughter represented the father's estate when she brought the suit and the persons who succeeded to the estate were entitled to execute the decree obtained by her.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), Or. 34, r. 1—Mortgage suit—Necessary parties.

ALAM SING v. GOKAL SING, I. L. R. 35 All 484.

A simple mortgage of a certain property was executed in favour of one A. Thereafter a usufructuary mortgage of a portion of the same property was executed in favour of A and N. A brought a suit on the first mortgage without making N a party to the suit.

Held—That N as subsequent mortgagee of a portion of the mortgaged property had an interest in the equity of redemption and was therefore a necessary party within the meaning of Or. 34, r. 1, C. P. C., but the effect of the omission of N from the suit was not the total dismissal of the suit but only so much of it as related to the portion included in the second mortgage.

Injury to railway passenger—Contributory negligence.

JEHANGIR MUNCHERJI LALI v. THE BOMBAY BARODA RAILWAY COMPANY, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 575.

While a train was running at a fair speed the Plaintiff was seated in a compartment with his left arm projecting out of the window. This arm was injured and fractured by an open door of a stationary train on another line. It appeared that notices were put up in carriages by the Railway Company cautioning passengers not to put any portion of the person out of the window while the train is in motion. The Plaintiff sued the Railway Company for damages.

Held—That the Plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence and was not entitled to recover damages.

Civil Procedure Code (1908), Or. 41, r. 11—Summary dismissal of appeal.

HANMANT v. ANNAJI, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 610.

Under the circular order of the Bombay High Court an Appellate Court dismissing an appeal under Or. 41, r. 11 must write a judgment and a formal decree must be drawn up.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 52—Lis pendens.

BHOGI MAHADEO v. GANGA BAI, I. L. R. 37 Bom. 621.

A Hindu widow obtained a decree declaring a charge on the family property on account of her maintenance, thereafter the Plaintiff purchased a portion of the family property. Subsequent to this the widow applied for execution of her decree and the same property which had been purchased by the Plaintiff was sold at a Court sale to one A. The Plaintiff sued to set aside the sale in favour of A.

Held—That the doctrine of lis pendens as embodied in sec. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act which so far as concerns the present case limits the applicability of the doctrine to purchases made "during the active prosecution in a Court of a contentious suit or proceeding" and the sale to the Plaintiff was not affected by lis pendens.

Court sale.

TIMMAPPA v. NARSINHA, I. L. R. Bom. 631.

In each case it is a question as to what the Court intended to sell at public auction and what the purchaser expected to buy. The Court cannot sell more than what the law allows.

Reviews.

THE INDIAN ARBITRATION ACT (IX of 1899). By the Late Mr. H. N. Morrison, Bar-at-Law. Second Edition. Revised and brought up-to-date. Thacker, Spink & Co., Calcutta. 1914.

This work was originally published in 1901 and has long called for a revision. We find the recent Indian cases incorporated in the notes and also references to English cases given where they may be usefully referred to. The provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are also given in the appendix. They can only serve the purpose of comparison with those of Act IX of 1899. But the provisions of the Code which relate to references by agreement as also the provisions of the Contract Act and the Specific Relief Act, which have a bearing on the question, are given of the outset. Then follows the Act (IX of 1899) with annotations. The annotations may also be usefully referred to in connection with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code so far as they relate to references by agreement. The Rules of the different High Courts in connection with Act IX of 1899 are given in the appendix. Every man of business in the Presidency towns and Karachi will find it useful to keep this little book on his table. The printing, paper, binding and general get-up are all that can be desired.

THE INDIAN CONTRACT ACT, as amended up-to-date. By Mahendra Nath Ray, B. L. Published by Rai M. C. Sarkar Bahadur & Sons, 75-1-1, Harrison Road, Calcutta. 1914. Price Rs. 7.

This is a cheap and handy edition of the Indian Contract Act, which besides embodying Indian case-notes draws liberally upon English and Indian text-books for the purpose of elucidating and explaining the provisions of the Act. The provisions of the Act differ on some points very materially from the law obtaining in England, and this difference is carefully pointed out. In an appendix are set out the provisions of the Carriers Act, the Usury Laws Repeal Act and the Interest Act. The book will satisfy all ordinary requirements of practitioners and will be found useful also by law students.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Kreglinger v. The new Patagonia meat & Cold Storage Co., "Ltd." Before THE LORD CHANCELLOR & LORDS HALSBURY, ATKINSON, MERSEY AND PARKER. 20th November 1913.

Clog on the equity of redemption or collateral undertaking outside and clear of the mortgage.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal. The facts were as follows :—

Under an agreement the Appellants were to lend the Respondents £10,000, repayable on demand, with interest at 6 per cent. If, however, among other conditions to be observed, the interest was duly paid, the Appellants were not to demand repayment till September 30, 1915, but the Respondents were to be at liberty to pay off the loan earlier. To secure the loan the Respondents by the agreement charged their undertaking and all their property, both present and future, with the payment of the principal sum and interest, to the intent that the charge should be a floating security on the undertaking and property, but so that the Respondents should not create any mortgage or charge in priority without the Appellant's consent, or without such consent sell their farms or lands. The principal sum was to become payable in certain prescribed events. By cl. 8 of the agreement the Respondents were not for five years from the date of the agreement (i.e., till August 24, 1915), to sell sheepskins to anyone excepting the Appellants, so long as the latter were willing to buy at a price equal to the best price (c.i.f., London) offered by anyone else, and the Respondents were to pay to the Appellants a commission of 1 per cent., on the sale price of all sheepskins sold by the Respondents to anyone else.

The Respondents had now paid off the loan, and claimed that such payment had put an end to the option of the Appellants to buy the Respondents' sheepskins. Under the terms of the agreement this option would, if valid, continue operative until August 24th, 1915. What the Respondents said was that the stipulation was one that restricted their freedom in conducting the undertaking or business which was the subject of the floating charge; that it was consequently of the nature of a clog on their right to redeem and invalid, and that, whether it clogged the right to redeem or was in the nature of a collateral advantage, it was not intended and could not be made to endure after redemption.

The Appellants, on the other hand, said that the stipulation in question was one of a kind usual in business, and that it was in the nature not of a clog but of a collateral bargain outside the actual loan, which they only agreed to make in order to obtain the option itself. The controversy which had thus arisen was brought before Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady on a motion for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the Respondents from selling sheepskins to anyone else than the Appellants. The learned Judge refused this motion on the ground that the point had been settled adversely to the Appellants by decisions of the House of Lords. The case was brought formally before the Court of Appeal, but was disposed of there without argument, with a view to taking the point as speedily as possible before the House of Lords.

The House of Lords allowed the appeal and declared that the Appellants were entitled to the injunction claimed by them. The Lord Chancellor in his judgment said :—

The most general of these was that if the transaction was once found to be a mortgage it must be treated as always remaining a mortgage and nothing but a mortgage. That the substance of the transaction must be looked to in applying this doctrine, and that it did not apply to cases which were only apparently or technically within it, but were in reality something more than cases of mortgage, Howard v. Harris (1 Vern., 190) and other authorities show it. It was only a different application of the paramount doctrine to lay it down in the form of a second rule that a mortgagee should not stipulate for a collateral advantage which would make his remuneration for the loan exceed a proper rate of interest. The Legislature during a long period placed restrictions on the rate of interest which could legally be exacted. But equity went beyond the limits of the statutes which limited the interest, and was ready to interfere with any usurious stipulation in a mortgage. In so doing it was influenced by the public policy of the time. That policy had now changed, and the Acts which limited the rate of interest had been repealed. The result was that a collateral advantage might now be stipulated for by the mortgagee, provided that he had not acted unfairly or oppressively, and provided that the bargain did not conflict with the third form of the principle. This was that a mortgage could not be made irredeemable, and that any stipulation which restricted or clogged the equity of redemption was void. It was obvious that the reason for the doctrine in this form was the same as that which gave rise to the other forms. It was simply an assertion in a different way of the principle that once a mortgage always a mortgage and nothing else.

The rules he had stated had now been applied by Courts of Equity for nearly three centuries, and the books were full of illustrations of their application. But it was inconsistent with the objects for which they were established that these rules should crystallize into technical language so rigid that the letter could defeat the underlying spirit and purpose. Their application must correspond with practical necessities of the time.

The rule as to collateral advantages, for example, had been much modified by the repeal of the Usury Laws and by the recognition of modern varieties of commercial bargaining. In Biggs v. Hoddinott [1898] (2 Ch. D. 307), it was held that a brewer might stipulate in a mortgage made to him of a hotel that during the five years for which the loan was to continue the mortgagor would deal with him exclusively for malt liquor. In the 17th and 18th centuries a Court of Equity could hardly have so decided, and the judgment illustrated the elastic character of Equity jurisdiction and the power of Equity Judges to mould the rules which they applied in accordance with the exigencies of the time. The decision proceeded on the ground that a mortgagee might stipulate for a collateral advantage at the time as a term of the advance, provided, first, that no unfairness was shown, and, secondly, that the right to redeem was not thereby clogged. It was no longer true that, as was said in Jennings v. Ward (2 Vern., 520), "a man shall not have interest for his money and collateral advantage besides for the loan of it." Unless such a bargain was unconscionable it was not good. But none the less the other and wider principle remained unshaken, that it was the essence of a mortgage that in the eye of a Court of Equity it should be a mere security for money, and that no bargain could be validly made which would prevent the mortgagor from redeeming on payment of what was due, including principal, interest, and costs. He might stipulate that he would not pay off his debt, and so redeem the mortgage, for a fixed period. But whenever a right to redeem arose out of the doctrine of equity, he was precluded from fettering it. This principle had become an integral part of our system of jurisprudence, and must be faithfully adhered to.

The question in the present case was whether the right to redeem had been interfered with. And this must, for the reasons to which he had adverted in considering the history of the doctrine of equity, depend on the answer to a question which was primarily one of fact. What was the true character of the transaction? Did the Appellants make a bargain such that the right to redeem was cut down, or did they simply stipulate for a collateral undertaking, outside and clear of the mortgage, which would give them an exclusive option of purchase of the sheepskins of the Respondents? The question was in his opinion not whether the two contracts were made at the same and evidenced by the same instrument, but whether they were in substance a single and undivided contract or two distinct contracts. If in the case before the House their Lordships arrived at the conclusion that the agreement for an option to purchase the Respondents' sheepskins was not in substance a fetter on the exercise of their right to redeem, but was in the nature of a collateral bargain the entering into which was a preliminary and separable condition of the loan, the decided cases ceased to present any great difficulty.

Referring to Noakes v. Rice ([1902] A. C., 24) and Bradley v. Carritt ([1903] A. C., 253), he came to the conclusion that the stipulation now in question was a contemporaneous but collateral contract, in substance independent of the security, and that there was no reason either in morals or in equity which ought to prevent the intention of the parties from being left to have its effect.

HOUSE OF LORDS--Ramsden & Car v. Chessum & Sons. Before the LORD CHANCELLOR AND LORDS KINNEAR, DUNEDIN AND ATKINSON. 10th November 1913.

The user of goods supplied must pay for them.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal (Kennedy, L. J., dissenting) reversing a decision of Hamilton, J. The Plaintiffs were merchants selling door furniture. The Defendants were builders. Ward, one of the architects of the Defendants, ordered certain door materials from Plaintiffs who supplied them and the Defendants were informed of the supply. The things supplied were used by the Defendants. The Plaintiffs sued for the price but the Defendants denied that Ward was their agent. Hamilton, J., held that the goods having been used by the Defendants they must pay for them. The House now allowed the appeal and restored the decision of Hamilton, J. The LORD CHANCELLOR said :—

The case was a simple one; it was a case in which it was sought to recover the price of goods sold and delivered. The law as to this class of cases was not obscure. If A. brought goods to B. to be used upon work which B was doing, and B. knew that those goods were not brought as a gift, but were meant to be paid for, and B. then used the goods upon his work, the inference to be drawn from those facts was that there was an implied promise on the part of B. to pay for the goods. That was exactly what happened in this case, and there was nothing in the facts of the case to displace the primâ facie inference that B. was liable.

Messrs. Sankey, K. C., and Eames for the Appellants.

Messrs. Radcliffe, K. C., and Scott for the Respondents.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Cookes v. Morrison & Co., "Ld." Before the MASTER OF THE ROLLS AND LORDS JUSTICES SWINFEN EADY AND PHILLIMORE. 5th November 1913.

As between the interest of the hirer under a hiring agreement and the interest created by an equitable mortgage, the former takes precedence.

This was an appeal from a decision of Eve, J. By an agreement between the Plaintiffs and the predecessors-in-title of the Defendant Company the Plaintiffs erected an installation on the Defendant's premises. The payment was to be by instalments and in default of one instalment the whole was payable and the fixtures were to remain the property of the Plaintiffs until the whole amount was discharged. Subsequently the Defendant issued debentures in the usual form by way of floating security, and on behalf of the debenture-holders a receiver was appointed. The receiver now refused to recognize the Plaintiffs' claim to the fixtures for non-payment of the instalments on the ground that the debenture-holders had no notice thereof. The Court below allowed the Plaintiffs' claim to remove the fixtures and the present appeal was dismissed. In the course of his judgment the MASTER OF THE ROLLS said :—

The judgment of Mr. Justice Parker in re Samuel, and Allen, and Sons (Limited), [1907] 1 Ch., 575, stated the true view of the law and was one which ought to be followed. At p. 582, after expressing the opinion that an equitable mortgagee must be held to take subject to prior agreements he said :—"I think that those agreements, if they are in the form which has been used in this case, do create an equitable interest by which a subsequent mortgagee who does not get the legal estate is bound, and that, applying the ordinary principles of priorities as between the interest of the hirer under the hiring agreement and the interest created by the equitable mortgage, the interest created by the hiring agreement takes precedence." He (the Master of Rolls) was of opinion that that decision was quite right and was consistent with, he would not say decisions, but important dicta by members of the Court of Appeal.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Gabriel & Sons v. Churchill & Sim. Before MR. JUSTICE PICKFORD. 14th November 1913.

A del credere agent—To what extent is he liable to the buyer and the seller?

The Defendants, timber brokers, sold goods for account of the Plaintiffs and signed the contract as brokers "brokerage and guarantee 2½ p. c." to unnamed principals. After these principals had been known the Plaintiffs agreed with them to pay penalty if the delivery was late. It proved late and the disclosed principals attempted to set-off the penalty against a part of the price of the goods. The Plaintiffs now sued the Defendants as del credere agents for the price. The learned Judge dismissed the claim. He said :—It was necessary to see whether the authorities established the proposition that such a contract imposed a liability upon the del credere agent to be sued on the contract. There was no doubt that at one time it was thought that it did impose such a liability. That seemed to have been the opinion of the Court in Grove v. Dubois (1 Term. Rep. 112), where Lord Mansfield said :—"A commission del credere . . . is an absolute engagement to the principal from the broker, and makes him liable in the first instance." Story, commenting on that case, said :—"But the doctrine of that case on this point seems incorrect. A factor with a del credere commission is liable to the principal if the buyer fails to pay or is incapable of paying. But he is not primarily the debtor. On the contrary, the principal may sue the buyer in his own name, notwithstanding the del credere commission; so that the latter amounts to no more than a guaranty." The decision in Grove v. Dubois (supra) had been disapproved in subsequent cases, and in his Lordship's opinion was not law. The first case in which it was considered was in Morris v. Cleasby (4 M. and S., 566), where Lord Ellenborough said :—"The principal must always be debtor, and that whether he is known in the first instance or not, except where the broker has by the form of the instrument made himself so liable." That case was followed in Hornby v. Lacy (6 M. and S., 166), and therefore those cases disposed of the opinion expressed in Grove v. Dubois that a del credere agent was a person primarily liable on the contract.

The question was considered again in Couturier v. Hastie (8 Ex., 40). He thought, however, that the Judges in that case had no intention of interfering with the decisions in Morris v. Cleasby and Hornby v. Lacy, because if they had so intended they would have expressly dealt with them. But he did not think that the judgment in Couturier v. Hastie lent any support to the Plaintiffs' contention. The Court expressly adopted the reasoning of an American Judge on this very point in Wolff v. Koppel, where he referred to Morris v. Cleasby and Hornby v. Lacy as authorities on the question. Mr. Baron Parke in delivering the judgment of the Court said :—"A higher reward is paid in consideration of their taking greater care in sales to their customers and precluding all question whether the loss arose from negligence or not, and also for assuming a greater share of responsibility than ordinary agents—namely, responsibility for the solvency and performance of their contracts by their vendees." Mr. Schiller naturally relied upon the words "solvency and performance" in support of his contention. But he did not think that Baron Parke had any intention of laying down such a proposition as Mr. Schiller contended for which was opposed to the judgment of the American Court and also to the rest of his judgment. Mr. Schiller also cited the case of Fleet v. Murton (L. R, 7 Q. B, 126) where Mr. Justice Blackburn, although he was not considering the position of a del credere agent, used wide language as to the liability of the agent. Lord Justice Melish also used similar language in Ex parte White; In re Nevill (L. R., 6 Ch., 397). He there said :—"A del credere agent . . . is distinguished from other agents simply in this, that he guarantees that those persons to whom he sells shall perform the contract which he makes with them." It was quite clear that in using that language this question was not specifically before those Judges, and he did not think that those Judges intended to lay down that a del credere agent was liable for the performance of the contract in the ordinary sense. Those cases were not authorities for the Plaintiffs' contention that if an agent had taken a del credere commission, and a dispute arose between the buyer and the seller, the del credere agent could be called upon by the seller to litigate the dispute and take upon himself all the obligations and also all the rights of the buyer. He did not think that the cases showed that that was the obligation of a del credere broker. It was not necessary to decide whether the obligation of a del credere agent extended only to guaranteeing the solvency of the buyer, or whether it would extend to a case where the buyer was perfectly solvent, but where his assets could not be got at. He did not think that the obligation of a del credere agent extended beyond this, that when there was an ascertained amount due from the buyer to the seller and the buyer failed to pay, whether from insolvency or otherwise, then the del credere agent was liable to pay, and that the obligation did not extend so far as to make the del credere agent liable to litigate disputes between the buyer and seller.

Messrs. Wallace, K. C., and Chaytar for the Defendants.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Waters v. Braithwaite. Before JUSTICES DARLING, ROWLATT AND ATKIN. 19th November 1913.

Cruel ill-treatment of cows must be punished although the practice was tolerated by an old custom.

The Respondent was prosecuted for cruelly ill-treating a cow by allowing her to be over-stocked with milk. She had not been milked for over 19 hours and the expert evidence was that cows in full milk ought to be milked every 12 hours, and that over-stocking caused them pain and was harmful to them The defence was that over-stocking before offering them for sale was an old established custom of the farmers in the district. The Magistrates dismissed the summons, but that order was set aside, and the learned Judges remitted the case with a direction to convict. In the course of his judgment MR. JUSTICE DARLING said—

It was found that this treatment of cows was customary, the object being that the udder should be very much distended, so that possible purchasers might see that the cows were heavy milkers. It was not denied that this caused great pain; no one alleged that it produced any benefit to the cow, but, on the contrary, it was stated to do her harm. The only benefit there was might be that of the owner. It was said that the Respondent caused the animal unnecessary pain. The case proved that the pain was unnecessary as far as the cow was concerned, and the Respondent did cause unnecessary suffering by omitting to have her milked, or preventing her from being milked by muzzling the calf. If the custom of doing this did exist, it was time that it ceased, and people must find some other means of judging whether a cow was a good milker or not.

In Ford v. Wiley, 23 Q. B. D. 203, Mr. Justice Hawkins said—

"If the law were that any man or any body of men could in his or their own interests, or for his or their pecuniary benefit, cause torture and suffering to animals without legitimate reason, and could, when charged with cruelty, excuse himself or themselves upon the ground that he or they honestly believed the law justified them, though in fact it did not, it is difficult to see the limits to which such a principle might be pushed, and the creatures it is man's duty to protect from abuse would oftentimes be suffering victims of gross ignorance and cupidity."

Lord Coleridge said :—There was ample authority in Ford v. Wiley, 18 Q. B. D. 532, and in the statute itself to enable them to say that where unnecessary suffering is caused by some act of an owner it could not be justified on the ground of old custom and of benefit to commercial persons.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM MADRAS.]

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.
LORD PARKER.
LORD DUNEDIN.
LORD SUMNER
LORD PARMOOR.
1914,
27, January.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT
v.
NARAYANIAH.

Privy Council, Appeal to—Order directing guardian appointed by father to restore minor son to father—Minor in England, father in India—Stay of execution till hearing of Appeal—Hearing expedited.

This was an application by Mrs. Annie Besant for stay of execution of the decree made by the Madras High Court ordering the Petitioner to deliver up the boys, named Krishnamurti and Nityananda, to their father and guardian—the Respondent.

It was stated in the petition that in January 1909, the Respondent came to live together with his family in a cottage belonging to the Theosophical Society, the Respondent performing secretarial duties for that Society. Early in 1910 the Petitioner offered to take charge of the two boys, who are now aged 18 and 15 respectively, and to educate them and requested the Respondent to constitute her their legal guardian. This he did in a letter of March 6, 1910. From the middle of December 1910, the boys ceased to live with the Respondent and had lived in the charge of a tutor in the head-quarters of the Society. The Petitioner had entered the names of the boys at New College, Oxford, and had made the necessary arrangements for them to take up their residence in October next. Mr. Justice Bakewell held that any delegation of guardianship by a father was revocable, and that an agreement to the contrary was void, and accordingly the Respondent was entitled to revoke the authority.

Mr. Cozens-Hardy, K. C. (with him Mr. Turnbull) for the Appellant.—The High Court granted the Petitioner leave to appeal but refused a stay of execution of that part of it which directed her to hand the boys over to the Respondent. The Petitioner contended that in the circumstances it would be disastrous for the boys to be sent back to India until after the hearing of the appeal.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said it was a case which ought to be disposed of at a pretty early date. He thought their Lordships would probably advance the hearing, and in that case it would be absurd to send the boys to India, as they would have to come back. Assuming that the appeal was going to be disposed of within a couple of months, was it not rather absurd to send the boys out to India when they would have to come back? What did it matter if they stayed in England a little longer?

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent asked that it should be made a condition of staying execution that the boys should remain in England.

Mr. Cozens Hardy said that under doctors' advice the boys had been to Sicily. He did not know whether his learned friend suggested that they should stay here or go to Sicily.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said he thought it was better that they should stay in England or at any rate that they should not go abroad without a special application being made.

Their LORDSHIPS granted the stay of execution and intimated that the hearing of the appeal would be expedited.

Solicitors: Messrs. Lee and Pembertons for the Petitioner.

Solicitors: Messrs. Douglas Grant for the Respondent.

NIKUNJA BEHARY SEN v. HARENDRA CHANDRA SINHA.

i.e., without due care and attention, because Nikunja once called upon him for a certificate, from which fact he infers apparently that he should have had sufficient knowledge of Nikunja to make him more careful in asking questions. Nikunja, however, in his examination on his complaint stated 'I have seen Harendra Babu pleader in connection with a post once but he does not know me well enough to be able to say personally about my character and habits. Harendra Babu in his affidavit denies all personal knowledge of the Petitioner and states that he relied entirely on his client's instruction.'

Mr. A. Rasul with Babu Hemendra Kumar Das for the Petitioner.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This case comes before us on a reference from the Sessions Judge of Sylhet. One Nikunja Behari Sen was a prosecution witness in a case under sec. 408, Indian Penal Code. The pleader for the defence asked the witness in cross-examination:— "Do you smoke or drink ganja"? The witness replied in the negative. Subsequently the witness laid a complaint against the pleader before a Magistrate alleging that the question was asked only to satisfy the grudge of the pleader's client. Summons was issued under sec. 500, Indian Penal Code.

The learned Sessions Judge has referred the matter to this Court and has recommended that the proceedings against the pleader be quashed. The petition of complaint did not allege any improper motive on the part of the pleader himself. There was merely a suggestion that the pleader had no means of knowing whether the instruction he had received from his client in the matter was true or false.

In our opinion the Magistrate should have dismissed the complaint. It is not defamation to make an imputation on the character of another provided that the imputation be made in good faith for the protection of the interest of the person making it or of any other person (Indian Penal Code, sec. 499, ninth exception). A pleader is entitled to the presumption that the questions he asks in cross-examination are asked in good faith for the protection of the interest of his client. The presumption therefore is that a question asked in cross-examination making an imputation affords no ground for a criminal prosecution. To rebut this presumption it is not sufficient merely to allege that the client knew the imputation to be untrue; for the duty of the pleader is to presen his client's case. So far, at any rate, as the purposes of a prosecution for defamation are concerned, it would be wholly unreasonable to say that it is the duty of a pleader to enquire whether his client's case is true or false. To rebut the presumption of good faith in such a case there must be convincing evidence that the pleader was actuated by an improper motive personal to himself and not by a desire to protect or further the interests of his client in the cause. No such motive was suggested in the present case.

The view which we have taken is supported by the case of Upendra Nath Bagchi v. The Emperor (1).

It is for the public good that a person charged with the responsibility of an advocate should, so far as may be, feel unfettered by any control other than that of the presiding Judge, in the use of every weapon placed at his disposal by the law for the defence of the liberty of his client. The provision of the ninth exception to sec. 499, Indian Penal Code, must be interpreted accordingly.

(1) 13 C. W. N. 340 (1909)

We direct that all further proceedings be stayed.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER OF OUDH.]

LORD SHAW.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1913,
Heard, 31, October.
Judgment, 10, December.

THAKUR SHEO NARAIN SINGH, since deceased, and others, Appellants,
v.
THAKUR BISHUNATH SINGH and another, Respondents.

Joint family business—Dissolution and accounts—Private arbitration—Award, operation of, on moneys realised by member on behalf of family—"Cash," meaning of—Equitable set-off—Order made before remand, if binds Court at final hearing.

The members of a joint family business referred their disputes (in view of dissolution) to an arbitrator before whom on 31st July 1895 they stated inter alia that they had divided amongst themselves all the moveables consisting of cash and kind etc.; that a sum of Rs. 5,650 was payable to one of them B; that they had understood the accounts among themselves and that "now no co-sharer has any right to demand accounts from another;" and the arbitrator made his award on 5th August 1895. At the date of the award there was an undischarged usufructuary mortgage executed on 16th June 1883, for 14 years, by one M in favour of B as representing the family, to be discharged by receipt of the usufruct:

Held—That the terms and intent of the award precluded the other co-sharers from asking for an account of moneys realised previous to the date of the award.

The word "cash" referred to all moneys received by the parties before the statement was made to the arbitrator.

Held, further, that in the circumstances of the case the Court of the Judicial Commissioner was right in allowing the Defendant's plea of equitable set-off at the final hearing after a remand it had ordered for certain inquiries, although at the previous hearing it had upheld the decision of the lower Court rejecting the plea.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. B. Dubé for the Appellants submitted that the lower Appellate Court had placed a wrong construction upon the terms (quoted in the judgment) of the award. Askari's debt was still outstanding at the date of the award, and the Appellants were entitled to an account thereof. Further, the Respondents were not entitled to set-off the moneys under the terms of the award.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Grey for the Respondents were not heard.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—This is an Appeal from a Judgment and Decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, dated the 26th of July 1909, and arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs-Appellants in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rae Bareli against the Defendants-Respondents for an account of the joint money-lending business and other reliefs. Although a number of questions appear to have been discussed in the Courts in India the only two argued on this Appeal depend on the construction of certain provisions of an Award made on the 5th of August 1895, which admittedly put an end to the joint status of the family, and on the applicability of the principle of equitable set-off to the facts of this case in so far as one of the points for determination is concerned.

The Plaintiffs are the sons of one Gur Bakhsh Sing, who with his brothers, the Defendants-Respondents, formed a joint Hindu family. On his death disputes appear to have arisen between the nephews and uncles which were referred to the arbitration of one Syed Fida Husain, who made the Award referred to above. It is a very able document and appears to deal with the subjects of dispute in concise and perspicuous form. After reciting that "in every way the executants gave the Arbitrator complete power for decision, and engage themselves and their representatives to be bound by whatever decision would be passed by him," the document proceeds to state :—

"But on the 31st July 1895 each of three parties in his statement recorded by me stated that after he execution of the agreement all the three brothers have divided among themselves all the moveables consisting of cash and kind, ornaments, clothes, and household goods, and that therefore there is no necessity for filing list thereof or giving any decision thereon ; that the sum of Rs. 3,150 on account of deficiency in the price of ornaments and Rs. 2,500 which is the personal money of Thakur Bishunath Singh contributed to the joint business, total Rs. 5,650 is to be paid to him; that the manner in which this money is to be paid has to be decided; that they have understood the accounts among themselves and that now no co-sharer has any right to demand accounts from another; that only the grain kept for home consumption and for dealings with the tenants, the agricultural implements, cattle, horses, and elephants are still undivided."

The Plaintiffs seek in the present suit for an account of the debts and monies realised by the Defendants during their management of the joint money-lending business, and in list C. attached to the plaint they specify particularly the debts in respect of which the claim for account is directed. The important items in the list relate to a usufructuary mortgage, dated the 16th of June 1883, executed by one Mohammed Askari in favour of Bishunath Singh as representing the joint family. The principal sum secured by the mortgage was Rs. 32,000 ; and it was provided that should the mortgagor fail to discharge the principal and interest within the period of 14 years, the term of the mortgage, the mortgage debt would become discharged at the end of that period by the receipt of the usufruct. Under this covenant the first Defendant was receiving the usufruct of the mortgaged property towards the liquidation of the principal and interest. At the time of the Award two years were still outstanding in respect of this mortgage.

There is no reference to the Award in the plaint, but the Defendants contend that under the terms and intent of the Award the Plaintiffs are not entitled to the relief they seek. The first question for determination, therefore, is whether having regard to the declaration contained in the Award the Plaintiffs are or are not precluded from asking for an account of monies realised previous to the date of the Award.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the Plaintiffs' claim in this respect on the ground that in his judgment it was barred by limitation. The Judicial Commissioners, proceeding on the Award, have held that it seemed to them sufficiently clear from the provisions of the document the arbitrator did not intend to confer on any one of the brothers the right to demand from the others an account of the profits enjoyed to the date of the Award under Mohammed Askari's usufructuary mortgage. Their Lordships think that the conclusion at which the Appellate Court in India has arrived is correct.

The word "cash" in the passage quoted clearly refers in their opinion to all monies received by the parties before the statement was made to the Arbitrator, and in any event it appears to their Lordships that the stipulation in the Award that "now no co-sharer has any right to demand accounts from another" covers this claim and excludes it.

The second question relates to a sum of Rs. 5,900 or thereabouts regarding which the Defendants claim a set-off against the amount decreed in favour of the Plaintiffs on other items.

The Arbitrator had found that two sums of Rs. 5,650 and Rs. 1,000 respectively were payable to the Defendant Bishunath, and had declared that it should be "paid out of the joint income." And he added that he would specify later on "the joint income."

Similarly he had found that Rs. 5,150 was payable to Jadunath, Bishunath and Jadunath, each being liable to the other for a certain share of these debts, became entitled to receive from the Plaintiffs, the sons of Gur Bakhsh, Rs. 5,900. The Defendants contend that they are entitled to a set-off as regards this sum against the amount decreed to the Plaintiffs on account of "the joint income" of the parties. The Subordinate Judge refused to give effect to the Defendants' contention, and his view was upheld at one stage of the case by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. At a subsequent stage when the case came back to the Appellate Court after the remand it had ordered for certain enquiries, the learned Judges who heard the Appeal modified the view previously expressed, and considered that having regard to the circumstances of the case, the Court would be justified in applying the principle of equitable set-off to the Defendants' claim. Their Lordships concur generally with the reasons given by the learned Judges for coming to this conclusion.

In the result their Lordships think that this Appeal should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

had any separate fund or that the properties in dispute were purchased with money belonging to him :

Held—That the presumption was clear and decisive that the property was acquired by the father in the name of the son and it was not the latter's self-acquired property.

In this Appeal there were concurrent findings of fact, namely, that the properties were not the self-acquired properties of Rup Charan.

Mr. G. E. A. Ross, K. C. (with him Dr. Abdul Majid) submitted that the Court below ought to have presumed that the properties were acquired by Rup Charan in whose name the conveyances stood unless the contrary was shewn.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Dunne for the Respondents were not heard.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—This is an Appeal from a Judgment and Decree of the High Court of Bengal, dated the 27th of July 1906, which affirmed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Cuttack, in the Province of Orissa, dismissing the Plaintiff's suit.

The parties are Hindus governed by the Dayabhaga law, and are descended from one Raghunath De. Raghunath had three sons, Rup Charan, Sonatan and Shyamanand, who admittedly formed a joint Hindu family. The Plaintiff is the daughter of Rup Charan, and she brought this suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a declaration that certain properties included in Sch. Ka attached to the plaint were the self-acquired properties of her father which devolved upon her after the death of her mother, Annapurna, and for the usual consequential relief in respect thereof. She also alleged that Rup Charan survived his father, and that she is entitled to the one-third share in Raghunath's estate which vested in Rup Charan on Raghunath's death.

The Defendants, on the other hand, alleged that Rup Charan predeceased his father and that the Ka properties were acquired by Raghunath in the name of Rup Charan, and were not the self-acquired properties of Rup Charan.

Both the Courts in India have concurrently found against the Plaintiff the facts on which she bases her claim. They have held that she has failed to prove that the Ka properties were acquired by her father out of his own funds; and that it had been established that Raghunath survived Rup Charan. They have accordingly dismissed the Plaintiff's suit.

As it is not their Lordships' rule to interfere in cases in which there are concurrent findings of fact, it has been argued by Mr. Ross, on behalf of the Plaintiff, that the Courts below erred in not drawing proper conclusions from the documentary evidence of the Plaintiff. In other words, he contended that as the conveyances stood in Rup Charan's name the Courts ought to have presumed that the Ka properties were his self-acquired properties until disproved by the Defendants.

The principle applicable to this class of cases where there is a dispute whether a property standing in the name of a junior member of a Hindu family was his self-acquisition was enunciated so long ago as 1843 in Dhurm Das Pandey v. Shama Soondri Dibiah (1), where Lord Campbell said :—"The criterion in these cases in India is to consider from what source the money comes with which the purchase-money is paid" This principle was reaffirmed in 1854 in Gopi Kist Gosain v. Gunga Persaud Gosain (2).

In the present case both the Courts below have found that there was no evidence that Rup-Charan had any separate funds or that the properties in dispute were purchased with money belonging to him. In the absence of such evidence the presumption is clear and decisive that they were acquired by the father in the name of the son, and that they were not the self acquired properties of Rup Charan.

On the whole their Lordships are of opinion that this Appeal should be dismissed with costs. And they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

CHAUDHURI, J.
1913,
1, September.

In the matter of sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1887), and In the matter of A. RASUL, Applicant.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 45—Mandamus, writ of—Discretionary power, how exercised—Personal right of and threatened injury to person seeking relief—Person holding office on conditional appointment, if entitled to relief—When validity of appointment in question, if application entertainable before validity declared by suit—Honorary office—Proceedings not meant for opinion of Court in doubtful matters—Universities Act (VIII of 1904 and II of 1857), University Regulations, cl. 12—Government of India Act, 2 and 3 Geo V., c. 6 and Notifications—Parties—Provision for post-graduate studies, if compulsory or enabling—Internal arrangements of University—Part performance, if discretionary duty becomes obligatory by—Estoppel—Notice implied as to powers of statutory bodies.

Sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act provides an exceptional remedy; being discretionary it must be exercised with caution and the duty sought to be enforced must be clear and obligatory. The first condition is that the applicant must show clearly the existence of his personal right and that an injury is threatened to such right.

In the absence of any letter of appointment or of any unconditional resolution of appointment it could not be held that the applicant has been appointed, and having regard to the resolution of the Senate it could not be said that they ever intended to appoint him without the sanction of the Governor-General.

That the fact of the applicant having lectured during a part of the term did not establish a continuing right to lecture.

When the duty is conditional on the approval of another person or body being obtained, there is no right to a Writ of Mandamus until such approval has been given.

Dictum of COCKBURN, L. C. J., in R. v. ST. LUKE'S, CHELSEA (1) followed.

The principle underlying the jurisdiction in these cases is that the proceedings can confer no title not already existing though they may affect the consummation of the relator's title, if he had one; but it gives him none.

R. v. CLARKE (2).

The existence of a legal right is the foundation of every Writ of Mandamus.

IN THE MATTER OF A. RASUL.

In all cases where the validity of an appointment is the main point in dispute, the writ is not granted until the controversy has been tried at law and an adjudication had in favour of the relator.

SPELLING ON INJUNCTION, 2ND ED., P. 1365, referred to.

The writ does not lie to try the title. The Court has always refused to allow an application for Mandamus to be made the occasion or excuse for obtaining the opinion of the Court on some doubtful point of law.

Whether the sanction required under sec. 12, Chap. XI of the University Regulations for the appointment of a University lecturer is ultra vires or not having regard to 2 and 3 Geo. V, c. 6 and the notifications of the Government of India thereunder and whether the words "Governor of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal in Council" should be substituted for "the Governor-General in Council," cannot be tried in these proceedings. The Governments concerned are not parties to the proceedings and cannot be made parties under the express provisions of sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act.

It is a clear principle of law that no order affecting the status or rights of any parties concerned in the matter ought to be determined in proceedings of this nature or of any proceedings whatever unless they are parties thereto.

Any such question arising between the University and the Governor General in Council may perhaps be decided in a properly constituted suit but not in a summary proceeding of this nature.

The personal right referred to in sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act is not a right in rem, such as every human being in civilized society possesses independently of any act of his own.

IN RE RUSTOM JAMSHEDJI IRANI (4) dissented from.

He alone is a competent relator who has some interest other than that of the community at large in the question to be tried.

R. v. BROWN (5).

An honorary lecturership may not be an office of any pecuniary value, but it is undoubtedly an office of consequence; but the fact that no arrangements are being made by the University for the delivery of such lectures can hardly be said to be an injury to the personal right of the lecturer.

The provision in the University Regulations that the Syndicate shall appoint a place for lectures in consultation with the lecturer, imposes no obligation on the Syndicate to appoint any definite time. Having regard to that fact the Court cannot give a complete or effectual remedy such as is contemplated in the section. These are, besides, matters of internal arrangement with which Courts are unwilling to interfere, unless under express obligation.

Although sec. 1 of Ch. XI of the University Regulations imposes on the University an obligation to provide for post-graduate teaching by appointing lecturers it cannot be construed that the duty is not only imperative but also immediate. The provision is only an enabling one.

Although it may be true in some cases that work, which before it is begun is only permissive, becomes obligatory by part performance after it has been begun, yet it is not true as an abstract proposition of law in every case, and it does not follow that the appointment of a University lecturer which is discretionary becomes obligatory by reason of its part performance.

(5) 3 T. R. 574 note (b) (1760).

IN THE MATTER OF A. RASUL.

YORK AND NORTH MIDLAND RAILWAY Co. v. THE QUEEN (7) explained.

Whether the University having availed itself of the services of the applicant is estopped from denying his title as lecturer is a question which can only be determined in a properly constituted suit.

Although the doctrines of estoppel and part performance apply to corporations yet no sort of part performance or ratification can bind a corporation to a transaction which the Legislature has forbidden it to undertake as here under sec. 12 in Ch. XI of the University Regulations.

The University could not be held bound by representations made by any individual officer without the authority or sanction of the University.

All persons dealing with a statutory body like the University, or its agents, are deemed to have notice of the limits publicly set to their authority, and it is well accepted law that such a corporation is not bound by anything done by such agents in its name when the transaction is on the face of it in excess of the powers defined by Statute.

The applicant must be deemed to have known the conditions imposed upon the Senate by the University Regulations and to have accepted the office with knowledge of such limitations, and he is not entitled to rely upon any estoppel on the part of the University in these proceedings such as would validate his appointment.

Even if the sanction of the Governor-General in Council to his appointment be held not necessary, it does not under the circumstances of this case better the position of the applicant.

EX PARTE BROWN, IN RE MASTER (8) explained.

Whether or not under the Statutes the Government of India is vested with any power to impose conditions or limitations on the statutory powers of the Senate is a difficult and doubtful point, which cannot be decided as a side issue in proceedings of this summary character.

(8) 8 Ch. A. 783 (1877).

The Petitioner stated in his petition that he had been appointed a lecturer in International Law by the Senate of the Calcutta University in July 1912, for a period of two years, and that he had delivered lectures up to the academic year ending May 1913. That he was about to commence his lectures in June 1913, and to continue his lectures up to May 1914, when he received a letter, dated 24th June 1913, from the Registrar of the University saying that the Government of India had refused to sanction his appointment. With this intimation the Registrar forwarded to Mr. Rasul (the Petitioner) the following letter from Mr. Sharp on behalf of the Government of India.

No 996.

FROM

THE HONOURABLE MR. H. SHARP, C. I. E,
Joint-Secretary to the Government of India.

To

The Registrar of the Calcutta University, (Through His Excellency the Rector).

Simla, the 20th May 1913.

SIR,

I am directed to reply to your letters Nos. 1228 and 1229, dated the 23rd August 1912, forwarded with Mr Kerr's letter No. 6304, dated 13th November 1912, in which sanction is requested to the appointment or re-appointment of certain gentlemen as University Lecturers for a term of two years.

2. It is observed that the resolutions of the syndicate and the Senate upon which these recommendations are based were passed on various dates between the 1st June and the 27th July. It is understood that the Honourable the Vice-Chancellor announced the arrangements before the

IN THE MATTER OF A. RASUL.

Senate upon the 27th July, 1912. But, as will be observed from the preceding paragraph, intimation was not received by the Government of India through His Excellency the Rector until the middle of November or half way through the academic year. The Government of India were, therefore, placed in a position in which they must either accept the proposals of the University with retrospective effect, or cause great inconvenience to the University and dislocation of study. It seemed best to them to wait until the end of the academic year, condone the irregularity and place matters on a regular footing for the second year.

3 In the case of three gentlemen, however, the Governor-General in Council is not prepared to condone the irregularity beyond the conclusion of the first year's course—viz., Dr. A. M. S., Mr. A. Rasul and Mr. K. P. J. The last has, it is understood, resigned. His Excellency in Council does not consider it desirable to appoint as University Lecturers men who have recently taken a prominent part in political movements. It is in strict accordance with the higher views of University teaching and the development of Universities into Teaching and Residential Universities which are now generally accepted, that an atmosphere of pure study should be fostered by all means in our power.

4. The Governor-General in Council is, therefore, pleased to condone the irregularity of the current academic year and to authorise the treat ment of the lectures already delivered as having been University lectures He is further pleased to sanction the appointment of the gentlemen mentioned in the appendix to this letter as University Lecturer in the subject opposite their names for the academic year commencing the 1st June 1913. He awaits further proposals for lecturerships in Arabic History (International Law) and Ancient Indian History.

5. I am to request that in future proposals regarding the appointment of University Lecturers may reach the Government of India in ample time before the commencement of the academical year.

I have etc.,
(Sd.) H. SHARP,
Joint Secretary to the Government of India.

The Petitioner thereupon addressed to the Registrar of the Calcutta University the following letter :—

To

P BRUHL, Esq., D. Sc., F.C.S., F.G.S.,
Registrar, Calcutta University.

SIR,

I duly received your letter, dated the 24th June instant, enclosing a copy of the Government of India letter on the subject of my appointment as a University Lecturer.

With reference thereto I beg to point out in the first place that my appointment was absolutely honorary and was not of my own seeking. As a matter of fact, after having more than once shown a disinclination to accept the offer made to me on behalf of the University authorities, I was induced to accept it as a part of my public duties as a citizen and not for pecuniary remuneration. Under these circumstances the remarks of the Government about myself are not only uncharitable but absolutely uncalled for and unfounded I venture to submit that such considerations, even if well-founded, ought in no event be allowed to determine Government interference in matters similar to the present.

In the next place, I am advised that since the first August 1912, the Governor General in Council has no right or power to interfere in a matter of this kind. The attempt on the part of the Governor-General in Council to exercise powers in respect of the appointment of the University Lecturers for the University of Calcutta, is from and after the said first August 1912, an illega assumption of power and authority and therefore ultra vires. It is to be borne in mind that the Indian Universities Act was passed in 1904 when the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal was under local Government consisting of a Lieutenant-Governor, the Governor-General in Council having certain jurisdiction which need not be referred to in detail over the territories of the said Lieutenant-Governor. The Indian Universities Act conferred certain rights, powers and functions upon the Governor-General in Council in relation to the University of Calcutta, whereas in the Presidencies of Bombay and Madras, such rights, powers and functions were conferred upon the Local Government respectively, that is to say, the respective Governors-in-Council. The said Act also appointed the Lieutenant-Governor in his official capacity the Rector of the University of Calcutta. An Act of Parliament, called the Government of India Act, 1912, being 2 and 3 George V., c. 6, was passed in

IN THE MATTER OF A. RASUL.

June 1912. By section 1 of that Act the position of the Governor and the Governor-in-Council of Bengal was put on exactly the same basis as the position of the Governors-in-Council of Bombay and Madras with regard to all the rights, duties, functions and immunities except such of them as the Governor-General in Council might reserve to himself by proviso (a) of the same section. By sub-section (2) of section 1, however he was precluded from reserving to himself the power to extend the limits of the town of Calcutta, By section 5 the Governor-General in Council was. given power to appoint the day on which the statute was to come into operation. By two notifications of the Home Department, both dated the first August 1912, the first being No. 1628, the Governor-General in Council appointed the first day of August 1912, as the day when the statute was to come into operation, and the second being No. 1627, the Governor General in Council reserved to himself, only one set of powers out of all powers till then exercisable by him in relation to the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, viz, the powers exercisable by him in relation to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal (see Gazette of India, 1912, Part I, p. 800). The view I take is fortified by the statements made by the Marquess of Crewe in the House of Lords on the 25th June 1912, at the third reading of the Bill which, when passed, became the statute I have referred to :—

"I seek to remove at the outset a misconception which had existed in India regarding the Provisions of the Bill reserving to the Governor-General the powers now exercisable by him in relation to the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal. I understand it is believed by many persons that some obscure and formidable powers were by this provision reserved to the Governor-General as against the Governor of Bengal and that in that respect the latter was placed in a somewhat inferior position to his brothers of Bombay and Madras. Such was not the case. Great pains had been taken to give the Governor of Bengal precise equality in all respects with the two other Presidency Governors. The sole power which the Viceroy obtained under the provision was that until a change was made in reference to the High Court of Calcutta he would go on appointing the Acting Judges of the High Court which now included the area of the new Lieutenant-Governorship of Behar and Orissa."

I, therefore, venture to submit that from the said first day of August 1912, the Governor-General n Council has ceased to have any power in relation to the University of Calcutta and the Governor of Bengal in Council has since then been invested with all powers till then exercised by the Governor-General in Council in relation to the University of Calcutta. The result is that the action taken by the Governor-General in Council with regard to my appointment is a nullity in law.

Further I beg leave to point out that it is not open under the Regulations of the University of Calcutta for any authority "to condone the irregularity of the current academic year" because the said Regulations say the "University Lecturers shall in the first instance be appointed for two years." If my view of the law is correct, as I feel convinced and am advised that it is, it is useless for the Governor-General in Council to invite the University to submit to him 'further proposals for lecturerships in Arabic, International Law and Ancient Indian History" and "future proposals regarding the appointment of University Lecturers."

Lastly, I beg you to place this letter of mine before the Senate and such other authorities as you may decide. In case the University should prefer to give effect to the illegal order of the Governor-General in Council in respect of my appointment as a University Lecturer, I reserve to myself the right to take such legal steps against the Governor-General in Council and the University and such other bodies or persons as I may be advised in that behalf.

27th June 1913.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
A. RASUL.

Then, on the 10th of July 1913, the Petitioner addressed the following letter to the Registrar.

To

P. BRUHL, ESQ., D. Sc., F.C.S., F.G.S., Registrar, Calcutta University.

Sir,

May I be permitted to draw the attention of the authorities of the University of Calcutta to the extremely anomalous and embarrassing position in which I find myself placed at the present moment in the absence of a reply to my letter of the 27th ultimo. I presume that until the University elect to give effect to the direction contained in the letter No. 996 of the 20th May 1913 from the Hon'ble Mr. Sharp to yourself I am still the University Lecturer in International Law for the academical year just commeneed and as such I owe it not only to the University but also to the students that I ought to commence my lectures without delay. I have therefore no other alternative but to request you to be so good as to notify to the students that I appoint 11 A.M. on Saturday the 26th inst. as the time and Darbhangha Buildings as the place for the first lecture this year in my subject. I am obliged to take this course as I desire to avoid any suggestion hereafter that I was not ready and willing and did not offer to do my duty by the University and the students.

On the 26th of July 1913, the Registrar addressed the following letter to the Petitioner.

No. 690.

Senate House, the 26th July 1913.

SIR,

With reference to your letter, dated the 10th July 1913, I am directed to inform you that as the Governor-General in Council has, under sec. 12, Ch. XI of the University Regulations, declined to sanction your appointment as University Lecturer, for the current academic year, the Honourable the Vice-Chancellor and Syndicate regret that they cannot allow you to deliver lectures as proposed by you.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
P. BRUHL,
Registrar.

On the 1st of August Mr. Rasul addressed the following letter to the Registrar.

To

P. BRUHL, ESQ., D. Sc., M. I. E. E., F. C. S., F. G. S., Rigistrar, Calcutta University

DEAR SIR,

With reference to your last letter No. 690, dated the 26th July 1913 and addressed to me by you on behalf of the University of Calcutta, I understand that the University refuses to recognise my position as the University Lecturer in International Law for the present Academical year and allow me as such to exercise my functions and deliver my lectures on the basis of the letter of the Government of India, dated 20th May 1913. I have been advised and I assert that I am still the University Lecturer in International Law for the remaining period of two years for which I was duly appointed by the University, viz., the present Academical year, that in law no sanction of any Government is required for such appointment, and that assuming, although not admitting, that any sanction is necessary, it is the sanction of His Excellency the Governor-of-Fort-William-in Bengal-in-Council. I, therefore, call upon the University through you forthwith to make arrangements for lectures to be delivered by me and, if the University thinks that the sanction of any Government is necessary, to seek such sanction from the Governor-of-Fort-William-in-Bengal-in-Council (allowing me in the meantime to proceed with my lectures) and also to refrain from appointing any other lecturer in my place. Please treat this matter as urgent and let me have an early reply stating whether the University will give immediate effect to the requisitions herein made or compel me to take such steps as I may be advised to assert my right.

1st August 1913.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,
A. RASUL.

Upon these facts this application was made under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act on behalf of the Petitioner for a Rule upon the University of Calcutta to show cause why the University should not make arrangements for the delivery of lectures on International Law by Mr. Rasul during the rest of the term for which he alleged he had been so appointed.

IN THE MATTER OF A. RASUL.

Mr. B. Chakravarti (with him Mr. H. D. Bose and Mr. B. K. Lahiri) for Mr. Rasul.—The application may be looked at from two points of view : (1) To enforce the statutory duties of a Corporation, i.e, the University, (2) To restore the Petitioner to an office of a public nature.

As to (1), the main object of Act VIII of 1904 was to make the University a teaching body. See sec. 3 of the Act and sec. 1 of Chap. XI of the University Regulations. This object of the Act was to be attained by the appointment of University Professors and Lecturers. See secs. 3 and 25 (2) (e) of the Act and Chaps. IX, X and XI of the Regulations. It was incumbent on the University to appoint University Lecturers. See Regulations, Chap. XI, sec. 1. Cf. the same with the 1st sections of Chaps. IX and X of the Regulations. The appointment of the University Lecturers therefore is a command from the Legislature to which it is the business of the Courts to enforce obedience. Even if such appointments were merely discretionary with the University, it might become obligatory in certain circumstances. See Craies Statute Law, pp. 251-252. Moreover, a work permissive in its inception becomes obligatory by part performance—Vide observations of Jervis, C. J., York and North Midland Railway Co. v. The Queen (7).

As regards (2), the Writ of Mandamus lies for all offices of a public nature : also for a function with emoluments or fees annexed as in this case. See Tapping on Mandamus, pp. 171-172. As to the meaning of the word "public," see Tapping, pp. 173-174. The value of the importance to the public is not to be scrupulously weighed. The office must be known to law and must not be one at will but must be for a fixed period as in this case. Mr. Rasul has primâ facie title to the office or function. (See Short on Mandamus, p. 230). Syndicate recommended his appointment to the Senate, under the Statute there can be no conditional recommendation. (See sec. 3 of Reg. XI.) The Senate appointed him for 2 years. The Senate has the power either to appoint or not the person recommended by the Syndicate. The Senate, however, cannot make any conditional appointment, e.g., subject to the sanction of the Governor-General. Any such condition being ultra vires will be of no effect and the appointment will stand. The principle of severability of portions of bye-laws will apply. See Maxwell on Statutes, p. 601. So the conditions attached to recommendation and appointment as well as the condition embodied in sec. 12 of Reg. XI will be of no avail. Moreover, since the 1st August 1912, the Governor-General in Council has no right or power to interfere in a matter of this kind. Any sanction by him is not only not necessary but will be ultra vires. See 2 and 3 Geo. V., c. 6. See notifications of Home Department, Government of India, dated 1st August 1912, Nos. 1627 and 1628. It is an executed office, Pollock's Contract, p. 138. This application fulfils all the requisites of sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act. Mr. Rasul is a person aggrieved by the refusal of the University. He has no other remedy at all indicated by the Statute.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CHAUDHURI, J.—Sec. 45 of the Specific

IN THE MATTER OF A. RASUL.

Relief Act provides an exceptional remedy. It is in substitution of the Prerogative Writ of Mandamus, which our Court on its Original Side had jurisdiction to issue. Five conditions are laid down in the section, provisos (a) to (e), which the applicant invoking this jurisdiction has to satisfy. The conditions are cumulative, all of them have to be fulfilled. The remedy is of a summary nature and coercive in character. Being discretionary it must be exercised with caution and the duty sought to be enforced must be clear and obligatory. The first condition is that the applicant has to show a threatened injury to his personal right, that such right does exist and a clear injury must also be shown. He must also show that he has no other specific and adequate legal remedy, and that the remedy applied for will be complete.

By sec. 3 of Act VIII of 1904 power has been given to the University to appoint Professors and Lecturers. By sec. 4, the body corporate of the University is constituted and the powers of that corporate body are vested in the Senate. By sec. 25 of Act VIII of 1904 the Senate of the University with the sanction of the Government is empowered to make Regulations consistent with the Act of Incorporation as amended by the said Act of 1904, and with the last-mentioned Act, to provide for all matters relating to the University including the appointment and duties of the Registrar and of all officers and servants of the University and of Professors and Lecturers appointed by the University. The applicant states that on the recommendation of the Syndicate of the said University, the Senate appointed him University Lecturer in International Law for Post-graduate students, that such appointment was made some time in the month of July 1912 for a period of two years; that after his appointment he began to deliver lectures on International Law and continued to do so up to the end of the academic year ending May 1913, and his lectures were attended by over 80 students: that the Petitioner was about to commence his lectures for the current academic year which will end in May 1914, when he was informed by the Registrar of the University that the Government of India had refused to sanction his appointment as University Lecturer. He contends that he is still the University Lecturer in International Law, and the Government of India has no authority to interfere with his appointment. He contends that the Regulations promulgated by the Government of India under the Act are ultra vires, in so far as they provide that no University Lecturer shall be appointed without the sanction of the Governor-General in Council (sec. 12, Chap. XI of the Regulations).. The contention is based upon the provision in sec. 3 of Act VIII of 1904—the power to appoint lecturers being given to the Corporate Body of the University, as defined by that Act. It is also contended that although under the Act "Government" means in relation to the Calcutta University, the Governor-General in Council, yet having regard to the fact that the Governor-General in Council not having by Notification reserved to themselves any right over the University, they had ceased to have any power over the University of Calcutta The relator further contends that the result is that the action taken by the Governor-General in Council, with regard to his appointment is a nullity in law. The application sets out certain correspondence between the relator and the University authorities, to which it is needless to refer in detail. In one of these letters, namely, the relator's letter of the 10th July 1913, he purported to appoint 11 A.M., Saturday the 26th July, as the time and the Darbhanga Building as the place for his first lecture this year. In reply to that letter the Registrar of the University said that inasmuch as the Governor-General in Council had under sec. 12, Chap. XI of the University Regulations declined to sanction the Petitioner's appointment as University Lecturer for the current academic year, the Hon'ble the Vice-Chancellor and the Syndicate could not allow the Petitioner to deliver lectures as proposed by him. The Petitioner in his letter of the 1st August insisted that in law, sanction of the Government is not required for such appointment, and that assuming although not admitting, that any sanction was necessary, it was the sanction of His Excellency the Governor of Fort William in Bengal in Council, and not of the Governor General in Council. The Petitioner proceeded to ask the University forthwith to make arrangements for lectures to be delivered by him and if the University thought that the sanction of the Government was necessary, to seek such sanction from the Governor of Fort William in Bengal in Council. The Registrar wrote in reply saying that the Syndicate found itself unable to accede to his request. The refusal of the Syndicate to comply with his requisitions is complained of as the injury to the personal right of the relator. As the relator had not set out the resolutions of the Syndicate and the Senate and his letter of appointment in his application, I required a further affidavit, which has now been filed.

Now it appears that the Resolution of the Syndicate was in the following form:—"That the Syndicate recommend to the Senate that with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council, the undermentioned gentlemen, Mr. Rasul being one of them, be appointed University Lecturers in History for a period of two years with effect from July 1912, to lecture in the special branch of the subject mentioned against his name. (See Minutes, Calcutta University, Part IV, 1912, 29th June 1912, p. 1262). It appears that the above recommendation of the Syndicate came up before the Senate on the 13th of July 1912, when the following resolution was passed:—"That the Governor-General in Council be moved to sanction the appointment of the following gentlemen, the Petitioner being one of them, as University Lecturers in the subject noted against the name of each for a term of two years with effect from the Session 1912-13." See Minutes of the Senate, dated 13th June 1912, p. 1318, Calcutta University Minutes, Part IV, 1912). In putting the motion to the Meeting the Vice-Chancellor observed that the University was "to be congratulated on the satisfactory arrangement it had been able to make for the furtherance of Post-graduate study in the different subjects. The services of an eminent Vedic scholar had been secured to teach the Vedas. The staff in History was particularly strong and the work of lecturing in the special branches of the subject had been entrusted to competent men, who had received their training in one or other of the older Universities of England." I have quoted the above as some reliance is placed by the relator upon the speech by the Vice-Chancellor. It further appears that certain other names came up before the Senate on the 27th July 1912, when the Hon'ble the Vice-Chancellor addressing the Senate announced that they had secured the services of Messrs. Rasul and others, who had taken their degree of History either at Oxford or Cambridge to deliver special courses on selected topics. It is clear, therefore, that the Syndicate recommended his appointment subject to the sanction of the Governor General in Council and the Senate thereupon resolved to move the Government to sanction the appointment of the Petitioner amongst others as University Lecturer. The Resolution of the Senate is not one of appointment, not even of a provisional appointment pending the sanction of the Governor-General in Council. The Vice-Chancellor no doubt said at the meeting of the Senate on the 13th July that the work of lecturing had been entrusted to competent men. What he meant was that the services of competent men had been arranged for or secured. But whatever he may have meant, the Senate is only bound by its resolution.

Paragraphs 4 and 5 of the relator's affidavit do not accurately set out the Resolutions of the Syndicate and Senate.

The relator states in paragraph 8 of his affidavit of the 18th August that to the best of his recollection he received in or about the month of July 1912 a communication in writing from the Registrar of the University that he had been appointed University Lecturer in History for a period of 2 years from July 1912, requesting him to appoint the time and place for the delivery of his lectures and thereupon he wrote back to the Registrar making such appointment, and delivered his lectures and continued to do so during the academic year 1912-1913.

He believes he has lost the letter. His attorney wrote for a copy from the University, but they have not on record in their office, copy of any separate letter addressed to Mr. Rasul. They say "the practice is that when a number of lecturers are appointed at the same time, only one draft copy of the letters of appointments which are all exactly similarly worded, is kept in the office, the wording being based on the respective resolutions of Syndicate and Senate." Mr. Rasul's attorney wrote for a copy of the draft and received the following reply from the Registrar, dated the 13th August 1913.

"I find on further enquiry that the draft copy referred to in my letter of yesterday concerns only certain lecturers who were appointed on a fixed monthly salary. No letter of appointment has been sent to the other gentlemen who, with Mr. Rasul, were provisionally appointed on other terms pending the sanction of His Excellency the Governor-General."

Mr. Rasul therefore could not have received a letter of appointment and according to the Registrar of the University his appointment was provisional pending the sanction of His Excellency.

Mr. Rasul's impression seems to be due to some circular letter or communication asking him to appoint the time and place for his lectures.

There being no letter of appointment from the University I cannot hold the Petitioner was appointed. Judging from the Resolutions I have quoted, the Senate did not even formally appoint him pending the sanction of the Governor General.

He has placed himself in an unfortunate position by not requiring a letter of appointment and I quite sympathise with him. I appreciate the spirit in which he took up the work and the sacrifice it involved, but I cannot hold that any legal right has been established or exis s by his having lectured last year.

The Syndicate and Senate are only bound by their Resolutions and I do not think that they ever intended to appoint him without the sanction of the Governor-General.

Mr. Rasul apparently did not know the text of the Resolutions, but he was dealing with a Corporation whose rights are defined by Statute. He ought to have informed himself of them and thus his present trouble might have been avoided. If he came to know, and he must be deemed to have had notice that his appointment was dependent upon the sanction of the Governor-General, he could not be heard to say, upon refusal of such sanction, that he still held the appointment. When the duty is conditional on the approval of another person or body being obtained there is no right to the writ until such appproval has been given [R. v. St. Luke's, Chelsea (1), Cockburn, C. J.]. There is no evidence of any personal right having been created such as enables me to interfere under the provisions of sec. 45. The true principle underlying the jurisdiction in these cases is that the proceeding can confer no title not already existing, though it may affect the consummation of the relator's title, if he have one: but it gives him none: See Lord Kenyon, C. J., in R. v. Clarke (2), see Ex-parte Napier (3), where Lord Campbell, L. C. J., said: "The existence of a legal right is the foundation of every Writ of Mandamus." It is only issued to place a person in possession of office but confers no right. It merely places him in possession to enable him to assert his right, which in some cases he could not otherwise do. In all cases where the validity of an appointment is the main point in dispute the writ is not granted until the controversy has been tried at law and an adjudication had in favour of relator. (Spelling on Injunction, p. 1365, 2nd Ed.) In other words, the writ does not lie to try the title. Here apparently there is no title. There is no letter of appointment. If such title is based upon the Resolutions, the utmost that can be said is that he held the office only provisionally and the condition having failed, he is not now legally in a position to assert that he holds the office as of right. It is said that the University is estopped from denying his title having availed itself of his services. If there is such an estoppel, the right ought to be declared in a suit instituted for that purpose. It is contended that the sanction of the Governor-General in Council under sec. 12, Chap. XI of the University Regulations is ultra vires. It may be so, but if that is the issue it cannot be tried in these proceedings. The Government is not a party to these proceedings and cannot be made parties under the express provisions of the section. I do not think any authority can be found for trying an issue of this character in these proceedings. It would be to decide a question of jurisdiction which arises as between the University and the Governor General in Council. It may be tried in a properly constituted suit, but not in summary proceedings of this nature. The Court has always refused to allow an application for Mandamus to be made the occasion or excuse for obtaining the opinion of the Court on some doubtful question of law. One portion of the application is that "the Senate be required, if sanction is necessary, to apply for such sanction to His Excellency the Governor of Fort William in Bengal," which means that in these proceedings it has got to be determined as to whether the Regulation I have referred to is ultra vires or not, and in addition thereto to hold that the sanction intended, was to be obtained from the Governor of Bengal in Council. If sec. 12 is ultra vires so far as the Governor-General in Council is concerned it would also be ultra vires with regard to the Governor of Bengal in Council, and I do not think the applicant can ask me to replace, if his contention is correct, the Governor-General in Council, by the Governor of Bengal in Council. That clearly I cannot do. I was at one time inclined to think that the right of a lecturer to lecture, who is not remunerated for his services, is not a personal right to which an injury can be said to have been caused by the refusal of the Senate to give him facilities for delivering lectures. A clear distinction has been made in England between endowed lectureships, and lectureships not carrying fees or emoluments. Tapping in his work on Mandamus, p. 176, says "there must also be annexed to or issued out of the office fixed fees or emolument or a salary. The office must be an office of consequence or value, for which there does not exist any specific legal remedy. The value, however, is not scrupulously weighed." Stated in this broad form the proposition does not seem to be quite correct. The writ has been issued in respect of offices carrying no emolument as pointed out by Shortt on Mandamus, p. 274. Ordinarily there are certain fees attached to the office of a University Lecturer, but the appplicant from a sense of public duty accepted the office without fees. The office is undoubtedly an office of consequence, though it may not be of any pecuniary value. The injury to the office is said to be that no arrangements are being made for lectures to be delivered. I am not quite clear in my mind that such refusal is an injury to the personal right of the Lecturer. In re Rustom Jamshed Irani (4), it was considered by Russell, J., that the personal right mentioned in the section referred to rights in rem, "such as every human being in a civilized society possesses independently of any act of his own" (p. 655). This proposition does not seem to be supported by authority. The rule on the other hand appears to be that he alone is a competent relator who has some interest other than such as may belong to the community at large, in the question to be tried. See R. v. Brown (5). The Appeal Court did not sanction the definition given by the learned Judge in the Original Court, Jamshed Irani v. Kennedy (6). It also seems to me that if a mandatory order was made actually in favour of the applicant in this case it could be easily nullified by the University authorities, if they chose. The Regulation relating to the arrangements for lectures runs as follows:—"Such lectures shall be delivered and classes held in the College to which the Lecturer belongs or any such other place as the Syndicate in consultation with the Lecturer may determine." The applicant does not belong to any College and therefore in his case the place is to be determined by the Syndicate in consultation with him. There is nothing said about appointing the time for lectures. If an order was made upon the Syndicate to appoint a place for the lectures they might easily nullify it, by appointing a place, but not appointing any time for the lectures. The section provides that the remedy shall be complete and effectual: such clearly would not be the case, if the University did not fix any hours for the lectures. I think, however, that these are matters of internal arrangement with which the Courts are unwilling to interfere, unless under clear obligation. I cannot accede to the prayer of the application, as it seems to me that the applicant has not shown that he has a complete specific legal right, such as I hold must pre-exist. It seems to me that the question of ultra vires cannot be litigated upon in these proceedings. It is a clear principle that no order affecting the status or rights of the parties concerned, ought to be determined in proceedings of this nature or of any proceedings whatsoever, unless they are parties therein.

The Petitioner further contends that his application may be treated as one by a person interested to enforce a statutory duty imposed upon the University "to make provision for the instruction of students" under sec. 3 of Act VIII of 1904. Before dealing with the question of the statutory duty if, any, involved in this case I have to see what the personal right is. Sec. 45 requires some right in the person applying. It must be some interest in him other than such as may belong to the community at large. If, however, it be said that his personal right is by virtue of his appointment, I have already dealt with the matter and have held that the appointment has not been established. Sec. 3 of Act VIII of 1904 merely says the University "shall be and shall be deemed to have been incorporated for the purpose (among others) of making provision for the instruction of students, with power to appoint University Professors and Lecturers." It is merely an empowering section. It clothes the University with certain powers. They are words merely making that legal and possible which there would otherwise be no right or authority to do. There is no immediate duty imposed by it. Sec. 25 (e) has also been referred to. It runs thus:—

"The Senate with the sanction of the Government may from time to time make Regulations consistent with the Act of Incorporation as amended by the Act of 1904 and with the Act of 1904 to provide for all matters relating to the University: in particular, such Regulations may provide for among others (e) the appointment and duties of servants of the University and of Professors and Lecturers appointed by the University."

This section gives power to the University to make regulations subject to the sanction of the Government. Such Regulations have been made and my attention has been called to sec. 1 of Chap. XI of the Regulations.

"1. The University shall provide for post graduate teaching, study and research in the faculties of arts and science."

Chaps. IX and X deal with University Professors and Readers respectively. In the former case when the funds of the University permit, the Senate with the previous consent of the Governor-General, shall found such Professorships, in the latter case, a certain sum whenever practicable, shall be set apart annually for the purpose of providing special courses of lectures on particular subjects. The Lecturers delivering such courses of lectures shall be called University Readers. The appointment of a Reader shall be made by the Senate on the recommendation of th Syndicate. It is pointed out that there are distinctions made between the appointment of University Professors, University Readers and University Lecturers. In the case of the first two, the appointment is made contingent upon the provision for funds. In the case of University Lecturers there is no such provision. It is to be noticed, however, that in each case the Regulations provide that no one shall be appointed without the sanction of the Governor-General in Council. I am not prepared to hold that although it may be said that sec. 1 of Chap. XI imposes an obligation on the University to provide for post-graduate teaching by appointing University Lecturers, it is therefore to be construed that the duty is not only imperative but immediate. I do not think that the statute imposes any obligation that such Lecturers are to be forthwith appointed. Sec. 4 of the same chapter runs thus—"The Senate shall have power upon the recommendation of the Syndicate to appoint Lecturers who shall be called University Lecturers." It is merely an empowering section. The words "shall have power" do not signify any obligation, but are potential. There is no compulsion upon them to appoint. There is no obligation upon them to exercise that power. Sec. 1 is controlled and modified by sec. 4. These sections are to be read together. It is said, however, that even if it be held that Mr. Rasul was appointed provisionally, yet the University having availed itself of his services, it is an executed contract, and it must be taken that the contract is still subsisting, as the appointment was for a period of two years. York and North Midland Railway Co. v. The Queen (7) has been cited in support of the proposition that even if the appointment of University Lecturers is merely discretionary, it may become obligatory under certain circumstances. It was argued that it was decided in that case that "a work which in its inception is permissive only becomes obligatory by part performance." The question in that case arose as regards the liability of a Ry. Co. to complete a Railway line which the Company was empowered to construct by a Railway Act. I find that Jervis, C. J., expressly stated in that case that it was unnecessary for the Court to determine the abstract proposition, that a work, which if before it is begun was permissive, after it had been begun became obligatory or not (p. 870). They did not desire to be understood as assenting to the proposition of Justice Erle in the same case on p. 207 "that many cases may occur where the exercise of some of the compulsory powers may create a duty to be enforced by Mandamus." Justice Erle held that if there are no words in the Act that could be justly construed to create a duty, the Court was not authorised to decide that such a duty was created. Jervis, C. J., emphasised the same principle and said, Courts of Justice ought not to depart from the plain meaning of words used in Acts of Parliament, when they do so, they make, but do not construe the law; that Courts are not to construe Acts by their own notions of what ought to have been enacted upon the subject.

There is nothing to show that Mr. Rasul accepted his appointment for the period of two years. There is no writing to that effect. He undoubtedly intended to continue. It is after all, if anything, a contract of service: but where are the terms to be found? The Resolution of the Syndicate merely speaks of a recommendation for appointment. The University cannot be bound by any representations made by any individual officer without the authority or sanction of the University, or by any act of his not within the scope of his authority. No such communication has been shown to have been made by any authorised person. No doubt the doctrines of estoppel and part performance apply to corporations. The principles applied in such cases are said to be independent of contract. But no sort of estoppel, part performance, or ratification, can bind a corporation to a transaction which the Legislature has in substance forbidden it to undertake: such restriction is to be found in Chap. XI, sec. 12, and a question has been raised whether the restriction is ultra vires or not. The constitution of the University is embodied in special Statutes. All persons dealing with the University or its Agents are deemed to have notice of the limits publicly set to their authority, and it is well-accepted law that such a corporation is not bound by anything done by its agents in its name when the transaction is on the face of it in excess of the powers defined by Statute. Mr. Rasul must be deemed to have known the conditions imposed upon the Senate by its Regulations as to its power of appointment, and to have accepted the office with knowledge of such limitation, and I am not disposed to say that he is entitled in this application to rely upon any estoppel on the part of the University such as validates his appointment. It is argued that the appointment must be held to be valid inasmuch as the stipulation for sanction of the Government is ultra vires, and that the Resolution of the University stands good, if the sanction of the Governor General is not necessary according to the law. The Resolution of the Senate in this case is merely that the Governor-General be moved to sanction the appointment, not even that the Lecturers are appointed subject to the sanction of the Governor-General. Even if it be conceded for purposes of this application that the sanction of the Governor-General is not necessary, it does not better the position of the Petitioner. Ex parte Brown, In re Master (8) has been relied upon in support of the proposition that if the condition about the sanction of the Governor-General is ultra vires it is of no effect and the appointment stands. That was a case arising upon a bankruptcy and a certain Resolution of the creditors authorising trustees amongst other things to agree to a composition, was held to be ultra vires and void, and inasmuch as the creditors had no power at the meeting held to pass any resolution respecting the administration of the estate by trustees, as being opposed to sec. 20 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869: but the contention that because that clause was void all the clauses of the Resolution were void, was held not to be sound, inasmuch as the other Resolutions had been registered under sec. 127. That was a special case depending upon the construction of special sections of the Bankruptcy Act, and cannot be accepted as laying down a proposition for universal acceptance. This case has been cited in Maxwell on Statute, p. 649, 5th Ed., in connection with the validity of instruments, part being invalid. The question of ultra vires raised in this case is, I understand to be, that under the Act the Senate has the power to appoint, and therefore no restriction can be imposed by the Government upon the Senate's power of appointment. The Act makes however an imperative condition that the Regulations are to be framed, by the University with the sanction of the Government. Sec. 26 of the Act of 1904 empowers the Government to add to or alter the draft Regulations submitted by the Senate after consulting that body and make such additions and alterations as appear to the Government to be necessary. It further provides that in default of the Senate submitting the draft Regulations within a limited period, the Government may make Regulations. The contention is that the Regulations, before they are made, require the sanction of the Government. But that the Government is not by Statute vested with any powers to impose conditions or limitations on the powers given to the Senate. This is a difficult and doubtful point such as in my view cannot be decided as a side issue in proceedings of a summary character.

WALSH v. LONSDALE (1) followed.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 20th of February 1912 against the decree of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice H. R. H. Coxe, dated the 23rd of January 1912, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 852 of 1910, reversing on appeal the decree of F. S. Hamilton, Esq., District Judge of District Purneah, dated the 18th of December 1909, reversing the decree of S. M. Zarif, Esq., Officiating Munsif of Purneah, dated the 7th of September 1909.

The material facts of the case will appear from the judgment of COXE, J.

COXE, J.—The facts found in this case are that the Defendants, second party, executed an unregistered kobala with respect to 14 bighas of land in favour of the Defendants, first party, in April 1, 1906. The price was Rs. 500. In the following year, the Defendant, second party, sold 40 bighas of land, including the 14 bighas already referred to, to the Plaintiff by a registered conveyance, the Plaintiff know'ing, at the time, of the former transaction. The Plaintiff has sued to recover possession and on these facts the lower Appellate Court has held that he is not entitled to succeed and has dismissed the suit.

It appears to me that this decision cannot be sustained.

The transaction in favour of the Defendants, first party, was evidently a nullity under sec. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. I am inclined to think that even the Defendants, second party, themselves would not have been estopped from disputing the validity of that transaction. Such an estoppel would evidently defeat the provisions of sec. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act and secs. 17 and 49 of the Registration Act; but whether that be so or not, I am satisfied that the Plaintiff was in no way debarred from buying the property which still belonged to the Defendants, second party, by reason of the fact that he knew of the transaction in favour of the Defendants, first party. Even assuming that he knew that the Defendants, second party, had cheated the Defendants, first party, still he knew that the Defendants, second party, were still the owners of the land, and that being so, I can see no reason why he should not be entitled to buy the property from them.

No doubt, there are cases which lay down that when a man by a registered conveyance purchases property which, he knows, has already been validily transferred by another conveyance of which registration is not compulsory, he obtains no priority: but that is quite different from the present case in which the sale to the Defendants, first party, was absolutely null and void. It appears to me that the Plaintiff is fully entitled to succeed.

The appeal will accordingly be allowed, the decision of the lower Appellate Court will be set aside and that of the first Court restored with costs in all Courts.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty and Kshetra Mohun Sen for the Respondents.

The Judgment of the Court was as follows:—

Jenkins, C. J.—This is an Appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Coxe who has set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restored that of the first Court with costs.

The suit is brought for khas possession of certain lands, and the facts with regard to those lands that have been established in the evidence are these: The Plaintiff's title to them is by virtue of a transfer in 1907, but at that time the Defendant, 1st party, was in possession of the lands and had paid the purchase-money for them to the Plaintiff's vendor, that payment having been made prior to the purchase by the Plaintiff. In these circumstances, can the Plaintiff's claim prevail? I think not. To begin with, the Plaintiff, apart from such notice as would be imputed to him of the Defendant's right to the land by virtue of his possession, is found as a fact by the lower Appellate Court to have known of the previous sale to the Defendant, and it is further found by the learned Judge of the lower Court of Appeal that he is unable to accept the suggestion that the vendor may have perpetrated an act of bad faith without any collusion on the part of the Plaintiff. He distinctly comes to the conclusion that there was complicity between the Plaintiff and the vendor, and that can only mean a deliberate design to defraud the Defendants of such rights as had not been fully completed by reason of failure to comply with all the formal requirements of the law. Now we have the position that the Defendant, 1st party, was in possession of the lands under a contract for sale under which the purchase-money had been paid prior to the transfer to the Plaintiff, and that the Plaintiff was well aware of that position. I cannot see how in these circumstances the Plaintiff can possibly recover the lands from the Defendant, 1st party.

There are cases, of which Walsh v. Lonsdale (1) is a type, which establish the protection to which in a Court of Equity a person in the position of the Defendants is entitled. It is quite true that the question whether the Defendants, 1st party, were entitled to bring a suit for specific performance in vindication of their rights was not debated before the lower Appellate Court, but there is no matter brought to our notice which can throw any serious doubt upon the Defendant's right to complete their right by such a suit. On these grounds I think that the suit must fail. This is no invasion or evasion of the Registration Act. It is merely securing to a party those rights to which he is entitled apart from the Act—rights to which he has a good title in Courts to which the abiding direction has been given to proceed in all cases according to equity and good conscience. Rights of this class can in the ordinary course only be enforced against a third party, such as the Plaintiff here is, where that party has notice of those rights, so that I feel in no way embarrassed by the suggestion that there is anything in the policy of the Registration Act which stands in the way of the ultimate result at which the District Judge arrived. In the view that I take, it is unnecessary to elaborate the position of the Defendants, but I may point out that if carried to its full extent the doctrine for which the Plaintiff contends would deprive a purchaser of his lien for purchase-money paid by him, even at the instance of one who took with notice.

(1) L. R. 21 Ch. D. 9 (1882).

The result is that the judgment of Mr. Justice Coxe is set aside, and the decree of the lower Appellate Court restored. The Appellants are entitled to their costs throughout.

This decree relates only to the 14 bighas which are claimed by the Defendants. To the rest of the land in suit the Defendants have not made any claim and they are not in possession of it. In regard to that, therefore, there is no cause of action.

Appeal allowed.

This was an Appeal against a decree of Babu Bijoy Gopal Bose, Second Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 9th of August 1912, affirming a decree of Babu Achinta Nath Mitra, 1st Munsif of Burdwan, dated the 29th of November 1911.

The facts of the case were as follows :—

The Defendants instituted a suit in the Small Cause Court of Burdwan for recovery of Rs. 40-13 5 on the 31st August 1910 against the Plaintiff on the allegation that she purchased silk cloths from the Defendants' shop on the 27th Chaitra 1316, corresponding to 10th April 1910, and made part payment on the 13th April 1910 but the balance was not paid for which the suit was brought. The summons in the aforesaid case was alleged to have been served on the 3rd September according to the peon's report and one of the Defendants alleged that he had identified the Plaintiff. An ex parte decree was obtained on the 13th September 1910 and was executed on the 1st October 1910 and the decretal amount realised on the same day from the Plaintiff. Plaintiff instituted the present suit on the 28th January 1911 for recovery of the decretal amount on the allegation that the ex parte decree was fraudulently obtained by suppressing summons ; that she was not aware of the suit against her, that the suit was instituted maliciously against her and the evidence on which the decree was obtained was perjured.

The Court of first instance found that it was doubtful whether the summons was served, that the suit was due to a quarrel between the Plaintiff and the Defendants, that the khata book on which the suit was brought might have been tampered with and as a matter of fact the silk cloths were never sold to the Plaintiff. On the above findings the suit was decreed by the Munsif. There was an appeal by the Defendants before the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan who dismissed the appeal affirming all the findings of the Munsif. The Defendants then preferred this Second Appeal.

Babu Bepin Behary Ghose for the Appellants.—An ex parte decree can only be set aside on the ground of fraud ; the lower Courts came to no finding on that point. The lower Courts find that it was doubtful whether the summons was served. Upon this finding the Courts were not entitled to set aside the decree. Mere fact that the suit was false is no ground for setting aside the decree. Refers to Abdul Huq v. Abdul Hafez (6). The only case that is against me is that of Lakhmi Charan v. Nur Ali (1), decided by Digamber Chatterjee and N. R. Chatterjea, JJ., but this case was not followed in the subsequent case of Mosuful Huq v. Surendra Nath Ray (2). Refers to Mahomed Golab v. Mahomed Sulliman (7). All these cases go to show that a decree cannot be set aside on the ground that the suit on which the decree was based was a false suit and was decided on perjured evidence. The English cases are also in my favour; refers to Flower v. Lloyd (8), Baker v. Wordsworth (3).

[FLETCHER, J.—The mere fact that the suit was false may not be a ground for setting aside a decree but could it not be shown that the evidence was perjured and the Defendants knew that the evidence was perjured, and the Court was deceived ?]

The Court simply finds that the suit was false. This is not sufficient; if that be the law there would be no end to litigation. Refers to Cole v. Langford (9).

Babu Bankim Chandra Mukerjee for the Respondent.—I submit there is really no conflict between the case Lakhmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (1) and the other cases. The findings go to show that in Lakhmi Charan Shaha v. Nur Ali (1), the Plaintiffs knew that the suit was false and if knowing the true facts the Plaintiffs instituted the false suit, and obtained a decree thereon by perjured evidence it would be fraud of the grossest kind practised upon the Court and it would be inequitable to allow a party to abuse the process of the Court. The findings in the present case go to show that the suit was the outcome of a quarrel between the Plaintiff and the Defendants and if that be so it is clear that the Defendants knowing full well that they had absolutely no claim against the Plaintiff brought the suit. This is a fraud of the grossest kind that can be practised on a Court. Moreover the finding on the question of service of summons is clear. It is found that there was no service If this finding be taken along with the facts that one of the Defendants is alleged to have identified the Plaintiff, it would be clear that there was deliberate suppression of summons. If this be so, the Defendants clearly imposed upon the Court and fraudulently obtained a decree and in such cases the merits of the case can be gone into. Refers to Vadala v. Lawes (5) and Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (4).

Babu Bepin Behary Ghose in reply.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

FLETCHER, J.—This Appeal, in my opinion, must be dismissed. The suit was brought to set aside an ex parte decree which had been obtained against a woman of the town for goods sold and delivered to her. That ex parte decree was executed and the money was obtained ; and, subsequently, the Defendant in the first suit brought the present suit against the original Plaintiff to set aside the ex parte decree. It seems to me that the judgments of the two lower Courts are conclusive on the matter. The Judge found affirmatively that the fact of the previous suit was not known to the present Plaintiff and he also found that the said suit was, in fact, a false suit. On these allegations, it seems to me that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is correct. The decisions of this Court on the point to which our attention has been invited are the two latest decisions. One, of my learned brother who is now sitting with me and Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee in the case of Lakhmi Charan v. Nur Ali (1), and the other, of Carnduff and Champman, JJ., in the case of Mosuful Huq v. Surendra Nath Ray (2). The decision in Lakhmi Charan v. Nur Ali (1), it is said, is opposed to the decision in Mosuful Huq v. Surendra Nath Ray (2). In my opinion when the two cases are closely looked at, the two decisions are not opposed to each other: but the two decisions can be reconciled in the same way as the English decisions which have been cited to us can be reconciled. In Lakhmi Charan v. Nur Ali (1), the findings of fact which are set out in the judgment show quite clearly that the Plaintiff, that is, a party to the suit knew that the case which was put forward before the Court was, in fact, a false one. It was not a case where an application was made to set aside a judgment on the ground that it was obtained by perjury but it was a case of a party to the suit practising a fraud on the Court by putting forward before the Court a case which was a false one. The case in Mosuful Huq v. Surendra nath Ray (2), as appears from the head-note, only decides that a decree obtained in a suit cannot be set aside in a subsequent suit brought for that purpose on the mere proof that the previous decree was obtained by perjured evidence. That was exactly the point which was decided in Baker v. Wordswarth (3). As far as I know, nobody ever challenged the proposition that the mere fact that a decree has been obtained by perjury is not a sufficient ground for setting it aside. A different consideration arises where a false case is placed before the Court. We have got the decisions in Abouloff v. Oppenheimer (4) and Vadala v. Lawes (5), which show quite clearly that, if the case which was placed before the Court was a false one, the Court has jurisdiction in a subsequent suit to set aside the decree which was obtained by fraud practised on the Court. It seems to me, on the findings of the lower Appellate Court in this case, that the Plaintiff on the previous suit presented a fraudulent case before the Court and that the learned Judge had jurisdiction to set aside that decree. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.
